Returning to Lancaster, Mr. Deen took charge of the machinery in the Conestoga Cork Works, and then, having now become a skilled mechanic, in every sense of the term, he was appointed chief engineer of the city water works, filling that position with rare intelligence and fidelity for six and one-half years. After this for a time he served in John Best's works, then for four years as chief engineer of the Penn Iron Works. In 1884 he was elected by the city councils to the position of street commissioner, discharging the duties of that office with the same degree of satisfaction to his constituents and the community at large as had characterized all his other work. In the spring of 1885 he was elected alderman by the Republicans of the Sixth ward, and has since filled that office continuously, at this writing serving his fourth term. In 1897 about one dozen aldermen and justices of the peace of Lancaster and neighboring counties convened at Harrisburg, for the purpose of forming an organization for the better advancement of the Minor Judiciary of the State of Pennsylvania. This organization is known as the Magistrates Association of the State of Pennsylvania, and numbers over five thousand members; Alderman Deen was elected president of the Association in September, 1902. In the spring of 1902 Mr. Deen was elected treasurer of the directors of the poor of Lancaster county. In addition to all these many responsibilities he has, for years, been clerk of the common councils.

In 1869 Alderman Deen married Miss Mary C. Price, who was born and reared in Lancaster, and two children graced their union: (1) William L., a graduate of pharmacy, is now holding a responsible position in the drug business in Philadelphia; in 1895 he married Jennie Swartz, and they have one son, David L. (2) Mary Elizabeth is at home. The mother of these died in 1877, and in 1879 Mr. Deen married Maggie I. Seith, by whom he had one child, Charles F., formerly a clerk with Cox & Rose, merchants, Lancaster, and now with the United Telephone & Telegraph Company, Lancaster. Mr. and Mrs. Deen are members of the Reformed Church. In politics he is a Republican, and has been for several years a member of the Republican County Committee and Republican City Executive Committee, of which latter he has been chairman for ten years. He has for many years taken an active, earnest and efficient part in all city, county, State and National affairs. Socially Alderman Deen is past chancellor of the K. of P.; secretary of the Lancaster Game Protective Association; and "in days of yore" was a member (for a time) of the American Order of Steam Engineers, and chief engineer and secretary of the old American Fire Company, as well as assistant engineer of the Volunteer Fire Department of Lancaster. In conclusion, it may, without fear of contradiction, be added that, in all his walks of life—whether as a private citizen or as a public official—Alderman Deen has always stood unswervingly for the right, and for that alone, and he has deservedly earned the esteem of all who know him.

DAVID SHETRONE (deceased) was a man who commanded the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact, either in business or social life, on account of his sterling worth and honorable dealings. The greater part of his life was spent in York county, this State, but for three years he made his home in Columbia, and during that time made a host of warm friends in that city.

Mr. Shetrone was born in York March 15, 1824, a son of John and Mary (Beakie) Shetrone, of that place, where the father followed the shoemaker's trade throughout life. The children of the family were: Jacob, deceased; Isaac, a resident of Ohio; William, deceased; Henry, a resident of York, Pa.; David, of this sketch; Sarah, a widow and a resident of Indiana; and Margaret, wife of a Mr. Plank, of Chester, Pennsylvania.

As previously stated, David Shetrone was a resident of Columbia for three years, from 1854 to 1856, inclusive, but with that exception he always lived in York, Pa., and was lumber inspector for many years. Fraternally he was a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, and politically was a supporter of the Democratic party.

In Columbia, May 1, 1855, Mr. Shetrone married Miss Mary M. Bartch, and by this union were born children as follows: Anna L., now the wife of Clayton Wiest, a machinist of York; Michael, deceased; David, a merchant of Columbia; Mary Eliza, deceased; George, manager of the Atlantic Refining Company, who married Ella Fockner and lives in York; Ada, wife of Newton Nissly, a machinist of Columbia; Bertha, wife of John Herman, a grocer of Gloucester City, N. J.; Mary, wife of James King, a railroad man of Columbia; Edward, who died at the age of twenty-one years; and Amos, who is with his mother. The father died April 5, 1884, at the age of sixty years, and was buried in York.

Mrs. Shetrone, a most estimable lady, has made her home in Columbia since 1894, and is an active and prominent member of St. John's Lutheran Church of that place. She was born on Chestnut Hill, West Hempfield township, Lancaster county. Her father, Michael Bartch, was born in Gross Gunbe, Darmstadt, Germany, March 28, 1802, and was about twenty-five years of age when he came to America. Locating on Chestnut Hill, Lancaster Co., Pa., he followed farming, and also opened up and operated ore banks. Here he was married, in 1833, to Elizabeth Schwinn, who was also born in Darmstadt, Germany, March 1, 1810, and died Feb. 16, 1888, while his death occurred on Chestnut Hill April 29, 1859. They were earnest members of the Lutheran Church, and highly respected and esteemed by all who knew them. In their family were the following children: Michael, a contractor and builder of Dayton, Ohio; Mary M., now Mrs. Shetrone; George, foreman of Bruner's coalyard at Columbia; Louisa, deceased wife of Frederick Bucher, of Columbia; Sarah, wife of Valentine Bentley, a carpenter of Columbia; Tobias, a resident of the same place; Amos, a merchant of Columbia, now deceased; and Elizabeth, wife of Adam Agle, of Columbia. Mrs. Shetrone's maternal grandfather was a farmer by occupation and a life-long resident of Germany.

JACOB CASSEL, an old and retired farmer, whose long life has been marked by industry and integrity, was born on the farm where he and his son now reside, Dec. 9, 1817, a son of Joseph and Anna (Hershey) Cassel. Joseph Cassel was born on the farm where his son and grandson are now living, and Anna Hershey was born in Penn township, all of Lancaster county. Abraham Cassel located on this farm in 1747, and it has never passed out of the hands of his descendants to the present time.

Joseph and Anna (Hershey) Cassel moved to Penn township in 1846, being engaged during all their active life in the tillage of the soil. The father died in 1847, at the age of seventy-five, and the mother, who passed to her rest in 1855, lived to be eighty-one years old. They were members of the Mennonite Church, and in their day were among the leading people of their community, honest, upright and of manifest integrity. These were their children: Joseph, who lived to be twenty-eight years old; Henry, who died when fifty-seven; Nancy, who married a Mr. Stauffer, and died when twenty-three; John, a retired farmer in Penn township; Mary, who married Jacob Hostetter and lived to be eighty-one; Elizabeth, who married Henry Buckholder and lived to be eighty-three; David, who passed away at the age of eighty-one; and Jacob, noted above.

Joseph Cassel, who was the grandfather of Jacob, was a resident of Lancaster county and a strong and leading character of his day.

Jacob Cassel was married in Lancaster county, in Feb., 1846, to Barbara, a daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Lehma) Hershey. Her parents were natives of Lancaster county, and in every way honorable and upright people. Jacob Cassel has remained on the farm where he is now found for many years. In 1873 he retired from active labor, feeling that his long and arduous life entitled him to some rest and ease during its closing period. His religious associations have been with the Mennonite Church, of which he is an honored and devoted member. His political views are those held by the Republican party, and he has long been an effective worker in that organization.

Abraham H. Cassel, prominent in the farming community of Rapho township, and long and intimately associated with his father, Jacob Cassel, was born on the farm where he is now living Jan. 1, 1851. In 1892 he lost his mother, who was born in 1821. Her remains were interred in the Kauffman Meeting House churchyard. The following children constituted the family: Fanny H., who married John Wademan, and is now dead; Abraham H., the second child of the family; Anna H., the wife of John Musser, a farmer and tobacco packer of Lancaster county.

Abraham H. Cassel was married in Lancaster, Pa., Nov. 12, 1872, to Barbara Musser, and to this union was born Henry M., who is now at home.

Mrs. Barbara (Musser) Cassel was born in East Hempfield township, Lancaster county, July 11, 1852, a daughter of Benjamin and Maria (Nissley) Musser. Her parents were both natives of Lancaster county. Her father died in Salunga, and her mother in Lancaster. They were born and reared farming people, and in 1872 retired to spend their last years in Salunga. Her father was in his active days a school director. Religiously he belonged to the Reformed Mennonite Church. He died in Salunga in 1892, at the age of sixty-seven and was buried in the Landisville cemetery. His widow died in Lancaster in 1898, at the age of seventy-three, and her remains rest beside those of her husband. She was a member of the Old Mennonite Church. Born to this union were the following children: Martin N., who is a farmer in East Hempfield township; Anna N., the wife of Joseph Cassel, a merchant at Reading, Pa.; Barbara N., who is Mrs. Cassel; Mary N., single, and living in the city of Lancaster.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Cassel have spent their lives on the old historic homestead that is so rich with the memories of the former generations of the Cassel family, and they have passed industrious and useful lives. They have many friends in the community who admire their genuine integrity and honor, and cherish their friendship for their worth and moral value.

JOHN S. KURTZ, a retired farmer living in Lancaster, was born in Honeybrook, Chester Co., Pa., Feb. 21, 1839, son of Jacob and Sarah (Shirk) Kurtz, natives, respectively, of Reading and Lancaster counties, Pa. The father was a farmer and died in 1866, aged fifty years, while the mother, who was born in 1819, lives in Mechanicsburg, Pa. They were members of the Reformed Mennonite church, and were the parents of three children, of whom John S. is the second child and only son. The eldest daughter, Anna, now deceased, married Ephraim Hostetter; and the youngest daughter, Sarah, is the widow of David Rupp, of Mechanicsburg. The paternal grandparents, John and Anna Kurtz, were natives of Berks county, Pa., where the former was a farmer and stockraiser.

After his first marriage, John S. Kurtz left the home farm and undertook to farm for himself in Ephrata township until 1889, during which year he retired to another part of his property, and settled in Lancaster in April of 1892. He was one of the best farmers in this section of the county, and has to show for years of untiring industry not only a finely improved farm, but several valuable city properties. He is a Republican in political affiliation, but aside from the duty of casting his vote has never interested himself in the strenuous and uncertain life of the politician. He and his family are members of the New Mennonite church, of which he has been a deacon for the past fourteen years, and have materially assisted in building up the organizations in connection therewith.

The first marriage of Mr. Kurtz was solemnized in Lancaster, Jan. 19, 1860, with Maria F. Hostetter, born near Manheim, Pa., in April, 1843, and died Aug. 30, 1877. Mrs. Kurtz was a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Forney) Hostetter, of Lancaster, and was the mother of two children, of whom Lizzie K., now deceased, was born Sept. 4, 1863; and Edwin H., born in Jan. 1864, married first Lizzie Shirk, and afterward Mollie Bankert. On April 3, 1892, Bishop Hershey performed the ceremony uniting Mr. Kurtz and Anna E. Weaver, born July 17, 1848, a daughter of Joseph and Esther (Steman) Weaver, natives respectively of East Lampeter and Strasburg.

Joseph Weaver, who was a minister of the Reformed Mennonite church, and a farmer during the active years of his life, married Barbara Barr, who was born in 1794, and died in 1840, leaving seven children as follows: Isaac, deceased; Ephraim, deceased; Ann, deceased wife of John Franz; Jacob, deceased; Mary, living in Lancaster; Elizabeth, the wife of C. N. Witmer, since deceased; and Susanna, who lives with Mary in Lancaster. For his second wife Mr. Weaver married Esther Steman Brubaker, and to this marriage were born: Barbara A., who married Amos Bowman, a retired farmer of East Lampeter; and Anna E., the wife of John Kurtz, the subject of this biography. Mr. Weaver died in East Lampeter in 1871, at the age of eighty years, his wife surviving him until May 11, 1890, her age being eighty-three years. They are buried in Longnecker churchyard. Joseph Weaver was a son of Jacob and Esther (Neff) Weaver, of Lancaster county, the former of whom was a farmer and lived to a ripe old age. Mrs. Esther Weaver was a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Bowman) Steman, also of Lancaster county.

J. FRANK REED, who both as miller and farmer is well and favorably known to the citizens of Sadsbury township, was born there, on Jan. 21, 1825, and was a son of Charles and Sarah (Brooker) Reed, the former of whom was a native of England, a stone mason by trade, and died in Sadsbury township in 1831. The mother was a native of Sadsbury township and lived until 1856, dying at the age of sixty-six years. Both of these parents had belonged to the Society of Friends, and were laid to rest in the cemetery attached to the meeting house in this township. Their children were: J. Frank; and Amanda, who married William G. Miller, of Chester county, and died in 1876, in Sadsbury township.

J. Frank Reed was reared by his mother in the home of his grandfather Brooker until he was seventeen years of age, although he was but fourteen when he began to learn the milling business, working at it as opportunity offered. When seventeen he went for one year to Brownstown, in Drumore township, and worked there as a journeyman; then to Bart township, where for four years he was one of the employees of the well remembered Old Rock mill. When that property was sold, Mr. Reed rented the Willow mill, in Bart township and turned out the "grists" for the country round, for four years, going to Paradise township, where for three years his skill as a miller was tested. Mr. Reed then purchased one-half of a farm in Sadsbury township, with an uncle, this arrangement continuing but one year, Mr. Reed selling his interest and going to Colerain township. Here he invested in a small farm of thirty acres, and cultivated it for fourteen years, at the end of that time taking advantage of an opportunity to purchase his present estate. Since then he has been engaged in both farming and milling, doing some of the most satisfactory work in this locality, in his mill. This old stone structure was erected in 1833, by John Townsend, and was originally a water-power mill, but with other improvements, Mr. Reed replaced the old power with a gas engine.

The marriage of Frank Reed was on March 9, 1853, to Sarah J. Lary, and the children of this union were: Adela, who died in young womanhood; Laura A. and Edna F., both cultured and intelligent ladies, living with their parents, and, with their mother, leading members of the Presbyterian church.

The birth of Mrs. Reed was on July 10, 1833, and she was a daughter of Uriah and Juliann (Barge) Lary, natives of Paradise township. Uriah Lary was killed by a peculiar accident, being struck in a vital part by the tongue of a wagon while he was in the act of removing it from the barn. This occurred in 1837, when he was yet in the prime of life, having only reached his fortieth year. His widow survived until 1856, reaching her fiftieth year. Their children were: Benjamin F., who died in a field hospital, during the Civil war; Adeline, who is the widow of William Barnett, of Iowa; Mary A., who is the widow of Uriah Miller, of Paradise township; and Sarah J., who became Mrs. Reed.

Few men of this township are more widely known than Mr. Reed, and he counts his friends by the number of his acquaintances. A staunch Republican, he takes a great interest in the success of his party, but has held no office except that of school director and that of supervisor, in Colerain township. His religious training was in the Quaker faith, but he is liberal enough to see good in all, and while not confining himself to any fixed doctrine, his exemplary life speaks for itself, and he is universally esteemed. His present farming land comprises twenty-six acres, and he still is quite capable of managing both it and his milling interests, although he has passed the limit of three-score years, which in the old days marked a man's decline. Vigorous in mind and body, Mr. Reed is a living example of the results of an exemplary and temperate life.

BACHMAN. The founder of the Bachman family in Lancaster county was John Bachman, who was born March 20, 1746. His native country was Switzerland, and thence he came to the United States while still a young man, and established in Lancaster county a family which has grown into wealth and prominence.

John Bachman, the pioneer, was married April 9, 1771, to Maria Rohrer, who was born Jan. 28, 1749, and their family consisted of the following children: Anna, born Jan. 18, 1772; Maria, May 7, 1773; John, Jan. 20, 1775; Elizabeth, Dec. 14, 1776; Barbara, Dec. 20, 1778; Christian, March 1, 1780; Jacob, April 25, 1782; Susannah, March 29, 1784; and Maria, Aug. 16, 1786. Of this family, Maria married John McCartney, of West Lampeter township. Susan remained single, and lived to an advanced age.

John Bachman, son of John, born Jan. 20, 1775, came into the world during a historic time in West Lampeter township, and there and in Pequea township he spent his life, and carried on his father's business, that of cabinet making and undertaking. He was located between Willowstreet and West Willow, in Pequea township, where for very many years he could be found, an industrious and thorough workman, and a man highly respected throughout the neighborhood. As one of the leading members of the Mennonite Church he set an example of exemplary living, and his decease, on Nov. 10, 1849, was sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends. John Bachman (2) was married Dec. 12, 1797, to Esther Grider, who was born Feb. 16, 1780, and died Sept. 28, 1850. Their children were: Jacob, born Sept. 24, 1798, died July 4, 1869; John, born Oct. 5, 1799, died Sept. 9, 1876; Anna, born Feb. 24, 1802, died March 2, 1819; Christian, born April 10, 1803, died May 9, 1857; Susannah, born Feb. 18, 1805, died Nov. 5, 1888, unmarried; Benjamin, born July 17, 1807, died July 24, 1843; Mary, born Dec. 6, 1808, died March 12, 1811; and Barbara, born Oct. 27, 1811, died Sept. 24, 1815.

Jacob Bachman, the eldest in the family of John (2), was born in Pequea township, between Willowstreet and West Willow, and was reared to his father's business, which he also adopted. On Feb. 12, 1822, he married Barbara Kendig, who was born Nov. 16, 1803, and died Jan. 30, 1876. She was the daughter of Christian and Barbara (Mylin) Kendig, of Conestoga township, where they were much respected residents. After their marriage Jacob Bachman and wife moved to East Lampeter township, and located his cabinetmaking business near Soudersburg. In the course of time the little settlement grew, and as the Bachman family was the most prominent the name soon became Bachmantown. For forty-eight years Jacob Bachman was a resident of that locality, and few indeed were there who did not know him well. In connection with his trade he also engaged extensively in farming, and was a man who took an interest in public affairs, always advocating measures for the advancement of education, and more progressive than almost any other citizen. His connection with the board of education lasted many years, and many of the advantages enjoyed at the present time may be traced to his persevering and intelligent management of affairs. Both he and his estimable wife have long since passed away, and rest in the Mennonite burying-ground in Strasburg.

The ten children born to Jacob Bachman and his wife were as follows: Ann, born Jan. 20, 1823, died May 21, 1895; she became the wife of Jacob Weaver, who died in their early married life. Eli, born Jan. 15, 1825, resided in West Lampeter township, until his death, Oct. 1, 1901. Christian, born May 22, 1827, died May 14, 1901. Susan, born Nov. 20, 1829, is the widow of Augustus Baum, and resides in Quarryville. John K., born June 10, 1832, is a resident of East Lampeter. Barbara, born March 28, 1835, is the wife of Harvey Sherts, of Strasburg township. Martin, born Jan. 30, 1838, died Oct. 3, 1884, in West Virginia, where he owned large tracts of timber land and also was the proprietor of a sawmill; he was a soldier in the Civil war, serving in Co. E, 79th P. V. I., entering as a private, and being mustered out a lieutenant; after serving gallantly for three years, he was slightly wounded and held in prison; after the war he went to West Virginia, became prominent in the Republican party, and was a man of ability in every direction. Magdalena, born March 30, 1841, is unmarried and resides in Strasburg. Jacob H., born March 22, 1844, died Sept. 11, 1872, he was a resident of Strasburg, where he carried on cabinetmaking. Elizabeth, born Sept. 19, 1848, is the wife of Frank Book, a farmer of Strasburg township.

Christian Bachman was reared in East Lampeter, and learned the trade of cabinetmaking with his father, remaining with him until his marriage, on Dec. 4, 1855, when he moved into Strasburg and established himself there, opening up a business in cabinetmaking and undertaking, and continuing as its active head until 1897. In 1880, however, he had associated with him in the business his two capable sons, Ellis and Frank, the firm name becoming C. Bachman & Sons, and this arrangement continued until 1888, when Frank Bachman withdrew. The business was then conducted under the firm name of C. Bachman & Son, this style obtaining until the retirement of the father and the assumption of the entire business by Ellis Bachman under the firm name, as it is at present, of E. Bachman.

When the business was first established the firm manufactured all of the goods sold by the house, but later, as the demands of trade kept increasing, they found it desirable and necessary to place a larger line of furniture in their stock, which gradually has come to embrace every style and kind in their line known to the trade. When Christian Bachman retired from active business it was to leave the important industry in younger hands. For many years he had occupied a prominent position in the public eye, for twenty-five years serving on the board of education, and for another quarter of a century officiating as a notary public, and in spite of private interests he had ever been ready, when called upon, to serve his borough to the best of his ability, usually without profit to himself. As a generous promoter of all progressive and educational movements in Strasburg, his attitude was well known. In his political affiliations he was always a Republican.

Christian Bachman married Miss Barbara Buckwalter, a daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Mylin) Buckwalter, who was born in Strasburg township March 10, 1833, and died March 22, 1901. She was a most estimable woman, and a consistent member of the Reformed Mennonite Church. Mr. and Mrs. Bachman were the parents of seven children: (1) Ellis, born Aug. 15, 1856, is his father's successor in the well-known firm of Bachman & Son. (2) Benjamin Franklin, born Sept. 18, 1858, first learned his father's business, and for a few years was associated with him, but decided to adopt the profession of veterinary surgeon, and took a course in that line in the University of Pennsylvania; after graduating he located for practice in Strasburg, but in the fall of 1900 removed to Pittsburg, where he is now engaged at his profession. He married Miss Elizabeth Loher, and they have three children, Walter, Nancy, and Emily. (3) Harry, born April 25, 1861, died April 19, 1864. (4) William, born Oct. 24, 1863, is a clerk in the Allegheny Galvanizing Company, Pittsburg. (5) Morris, born April 12, 1866, resides in Sharon, Pa. He married Miss Minnie Bachman, and they have two children, John Tedford and Frederick Christian. (6) Edith, born Sept. 26, 1868, is the wife of Isaac H. Weaver, a tobacco dealer and packer of Lancaster city, and they have two children, Herbert and Edward. (7) Charles, born Sept. 30, 1872, resides in Pittsburg, and is the manager, secretary and treasurer of the Allegheny Galvanizing Company.

ELLIS BACHMAN was reared and educated in Strasburg borough, and with his father he learned the trade of cabinetmaking, and learned it thoroughly. Devoting his whole attention to the business since he has assumed full control, he has been enabled to fill the requirements of a critical public, and has been long regarded as a most reliable business man. For the past fifteen years has served efficiently in the office of assessor, and is at present a notary public, succeeding his father. In politics he is a Republican, and one of the active workers for the party.

Ellis Bachman was married, Oct. 31, 1883, to Miss Lillian S. Arnold, who was born Jan. 26, 1859, a daughter of the late Thomas Arnold, of Lancaster. Mr. and Mrs. Bachman are the parents of nine children: Robert, born Nov. 5, 1884, who is in the employ of the Griffin Manufacturing Company, Erie, Pa., as bookkeeper (he is a graduate of the public schools of Strasburg, class of 1900); Harold C., a clerk in the First National Bank, Strasburg; Barbara A.; Pauline N.; Stanley; Donald; Morris; Thomas and Charles.

MORRIS BACHMAN, son of Christian Bachman, has proven himself to be an energetic and successful business man. His early education was acquired in the public schools of Strasburg, from which he graduated in 1883, supplementing this instruction with a special course at the State Normal School, in Millersville. The following spring he entered the office of J. W. Hoffman & Co., iron brokers, in Philadelphia, and remained there until the fall of that year, when he went to Chicago, Ill., and entered the wholesale hardware house of Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co., remaining with them until the following May.

Returning from Chicago to Strasburg, Mr. Bachman embarked in the chicken business, using incubators, and enlarging until he was locally known as something of a chicken fancier. In the following spring he entered the auditing department of the Pennsylvania Railway Company, at Pittsburg, several months later becoming associated with Lindsay & McCutcheon, manufacturers of hoop iron. He was their traveling salesman for two and one-half years, at the end of which time, after resigning his position, he became associated, in the same capacity, with the firm of J. Painter & Sons Co., of Pittsburg, his territory covering the United States and Canada. Mr. Bachman, desiring a more practical knowledge of the iron business, went to Homestead, and entered the iron works of the Carnegie Steel Co. at the time of the great strike, and almost lost his life as a consequence of drinking some of the poisoned water. Through this he was incapacitated from November until the following March, but in the spring of 1893 he returned to Pittsburg, and was made the manager of a coal mine at Coal Center, continuing in this capacity until the following August. He then became associated with William Clark, Son & Co., of Pittsburg, manufacturers of steel hoops, bands, etc., and acted as salesman for their business for two years, when he returned to his old firm, Lindsay & McCutcheon, and remained in their employ several years. In 1898, in company with Veryl Preston, he organized the Monessen Steel Company, locating the plant at Monessen, Pa., where a business was inaugurated for the manufacture of steel hoops and bands, cotton ties, etc. After operating for about a month the business was bought by the American Steel Hoop Company, of which company Mr. Bachman was made general sales agent, with office in New York, holding this position until the fall of 1900, when he resigned it to organize the Sharon Steel Hoop Company, with a capital of $200,000, of which company he is the president.

Morris Bachman, though yet a young man, has had a varied business career, but he has been working to one end. Thoroughly equipped, with boundless energy combined with complete and practical knowledge, he is well fitted to be at the head of a great enterprise. With clear business foresight and sagacity, fitted by nature to command, a hard-working man himself, he has before him a promising future, and reflects credit upon the name he bears and the locality which is proud to consider him one of its products.

FREDERICK KINZLER, at the time of his death a retired shoe manufacturer, and one of the pioneers in his line in Lancaster, Pa., was born in Winnenden, Wurtemberg, Germany, Sept. 13, 1821, a son of John J. and Catherine M. (Beck) Kinzler, who were born, reared and eventually died in the same German town. The father was a millwright and coach manufacturer, and besides Frederick, who is the youngest in the family, he had three other children: Christopher, who died in America; Gottlob, who was a cloth weaver, and died in Germany; and Jacobenia, who married Mr. Frey, and later Mr. Vogel, and died in Philadelphia.

In Germany Frederick Kinzler learned the tanners' trade, and followed the same until his immigration to America in 1842. Upon settling in Philadelphia he failed to find work in his chosen line, and so went to Pine Grove, Pa., and worked in a tanner's for a couple of years. A second effort to find work in Philadelphia also resulted in failure and he therefore learned the trade of shoe-making, to which he applied himself until his removal to Lancaster in 1849. He was successful as a shoe-maker in his new location, and in 1851 opened his late business which grew to such proportions that he was obliged to hire his shoes made, himself attending to the management thereof. Owing to continued ill health he was compelled to retire from active business in 1898, and upon his daughter, Elizabeth, fell the responsibility hitherto assumed by the father. This arrangement was satisfactorily carried on and under the new state of affairs the store is still recognized as the headquarters for reliable and up-to-date shoes.

In 1848, in Philadelphia, Mr. Kinzler married Dorothea Frank, born in Wurtemberg, Germany, Dec. 2, 1827, and died in Lancaster June 30, 1895. Mrs. Kinzler was the daughter of Jacob Frank, a farmer on an extensive scale in Wurtemberg, who had the following children: Caroline, the wife of John Frank, a farmer in Lancaster county; Henry, a shoe merchant in Lancaster; Dorothea; Mary;

David; and George, a resident of Germany. To Mr. and Mrs. Kinzler were born the following children: Caroline, the deceased wife of Jacob Deichler, an artist; Frederick, who died at the age of thirty; Emma, the widow of Frederick Freuend, of Lancaster; Elizabeth, living at home and managing her father's shoe business; Louise, deceased at the age of five years; Anna M., the wife of Alfred Allen, a grocer of Philadelphia; Ella D., who married Henry Sachs, manager of a cigar manufactory in Lancaster. Mr. Kinzer was a Democrat in politics, and was a member of the Zion Lutheran church, of which he was treasurer for many years. He was one of the financially sound men of the town, and had an enviable reputation for sobriety, thrift and devotion to the best interests of the community. He died June 12, 1902, and was buried in Woodward Hill cemetery, Lancaster.

ABRAHAM B. HAVERSTICK, one of the representative citizens of Lancaster county, has his home in Neffsville, where his manly qualities and genuine worth have made him many friends.

Mr. Haverstick was born at Wabank, Jan. 6, 1837, a son of John Haverstick, whose sketch appears elsewhere, and was reared on the family homestead, receiving his education in the common schools, where he learned to write with the old quill pen. Though the schooling of the times was of the crudest character, young Haverstick attended until he was eighteen years old, mostly in the winter season.

Mr. Haverstick remained with his father until 1861, when he moved to his farm in Manheim township, on the Fruitville turnpike, four miles from the city of Lancaster, an estate containing ninety-eight acres, being one of the finely improved farms of the county. The barn was erected by the elder Haverstick, and Abraham B. himself modernized the home and put up other buildings. His parents spent their last years under the roof of their son. In 1897 Mr. Haverstick erected his present handsome modern residence at Neffsville, which is a credit to the place. He and his worthy wife are living in retirement. While devoting his active life to the farming of the Manheim place, he owns a farm of 109 acres in Ephrata township, as well as his handsome residence in Neffsville, and is a stockholder and director of the Fruitville Turnpike Company. In the Penn Turnpike Company he is a stockholder, as he is of the Lancaster Chemical Company, in the founding of which he was active. He was at one time a director of the Manheim-Neffsville Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and has also been a member of the School Board.

Mr. Haverstick was married May 20, 1868, to Catherine, a daughter of Christian and Catherine (Deitrich) Martin. Mrs. Haverstick was born April 22, 1840, in Warwick township, near Lititz, and is the mother of the following children: Dora A., born May 14, 1869, died Feb. 17, 1872; Stehman M., born Sept. 19, 1871, died April 2, 1872; Monroe P., a farmer on the homestead in Manheim township, who was born March 24, 1873, married a graduate of Lancaster business college, Salinda Graybill, and has one child, May; Clayton D., born Oct. 2, 1876, a teacher in the public schools of the county, a graduate of the Millersville State Normal School, married Miss Maggie Heist, and is living at Lititz; Mamie, born July 7, 1879, the wife of George Groff, of Manheim township.

Mr. and Mrs. Haverstick and their children are members of the Lutheran church, of which he is an elder, and his eldest son a deacon. All the members of this family command the respect and esteem of the community for their worth and character.

PROF. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SHAUB, ex-county superintendent and treasurer and one of the owners of the Lancaster Carpet Company, Inc., dealers in carpets, rugs, mattings, etc., was born April 25, 1841, in Strasburg township, Lancaster county, Pa., son of Benjamin and Susannah (Wade) Shaub, natives of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania.

Benjamin Shaub, the father, was a farmer in Strasburg township, Lancaster county, where he was a well known and influential man, highly respected by all who knew him. His death occurred in 1896, when he was eighty years of age, and his wife died in 1899, aged eighty-four years, both dying at Strasburg; they were buried in the Old Mennonite cemetery, as they were members of that denomination and most worthy, Christian people. Five children were born to these parents: Benjamin Franklin; Amos, a shoe merchant of Lancaster, Pa.; John, a shoe merchant of Lancaster; Christian, a clothing merchant of Lancaster; Mary, widow of David E. Mayer of Strasburg. The paternal grandfather was John Shaub, and he married Elizabeth Gochenaur. He was a farmer of Providence township, and a man of prominence and influence in the community. The first of the Shaub family to settle in this country was a native of Switzerland.

During his boyhood days, Prof. Shaub worked upon his father's farm, attending school during the winter seasons. At the age of eighteen, so advanced was he in his studies, he began teaching, and continued as an instructor in the public schools for five years, giving unqualified satisfaction and winning many friends. His first school was at Fairview, in Strasburg township, and at the expiration of five years, although only twenty-three, he was offered the position of principal of the high school in Bellefonte, Center county, Pa., which he retained one year, and then entered the Millersville Normal School, from which he was graduated with high honors, in the scientific course, in 1869. In that year he was elected Professor of Physics and of German, in the Millersville Normal school, and remained in this position until 1871, when he resigned to enter upon the study of law, under the preceptorship of Hon. John B. Livingston, Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

In 1872 Mr. Shaub was elected county superintendent, and continued in that office for eleven and one-half years. In 1883 he was elected principal of the Millersville Normal school and remained in that position four years. Many important improvements were made in the school under his principalship, and the tone of the school was kept at high grade. A fine reading room was established, and the entire institution was supplied with water throughout, in a most perfect manner, thus furnishing a basis for many subsequent improvements.

In 1887 he resigned the principalship, and removed to Lancaster and entered into his present business, with John V. Vondersmith, these two partners continuing alone until 1891, when the concern was incorporated, with Mr. Shaub as treasurer, and Mr. Vondersmith as superintendent. The extensive business connections built up by this organization have placed it among the leading commercial houses of Lancaster, and reflect credit upon both Mr. Shaub and his associates.

As an educator, Mr. Shaub was a capable and practical man of wide experience and peculiarly adapted for his work.

In 1880 he was president of the Pennsylvania State Teachers' Association. In 1875 Franklin and Marshall College conferred upon Mr. Shaub the degree of A. M.; and in 1885 Lafayette College conferred upon him the degree of Ph. D.

As a business man, he has also been successful and the results accomplished by him, demonstrate what can be done by industry and through comprehension of the details of the work undertaken.

Mr. Shaub is married to Alwilda Book, who was born in Strasburg, Pa., a daughter of Michael and Sarah (Spiehlman) Book, of Lancaster county, Pa., where the father was a farmer. These parents were of Swiss and German descent. One child was born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Shaub, Miss Miriam, who resides with her parents, is a graduate of the Lancaster high school, and is now teaching Latin in Prof. Moore's school for young ladies, Cotta College, Lancaster. The family are members of the M. E. church, in which organization Mr. Shaub was Sunday-school superintendent for five years, and is now a member of its official board. In politics, he is a Republican, and always takes a deep interest in all matters pertaining to the advancement of the highest ideals in the community.

ABRAHAM NEWCOMER, one of the prosperous and best known farmers in Manor township, Lancaster county, Pa., and residing two miles south of Mountville, was born July 8, 1842, and was reared on the old homestead. He was educated in the public schools, and at nineteen years of age began learning the carpenter's trade with Jacob Sneath; this trade he followed for eight years, and then began farming near Safe Harbor on a tract of thirty-seven acres. Seven years later he purchased forty-two acres of the Lehman farm, to which he at once removed, having sold his farm at Safe Harbor. He passed eighteen years on this new property, then without selling it, returned to the old Newcomer homestead in 1896, on which he lived until the spring of 1899, when he located on his present farm, south of Mountville. He now owns the forty-two-acre Lehman farm, forty acres of the Newcomer homestead, and six and a half acres where he resides near Mountville. In conjunction with general farming he has done considerable carpenter work and has erected all his own buildings as occasion required.

Mr. Newcomer married, Nov. 10, 1868, Miss Mary Ann Rutt, a native of Lancaster county, and a daughter of David Rutt. To this union have been born nine children, in the following order: Alice, wife of Frank Hershey, of West Hempfield township; Amos, farming on his father's place and married to Clara Witmer; Martha, wife of Milton Millhouse, a farmer of Manor township; Abraham, also a farmer in Manor township and married to Ellen Dombauch; Mary; Ellen, Elizabeth, David and Annie.

Mr. Newcomer has been an active member of the Mennonite church about twenty-three years, and for a long time has been a member of the official board; in April, 1899, he was made a deacon, and his life has been one of quiet usefulness and industry. The family stand among the county's most worthy and respected citizens, and although unassuming in deportment, are effective in their usefulness.

EDWARD D. REILLY has within a comparatively brief career as a member of the Lancaster County Bar established himself among the successful representatives of the legal fraternity in his section. He has already been honored with positions of public trust and private confidence, and in the discharge of the duties of these incumbencies has proved himself eminently worthy.

Mr. Reilly was born Nov. 25, 1869, in Easton, Pa., youngest son of the late John Reilly, who came to this country from Ireland in 1836. He landed in New York, and made his way soon after to Lancaster. John Reilly did a vast amount of work as a railroad and bridge builder, undertaking and carrying to successful conclusion many large and important contracts, notable among them being the contract for the Lachine canal, in Canada, the North Pennsylvania railroad, the Lehigh & Susquehanna Valley railroad, at Easton, the Easton & Amboy railroad, the Chestnut street bridge, at Philadelphia, and many hardly less notable undertakings. For some time he was associated with the late Richard McGrann, the father of B. J. McGrann, the firm being Reilly & McGrann. Mr. Reilly died at Easton, Pa., at the age of fifty-four years, at the very prime of his manhood and business ability. The family came to Lancaster in 1875, and there they have since remained.

John Reilly had six brothers, all of whom came to the United States, rising to prominence as contractors. Dennis Reilly, one of the brothers, was a leading ironmaster at Easton, Pa. John Reilly was married, in 1856, to Mary, daughter of Thomas Wallace, for years the keeper of an old-time inn at Huntingdon, famous in the days before the railroad as a stopping-place for travelers by stage and coach. Mr. Wallace passed away full of years and honor at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Reilly, in Lancaster, in 1889, when ninety years of age.

Mr. and Mrs. John Reilly became the parents of the following family: (1) John B., a railroad and bridge builder of Lancaster; (2) T. Wallace, now a member of the wholesale grocery firm of M. S. Miller & Co., of Lancaster; (3) Richard M., of Reilly Bros. & Raub; (4) William H., deceased, formerly of Reilly Bros. & Raub; (5) Mary and (6) Elizabeth, both of whom are at home with their mother; (7) Edward D., mentioned below; and (8) Margaret, the wife of the Hon. J. Hay Brown, Judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

Edward D. Reilly was educated in the public schools of Lancaster, graduating from the high school in 1885. He attended Mt. St. Mary's College at Emmitsburg, Md., from which he was graduated in June, 1888, and the following year entered upon a business career. In the fall of 1889 he began the study of law with John A. Coyle, and was admitted to practice Dec. 20, 1892. In 1892 and during the two ensuing years he was president of the Young Men's Democratic Society, and in 1896 was elected a member of the city council from the Second ward by a majority of two votes. In 1897 and 1900 he was elected to the school board, and has been chairman of the Judiciary committee of that body since his first election. Belonging to St. Mary's Catholic Church, he is serving on the board of St. Mary's Orphan Asylum. Mr. Reilly is connected with a number of Catholic societies, holding membership in St. Michael's Beneficial Union, of which he was president for two years; the Leo XIII Society; the Knights of St. John; and the Pennsylvania C. B. L.

Mr. Reilly was married, Dec. 29, 1897, to Miss Katharine Eugenie, daughter of A. F. and Emily Keating, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

A Democrat in politics, and a warm supporter of Bryan, Mr. Reilly is recognized as one of the leading young Democrats of Lancaster county, and has frequently been a delegate to county and State conventions, being the county committeeman at the present time from the Second ward. During his preparation for the law Mr. Reilly acted as a reporter for a great part of the time on the Lancaster Examiner, until his press of work in making ready for the final examination compelled him to devote all his time to study. During this time, and since his entrance upon professional life, Mr. Reilly has developed marked ability as a writer of strong and forcible English. As a lawyer, a large success has attended his efforts.

Liberal in his views and practice, a fine conversationalist, and possessed of a kindly and genial nature, Mr. Reilly has developed rapidly in his professional and social relations, and gives every promise of a brilliant future.

CHRISTIAN LEFEVER, himself a prominent resident of West Lampeter township, Lancaster county, descends from one of the old and honored families of the county. Isaac Lefever, the great-great-grandfather of Christian, was the founder of this family in America. He came from Strasburg, in Alsace-Lorraine, and landed in New York, coming at a later date to Lancaster, where he secured many hundred acres of land. Still later he bought a tract of 400 acres, though described in the deed as consisting of 350 acres. This was divided, and the part on which the family home was erected has descended to Christian Lefever. It comprises about a hundred acres, and a nephew, Martin Lefever, owns 155 acres. The remainder of the vast property held by the American ancestor of the family has passed out of the hands of his descendants. Phillip Lefever, the son of Isaac, received by deed his large property in West Lampeter township, the consideration being "natural love and affection."

Adam Lefever was the grandfather of Christian, and was born on the old homestead, where Christian is now living. His death in 1815 carried him away at the age of sixty-eight years. A farmer all his life, he was a man of industry and character, and reared a family of thirteen children: Henry, the father of Christian; Adam; Philip; John; Daniel; George; Samuel; Peter; Jacob; Catherine, wife of Henry Mandebach; Elizabeth, who married Daniel Esbenshade; Esther, who married Jacob Rothfen; Mary, wife of Dr. Peter Lefever.

Henry Lefever, noted above, was born April 11, 1772, and died in Sept. 1844. His active life began as a day laborer and wood chopper. For a short time he was in the building business, and as he had become somewhat prosperous, he bought a small farm, and engaged in the cultivation of the soil. When rather advanced in years he bought 200 acres from the estate, and when he died was quite wealthy. His business judgment and personal probity were highly regarded by his fellow townsmen, and several estates were put into his hands to settle. Many local offices were filled by him, and he was considered one of the leading men of the town. Henry Lefever married Miss Elizabeth Hess, a daughter of Christian Hess; she died early in life, leaving two children: Christian, whose name introduces this article; and Adam, a farmer in West Lampeter township, now dead. The father was a member of the Old Mennonite church.

Christian Lefever was born Nov. 24, 1823, and received his education in the public schools. His father dying while he was still a boy, Christian took charge of the farm before he was twenty-one, and from that time to the present has had charge of the family homestead, comprising a hundred acres, which has now passed into his ownership. Following in the line of his ancestral character and industry, he has become one of the leading men of the community in which he lives. His farm now comprises 192 acres of the best land Lancaster county, the garden of the state, affords. He is also a director in the Farmers' Bank and the Lancaster County Bank in the city of Lancaster. Since 1899, on account of failing health, he has been compelled to give up many of his business associations, and lives very much retired.

Mr. Lefever takes an active interest in local affairs, and from time to time has filled many of the town offices. His property is kept up in the best of shape, and he has erected on his farm three different sets of farm buildings.

Mr. Lefever was married in 1853 to Annie a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Brackbill) Houser, by whom he has had the following family: Jacob, who died just prior to his graduation in medicine; Annie, who died at the age of twenty years; Christian E., who died about the age of twenty-four years, remembered as one of the bright and promising young men of the county; Elizabeth, married to W. B. Gontner, a farmer on the old homestead; Harry L., married to Frances E. Harnish, and living in Lancaster township.

Mr. and Mrs. Lefever belong to the Old Mennonite church, and are highly esteemed by those who know them best, for their many good qualities and genuine worth.

LEVI S. HACKER (deceased), at one time a conspicuous and central figure in Lititz, Lancaster county, was a native of the borough of Ephrata, in that county, and was born Sept. 7, 1822. His father was Jacob Hacker and his mother bore the maiden name of Steiner. He was educated in his native borough, where he also made his first business venture while still a very young man, by opening a dry goods store. A short time afterwards, however, he disposed of this business and went to Philadelphia, and engaged in dry goods jobbing at the corner of Third and Market streets, in connection with a Mr. Riegel and a Mr. Conrad, under the firm name of Hacker, Riegel & Conrad; this style was maintained for nineteen years, when Mr. Hacker returned to Lititz and entered the lumber trade with Mr. Beckler under the firm name of Hacker & Beckler. This firm continued for many years, when Mr. Beckler withdrew to accept a position in the Lititz National Bank. Mr. Hacker then relinquished his retail department, but still continued the wholesale business until his death, Feb. 22, 1889.

In the death of Mr. Hacker, Lititz and Lancaster county lost a most useful and valuable citizen, although he took no active part in politics, neither did he unite with any of the secret societies, preferring the companionship of the wife and children and the comforts of his home to those of any club or society organization. He was, however, an active member of the Reformed church and an ardent worker in the Sabbath-school, and for years was a Sabbath-school teacher. While a resident of Philadelphia he was a member and trustee of Dr. Willitt's church, but after returning to Lititz he and his family attended the Moravian church as the Reformed society had no church edifice in this borough.

Mr. Hacker married, Aug. 18, 1859, Miss Lavinia L. Arndt, a daughter of Philip and Elizabeth (Bartruff) Arndt, of Manheim, and this marriage was blessed with three children, the eldest of whom died in infancy; Mary, wife of Haydn Miksch, and Ella, wife of Martin Hess, are both residents of Lititz. No family in this borough is more respected than that of the deceased Levi S. Hacker, and no gentleman was ever more highly esteemed for his many personal virtues than Mr. Hacker himself.

SAMUEL C. STEVENSON, a well known and successful business man of Mt. Nebo, Martic township, is a native of that township, born Jan. 20, 1842, son of John and Elizabeth (Doulin) Stevenson.

John Stevenson, the father, was born in Martic township, Dec. 1, 1807, and died in 1896. His wife was born in 1809 and died in 1855. They were married in 1829 and had a family of nine children, six of whom grew to maturity, viz.: Mary S., the widow of John B. Appleton, of Martic township; Harriet Ann, the wife of Gilbert Smith, of Philadelphia; Samuel C., of this sketch; Matilda H., deceased; William E., in the West; and Elizabeth, of Philadelphia. John Stevenson was a son of Samuel, a grandson of Samuel, and a great-grandson of John Stevenson. In politics he was a Democrat. He belonged to the Presbyterian church, and was a man who was honored and respected in the community.

Samuel C. Stevenson was reared on the farm and acquired his education in the public schools. In 1858 he commenced to learn the cabinet-making trade and the undertaking business, and has followed both in Mount Nebo up to the present time. On May 7, 1863, Mr. Stevenson was united in marriage with Miss Mary Clark, daughter of Thomas Clark, born Aug. 25, 1842, and this union has been blessed with two children, namely: George E., who is now a resident of Mount Nebo; and Emma D., who is the wife of W. W. Erb, of Martic township, more extended mention of whom will be found in another part of this volume.

In politics, Mr. Stevenson has long been an influential member of the Democratic party and has efficiently served his township as assessor and justice of the peace. Mr. Stevenson has been particularly active and useful in the Mount Nebo Methodist church, serving as steward of that body and for many years as superintendent of the Sunday-school. He is also identified with a number of the leading fraternal societies, notably Lodge No. 374, of Rawlinsville, I. O. O. F.; Lodge No. 423, K. of P., of Rawlinsville, and also of the Mystic Chain of Mount Nebo.

Mr. Stevenson is a man who commands the esteem, respect and confidence of his community, as he is honorable and upright in his dealings, is a worthy citizen, a true friend, a model Christian and kind husband and father.

HENRY PATTON, general farmer and ex-carpenter in Salisbury township, was born one-half mile from his present home, Dec. 4, 1838, son of Linton and Elizabeth (Reel) Patton, the former of whom died in Jan. 1867, aged seventy-one years. The latter died in 1879, at the age of eighty years, and they were interred in the Pequea Presbyterian church cemetery.

Henry Patton grew up on the farm and remained at home assisting his father until the outbreak of the Civil war. With other loyal defenders of his country's flag, he enlisted in Lancaster, Aug. 19, 1861, in Co. A, 79th P. V. I., for three years and served valiantly under Captains William K. Kerdrig and James L. Benson. Mr. Patton's service was a hard one and he still has reminders of it from a musket ball wound in the left thigh, the ball never having been found. This wound necessitated a stay in the hospital from October until Christmas, when he rejoined his company at Stone River. He participated in many very serious battles, beginning with that of Perryville, where he was wounded, Stone River and Chickamauga. He was with Gen. Sherman's forces in Georgia and was discharged Oct. 3, 1864, at Atlanta. In March, 1865, at Philadelphia, Mr. Patton enlisted in Co. F., First Army Corps, U. S. Vet. Vol. and served through one year and was then honorably discharged at Madison, Wisconsin.

Upon his return home, Mr. Patton resumed work as a carpenter, which trade he had previously learned, following it three years prior to his enlistment, and for twenty years he worked in this part of Lancaster county, becoming known as one of the most reliable men in his line in the locality. Since retiring from his trade, he has successfully followed farming, proving himself as excellent a farmer as he was soldier and builder. In politics Mr. Patton is a Democrat.

ANDREW KRAY (deceased). One of the most highly esteemed citizens of Lancaster, Pa., was Andrew Krav, whose death took place on Nov. 18, 1899. His life was one filled with good works and kind actions, and his memory is held in reverence by his descendants. He amassed a competency for his family, set them a most estimable example and in every sense was a devoted father and husband, a kind neighbor and friend and a most excellent citizen.

Mr. Kray was born in Waldalgesheim, Germany, on April 18, 1832, and was a son of Peter Kray, who passed his life in Germany. The family of Peter Kray consisted of the following children: Peter, who is a retired shoe manufacturer, in Lancaster; Fred, who was a gardener by trade, died in Coleman, Ala.; Andrew, of this sketch; Margaret, who was the wife of Ernest Hankte, died in Germany, while Andrew Kray was on a visit there; Elizabeth, who lives on the old family homestead in the house which was built in 1706. Andrew Kray served his apprenticeship to the trade of shoe-maker, and followed that in his own country until 1853, when he emigrated to America. He joined other Germans who had previously located in Lancaster, Pa., and worked industriously until within a few years of his death, when he retired from activity. He was a quiet, unassuming man, and was particularly fond of his home and friends. The attachment which continued to exist through life, to his most estimable wife, was a most beautiful trait in his character. For years they were almost inseparable, attending to home duties and outside business in companionship. The devoted wife was called first from earth, and it seemed as if the strong bond of affection existing between them enabled her to foresee the date of his decease, which took place as she predicted, and the father and mother of the four surviving children, lie side by side in St. Anthony's cemetery.

On June 12, 1855, Mr. Kray married Margaret Kaber, in Lancaster. She was born Dec. 2, 1822, in Braunweiler, Germany, a daughter of John Kaber, who was a farmer there. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Kaber were: Elizabeth, who married Peter Sheid, died in Lancaster; Agnes, who married John Kaber, died in Germany; Katherine, who married John Long, died in Germany; Emma, who married Nicolaus Wies, died in Germany; Nicholas, died in Germany; Christian, who died in Germany; and Margaret, who married Mr. Kray. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Kray were: Peter, who died in infancy; John, who died in infancy; Andrew F., who is a retired printer and shoe manufacturer, resides in Lancaster; Mary, who married August Geiger, a confectioner and grocer in Lancaster; John A., who married Helen Hebrank, is a shoe manufacturer in Lancaster; Barbara and Fred, both of whom died in infancy, and Catherine M., who married Joseph Geiger, who is a shoe manufacturer in Lancaster. Mr. and Mrs. Kray reared this family carefully and well, educated them and lived to see them honored and respected members of society.

Mr. Kray was one of the founders of St.

Anthony's church and was always liberal in his benefactions to it. At the time of his death he was connected with a number of beneficiary societies, namely: St. Peter's, St. Joseph's, Conestoga, Shillows and Fulton, thus showing his interest in the welfare of those to come after him. In politics he was a Democrat. Mr. Kray was very well known in Lancaster and was universally esteemed.

JACOB N. NEWCOMER, a retired farmer, now living at Salunga, West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, was born in Rapho township in July, 1834, a son of Christian and Catherine (Nissley) Newcomer, both of whom were native to the soil of Lancaster county.

Jacob N. Newcomer was married in 1858, in Lancaster, Pa., to Barbara Weidman. There were born to this union nine children: (1) Amos W., now living on the old homestead, was married Oct. 25, 1883, to Mary S. Snyder, and to their union have come the following children: Fanny S., Ada S., Harvey S., and Jacob. (2) David W., who lives at Quarryville, married Susan Musser, by whom he had Melvin, Irwin, Bertha, Ray, Cora, Frank, Katie and Barbara. (3) Fanny W. married H. N. Bair, of West Hempfield township, and is the mother of Norman and Frances. (4) Alice W. married John E. Garber, of West Donegal township, by whom he has had these children, Stella, Paris, Barbara, Alice, Jonas and Rhoda. (5) Levi W. is single, and lives at home. (6) Jacob W. married Mary Beamderfer, of East Donegal township, by whom he had the following children, Elmer, Esther, Barbara, Alice and Oscar. (7) John W. married Kate Kreider, of Mt. Joy township, by whom he has had the following children, Ira K., Clayton K., Lizzie K., and Hannah May K. (8) Barbara W. married Ira Longenecker, a farmer of East Donegal township. (9) Ezra W. lives in Mt. Joy, Pa., and his history is found on another page.

Jacob N. Newcomer came to his present farm shortly before his marriage, and here he remained until April, 1901, when he moved to Salunga, to pass his declining years in that peace and rest which his honest and useful life has so well merited. In his more active years he took a prominent part in local affairs, served three terms as supervisor, and took a leading part in the affairs of the Republican party. In religion he was a member of the Mennonite Church, and was a man of virtue, honesty and simple and unaffected piety.

AMOS W. NEWCOMER, a general farmer on the old family homestead, where he was born March 6, 1861, has made a marked success in his somewhat limited career as an independent and progressive farmer.

Mrs. Mary S. (Snyder) Newcomer was born in East Donegal township Sept. 18, 1861, a daughter of Christian and Fannie (Stauffer) Snyder, of East and West Donegal townships. Her parents died on the farm where her father was born. He was an industrious and enterprising man, and retired from active labor some seven years prior to his death Sept. 2, 1886, at the age of sixty-eight. His wife passed to her rest in September, 1863, at the early age of thirty-four years. They were buried in Kraybill's cemetery; both belonged to the Mennonite Church, and lived in a modest and simple manner, in close harmony with the tenets of their faith. These were their children: Jacob, a retired farmer in Mt. Joy; Mary, who is Mrs. Newcomer. Mr. Snyder was twice married, his first wife being Mary Garber, by whom he had: Levi G., who died young; John G., now a retired farmer in Mt. Joy; Anna G., who married Christian Newcomer, a farmer in Rapho township; Henry G., a farmer in Warwick township; Christian G., a farmer in West Donegal township. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Newcomer were Henry and Maria (Witmer) Snyder, of Lancaster county.

Amos W. Newcomer remained on the farm where he is now found, until after his marriage, when he removed to East Donegal township, where he spent eight years. In Mt. Joy township he was then established, and there he remained until 1901. That year he returned to his early home, and here he is doing well. For five years he was auditor of Mt. Joy township, and his business abilities and manly qualities have combined with his industrious habits and marked personal integrity to make him popular and friendly. All the family are connected with the Mennonite Church. In politics he is Republican, and takes a leading part in the development of the local interests. His name well deserves a place in a book like this devoted to the history of the men who do things in Lancaster county.

GEORGE NELSON REYNOLDS, general agent of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, is not only one of the most prominent figures in business, political and social circles in Lancaster, but he belongs to a family who were among the early and very distinguished settlers of this country.

(I) Robert Reynolds, who was born in England, emigrated to Boston, Mass., in 1630. His death occurred there April 27, 1659. His wife Mary, who accompanied him to this country, died in Boston, Jan. 18, 1663.

(II) Capt. Nathaniel Reynolds, son of Robert, was born in England, and came to America with his father in 1630. He was a member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, joining in 1658. In 1655 he was a constable, and from 1663 to 1692 was sealer of leather and inspector of transportation of hides. During King Philip's war he served as captain, and in 1675-76 he was in command of the garrison at Chelmsford, Mass. The homestead which he erected, on Milk street, near the old South Church, Boston, was willed to his eldest son, Nathaniel. Capt. Reynolds was twice married. On Nov. 30, 1657, he wedded Sarah Dwight, daughter of John Dwight, of Dedham, Mass., and she died July 8, 1663. His second wife was Priscilla Brackett, daughter of Peter Brackett, of Boston. After his second marriage he removed to Bristol, R. I., of which town he was one of the founders, and he died there July 10, 1708. His descendants by his second wife still live there.

(III) Nathaniel Reynolds, mentioned above as the eldest son of Capt. Nathaniel, was born in Boston March 3, 1662, and passed the greater part of his life in the old home on Milk street. His wife's name was Ruth. He died probably at Marblehead, Mass., at the home of his son John.

(IV) Nathaniel Reynolds, son of Nathaniel (2), was born Jan. 14, 1693, and died in Boston in 1740. He married, in 1712, Mary Snell, daughter of Thomas Snell, who came from England.

(V) Nathaniel Reynolds, Esq., son of Nathaniel (3), was born in Boston March 19, 1718, and with his mother moved to Bridgewater, Mass., where he was the first justice of the peace. He died at Vassalboro, Maine, in 1807. His first wife, whom he married in 1739, was Hannah Hartwell, a daughter of Samuel Hartwell, and she died at North Bridgewater, Mass., Aug. 12, 1742.

(VI) Philip Reynolds, son of Nathaniel (4), was born in North Bridgewater Sept. 19, 1740, and died in January, 1775. He married Oct. 29, 1765, Hannah Packard, daughter of David Packard, and she died May 23, 1831. Philip Reynolds was a private in Capt. Dunbar's company on the expedition to Crown Point, in the French and Indian war, in 1762.

(VII) William Reynolds, son of Philip, was born in North Bridgewater June 23, 1767, and died at Winthrop, Maine, in 1854. He married Nov. 3, 1791, Martha Snell, who was born at North Bridgewater Dec. 18, 1769, and died in Garland, Maine, in 1847. She was a daughter of Capt. Zebedee Snell and his wife Martha Howard. Capt. Snell was in Col. Mitchell's regiment in the Revolutionary war.

(VIII) Nathan Reynolds, son of William, was born in North Bridgewater, Mass., in 1796, and died at Lewiston, Maine, Nov. 4, 1858. He married Nov. 10, 1815, Betsey Briggs, who was born at Minot, Maine, June 18, 1794, and died at Lewiston, Nov. 4, 1856. Through her mother, Betsey Bradford, she was a descendant of Gov. William Bradford, of the Plymouth Colony, and through her nine of the people who came over on the "Mayflower" are in this family's connection, namely: Gov. William Bradford; Richard Warren and his wife Elizabeth; Elder William Brewster and wife and son, Love Brewster; John Alden, who married Priscilla Mullen; and William Mullen and wife.

(IX) Major Nelson Briggs Reynolds, son of Nahan, was born in Lewiston, Maine, May 16, 1819, and died in Auburn, that State, Feb. 6, 1898. He married Nov. 28, 1839, Harriet Andrews Chase, who was born in Portland, Maine, Aug. 20, 1820, and died in Auburn, same State, Jan. 11, 1895. Major Reynolds was a merchant by occupation. He was a very prominent man, politically was a Democrat, and by appointment from President Polk became the first postmaster at Lewiston. For many years he was a member of the State central committee, and he was long a popular and wise adviser of his party. His title of major he held by virtue of his commission in the State militia. In his religious belief he was a Congregationalist. Socially he was active in the I. O. O. F. Mrs. Harriet Andrews (Chase) Reynolds was a daughter of Capt. Benjamin Tappan Chase, a sea captain, who died at sea, of yellow fever, in 1820. He was a captain in a Massachusetts regiment in the war of 1812. This family of Chases is traced back to 1570, and the record is complete. They were among the earliest settlers of New England, and among the distinguished members of the family was Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase. Among Mrs. Reynolds' other ancestors were Robert Hicks, of Tortunth, Gloucestershire, England, a lineal descendant of Sir Ellis Hicks, who was knighted by the Black Prince on the battle-field of Poitiers, in 1356; Col. Joshua Wingate, of Hampton, N. H., who was in the famous siege of Louisbourg, in 1745; and also the Andrews family, of Revolutionary fame; and the Leonard family, one of whom, Major Thomas Leonard, in 1660 started the iron works in Taunton, Mass., which, owned by him and his children, became not only the oldest but for years the leading works in New England (he was a descendant of Thomas Leonard, Earl of Sussex, England, and also of Sir Roger Finnes). Major Nelson Briggs Reynolds and his wife were the parents of seven children, three of whom are now living.

(X) George Nelson Reynolds, their eldest son, was born in Lewiston, Maine, Oct. 30, 1842, and was educated at the Lewiston Falls Academy, which his grandfather founded, and was graduated from there, fitting for college. In 1859 he entered into business in the city of New York, in the store of Stone, Bowman & Bliss, large cloth commission merchants, remaining five years in the great metropolis. His next business location was in Milwaukee, Wis., where he was engaged in the life insurance business, with the Manhattan Life Insurance Company of New York, and he remained there for the succeeding five years as their general agent for Wisconsin and Minnesota, making his next change to Philadelphia, where he took charge of Pennsylvania and Delaware; he remained in that service for five years, at the expiration of that time becoming associated with the great Northwestern as one of their general agents.

It was on Oct. 10, 1877, that Mr. Reynolds became connected with this great insurance company, and one and one-half years later he removed to Lancaster, where he has ever since remained, and where he has become one of the most prominent figures in business circles, and has been prominently identified also with its social and political life. What he has accomplished here, during these years, for the company which he so ably represents, is best told in the Insurance Register, of Philadelphia, an authority in such matters, in its issue of Thursday, Oct. 18, 1900, from which we quote: "George N. Reynolds is the oldest life underwriter in Lancaster, in point of continuous service, and unquestionably the most able and successful. He is the general agent for the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., and has under his charge twenty counties in the central portion of Pennsylvania. He has been connected with the Northwestern Mutual Life for twenty-two years, during all of which term he has been a resident of Lancaster.

"When Mr. Reynolds assumed his duties with the Northwestern, it had in force throughout the entire district only twelve policies, and these were held by parties who had removed from other locations. That he does by far the bulk of life underwriting in the section is self-evident, from the fact that his average monthly premium collections foot up $30,000, and the business secured is mainly from well-to-do business and professional men and farmers, in policies for large amounts. His remarkable success is not only due to his natural talents being particularly adapted to insurance, and to his genial and sterling characteristics, which gain the good graces of every one with whom he comes in touch; it may in a large measure be attributed to zealously devoting his undivided efforts to the furtherance of the interests of the company with which he is identified."

This is certainly a record to be proud of, and yet, with all these efforts in behalf of the insurance company, Mr. Reynolds has found time to serve the best interests of his city, his church and his social organizations, and to become prominent in all of them. For nine years he served as a member of the Lancaster school board, and during that time he was on the Book, Superintending and other important committees; was president for two terms of the Young Men's Democratic Society, which he was largely instrumental in putting into prominent position in its earlier history; director and secretary of the Hamilton Club; was named and urged for the position of mayor of Lancaster; has been for years a vestryman in St. James Episcopal Church, of which he is junior warden; trustee and secretary of Yeates Institute; trustee of the Bishopthorpe School for Girls, in South Bethlehem; trustee of the Christmas Fund of the Diocese of Central Pennsylvania, a fund that supports aged clergymen of the Episcopal Church; for years a delegate to church conventions; for years member of the Masonic fraternity, 32d degree; director of the Lancaster & Susquehanna Turnpike Company; president of Elm Lawn cemetery, Buffalo, N. Y.; and last, but by no means least, a member of the New England Society of Philadelphia, and in 1899 was honored with election to membership in the Society of Colonial Wars, New York. During the year of 1864 he was a volunteer aid on Gen. Howard's staff and saw active service.

On Nov. 7, 1865, Mr. Reynolds was married, in

New York City, to Miss Helen Koues, who was born in New Orleans, La., daughter of Theodore M. and Louise Henderson Monroe (Board) Koues.

Theodore M. Koues was a native of Portsmouth, N. H., and among his lineal ancestors were Govs. John Winthrop and Thomas Dudley, the first and second governors of Massachusetts Bay Colony; Roger Harlakenden, one of the leading early settlers of the Colony; and Col. Edward Hilton, founder of Exeter, N. H. The ancestral lines of the Dudleys and Harlakendens run back to William the Conqueror, and include many names famous in English history. The house of Dudley was founded by Baron Dudley, who died in 1488. Theodore M. Koues was a merchant in New Orleans when he married, in New York City, Louise Henderson Monroe Board, a granddaughter of Major David Board (paymaster of New Jersey troops in the war of the Revolution) and of Lieut. William Leaycraft (a lieutenant in Col. Lamb's artillery regiment in the Revolution, and one of the original members of the Society of the Cincinnati). Mrs. Koues' mother was a Bogert, and among her ancestors were Gen. Johannes De la Montague and many others of the leading Dutch and Huguenot settlers of New Amsterdam.

To Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds were born five children, as follows: (1) Mary Leaycraft, born in New York Sept. 1, 1866, died in Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 24, 1867. (2) Nelson Bradford, born in Milwaukee Dec. 25, 1870, died in New York City in 1894. (3) Louise Bogert, born in Philadelphia June 5, 1872, married Benjamin Franklin Fisher, Jr., son of Gen. B. F. Fisher, of Philadelphia. They have one son, Malcolm Leaycraft, and are living in Washington, D. C. (4) George Koues, born in Philadelphia Oct. 1, 1875, finished his education at State College, Pa., and is now engaged in the insurance business with his father. (5) Frank Winthrop, born in Lancaster July 29, 1882, is a member of the class of 1904, University of Pennsylvania, where he is pursuing an architectural course.

Mrs. Reynolds is a member of the Gov. Thomas Dudley Family Association of Boston, and is vice-regent of Donegal Chapter (Lancaster), Daughters of the American Revolution. She has always been prominent in church work and social circles. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds live in an elegant home at No. 231 North Duke street, Lancaster, and their hospitable mansion is a favorite center for the gathering of the brightest and best of the people.

JOHN G. SNAVELY. Among the veterans of the Pennsylvania railway service in Columbia, none perhaps is better known or more popular than John G. Snavely, a trainman for nearly thirty consecutive years, who did not retire from the active life to which he was so closely attached until he met with a severe accident, from the effects of which he remained in a hospital nearly a year.

Mr. Snavely was born in Lampeter, Lancaster county, Aug. 22, 1839, son of Christian and Eliza (Howry) Snavely, and grandson of John and Esther (Hoover) Snavely, and great-grandson of Nathaniel and Catherine (Auport) Hoover, early settlers in East Lampeter township. Eliza Howry, wife of Christian Snavely, was a daughter of Samuel and Catherine (Keepert) Howry, and granddaughter of Daniel and Franey (Miller) Keepert, of West Lampeter township. Samuel Howry died in 1878 and his wife in 1892. They had two sons and three daughters. (1) Daniel died unmarried in 1866. (2) Christian was a tailor, living five miles south of Lancaster; he died in 1900. (3) Eliza. (4) Fannie, who died in 1860, was the wife of Martin Brubaker, of Strasburg, now deceased, and had three sons and two daughters: Jesse, who died from a wound received while serving in the navy; Elam, now living in Mapleshade, N. J., and in business at 14 North Third street, Philadelphia; Frank, in the produce business in Philadelphia; Eliza Ann, wife of John Sides, of Strasburg, now living in Philadelphia; and Amanda, who married William Rohrer, of Strasburg, deceased, and who now lives at 2122 North Fifth street, Philadelphia. She and her husband both belonged to the M. E. Church. (5) Barbara married George W. King in 1855, at Lampeter. They removed to Sandusky, Ohio, where he was clerk for the Sandusky Railroad. Later he engaged in the hardware trade in Marion, Ohio, and was quite prominent in business circles there. Mr. King died in 1890. His wife, so far as is known, is still living in Marion. Both belonged to the Congregational Church. They had two daughters and one son. One daughter and the son are married and living in Marion.

The Snavely family was founded in Lancaster county by two brothers, natives of Germany, who on account of religious persecution had fled to Switzerland, and who migrated from Basel to America. John Snavely, the grandfather of John G., was a distiller in his younger days, following farming later in life. Christian Snavely, the father, acquired the trade of blacksmith in his youth, and later conducted a general implement, blacksmith and wagon business at Lampeter, Lancaster county, until the autumn of 1844, when he went to Strasburg. In 1845, owing to ill health, he was compelled to retire from active life. He died three years later, in Sept., 1848, at Strasburg, Lancaster county, at the early age of thirty-two years. His widow Eliza survived until March, 1896, dying at Lancaster at the age of seventy-six years. Christian Snavely was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his wife was a Mennonite. Their children were as follows: John G.; Frances E., of Columbia, widow of George W. Keene, who had been clerk of the orphans' court; and Hiram H., superintendent of the gas company at Bellevue, Ohio.

John G. was a lad of nine years when he was orphaned by the death of his father. The next eight years of his life were spent on the farm of his grandfather, John Snavelly. Then at the age of seventeen years he went to New York City to assist his uncle, engaged in the shirt business. Six months later the disastrous panic of 1857 swept over the land and Mr. Snavelly returned to Lancaster. He began work as a carpenter but the panic had paralyzed industry at Lancaster and the following year he spent on a farm. Resuming the trade of carpenter, he worked two and a half years. He was then employed for three and a half years by N. Gillespie & Son, lumber and coal merchants at Bird-in-Hand, Lancaster county, followed by six months employment with Bruner & Co., coal merchants at Columbia.

His long career as trainman on the Pennsylvania railroad then began. For nine months he served as freight brakeman and was then promoted to flagman. Eighteen months later he became conductor and in that capacity served the railway company continuously for twenty-seven years. On July 6, 1893, on the Amboy division, both his limbs were crushed and broken in a train collision. He was taken to the Presbyterian hospital at Philadelphia, where he remained ten months. He was then sent home, but for ten months longer he was confined to his bed. For fourteen months he used crutches and is now able to walk with the use of a cane.

Mr. Snavelly married Dec. 26, 1860, at Lancaster, Pa., Miss Emma Keene, who was born in Drumore township, Lancaster county, Feb. 5, 1842, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth (McCullough) Keene. Daniel Keene was a wagon builder, and died in 1848, his wife surviving until 1866, passing away at the age of sixty-six years. The children of Daniel and Elizabeth Keene were: Henry, a farmer of Cecil county, Md.; George W., who was a soldier in the Civil war, and died in 1883; Joseph, who also served in the army and was drowned in the Susquehanna river in 1867; Eliza, widow of Benjamin Rhieneer, of Eden township; Susan, deceased wife of Peter Eberly, of Strasburg; Barbara, who died quite young; Amanda, who married Isaac B. Myers, of Lancaster county; Mary Anna, wife of William Creswell, both of whom died in Cecil county, Md., at an advanced age; Sarah, who married Samuel Peters; and Emma, wife of Mr. Snavelly.

To Mr. and Mrs. Snavelly were born six children, namely: Christian K., who married Anna Evans and is vice-president of the Columbia Shade Cloth Co., New York City; Hiram E., who married Olive Eager and died April 13, 1890; John J., a railway superintendent at New Haven, Conn.; Albert E., who married Mary E. Eagle, and is a mail carrier at Columbia; George M., who married Florence Powell and is a telegraph operator at West Haven, Conn.; and Armeda, who died March 7, 1900, aged seventeen years.

In politics Mr. Snavelly is a Republican. He is a prominent Mason of Columbia and a member of the K. G. E. In religious faith he is a member of the Reformed Church. His long service on the Pennsylvania road is evidence of his sterling traits of character, and he has ever been recognized as one of Columbia's most representative and prominent citizens.

MICHAEL R. GOOD, a general farmer and the proprietor of a greenhouse and truck garden near New Holland, was born in Earl township Sept. 8, 1837, and is a son of Michael and Ann M. (Ranck) Good, of Earl and Caernarvon townships, respectively. In his younger days the father was a teamster between Pittsburg and Philadelphia. In 1843 he removed to New Holland, where he spent his remaining years. He became a farmer and huckster, and did well. For many years he held public positions, being at different times supervisor, assessor and collector. His death occurred in April, 1871, when he was seventy-four. His wife died in 1889; she was born in 1800. Both were buried in the cemetery at Groffdale. He never accumulated much property but held a prominent position in the community.

Michael Good and his wife were the parents of the following family: Elizabeth, who married James Rutherford, and is dead; Ann M., who is the widow of A. J. Bowers, and lives in New Holland; Leah, who is the widow of John Musselman, and lives at Bareville, Pa.; Delilah, the widow of Henry Rator, of New Holland, Pa.; Anna, who married Edward Bucklin in California, where she died; Catherine, who died young; Michael R.; Moses R., deceased; Martin R., married, and a farmer in Salisbury township.

The paternal grandfather of Michael R. Good was Jacob Good, a farmer of Earl township, Lancaster county, who married a Miss Martin. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Good were Michael and Elizabeth (Weaver) Ranck, farming people of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania.

Michael R. Good was married in 1871, in New Holland, to Mahala Kling, by whom he has had the following children: Mary C., who died at the age of two years and seven months; Michael D., who is unmarried and living at home. Mrs. Mahala (Kling) Good, who was born in Earl township, died in Nov. 1898, at the age of sixty-five years. Her ashes rest in the cemetery connected with the Reformed Church at New Holland.

Mr. Good spent the first twelve years of his life under the parental roof. At that age he started out for himself, and was employed among the neighboring farmers until he was seventeen. At that age he entered a wheelwright shop in Upper Leacock township, which was under the management of Jacob Hoover, with whom he remained three and a half years. After working for another party six months, he started a shop for himself in the spring of 1859. In 1870 he gave up the shop, and was elected supervisor for one year. After working for five years among the farmers at fence making, he came to New Holland. In the spring of 1891 he moved to his present farm home. He and his wife belonged to the Reformed Church. In his politics he is a Republican. In the community he stands well, where his industrious habits, business abilities and upright character have won him many friends.

AMOS HOLLINGER, who passed away Sept. 13, 1901, in the sixty-fifth year of his age, was not only one of the most prominent tanners in the State of Pennsylvania, but was descended from one of the best and oldest families in the State. He was born Jan. 18, 1837, at Hollinger's, three miles south of Lancaster—a place that was settled by his people, and where his father conducted a successful tannery. There Amos Hollinger learned the tanning business and learned it so thoroughly that he succeeded his father in the business, and he became the leader in that line in Lancaster county. In fact, Hollinger's tannery—or rather its products—became known not only all through this State, but even in other States and in Europe. The Hollinger leather was known far and wide, and the exhibits made by Mr. Hollinger at the Paris Exposition, and at the World's Fair, at Chicago, won first premium. This was a source of great gratification to him, for no man ever worked harder or more conscientiously to give his patrons a first-class article. He continued actively in the business until 1893, when he associated his son John in the business, and from that time on the son was practically in control, Mr. Hollinger removing to Lancaster, and making his home with his son-in-law, Rev. J. W. Meminger.

Mr. Hollinger was married, in early manhood, to Miss Elizabeth Harnish, of a prominent family of West Willow, who, with the following children, survives: Cyrus, of Park Rapids, Minn.; Ada, wife of John McAllister, of West Willow; Florence, wife of Rev. J. W. Meminger, pastor of St. Paul's Reformed Church, Lancaster, and with whom Mr. and Mrs. Hollinger went to reside some years ago; Barbara, wife of Joseph P. Breneman, of Lancaster; Mary, unmarried and at home; and John, the junior member of the firm of Hollinger & Son. Mr. Hollinger's only brother, Henry, is a well-known citizen of Columbia.

Before taking up his residence in Lancaster Mr. Hollinger was an active member of the Willowstreet Reformed Church, and was frequently sent as a delegate to the classis. After coming to Lancaster he became a member of St. Paul's Reformed Church, of which his son-in-law, Rev. J. W. Meminger, is the popular pastor. In politics he was a Republican, and in fraternal circles a Mason. He was at one time a trustee of the State Normal School at Millersville, and president of the Farmers' Insurance Company, of Lancaster. The post office near him, organized in 1892, was named Hollinger in his honor. Up to the time of his death he was vice-president of the Tanners Mutual Insurance Company of Philadelphia, and president of the proposed Willowstreet & Strasburg Railway Company, of which he was a projector. His funeral took place on Monday afternoon, Sept. 16, 1901, and the remains were interred in Greenwood cemetery, in the southern suburbs of Lancaster. Possessed of rare intelligence and fine conversational powers, Mr. Hollinger was a welcome guest at all times and in all places. He was as genial and kindly as he was intelligent and thoughtful, and the love and the respect of the community were his.

The tannery so long in the family has, since Mr. Hollinger's death, been run by the son, John, who serves as manager for the estate. The same high reputation is maintained, and the business continues to prosper, necessitating the employment of some twenty or twenty-five hands.

John Hollinger married Elizabeth Hertzler, daughter of Samuel M. and Susan (Seitz) Hertzler, the former a retired farmer and living near Harrisburg. Two children have blessed this union, John Hertzler and Marion.

U. G. BARD. Levi Bard (deceased) was born in Leacock township, Lancaster county, April 19, 1812, and in his time was one of the leading men of his community, and counted many friends. He was a son of George and Elizabeth Bard, was married in Earl township and began operations on his own account on a farm in West Earl township, this farm consisting of 118 acres, now the property of his son Ulysses, whose name introduces this article. In 1851, he married Miss Frances Hahn, a resident of Hinkletown, and a daughter of Daniel and Fannie (Shirk) Hahn. After their marriage they made their home on the farm in West Earl township, and there they lived until 1869, when they moved to Earl township, on a farm which has been their home to the present time. This place contained nineteen acres. Mr. Bard was a substantial Republican, and for some years was a member of the school board. For many years he was one of the most active members of the Lutheran Church. By his upright bearing and honest heart he had acquired a large circle of friends. His death occurred Nov. 2, 1896. To him and his wife were born twelve children: Mary Jane, John Leaman and Clara Ann died in childhood; Jacob Hahn, a resident of Mapleville, Ill., who married Miss Elizabeth Byam; George Franklin, of Reading, who married Miss Anna Frey and has three children, Daniel, Harry and Clarence; Ulysses G., a farmer on the home place; Carrie, the wife of Hoyer Lashur, of Reading, Pa., who has two children; Herbert and John Philip. The other children born to this worthy couple died in infancy. The widow is still living, and has her home with her son, Ulysses. She belongs to the Lutheran Church.

The parents of Mrs. Levi Bard are both dead. The Hahn family came from Germany. The great-grandfather of Mrs. Bard was Daniel Hahn, who settled in the vicinity of Washington. The grandfather of Mrs. Bard was Daniel Hahn, who married Barbara Sweiger. They were among the well-to-do people of the community, and belonged to the Reformed Church. They had three children: Daniel, the father of Mrs. Bard; Samuel, who lived at Manheim, where he died and left a family; Mary, who never married, and in her latter days lived with Mrs. Bard. The father of Mrs. Bard died at the age of some fifty years. The most of his life was spent in Hinkletown, where he was a mason in the summer, and a carpet weaver in the winter. In local affairs he was a man of public spirit. His wife died at about the age of her husband. She was a daughter of Phillip Shirk. The parents of Mrs. Bard had a family of five children, of whom Mrs. Bard is the only surviving member. Jacob Hahn was a farmer and his widow is still living at Ephrata; Harriet Hahn married Levi Mentzer, a merchant; Chambers was a carpenter at Hinkletown; Frances, Mrs. Levi Bard; Rudy was a merchant of Ephrata, where his widow still lives.

Ulysses G. Bard was born Oct. 16, 1864, and received his education in the common schools. At the death of his father he took charge of the farms, and both now belong to him. He has taken a leading position as a young farmer, and his home gives evidence of thrift and prosperity. In 1888 he was married to Miss Lizzie Burkholder, a resident of West Earl, and a daughter of Israel Burkholder. They have two children, Levi M. and Frances A. They belong to the Lutheran Church, and hold a creditable position in the community.

SAMUEL McCLURE, in his lifetime a farmer and stonemason, and a man of the very highest character and standing, was born in December, 1817, and was a son of John and Susan (Hull) McClure, natives of Strasburg and Bart townships, respectively. They settled in Bart township and there lived and died, leaving a family of eleven children. Their history appears in connection with the sketch of David McClure, which may be found on another page.

Samuel McClure was reared on the old home in Bart township, where he learned the mason's trade, which he followed all over the county. He was married in Dec., 1842, to Miss Mary Kidd, a daughter of John and Jane (Thompson) Kidd, of Bart township.

John Kidd was born in Ireland, and coming to this country in 1803, made his home in Strasburg township. He was married first to Anna McKneely, on Dec. 25, 1806; their two children died. In 1819 he married Miss Jane Thompson, his second wife, a native of Colerain township, where she was born in 1786. She was a daughter of James and Mary Thompson. Her father was born in Scotland, where he married his first wife, who died there. He married Mary Martin in Carlisle, Pa. John Kidd settled on his farm in Bart township, where he made many improvements and secured a substantial home for his family. He died in 1874, his wife having passed away in 1873. Unto them were born four children: Thompson Kidd, still living in Juniata county, at the advanced age of eighty-two years; Ebenezer, a widower, living at Puseyville; Sarah Kidd, who died in Juniata county, where she had her home with her brother, Thompson; Mary, who became Mrs. McClure. Mrs. McClure was born March 4, 1822. She was educated in the local schools, and was regarded as a woman of much culture and intelligence for the time.

After his marriage Samuel McClure located near the creamery in Bart township, and there followed the mason's trade. In 1844 he purchased the property near the Octoraro Presbyterian Church, where they lived until 1857. That year he bought his property in Bart township, one mile east of the Nickel Mines, where he made his home until his death, April 15, 1897. In 1867 he put up a new barn and later remodelled the house on a very extensive scale. With his family he belonged to the United Presbyterian Church, of which he was an active member during his life. In his politics he was a Democrat. At his death he left a widow and ten children. Eleven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McClure:

(1) John McClure, born in Bart township, married Miss Mary McIlvaney, and lived in Bart township until 1877, when he moved to Beaver county, where he engaged in farming. They have one living daughter, Ella, who married Frank Welk, and is the mother of five children; John, William, Pearl, Elsie and Earl. (2) Martha J. McClure died when a young woman in 1872. (3) Samuel W. McClure was given a fair education, and when a young man, took up the mason's trade under his father's instructions; he is at home, single. (4) Thompson married Miss Mary J. Rambo, of Chester county. They now reside in Philadelphia, where he is engaged in the building and loan business. They have one living daughter, May, who married Howard Bulyard, of Philadelphia, and is the mother of one son, Howard A. (5) Anna McClure married William Bennett, and resides in Perry county, Pa. (6) Edgar married Miss Anna Hart and is a resident of Beaver county. (7) William E., and (8) James C. were twins; William McClure married Miss Adelaide Matthews, of Chester county, and lives on a part of his father's homestead, where he is manager of the farm; James C. McClure married Miss Ida Wright, of Lancaster county. They live in Sadsbury township, where they have one son, Claire. (9) Frank McClure married Miss Della Gibbons, of Maryland. They have their home in Wilmington, Del., where he deals in produce and fish. They have three children; Nellie, Walter and Ollie. (10) Ida received a home school education, and is regarded as one of the accomplished young ladies of the neighborhood. She is at home ministering to the comfort of her aged mother, and has charge of the family estate. (11) David McClure married Miss Mamie Keene, a daughter of Samuel Keene, and lives in Wilmington, Del., where he is engaged in business as a wholesale merchant.

This family of McClures, like all the rest, is connected with the Presbyterian Church of Octoraro. Of this church father and mother became members in 1844.

BERNARD J. McGRANN, of Grand View, is the only surviving son of the late Richard McGrann, who was for years one of Lancaster's most prominent citizens, and who was born in Ireland in 1794, and in 1819 began his career in this country.

In 1835 Richard McGrann founded the homestead at Grand View, in Manheim township, near this city, on the New Holland turnpike. In the course of years, and with the many improvements and additions made to it by the present owner (Bernard J. McGrann), it has become one of the most magnificent farms and attractive suburban homes of Lancaster county, and comprises six hundred acres. Richard McGrann, who was a contractor, constructed many splendid public works in his day, notably the Chestnut street bridge across the Schuylkill, in Philadelphia, the Lehigh and Susquehanna railroad bridge at Easton, and many other important works on nearly every great line of canal and railroad built in the State in his time. The perfection of their construction attested to his skill and high enterprise, and carried the fame of Lancaster contractors far and wide, Mr. McGrann being conspicuous for bold undertakings in engineering and for the successful completion of his enterprises. In 1835 he purchased the farm on which his descendants have since resided. The house at that time stood back, near a fine spring which now supplies the fountains on Fountain avenue. In 1838 he built the present residence and laid out the grounds, which by subsequent enlargement and improvement, have become the magnificent estate of his only living son. Eight children were born to him, of whom the youngest son alone survives, Bernard J., who was born at Grand View, of which he is the owner. His wife died there in 1844, and he himself passed away in 1867.

Bernard J. McGrann was born where he now lives, June 24, 1837. He was a student of Lancaster's public schools and of the famous Catholic collegiate institutions of Emmitsburg, Md. He early had a fondness for agriculture, and his father encouraged his taste, and destined him to become an exponent of the most advanced and successful agriculture. He completed his studies in the schools when only seventeen or eighteen, and gave himself up largely to the management of his father's landed estates. He was no mere fancy farmer or theorist; every phase of practical farm life found his hand ready to it; he studied the elements of the soil and the results of fertilizers, the meteorological conditions and the rotation of crops, breeds of stock and the uses of farm buildings, the mechanical wants of the farm and every mode of agricultural machinery; in short, he made a thorough, exhaustive study of every branch of practical agriculture, and observed the best results of experience and science. He not only made a study of it in all its ramifications, but he applied his knowledge and built up a farm that is today a model, perfect in every part.

Mr. McGrann is, however, not only a successful agriculturist. The banking house of Reed, McGrann & Co., which had an existence for over a generation and is now merged into the Conestoga National Bank, lost its senior member, Richard McGrann, by death in 1867, and the son succeeded to his interest in it. From that day until the firm was dissolved, Bernard J. McGrann's name and capital were associated with that financial establishment and contributed in no small measure to its reputation for integrity, stability and security. Mr. McGrann gave the banking business, as well as all other interests, his personal attention, and the benefit of that clear judgment and conservative counsel which have distinguished his business career.

In 1870 Mr. McGrann first entered the field of contracting, in which his father had won such success, and in which he soon took a leading part. He came by inheritance to a ready comprehension and quick execution of gigantic schemes. In 1870 he built the Catawissa extension railroad to Williamsport, and later, graded a part of the Bound Brook railroad from Jenkintown, including the bridge that spans Delaware river at Yardleyville. In 1878 he undertook the work that was to be the crowning triumph of his successful achievements as a contractor. For many years Pittsburg had suffered grievously from the monopoly of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; exorbitant charges and excessive freight discrimination had brought about a state of oppression to the business community which threatened to paralyze many of the operations of trade. Under these circumstances, some time in the 60's, a certain number of influential gentlemen of Pittsburg conceived the notion of building a railroad some seventy-miles in length, from Pittsburg to Youngstown, Ohio, in order to connect with the Vanderbilt lines there, and make a new outlet for the hemmed-in and suffering business interests of Western Pennsylvania's great metropolis—"the great workshop of America," as it is known. They wanted a prompt and responsible execution of their order. They were not railroad men nor speculators, nor were they building a road on paper, and on margins. They had the money to pay for it, and they wanted good work, quickly executed. They cast about for a man who would undertake the entire enterprise and relieve them of responsibilities for details. Mr. McGrann made the novel proposition to undertake the construction of the whole road, engineering, grading, bridges, ballast, ties and track in one year. It was a vast undertaking, running up into the millions, and such as no single individual in this country had ever grappled with. The man for the hour was chosen in Bernard McGrann. He closed the contract, and backed it not only with sound judgment and hardy spirit, but with substantial security for the successful completion of the work. While old railroad men were dubious and western contractors predicted losses for the stranger who dared a feat they would not attempt, the young contractor set out to organize his forces, subdivide and sub-let his work and to make extensive contracts for supplies of all sorts. Engineers of talent and railroad men of the highest efficiency were summoned to service all along the Ohio, from Pittsburg to Phillipsburg, up the Beaver and all along the line; and there was activity that wakened the sleepy towns along the route and attracted the attention of engineers, railroad builders and contractors the country over. The great feature of this particular work was the bridge across the Ohio, between Beaver and Phillipsburg. The river had to be spanned at a height of ninety-five feet above the water to admit of proper navigation facilities, and had a channel span of 446 feet, with long approaches of iron frame work. The entire enterprise was completed in one year and handed over to its owners in first class condition, its entire length ready for trains.

When the Lancaster County Fair Association failed, some years ago, Mr. Grann bought its entire grounds and pressed them to their original uses; to his liberal grants, the public owes the renewal and succession of successful county fairs held there to this day, as well as clean trials of speed. The feeling that Mr. McGrann was connected with the races inspired the public with confidence in their fairness.

Mr. McGrann is a pillar of St. Mary's Catholic Church. No subscription list for church purposes is ever found without his name and a good round sum opposite it. He is also full of love for his countrymen, and contributed $500 to the Irish National League fund, and his interest in the cause of Ireland and her downtrodden people is ever maintained. As a citizen he is always enterprising and liberal. He had large real-estate interests in this city and though a resident of Manheim township, is one of Lancaster's heaviest tax payers. In all the length and breadth of the county, no finer or better cultivated farm with more costly or enduring improvements can be found. Every movement for the betterment of farm methods has his quick appreciation and patronage.

On Jan. 3, 1872, Mr. McGrann was married to Mrs. Mary Kelly, widow of the late William T. Kelly and daughter of Philip Dougherty, of Harrisburg. Two sons, Richard Philip and Francis, have blessed this union. Men of high distinction in church and State, in business and professional life, from every part of the country, are again and again welcome guests in the McGrann home. A Democrat by instinct and training, by inheritance and conviction, Mr. McGrann has been sent as delegate to State and National Conventions. He has been frequently on the local ticket, has served on the county committee and was nominated for State Treasurer in 1887. He has always been a generous contributor to, and staunch supporter of his party. He is the President of the Board of Managers of the Huntingdon Reformatory, and gives it that earnest, intelligent attention which he devotes to all things with which he is connected. With his broad humanity and sympathetic nature, no man could have been more fittingly selected to assist in the management of a reformatory institution, and we make no apology for relating an incident that came to our notice quite recently, as illustrative of Mr. McGrann's interest in and kindly regard for the young. "There," said a successful young professional man as he displayed an inscribed silver dollar, "is the thing that inspired me to study a profession." The inscription told that this silver dollar had been presented by Mr. McGrann and the date of the presentation was also given. "I was a lad of tender years and was standing in the Pennsylvania Railroad station in this city, on my way to the House of Refuge, having been sent there on the application of an uncle, in whose custody I had been placed after the death of my mother, and who wanted to get rid of me. As I stood there Mr. McGrann came along, spoke kindly to me, asked me where I was going, and telling me to cheer up, gave me a dollar. That act inspired me. I was detained only a short time in the Refuge, then returned to Lancaster, became an inmate of the Home of the Friendless Children, and there remained until I was old enough to do something for myself; but Mr. McGrann's silver dollar has been my talisman all these years and will be till I die." Such is the testimony of a professional man of Lancaster—testimony that could be multiplied many times if all the beneficiaries of his generosity could be permitted to tell the story of their gratitude.

HENRY P. TOWNSEND. During a long, busy and able career as agriculturist and prominent citizen, Henry P. Townsend, won the high esteem of the residents of Little Britain township. His birth was on Dec. 25, 1820, and his death was on July 26, 1897. His father was John Townsend, a son of Joseph, who was one of the early settlers of the county and who, with his descendants, carried on large farming interests. One sister of Henry P. Townsend was Eliza, who married John Bowden, but they, too, have passed away.

Henry P. Townsend was married to Sarah G. Spencer in 1843. She was a daughter of Joseph and Rebecca (Good) Spencer, of Bucks county, Pa., of English origin, and consistent members of the Society of Friends. Nine children were born to this marriage: Marietta, unmarried; Joseph S., of Little Britain township; Elwood H., whose sketch appears in another part of this volume; John, deceased; Israel H., of Oxford; Annie, the wife of Cecil Stubbs, of Little Britain township; Sarah, at home; William, a farmer of Chester county; and Harvey, deceased.

The family born to the parents of Mrs. Townsend, numbered five members: Rachel, Elizabeth, Mary Ann, Marian, and Sarah, Mrs. Townsend being the youngest, and the only survivor. She resides on the old home place with her two estimable daughters, Marietta and Sarah, occupying the farm of 116 acres, which includes some of the most desirable land in Lancaster county. They belong to the Society of Friends.

Mr. Townsend was one of the leading farmers of his township, and at various times he was called upon to serve in positions of responsibility, his fellow citizens feeling assured that every trust be as carefully guarded as if it were a personal matter. His interest in educational questions made him long a school director, and during his term of office as supervisor, the roads of his township were improved and all measures promising the betterment of his section received his approval. A staunch Republican, he never was, however, a politician. Though leading a quiet life, and rarely taking a conspicuous part, his influence was ever felt in the direction of morality, temperance and good citizenship.

WILLIAM WOHLSEN, substantially connected with the business interests of Lancaster as president of the Union Trust Company, and owner of the planing-mill bearing his name, was born in Hanover, Germany, Dec. 24, 1847, son of Peter and Catherine (Oelrich) Wohlsen, natives of the same German principality. To Peter Wohlsen and his wife were born the following children: William; Peter N., a contractor and builder of Lancaster; Herman F., also a contractor and builder of Lancaster; and Anna, the wife of Henry Elsen, of the same city.

The youth of William Wohlsen was uneventfully passed on his father's farm; when seventeen years of age he learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked until emigrating to America, in 1867. For a time he worked at his trade in Lancaster, and was quite successful as a contractor and builder until 1871, in which year he bought a small planing-mill, which was gradually enlarged from a one-horse-power concern to one of the largest and best patronized mills in Lancaster county. In 1880 Mr. Wohlsen abandoned building and contracting to give his entire attention to the mill, which eventually came to employ fifty people, and thus represented a large responsibility. Latterly he has had a more pressing demand upon his time as president of the Union Trust Company, which was chartered Oct. 17, 1901, and opened for business March 17, 1902. The company has an authorized capital of $300,000, and a paid-in capital of $150,000. The officers are: William Wohlsen, president; D. F. Buchmiller, vice-president; S. Z. Evans, secretary and treasurer; and John M. Groff, solicitor.

In 1869 Mr. Wohlsen married Catherine Klenck, who was born in Hanover Oct. 3, 1849, daughter of Henry Klenck, a farmer in Germany, who never came to America. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wohlsen, Mary married Stewart Griffith, teller of the Union Trust Company; Anna married Henry Behrens, of New York; P. Harry is superintendent of the planing-mill belonging to Mr. Wohlsen; William H. is in his father's mill; John O. is a shipping clerk for his father; Catherine is attending school in Philadelphia, Pa.; Clarence is at the Yeates School, north of the city; B. Frank is living at home; and two daughters died young.

Mr. Wohlsen is fraternally associated with the Masons, the I. O. O. F. and the Red Men. Politically he is a Republican. He is allied with the Lutheran Church, and for the past fifteen years has been a member of the vestry of Zion's German Lutheran Church, of East Vine street, Lancaster.

DANIEL KURTZ, a retired farmer of Spring Garden, Salisbury township, and one of its substantial and respected citizens, was born in that township, July 26, 1828, a son of John and Mary (Boley) Kurtz.

Jacob Kurtz, the paternal grandfather of Daniel Kurtz, was an intelligent and prosperous farmer of Lancaster county. He began his farming life in this county on the old John Warner farm, near the Pequea Meeting House. He was well known and was highly esteemed. Mr. Kurtz was a large man, weighing fully 200 pounds. He married Martha King, of Salisbury township, who died in 1817, at the age of sixty-nine years. Jacob Kurtz died in 1822, at the age of seventy-five years and two months, and both were interred on a part of their old farm, one mile east of the Pequea Meeting House. Both were consistent members of the Amish church.

John Kurtz, son of Jacob and father of Daniel Kurtz, was a prominent and successful farmer of Salisbury township, at the time of his death owning six of the fine farms of this township. Although not a member, he was a regular attendant and a very liberal supporter of the Old Mennonite church, of which his wife was a consistent member. John Kurtz died April 16, 1871, at the age of eighty-one years, and his wife died in Jan. 1888, aged eighty-eight years. Both were buried on the old Kurtz homestead, in Salisbury township. The children born to John and Mary (Boley) Kurtz, were as follows: Daniel, a retired farmer of Salisbury township; Nancy, deceased, wife of Samuel Worst; John, who died in Kentucky, but was buried in Salisbury township; Martha, who married Harvey Swigart, a farmer of Salisbury township; Jacob, who was a soldier in the Civil war, and died in New Mexico; Abraham, a retired farmer of Salisbury township; Samuel, a resident of Denver, Col.; David, a farmer of Salisbury township; Mary, wife of James Roseboro, of Lancaster; Martin, residing on the old homestead; and Joseph, a farmer and lime manufacturer of Salisbury township.

Daniel Kurtz, of this sketch, was reared on the farm and has never lost his interest in agricultural pursuits. His education was acquired in the public schools of his locality, and he spent his time until within three years of his marriage, in assisting his father, who was an extensive farmer. He then operated a farm of 100 acres, upon which he remained until 1892, retiring from activity at that time, although still vigorous in body and mind. Mr. Kurtz resembles his grandfather in weight, and until recently has been in robust health; rheumatism, however, has annoyed him to some degree lately. As a farmer, Mr. Kurtz has been regarded as one of the most capable in this locality. He is a large land owner, his sons occupying his four valuable properties in Salisbury township. In politics Mr. Kurtz is a Republican. Both he and his family belong to the Mennonite church.

On Jan. 31, 1854, Mr. Kurtz was united in marriage to Miss Susanna Worst, and the children born to this union were: Frank, born Nov. 29, 1854, engaged in farming in Salisbury township, and married to Lydia Warner, deceased; Henry C., born March 19, 1856, a farmer of Salisbury township, married to Anna Dague, by whom he has a family of nine children: John R., born Sept. 11, 1858, who died in infancy; Mary E., born April 7, 1860, wife of John Livingston, of Philadelphia, and mother of four children: Abraham W., born Aug. 27, 1862, who died young; Annie E., born Sept. 19, 1864, who married Aaron Groff, of East Lampeter township, engaged in the dairy business, and who has four children: Daniel W., born Nov. 9, 1866, a farmer of Salisbury township, who married Anna Eby, and has five children; Martin, born Nov. 9, 1866, twin brother to Daniel, and a farmer in Leacock township, married to Anna M. Denlinger, by whom he has had three children; Benjamin L. Kurtz, born Feb. 11, 1878, unmarried, a farmer in Leacock township.

Mrs. Susanna (Worst) Kurtz, was born in Springville, Salisbury township, Aug. 11, 1833, daughter of Henry and Mary (Kurtz) Worst, of Lancaster county.

Mr. Kurtz is one of the most highly respected men in Salisbury township and his children are among the leading and reliable citizens.

MARTIN KURTZ, a general farmer of Salisbury township and one of its most highly regarded citizens, was born on his present farm in 1839, son of John and Mary (Boley) Kurtz, and grandson of Jacob and Martha (King) Kurtz, extended mention of whom is made upon another page of this volume.

Martin Kurtz has followed agriculture all his life and owns and operates his present well-improved farm of seventy-one acres, in Salisbury township. In politics he is active in his support of the Republican party, although he has never been ambitious for political preferment. His liberality assists in the support of the Episcopal church, of which his wife is a devoted member. Mr. Kurtz is well known in his locality and is universally esteemed.

On May 19, 1864, in Reading Pa., Mr. Kurtz was married to Miss Eva R. Fleming, born in Salisbury township, Aug. 5, 1845, daughter of David and Mary A. (Clemson) Fleming, the former a native of Chester county, and the latter of Salisbury township. Mr. Fleming was born Jan. 29, 1812, and died Dec. 9, 1850, his burial being in the Octoraro cemetery connected with the Presbyterian church. The mother of Mrs. Kurtz, born April 6, 1821, is spending her declining years with her daughter. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Fleming were as follows: Lucy, who married William Dieffenbaugh, supervisor of Mt. Joy township; Eva R., who is Mrs. Kurtz; Davis Clemson, who was a hotel keeper and died in 1891, in Hanover; and Mary A., who died in infancy. By a previous marriage, Mr. Fleming had become the husband of Lucinda E. Bemis, an English lady, born Nov. 24, 1816, who died Aug. 9, 1841, and was the mother of two children: Tabitha, who died at the age of eighteen; and David, who is employed in Cramp's ship yards, in Philadelphia.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Kurtz were David and Tabitha (Matlick) Fleming, farming people and natives of Chester county. Their two sons were David and Preston, who, with their parents are buried in Octoraro cemetery, being members of the Presbyterian church. The maternal grandparents were Davis and Rebecca (Cowan) Clemson, farmers of Salisbury township. Grandfather Clemson was a man of prominence in his locality and for many years served on the school board and was highly respected. He died in Nov. 1871, aged eighty-four, after years of retirement, his widow surviving until 1890, when she was ninety-four years of age. They were buried in the cemetery connected with St. John's Episcopal church, in Compassville, being devout members of this church. Their children were: Mary A., the mother of Mrs. Kurtz; James, who died unmarried, in 1891; William, who died in 1899, in St. Louis, Mo.; Caroline, who died in 1882, and who married (first) Henry Harman, and (second) Jacob Evans; Adeline, who married James Gossler, a retired machinist of Reading, Pa.; Sarah J., who married Jacob Warfel, of New Holland; and S. Rebecca, who died unmarried in 1899.

The founders of the Clemson family in Lancaster county came here from England with Rev. James Clemson in the early part of 1700, being of Quaker stock. Mrs. Kurtz's great-great-grandfather was James Clemson, of Salisbury township, who lived on the old homestead which was purchased from William Penn. James Clemson was born July 13, 1729, and died in 1792. He married Margaret Herd, a beautiful but eccentric woman, who, after her husband's death, spent the rest of her life with a daughter. Their son, James Clemson, born March 20, 1755, died April 4, 1820. He married Mary Brady, born Dec. 4, 1752, and died April 21, 1819. They had these children: Grace, who died in infancy; Jehu, who married Susan Ellmaker; Eli, who married Eliza Swartzwelder; Levi; Rachel, who married John Logan; Amos, who married Maria Miller; Davis, who married Rebecca Cowan; Margaret, who died in infancy; and James.

Both the Clemson and Kurtz families are among the oldest and most honorable in Lancaster county, their names standing for honesty, integrity and high moral character.

N. DAVIS SCOTT. This honorable citizen, so long well and favorably known to the residents of Lancaster county, was born Feb. 13, 1832, and passed from life May 25, 1899. The Scott family is an old and honorable one of this county. It originated in Wales and one of its hardy members was John Scott, who took a distinguished part in the Revolutionary war, gaining a major's commission, later married Elinor Armstrong, and settled among the pioneers in Southern Lancaster county.

William Scott, son of John, married Hannah Jenkins and they reared a family of ten children: John, Elinor, Margaret, Franklin, Samuel, James, Hannah, Martha, Francis and N. Davis.

N. Davis Scott became one of the leading agriculturists of Fulton township, and more than that, for during a number of years he was identified with many of the important public movements in his section, and was conspicuous in the Republican party. An admirable phase of the character of Mr. Scott was his influence in favor of temperance in all things. His life was one of industry and it afforded him comfort to realize that at death he could leave his family secure as to worldly interests. His farm of 180 well improved acres is one of the best in the county, while his personal property was of considerable value.

The marriage of Mr. Scott was on Jan. 31, 1861, to Miss Edith R. Carter, of Fulton township, and three children were born to this union: William Graham, who died in childhood; Mary H., who resides with her beloved mother; and Cora C., who also died in childhood. Mrs. Scott was a daughter of Henry and Mary Ann (Jackson) Carter, of Fulton township, who reared a family of seven children: John, who is a farmer of Chester county, Pa.; Alice, deceased; Annie, who is the wife of Cooper Stubbs, of Fulton township; Harlan, who was killed at the battle of Fredericksburg, during the Civil war; Edith R., Mrs. Scott; Joel J., who is a farmer of Fulton township; and Kate A., unmarried, who resides in this township.

Henry Carter was one of the prominent and leading farmers of Lancaster county. He was born in 1802, a son of John Carter, an early settler in Maryland, and he preserved much of his physical activity and mental vigor until his death, at the advanced age of nearly ninety-two years. In early days a Whig, he later became identified with the Republican party, and served as a member of the State Constitutional Convention. His wife also lived to the age of nearly ninety-two years. Mr. Carter was a successful farmer of Fulton township.

N. Davis Scott was noted for his public spirit, as well as his activity in promoting the general prosperity of the community by favoring all measures which his judgment convinced him would be for the welfare of his locality. For sixteen years he served as school director, was also judge of elections, and held other offices, being a man in whom his fellow citizens could place implicit confidence. Such a man can never be forgotten in any community, and has every right to be classed among its leading representatives.

ABRAM SCHEETZ, the head of the firm of Scheetz & Co., otherwise the Paragon Shirt Co., at No. 6 West King street, is a native of Lancaster county. His father, Christian Scheetz, was a well known resident of Millersville, Manor township, for many years, but was living in Penn township when Abram was born, Nov. 27, 1838.

Abram Scheetz attended the district school for some years, but left at the early age of thirteen years to enter the grocery store of Jacob Buchler on East King street, Lancaster. For a time he was employed in the dry goods store of B. B. Martin & Co., and in that of John Myers, and was then employed for a longer period in the store of A. Dyssinger at Elizabethtown. Returning to this city the young man was again connected with the Martin store, where he was engaged at the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion.

Abram Scheetz enlisted as a private in Co. D, 122d P. V. I., but was discharged on account of sickness before his term of enlistment had expired. Presently recovering from his physical ailments, he joined the 44th Pennsylvania, when they rallied to defend the State against the Rebel invaders, and participated in the scenes and experiences that culminated in the terrible struggle at Gettysburg. Mr. Scheetz remained with his regiment until it was mustered out and returned to civil life.

After laying aside his army blue Mr. Scheetz repaired to Philadelphia, and found employment in a dry goods and notion store. Lancaster had the charm of home for him, however, and he could not resist the attraction of the old familiar scenes, so he came back to this city, and opened a dry goods store. In 1885 he retired from the dry goods trade, and opened a factory for the manufacture of shirts. In this business he has been very successful, and the reputation of his shirt, to which he gave the name of Paragon, has become very extended, selling throughout Pennsylvania and in the city of New York.

Mr. Scheetz has been greatly interested in the Grand Army of the Republic, since its organization. A member and past commander of Admiral Reynolds Post, No. 405, he rarely misses a camp fire. A member of St. John's Lutheran church, he is recognized as a useful man in church and Grand Army circles, as well as in the marts of trade.

Mr. Scheetz was married in 1861 to Louisa, daughter of Junius P. Marshall, a farmer of Chester county, Pa. Mr. and Mrs. Scheetz are the parents of two children, Henry Marshall and May Alma. The latter died in infancy, but the former survives, and is now connected with the West Disinfecting Company in Allegheny, Pa. Mrs. Scheetz is still living, and presides over her husband's beautiful home in Lancaster with charming grace and benignity.

Abram Scheetz is an unpretending and liberal man, energetic and industrious in his business, but carrying a kind and sympathetic heart in his bosom that has endeared him to many friends.

PHILIP BRUBAKER. Among the venerable citizens of New Holland, Pa., who possess the esteem of the community after a long life in its midst, is Philip Brubaker, a man of substance and standing in Earl township. His life has extended over the most progressive part of the world's history, he having been born April 15, 1815, that year marking the beginning of a new era in America. At that time science, which now flourishes and assists mankind in every relation of life, was but in its infancy, and the discoveries and inventions that have almost transformed the world have had their birth or development during the years encompassed by this worthy citizen.

Born of German parents, Philip Brubaker inherited much of the sturdy strength and solidity of character from them. His father was Philip Brubaker, a well known farmer of Earl township, who was born in 1763, and died in 1825, while the mother of Mr. Brubaker bore the maiden name of Catherine Richwine, also of German parentage. The children born of this marriage were: Margaret and Catherine, who both died single; Julia Ann, who married Isaac Witwer; Elizabeth, who married John Miller; John R., who became a hardware merchant of New Holland; Henry R., also a merchant of New Holland; Philip, the subject of this biography.

Philip Brubaker was reared on a farm, and received his education in the schools of the period. While still a lad, he was hired out to neighboring farmers to do farm work, for a mere pittance, at the age of fourteen engaging with a cattle drover to assist him in driving cattle to Philadelphia from New Holland, a distance of fifty-two miles. The trip usually was made in three days, two in going, with the cattle, and one in coming back, the weary boy making it on foot. His next business venture was with a butcher, and for a time he assisted in this line, later entering a dry goods house as a clerk, still later finding employment with his brother John R. Brubaker, as a hardware salesman. Five years were spent in this business and then he opened up a mercantile line, associating himself with Gabriel Davis and John Piersol, following this for a number of years. Since selling this Mr. Brubaker has lived somewhat of a retired life. During the war of the Rebellion, he dealt in gold, stocks and bonds very successfully, but lately he has lived quietly in his comfortable home in New Holland.

During his active life, Mr. Brubaker was a prominent member of the Republican party, and has ever been a staunch supporter of it. In 1869 he was married to Miss Elizabeth J. Miller, of Earl township, a daughter of Adam Miller, born in 1825, her death occurring on May 17, 1900. Mr. Brubaker has lived a life of charity and good will toward his neighbor, and numbers his friends by the score. Although he has passed the limits of the Psalmist, his friends wish him many more years of comfort, after his busy life, which he has lived for the betterment of others.

ABRAM G. SHEIBLY. One of the retired and substantial agriculturists of Lancaster county, residing on his fine farm in Upper Leacock township, on which he was born Dec. 7, 1823, is Abram G. Sheibly, a well known and highly respected citizen.

The parents of Mr. Sheibly were Henry and Susanna (Groff) Sheibly, who were united in marriage March 12, 1822; the former was born in Upper Leacock township, and the latter was a native of West Earl township. The birth of Henry Sheibly was on April 11, 1797 and he died in Jan. 1882, at the home of his daughter Caroline, in Farmersville, at the age of eighty-five years. His burial was from his old home and he was laid to rest in the private family burying ground. Since 1859 he had been retired from active life, but prior to that time he was active in work on his farm, in township affairs and in the Reformed church, where he was one of the elders. The mother of our subject was born June 11, 1802, and died in April, 1877, having lived nearly seventy-five years, which she filled to overflowing with kind actions and neighborly deeds. The children born to them were: Anna, who died young; Abram G., our subject; Elmira, Henry and Martin, who all died young; Maria, who married John B. Landis; Susannah, deceased, who married Isaac Reif; Sarah Ann, who is the widow of Martin Shaffer, and who lives in East Lampeter township; Caroline, who is the widow of Isaac Shaffer, of West Earl township; and Adam, who died young.

The Sheibly family has long been prominent in this county. Henry Sheibly, the grandfather of our subject, started for America with his parents when he was but seven years of age; his father, Henry Sheibly, Sr., died on the voyage from Switzerland, and was buried at Philadelphia. The son made his permanent home in Lancaster county. He was a man of great industry and accumulated large means, cultivated his lands and added many improvements which today testify to his excellent judgment. In 1779 he built the present family residence, which is a stone structure, in an excellent state of preservation, and in 1800 he erected the large barn which is still used for its original purpose. In 1817 he built a large brick house on the farm and this is now used by his great-grandson. The death of this worthy ancestor was in 1818 when he had reached his seventy-second year. The first wife of Henry Sheibly was a Miss Wenger, who died in 1794, but the grandmother of our subject was the second wife, Elizabeth Miller, who died in 1840, at the age of eighty years. On the maternal side Abram G. Sheibly was connected with the Myers family, another old and prominent one in the county.

Mr. Sheibly of this sketch has devoted his energies to agriculture all his life, remaining on the old farm which he has developed and improved through many years. His prominence in his locality has made him a useful member of society, and he has been called upon to serve the public in several capacities, notably as township auditor. For forty-six years he has been a member of the Board of the Lancaster and New Holland turnpike road and for the past fifteen years has been its valued president. In politics Mr. Sheibly is a staunch Republican and takes an active and intelligent interest in public questions. Both he and wife have been connected with Hellers Reformed church for over 50 years, and he is secretary, and also an elder.

The marriage of Abram G. Sheibly was in Upper Leacock township, May 21, 1848, to Miss Maria W. Zook, and the children born to this union were: Susannah, who is the widow of David Groff, and lives at home; Henry, a clerk in Lancaster, who married Hattie Landis, and has one daughter, Blanche; Abram, Jr., who married Miss Emma Bear, operates the home farm and has one son, J. Emory; and Mary and Emma, who died young.

Mrs. Maria W. (Zook) Sheibly was born in Manheim township, on June 5, 1826, and died on Jan. 3, 1899, and was laid to rest in the Heller church cemetery. She was a daughter of David and Susannah (Weidler) Zook, both of Lancaster county, the former being a prominent farmer.

ABRAM SHEIBLY, JR., a son of Abram and Maria W. (Zook) Sheibly, was born on the old homestead and in the house which has sheltered his ancestors, Nov. 2, 1852. His education was acquired in the public schools and he remained assisting his father until his marriage, when he removed to the other residence, on the same farm, and since his father's retirement has managed the estate himself. Its fine condition testifies that he has given close and careful attention to the land, as it is one of the most productive in the township.

Mr. Sheibly was united in marriage June 12, 1877, in Mechanicsburg, to Miss Emma E. Bear, and to this union was born one son, J. Emory. Mrs. Emma (Bear) Sheibly was born in Upper Leacock township, May 9, 1855, and she is a daughter of John and Hattie (Landis) Bear, both of whom were natives of Upper Leacock township. The father was a farmer and cattle dealer of prominence through the county. His death was in Mechanicsburg, in 1899, at the age of sixty-nine, while the mother makes her home with her children. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bear had become connected in early life with the Lutheran church. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bear were: Emma, the wife of Abram Sheibly, Jr.; Benjamin, of Philadelphia; Mary, deceased, who married Amos Baumberger; Newton, of Philadelphia; Lillie I., who died young; Minora, who married M. Ward Weidman, a merchant in Clay township; and George R., who died young.

Mr. Sheibly has been school director for the past six years, taking a great interest in educational matters. His religious membership is with Heller's Reformed church, in which he is both treasurer and deacon, while, like his respected father, he adheres to the Republican party. Mr. Sheibly is regarded as one of the representative men of Lancaster county and worthily represents a prominent line of ancestors.

BRUBAKER FAMILY, AND CONNECTIONS IN AMERICA. John Brubaker emigrated from Switzerland—Germany—to America about 1710. No record has been found as yet showing the exact time. In the year 1717 he and a certain Christian Hershey jointly took out a warrant for 1,000 acres of land, situated in Hempfield township, Lancaster county, about three miles west of the present Lancaster city. In the year 1718 he and the said Christian Hershey divided the above tract of 1,000 acres into two equal parts by running a line east and west, Brubaker taking the southern part, viz., 500 acres, on which tract he built the first grist and saw mill in Lancaster county (so tradition says), the mill property being located on the little Conestoga Creek, at what is now called "Abbeyville." It is not certain that John Brubaker was married when he came to America. On May 13, 1728, John Brubaker and his wife, Anna (what her maiden name was is not known), sold and conveyed 150 acres of the 500 acres mentioned, including the mill property, to one Christian Stoneman. John Brubaker and his wife Anna had the following children: John (it being the custom at that time, and many generations following, that the first born son received the father's given name), Jacob, Abraham,

BIRTHPLACE AND HOMESTEAD OF BISHOP JACOB N. BRUBACHER

Peter, Daniel, Henry, Joseph, David, Christian and one daughter, Anna. Anna Brubaker was married to Abraham Buckwalter.

John Brubaker, the eldest son, after having grown to manhood desired to go to Switzerland (Germany) to seek a wife, but his parents were dissuaded from consenting. However, he went after his father's death, in the year 1750, arrived in his father's native land, and was received with great joy. His friends had two lamps burning evenings. He was successful in his matrimonial undertaking, and found a maiden, Maria Newcomer, who was willing to cast her lot with him in the New World. John Brubaker and Maria Newcomer entered into the sacred relation of matrimony A. D. 1750, eight days before Whitsuntide. They then sailed for America, it is not known how soon after their marriage, but presumably at their earliest convenience. Abraham Brubaker, a cousin of John, accompanied them, and was so well pleased with the New World that he wrote enticing letters to his brothers and sisters, who also emigrated to America. Abraham Brubaker settled at the Middle creek, where "Wissler's mill" is located, not far from Clay. There he intended to build a mill, but getting into difficulties with some land owners in regard to the water right he moved to what is now called Indiantown, about three miles northeast from Ephrata. Hence his descendants are called the Indiantown Brubakers.

When John Brubaker and his wife came to America, they brought, among other things, a large chest full of goods, glassware and earthenware. Those articles became scattered about, but some are yet extant, and are highly prized as relics by those that have them. Several articles are in the possession of Jacob N. Brubaker: a salt stand, pewter communion cup, and a German book. The chest is also in the family. After their arrival in America they settled on part of a tract of land which his father had bought of Lewis Lewis, situated in what is now Elizabeth township, Lancaster Co., Pa., and there they commenced housekeeping in the wilderness. The beavers were yet there building their dams. But John and Maria (Newcomer) Brubaker were not permitted long to live together, only thirty weeks in fact, the wife dying Dec. 15, 1750. He buried her in the garden, where her remains rested 150 years, and in 1880 they were removed to the Brubaker family graveyard, and a suitable tombstone placed at the grave. This was indeed a sad bereavement. His sorrow was great. Tradition says, if possible he would dig her out of her grave, he said, with his fingers, and restore her to life. The bereaved husband did not long remain a widower in the wilderness. He married April 30, 1751, Maria Tauner (now written Doner), eldest daughter of Michael Tanner. John and Maria (Tanner) Brubaker were blessed with a large family, five sons and six daughters, most of whom grew to manhood and womanhood. A kind Providence blessed them. They were permitted to see their children, and children's children, grow up around them. And above all, they saw their descendants—as a rule—embrace the faith, and religion "which was once delivered to the Saints," for which sake the forefathers were persecuted in the "Vater Land," and which was the prime cause of their emigration to "Penn's Forest." They, and their descendants, realized the Bible truths that what we suffer for Christ's sake brings the blessing of God. The early settlers were generally rugged, resolute, but honest and hospitable, and willing to lend a helping hand. John Brubaker was deprived of his sight during the latter years of his life (it is not known how long). During his blindness he would call into his room his grandson, Jacob Brubaker, every Sunday morning, and have him read a sermon out of his book of sermons, called the "Denner Buch." (The chair on which the old grandfather sat and the book are in the possession of Jacob N. Brubaker). This shows that his mind was engaged in the service of the Lord. After John and Maria Brubaker had passed through many vicissitudes of life they went to their "long home," John Brubaker dying April 9, 1804, aged eighty-four years, seven months. His wife died some time before, June 21, 1802, aged seventy-three years, four months, ten days.

As remarked, the greater number of the family of John and Maria (Tauner) Brubaker, grew to maturity and married, viz.: John married Anna Eby; Anna married John Moyer; Maria married John Baer; Jacob married Susan Erb; Magdalena married John Bruckhart; Elizabeth married Christian Martin; Veronica married John Bomberger; Barbara married Abraham Martin. The children of the above named families, about thirty in number, nearly all of which grew to maturity, again intermarried with those families of like faith—the Ebys, Buchers, Bombergers, Snyders, Wisslers, Erbs, etc., and their families to a great extent again intermarried with families of like faith, viz.: the Ebys, Shenks, Shirks, Graybills, Bombergers, Stauffers and Rissers. Thus as a matter of course, the adherents to the faith of their forefathers greatly multiplied, and took a firm foothold in the New World, commanding the respect of the rulers of the land, and exercising a healthful influence, in many directions, by their modest, simple and honest intercourse with their neighbors. Many persons in higher stations of life were convinced that the principles and sentiments advocated and practiced by these modest and plain people were the true and cardinal principles of the Gospel, and if the descendants from generation to generation had continued those principles, by practice, down to the present time, they would exercise a greater influence. But many became dissatisfied with walking in those plain and simple paths of their forefathers, and chose strange ways, and mingled too much with the world, which greatly disturbed the peace and harmony, and therefore that influence was much shorn of its effect. But, notwithstanding all those jars and upheavals, the Mennonite denomination still stands as a beacon on the shores of time. Among those descendants there were men, members of the Church, chosen of God and church counsel, and by casting of lots, as necessity demanded, to discharge the sacred duties of the ministry. Great care was exercised, and anxious prayers were offered, invoking Divine guidance and God's blessing in providing teachers and housekeepers in God's house. A reluctant but submissive will to be ordained to the sacred office of deacon or minister, but especially of bishop, was at all times much approved of by the church. But an aspiration for those offices was always unpleasant to the church as a body.

To write the life of all prominent men of the Mennonite Church in America would be impossible, as they left scarcely any written record or account, and to mention some only might seem partial. Therefore a few remarks will be made in a general way. The polity of the Mennonite denomination has remained unchanged as regards the principal points. There have been secessions from the main body, from time to time. Those have formulated other rules of government. As a body the Mennonite denomination consists of bishops, ministers and deacons, and also the laity. Each lay member has a right to the Council of the church. At stated times examinations are held to ascertain the standing and condition of the church, the result of which is reported to conference, when bishops, ministers and deacons meet in general council and counsel with each other and advise for the welfare of the Church. The preaching of the word of God is extemporaneous and without charge. It is not the principle of the ministry to preach according to the wisdom of this world, but according to the spirit of Christ, in humility and simplicity. All persons have access to public worship. Penitent believers upon application, and after being instructed in regard to the rules and ordinances of the church, and promising obedience and allegiance thereto, are received to membership by baptism in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The members observe communion with each other, with bread and wine, the bread and wine being emblems of the broken body and shed blood of Jesus Christ. Feet washing commanded by Jesus Christ, as a token of humility, is recognized as an ordinance, and observed by the greater number of the brethren. When any difference or strife arises between the members it shall be adjusted according to Matt. xviii, 15-20. Although believing that living according to the tenets of the Mennonite faith is compatible with the word of God, yet the principle thereof does not allow members to condemn those of other denominations.—[BISHOP JACOB N. BRUBAKER.

JACOB N. BRUBAKER was born July 25, 1838, in Rapho township, Lancaster Co., Pa., and is a descendant in the sixth generation of John and Anna Brubaker, his line being through John and Maria (Tauner) Brubaker: Jacob and Susan (Erb) Brubaker; Jacob and Maria (Eby) Brubaker; and Sem and Magdalena (Nissley) Brubaker. In 1865 Jacob N. Brubaker was ordained to the ministry of the Mennonite Church, and in 1867 he was ordained bishop, in which capacity he has since officiated.

On Nov. 1, 1857, Bishop Brubaker married Barbara H. Stauffer, daughter of David K. and Anna Stauffer, and they have had children as follows: Fannie died when four and a half years old. Martin died in his thirtieth year, leaving a widow, whose maiden name was Emma Frances Witmer, and one daughter, Mabel May. David D. died when two and a half years old. Magdalena, who died in her twenty-ninth year, was the wife of Christian G. Brennerman; she left one son, Jacob Roy, and one daughter, Barbara Anna, the latter of whom died in infancy. Sem wedded Bertha Engle, and is a farmer of Rapho township, Lancaster county.

SAMUEL HATZ (deceased) was for many years one of the well known and successful business men of Lancaster, and was born in this city in April, 1826, his death occurring in his home there Feb. 18, 1886.

John Hatz, the father of Samuel Hatz, was one of the leading citizens of Lancaster county for many years, the family being a well known one in the time of the grandfather of our subject, John Hatz, who was a very large landowner, possessing the tract which is now included in James St., extending north beyond the city's limits. He married Mary Burgian. His son, John, inherited much valuable land which increased in value as the city grew, and by his good management he accumulated a fortune which reached $200,000. He probably owned more land than any other citizen of Lancaster and engaged in the real estate business, in connection with horse dealing. He was one of the first directors of the Lancaster County Bank, and one of the largest stockholders. At the time of the failure of the old Lancaster County Bank, he lost some $60,000. He was a very public-spirited man, and was one of those instrumental in the building of the Franklin and Marshall College, in Lancaster.

John Hatz married Elizabeth Ensminger, of Manheim, Pa., and the children born to this union were as follows: Samuel, deceased; Rosanna, deceased, who married William M. Shrum; Mary E., who is the widow of Andrew Wingert; Sarah, who married H. D. Musselman, of Lancaster, and Elizabeth, who married W. G. Bender, of Lancaster. John Hatz died in September, 1858, at the age of fifty-seven years, and his wife died in 1856, at the age of fifty-three years. Both were buried in the Lancaster cemetery. They were good, Christian people, members of the First Reformed church.

Samuel Hatz, son of John and Elizabeth Hatz, lived at home until he began a business career for himself. He followed the same lines as his father, dealt in horses and conducted a large livery business, in Lancaster, and for many years was also interested in the cigar business, being very successful in all. His energy and ability made him a prominent man in Lancaster, and at his death he left a large and valuable estate to his heirs. In business life he was regarded as a man of integrity, and he was much beloved in the family circle. Mr. Hatz was a member of the Reformed church. He was identified with the Republican party.

On Nov. 22, 1847, Mr. Hatz married Harriet Spoonhower, and to this union were born the following children: John, who died at the age of three years; Frederick, who died in 1892, at the age of forty-four years, married Emma Hartley, and they had six children; Mary, who died Jan. 11, 1896, married Benjamin F. Bard; Miss S. Alice, at home; Harry, who died, unmarried, in 1891; Emma H., married James S. Nowlen, a tailor in Lancaster; Charles, who married Anna N. Kellar, deceased, lives at home with his one daughter, Fanny M.; Samuel, a cigar merchant in Lancaster, married Viola Heise, and they have one daughter, Minnie, and George, who is a sign and ornamental painter in Lancaster, married Maria Simpson, and they have three children.

B. F. KINZER. Prominent and highly esteemed among the leading citizens of New Holland is B. F. Kinzer, the worthy representative of an old and honored family of Lancaster county, which has long been identified with her agricultural interests.

The Kinzer family originated in Germany, where great-grandfather Jacob Kinzer was born, coming to Lancaster county in 1729, where he found pioneer conditions, being one of the early settlers. Here he founded a family which has done honor to their ancestor, and now ranks with the most highly respected in the State. Michael, the son of Jacob Kinzer, reared a family of seven children: Catherine, Mary, Elizabeth, Margaret, William, George and Jacob, all of whom became respected members of society, lived agricultural lives, and were connected with the Lutheran church.

William Kinzer became a prosperous farmer in Earl township, married Katherine Weidler, and they reared a family of nine children: Louisa C., who married Amos Lemon; Caroline M., who died single; Maria, who married Abraham Smoker; Elizabeth E., single; B. F., the subject of this biography, born April 29, 1825; Lucetta A., who married Mathias S. Hurst; William W., who died October 1, 1900; Margaret W., who married John Wallace; and Lydia A., deceased.

Born and reared on a farm, B. F. Kinzer has been an enthusiastic farmer all his life, passing forty years as one of the successful agriculturists of Lancaster county. With a five-dollar bill in his pocket, he started out in youth to earn his own way in the world, and has succeeded beyond expectation, being now one of the county's substantial men, the owner of four well-improved farms, and identified with much of the progress of his township. For a number of years he filled township offices, and is now one of the directors in the New Holland and Downingtown Railroad.

The estimable lady who became the wife of B. F. Kinzer, in 1853, was Miss H. Caroline Youndt, born Nov. 15, 1825, a daughter of Henry Youndt, of East Earl township, and she still survives, in good health, and it is the wish of the neighborhood that both she and husband may be spared many years. The family born to Mr. and Mrs. Kinzer consisted of three children, the eldest daughter, Maria Magdalena, remaining with her parents, both Catherine W., and H. Caroline having died in childhood.

Mr. Kinzer is a consistent member of the Lutheran church, and is a man who has lived uprightly, doing his full duty, in every relation of life, thus being one of the representative men of a county where the majority are honest, industrious and law abiding.

FREDERICK VALENTINE GRAB, deceased, for many years a highly esteemed and honored citizen of Columbia, Pa., was born in Schonau, Germany, Feb. 14, 1806, and was there reared and educated. In 1832 he emigrated to America with his parents, Jacob and Elizabeth (Kern) Grab, and located in Columbia, where the father lived a retired life. In Germany he had always engaged in agricultural pursuits. Both parents were suffocated by gas from a leaking pipe and died the same night, Jan. 3, 1861, at the age of eighty-one and seventy-six years, respectively, their remains being interred in the Catholic cemetery of Columbia. Frederick V. was the oldest of their children, the others being Andrew, who was drowned in a canal; Elizabeth, who married first Frederick Renter, second Ulrich Vogel and third John Hinke, and died in Columbia; and Peter, who is living retired in Columbia.

After locating in Columbia, in 1832, Frederick V. Grab made that city his home throughout the remainder of his life with the exception of a few years, two of which were spent upon a farm in York county, Pa. He then went to Ohio with his parents, traveling in wagons, but after a short time spent there, they all returned to Columbia. He was engaged in the butcher business for a few years, and later successfully engaged in contracting, such as building houses and the wharves of the Susquehanna River; also the grading of streets and the turnpike from Columbia to Washington borough. In 1850 he opened a grocery store which he conducted for many years. He was an ardent supporter of the Democratic party and a devout member of the Catholic church. He was known for his kind hospitality. He died Feb. 18, 1876, honored and respected by all who knew him.

Mr. Grab was twice married, his first wife being

Mary Helping, who died in 1856, and by that union he had four children: (1) Catherine became the wife of Joseph Lutz, a retired citizen of Columbia, and they had the following children: George F. Squire; Mary, wife of P. Chalfant; William, proprietor of the "White Swan Hotel"; Elizabeth, wife of Sherman Swingler; Joseph, proprietor of the "Fifth Street Hotel"; Margaret, wife of Clem Hoghentogler, deceased; and Anna, wife of Peter Roeser. (2) Frederick died in Columbia. (3) Joseph married Mary Beck, and is living retired in Allegheny, Pa. They had five children: Thomas, Ida (both deceased), Mary, Emma and Rose. (4) George is deceased. In York, Pa., Mr. Grab was again married, Jan. 15, 1857, his second wife being Louise Tavernier, and to them were born six children, namely: (1) Mary G. is the wife of Henry H. Gerfin, a blacksmith of Columbia, and had the following children: Katherine A. and H. Gustave, both deceased; Mathilde E., a teacher in the public schools of Columbia; Louis H., a blacksmith; Frederick V., a blacksmith; Louise T.; Harry E., deceased; Marie C.; George P.; H. Albert; William A.; John L.; Edna A., and E. Harold; (2) Louise, (3) Peter and (4) Elizabeth, all died in childhood. (5) Harry, a blacksmith in Columbia, married Caroline Brommer, and had the following children: Lenius, Frederick, John, Louis, Harry, Wilhelmina, Charles, William, Caroline and Christian; (6) Louise is a music teacher and organist of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran church, Columbia. Mrs. Grab was born in Gonnheim, Rheinpfalz, Germany, in 1837, a daughter of Peter and Mary Katherine (Egle) Tavernier, also natives of Rheinpfalz, where the father, a farmer by occupation, died in 1841, at the age of thirty-eight years. The mother came to America in 1856 and located in Columbia, Pa., where she died June 27, 1866, aged sixty-three years. Their children were: Anna B., wife of Frank Dout, a retired citizen of Columbia; Anna Katherine, who married George Gundel, and died in Columbia; Julia A., who married Christ Kraft, and died in Columbia; and Louise, now Mrs. Grab. Mrs. Grab has been a devout member of St. Paul's German Evangelical Lutheran church since its organization, in 1859.

JOHN B. LANDIS. Among the prominent and substantial retired farmers of Lancaster county, whose agricultural activities were confined to Upper Leacock township during many years, is John B. Landis, who was born Jan. 8, 1828, son of Benjamin and Mary (Buchwalder) Landis, of East Lampeter township, whose farm was in Upper Leacock township. The father died after about fifteen years of retirement, at the age of seventy-one; the mother died at the age of sixty-nine years. These good Christian people were buried in the Groffdale cemetery. They led worthy lives, and were members of the Mennonite Church. The children born to Benjamin and Mary Landis were: Elizabeth, of East Earl township, who first married Samuel Weaver, and is now the widow of Peter Zimmerman; Mary, who married Wayne Bare, a prominent farmer, whose sketch may be found elsewhere; John B., whose name opens this record; David B., who was murdered in Lancaster, Pa.; Hettie, who is the widow of John G. Bare, of Upper Leacock township; Fianna, who is the widow of Abraham R. Grabell; Jacob, who was in the cattle business, and died in Chicago; and Harriet, who married Isaac Sprecher, of New Holland, Pennsylvania.

John B. Landis was reared on the farm in Upper Leacock township, where for a number of years he carried on successful agricultural operations. Mr. Landis has been a lifelong resident of Upper Leacock, and for thirty-seven years has resided on his present farm. He is one of the highly respected citizens of his locality. Mr. Landis was married Dec. 20, 1852, in Lancaster, Pa., to Miss Maria G. Sheibly. They had no children. Mrs. Landis died May 30, 1898, at the age of sixty-five years, and was buried in the Stumptown cemetery. She was a member of the Mennonite Church at Stumptown, with which Mr. Landis also united. Mrs. Landis was a sister of Abrah G. Sheibly, of Upper Leacock township, and a daughter of Henry and Susanna (Groff) Sheibly, all members of the Reformed Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Landis commenced farming April 1, 1853, on his father's farm in Upper Leacock township, where they remained altogether twelve years, after the first five years taking the place at $140 per acre. On April 1, 1865, they took up their residence on property in Upper Leacock bought from John Sigel, having paid $6,500 for eighteen acres, with improvements; this is the place where Mr. Landis still resides. He has made a number of purchases since, viz.: On May 19, 1870, he bought from Christian Kendig four acres covered with chestnut timber, in Paradise township, paying $80.25 per acre; on Aug. 21, 1879, he bought of Jacob Hildebrand twenty-nine acres in Upper Leacock township, with improvements, formerly the Adam Ranck property, for which he gave $7,050; on April 2, 1883, he bought from Benjamin L. Denlinger, trustee of Christian Mylin, four acres with improvements in Upper Leacock, for which he paid $1,200; on April 1, 1885, he bought from Daniel Smocker, another tract in the same township, consisting of fourteen acres, without improvements, paying $225 per acre; on April 1, 1891, he bought from Abraham K. Landis, ninety-five acres, with good improvements, in East Lampeter township, which cost him $155 per acre; on April 1, 1894, he bought from Benjamin B. Landis, three acres of unimproved land in Upper Leacock township, paying $190 per acre; on March 15, 1899, he bought from Frances M. Lenox a house and lot at Gap, in Salisbury township, for which he paid $800.

Mr. Landis for eighteen years was a school director, and he has always taken a great interest in public matters, adhering in his political belief to the Republican party. He has been a director in the Fulton National Bank for many years, and in that, as in every other trust reposed in him, has proved himself faithful and trustworthy.

BENJAMIN B. LANDIS, one of the prominent retired farmers of Upper Leacock township, is a native of that town, born Aug. 10, 1834. His father, Benjamin Landis, was born in 1801, and died in 1871, and his mother, who was born in 1803, died in 1870; both were buried in the Groffdale cemetery. Until his retirement, some fourteen years before his death, he engaged in farming, and was prominent in public matters in the township, efficiently filling the offices of both supervisor and assessor. He was a son of John Landis, like himself a farmer of East Lampeter township.

Benjamin B. Landis was reared on the farm, and learned under his father the principles which made him a good agriculturist. Two years prior to his marriage he went to work for his brother David, on a farm, and later began farming in West Earl township, where he continued for ten years, removing then to Leacock township, and four years later coming to his present farm. In 1896 he gave up active work, and since that time has lived in the enjoyment of comforts suitable to his ample means.

Mr. Landis has been identified with much of the progress and improvement of the county, and has been greatly interested in educational matters, serving as school director of his township for six years. In public enterprises he has been a leader for twelve years, being a director of the New Holland Bank, and for fourteen years he was manager of the New Holland turnpike. In politics he has always been one of the staunch supporters of the Republican party. For many years he has been an active member of the Mennonite Church, into which faith he was born.

Mr. Landis was married Dec. 14, 1858, in Philadelphia, to Barbara Ann Groff, and children as follows were born to this union: Mary C., married Alfred Evans, a farmer of Manheim township, and they have seven children; Ida A., married Dr. Leroy Leslie, of Bareville, Pa.; Benjamin G., a prominent farmer, married Emma Eby, of Upper Leacock township, and they have two children; Cora died young; Anna died young; John G. is at home; Alice is at home.

Mrs. Barbara A. (Groff) Landis was born in Earl township Nov. 2, 1838, daughter of Abraham and Catherine (Shaffer) Groff, both natives of Earl township, and members of old and prominent families. Abraham Groff died in 1886, aged seventy-two years, and his wife survived until 1894, dying at the age of seventy-eight years. These pious and esteemed people were laid to rest in the Groffdale cemetery. Their only child was Barbara

A., wife of Mr. Landis. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Landis, Samuel and Barbara (Musselman) Groff, were direct descendants of the old Swiss families of those names, and the former was a son of Hans, the pioneer settler of the Groff family; more extended notice of its earlier members will be found elsewhere. The maternal grandparents, Peter and Susannah (Hull) Shaffer, were also representatives of old and established families; Peter Shaffer was long connected with the farming interests of this county.

JESSE BROSIUS, a noted farmer in Colerain township, Lancaster county, was born in Chester county, Sept. 9, 1833, and is a son of William and Lydia (Pennock) Brosius.

William Brosius was born in Chester county in 1798, and his wife near Kennett Square in 1804. She was a daughter of Joshua and Lydia Pennock, natives of Chester county, and of Scotch-Irish ancestry. William Brosius was the son of Henry and Mary (Roberts) Brosius. His father came from Germany, with one brother, and made his home in Chester county, and there married Mary Roberts. He was the founder of the family, all trace of the brother being lost. He died as a farmer in Chester county. He and his wife became members of the Friends church, to which his children, fifteen in number have all adhered. They were as follows: Isaac, of Chester county; Benjamin, who married a Miss Booth and went to Ohio; Harper, who married and moved to Ohio; Mahlon, who married a Miss Kent, and was a potter in Chester county; Nathan, who lived and died in Delaware; William; Charles and Amos, both of whom settled in Ohio; Abner, a farmer in Lancaster county, who died in Chester county; Henry, who lived and died in Chester county; Joseph, who had a farm at Andrews' Bridge, where he died, leaving one son, Joseph P., now of Philadelphia; Mary Ann, who married Evan Bolton, and died at London Grove, Chester county; Sarah, who married Daniel Kent, and lived on her father's old homestead in Chester county; Agnes, who married Edwin Cook, and had her home in Indiana; Ruth Anna, who married Charles Reese, and lived at Atglen, Chester county.

William Brosius spent the most of his boyhood and youth in Montgomery county, in the home of an uncle, by name Roberts. When a young man he came back to Chester county, married Lydia Pennock in 1827, and lived in Chester county for a few years. In 1835 he bought a farm in Colerain township, where he and his wife made their home for a time in a little log house. Later, he put up good buildings on this farm, where they both lived to celebrate their golden wedding in 1877. They were members of the Friends' church, of which he was a minister, officiating in that capacity for many years. His wife died in 1884; and he, in 1888. Strongly anti-slavery in his convictions, he was opposed to the prosecution of the war. Besides Jesse, the subject of this sketch, they had seven children: (1) Phoebe A. and (2) William died in childhood; (3) Pennock, who was born in Chester county, was reared in the home of his grandfather, Joshua Pennock, and died at the age of thirty years; (4) Levi, born in Chester county, married Miss Sarah Wright of Lancaster county, followed the shoe-making trade in the former county and dying in 1900, left four children: Frank, who married Margaret Glenn; Lydia, who married Bartley Pennock; Addie, who married a Mr. Roberts of West Chester; and Maggie, who married James Hannum, of Philadelphia; (5) Allen R., born in Lancaster county, married Miss Mary J. Pennington, lives on a farm in that county and has three children: Owen, Lewis and Mabel; (6) Addie, married Pusey Coats and has her home on his farm in Chester county. They have four children: Eva, William B., Alice R., and Anna; (7) Joshua P., born in Lancaster county, married Miss Leila Harrar and now resides on the old homestead. They have one daughter, Elsie May.

Jesse Brosius was educated in the home schools, and began life for himself as a farmer and fruit raiser. In 1854 he married Miss Elizabeth Taylor, and three years later bought his present home, which had at that time a log cabin and a log barn. In 1864 he put up a modern house, and in 1878 a fine barn. Mr. Brosius is very extensively engaged in the cultivation of small and standard fruits.

Mrs. Brosius died in 1888, leaving five children: (1) Miffin P., born in 1855, moved to Iowa when a young man, where he married a Miss Guss. They now reside in Nebraska; (2) Anna M., born in 1857, married George Senderling, of Philadelphia; (3) William A., born in June, 1859, married Miss Esther Keiser, of Lancaster county, and lives on a farm in Chester county; they have five children living, Clyde, Ada, Warren, Pauline and Earnest; (4) Jacob T., born in Oct., 1862, married Miss Belle Haines, and is a conductor on an electric road from Philadelphia to West Chester. They live in the latter city and have four living children: Ethel, Addie, Helen and Russell Taylor; Ross died in childhood. (5) Jessie Louetta, born in June, 1869, married Frank Taylor, a telegraph operator in Philadelphia, and is the mother of four children: Anna, Hazel, Marion and Florence.

Mr. Brosius was married to his present wife, Mary K. Harris, in Oct., 1889. She was an adopted daughter of Daniel and Sarah Kent. Mrs. Brosius was born in 1853 in Chester county, and is the mother of one son, Edgar J., who was born Jan. 30, 1891.

Mr. and Mrs. Brosius belong to the Friends' church. He voted the Republican ticket in former years, but lately he has taken up with the Prohibitionists, and now votes that ticket.

William Henry Brosius, member from this district in the Legislature, was the son of Abner Brosius. The Hon. Marriott Brosius (deceased), whose sketch appears on another page, was a son of Clarkson Brosius and a cousin of Jesse Brosius. The family is widely known, and their ability, pacific principles, and unswerving justice and integrity have made them many friends.

HARVEY SEIPLE, a retired business man of Quarryville, was born in Drumore township, Lancaster county, Feb. 19, 1841. He is the son of John and Susan (Anglenine) Seiple.

John Seiple, the father, was born in Montgomery county, Pa., in 1813. Mrs. Seiple was born in Northampton county, Pa., in April, 1815. John was the son of Samuel Seiple, who was born in Germany, and his wife Magdalena Shipe was also of German origin. Samuel Seiple settled on a farm in Drumore township, and for many years taught school in the county. He reared a family of five sons: Joseph, David, Samuel, George and John, the father of our subject. They are all dead except David, who resides in Chester county. Of the brothers, Samuel and George never married. Joseph made his home in Drumore township and there died.

John Seiple married and settled on a farm in Drumore township, where he continued until 1896, when he bought a home in Quarryville, and lived a retired life until his death in 1898. His widow is still living in the home place, at the age of eighty-seven years. This couple reared a family of nine children. (1) William Seiple, who was born in Lancaster county, married Miss Tillie Hannah, of Maryland. When a young man he served in the Civil war in Co. G, Pa. Cav., and took part in a number of battles. After the war he was engaged, with his brother, our subject, in the oil fields, Venango county, for twenty years, and then went to New York State where he sunk artesian wells for some time. In 1888 he engaged himself with an English syndicate to drive oil wells in India, and with two of his sons, Gay and John, is in that country at the present time. His wife and the rest of the family, Maud, May and Bert, reside in Lancaster city. (2) Samuel Seiple was born in Lancaster county and married Miss Mary J. Potts, of Lancaster county, and they now reside at Princeton, Ill., where the husband is engaged in mercantile pursuits; they had five children: Edward, who died when young; William, Owen, Lee and Hattie, all being teachers in Illinois. (3) Harvey Seiple, our subject, was the next child. (4) Mary A. Seiple, deceased, was born in 1843, and married Jacob Rintz, of Lancaster county, and left a family of nine children: John, Harry, Charles, Laura, Emma, Mary, Ida, Lilli, and Minnie. (5) Catharine Seiple, deceased, was born in 1846, and married Simon Reese, of Providence, Lancaster county, and left a large family as follows: Dora, Harvey, Luticia, Lisle, May, Lottie, Maud, Lemuel, Melo and Sue. (6) Charles Seiple was born in 1852, and married Susan Gochman, of Lancaster county, and they reside in Drumore township, where he is a merchant, also serving as postmaster of the place; they have the following children: Lulu, Carrie, Harry, Charles, Maisy, Edna and Arthur. (7) Thomas Seiple was born in 1848, and during the Civil war was a soldier in the 53rd Pa. Regiment and served until the close of the war, after which he returned home and engaged in the oil business in Venango county, Pa. He married Miss Alice C. Brooks, of Lancaster county. His family is in Lancaster county, while he is engaged in the oil enterprises of India with his brother. His children are as follows: Ada, Minnie (deceased), Jennie, Alice, Frank, Mamie, Mellie, Leon (deceased) and Chester. (8) James D. Seiple was born in 1854, and married Miss Carrie Jeffries, of Illinois, and they now reside in Carroll county, Ill., where he follows farming. Their children are: Roy, Mabel and Frank. (9) Susan Seiple was born in 1856 and is the wife of David Rineer, of Quarryville; they reside at Newark and have the following children: Percy, Celia, Abram and Clinton.

Harvey Seiple was reared in Lancaster county, and received a common school education. When the Civil war broke out he enlisted in the 122nd P. V. I., Co. H, and was in the Army of the Potomac under Gen. McClellan. He took part in the battles of Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, and in May, 1863, re-enlisted in Co. G, 21st Pa. Cav. for six months. He was engaged in the Shenandoah valley under Gen. Sheridan, and took part in a number of engagements. At the expiration of his second enlistment, he re-enlisted in the same regiment until the close of the war. He remained on duty until Lee surrendered. Under Phil Sheridan he was engaged at Cold Harbor, Hatches Run, Weldon Railroad, Poplar Springs Church, and Petersburg. After the war he returned home, and was married, in 1869, to Miss Louisa E. Brooks, of Lancaster, daughter of Benjamin and Jane (Barnett) Brooks. Mrs. Seiple was born in Drumore township, in 1846, where she was reared and educated, and for several years before she was married, taught school. Three children were born to this union, all of whom died in infancy. Alice L. Seiple, a niece, was reared by Mr. and Mrs. Seiple. After his marriage Mr. Seiple entered the oil fields of Venango county, and was engaged in the oil business for eighteen years. He met with an accident while there, caused by a mill explosion, which for a time seriously injured him. In 1888 he returned to Lancaster county, and for a time engaged in the restaurant business. About six years later he undertook a livery business, which he managed successfully. In 1898 his wife died in Quarryville borough. She was a member of the M. E. church. On Oct. 9, 1901, Mr. Seiple married for his second wife Miss Louella Holmes, daughter of Dr. J. E. Holmes, of Virginia. They now reside in Quarryville. He is a member of the Republican party but seeks no office. He affiliates with the Reformed church. Mr. Seiple is a member of the W. S. Bryerly Post, 511, G. A. R., of Quarryville, and filled all the chairs in that order. Mr. Seiple's family is one of the most respected in the county, and deservedly so, as four sons of the family volunteered their services at the call of their country. They did their duty manfully, and no record for bravery stands higher than that of the "Seiple boys" as they were known in those times. They are men of honor to-day in the community, and respected and loved by all who know them.

HENRY BURGER, a thoroughly experienced and eminently successful builder and contractor in the city of Lancaster, where in almost any direction the eye notes some of his excellent work, was born Sept. 20, 1839, in Mansalt, Prussian-Germany, a son of John and Mary (Styer) Burger, of the same country, where they were most worthy members of the Reformed church, and where the father was an extensive farmer. John Burger died in 1851, aged forty-one years, his widow surviving until 1860, reaching the age of forty-six years. Their children were Margaret, born in Prussian-Germany, married to Philip Hump; William, an officer in the United States army, who died in California; Charlotte, who died in Germany, aged seventeen years; and Henry. The Burger family was well and favorably known in the neighborhood of Allendorf, Germany.

When but thirteen years of age, Mr. Burger was apprenticed and learned the carpenter trade very thoroughly, so that when, at the age of seventeen years, he came to America to work as a journeyman, he commanded the best salary paid to any one in that line of work, and soon was made foreman of the crew that built the railroad shops in Lancaster, retaining the position for four years. Since that time Mr. Burger has been continuously and actively employed in building and contracting, some of his work being Vegar's Brewery, in Philadelphia, and the buildings in Mammoth Park, at Long Branch. In 1869, Mr. Burger began contracting and building operations on his own responsibility and continued until 1873, when he embarked in a planing mill business with Amos Urban. For twelve years this enterprise was carried on with great success, but in 1885 the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Urban retiring on account of ill health, Mr. Burger, however, continuing the plant. In 1887 the plant was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $46,000. After the destruction of the planing mill, Mr. Burger returned to Philadelphia, easily secured work with wages of five dollars a day, and there remained for three years, then returning to Lancaster to make this city his permanent home. Here he engaged in contracting and building and has erected many of the handsomest residences and most substantial business blocks in the city. The elegant John Kellar residence is a sample of his skill, as is also the elaborate Eshleman mansion and other homes of beauty and utility, while a few of the business houses are: the old Eshleman Block, now used as the Western Union Telegraph office; the City Saving Fund and Trust Co.; the Long & Davison Building; and the great six-story brick factory occupied by the Moss Cigar Co., one of the largest buildings of its kind in the State, to which a handsome, up-to-date addition is being made. In 1862 Mr. Burger joined the engineer corps of the United States army and remained a member of it during the progress of the Civil war, this being one of the most useful and necessary departments in the service. Mr. Burger, as an expert workman, received $125 per month, and earned it, travelling from one point to another, building bridges and looking after construction work of various kinds. He has made a reputation in his line that reaches all over the State. Although Mr. Burger has erected many more ornate buildings, he feels well satisfied with the great factory before noted, its perfect proportions, its massive appearance and substantial construction meeting with his approval.

In 1860, Mr. Burger was united in marriage, in Lancaster, with Katharina Arnold, who was a daughter of Michal Arnold and was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1838. The father was a farmer of wealth and influence in Germany, but never left his native land. The mother, however, crossed the Atlantic ocean four times and lived four years in Lancaster county, but died in Germany. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Burger are the following: John A., a mechanic and the foreman of a planing mill at Atlantic City, N. J., married to Amelia Shenberger; Anna, who is the wife of Henry N. Howell, an insurance agent, and is the mother of two children; Caroline, the widow of Samuel Haverstick, residing with her father; and Barbara, at home.

Mr. Burger has always taken much interest in politics, but has never consented to hold any office. He has long been a member of the Order of Odd Fellows. From youth he has belonged to the Reformed church. Few men in Lancaster are better known or more highly respected than Henry Burger, and he justly holds a position at the head of his profession.

MARTIN D. KENDIG, who has been secretary and treasurer of the Manor Mutual Fire Insurance Company since its organization in 1886, has in that and numerous other capacities earned the right to be classed among the most progressive and public-spirited citizens of his locality. As to his financial success, it has been gained independently, for he was early thrown on his own resources.

Mr. Kendig was born Feb. 5, 1833, on the farm which he still occupies, son of Martin and Elizabeth (Mellinger) Kendig, the former of whom was born May 1, 1799, near Creswell, and died March 30, 1846, in Manor township; the mother was born March 1, 1806, and died in her eighty-sixth year.

Martin Kendig was a farmer, owning about seventy acres, which he cultivated until his death. He was a member of the Mennonite Church, and a Republican in politics. To him and his wife were born ten children: Mary, Elizabeth, Susan, Fannie, Martin D., John, Anna, Sarah, Isaiah and Elizabeth (2), five of whom are deceased.

Martin D. Kendig received his early education in the common schools, and also attended for a short time the State Normal School at Millersville, and the Strasburg Academy. After his father's death, however, he was obliged to leave school, and from that time continued his studies only in the intervals of work. That he has made the most of every opportunity in this direction is evident, for he is unusually well informed. At one time he took up the study of medicine, but abandoned his intention of becoming a practitioner on account of his poor health, as he found it was necessary for him to lead a more active life. His life occupation has been farming. From early youth he assisted in conducting the homestead place, part of which he now owns, having fifty acres. In addition to general farming Mr. Kendig makes a specialty of tobacco raising, and keeps fine stock, and he has prospered in every line, his progressive spirit making itself apparent in every feature of the management of his property. It has been brought to its present attractive condition by his labor, and the home with all its surroundings bespeaks intelligent and unceasing care. Mr. Kendig's fellow citizens have not been slow to note this characteristic, and he is a prominent member of the Lancaster County Agricultural Society, of which he has served eight years as secretary and ten years as treasurer. Such a record speaks for itself. For many years he was an active member of the Tobacco Growers Association, of which he was president, and he belongs to the Horticultural Society. Of late years, however, his attention has been largely directed toward the affairs of the Manor Fire Insurance Company, of which he was one of the promoters, and a charter member. On its organization, in 1886, he was elected secretary, in which office he has ever since continued to serve, and in 1888 he was elected treasurer, in which incumbency he has also been retained to the present day. He was acting treasurer from the start. Mr. Kendig has been an earnest and efficient worker in every movement for the advancement or benefit of his town and county, especially educational affairs, and has served as school director of Manor township. Politically he is a Republican.

On Nov. 19, 1885, Mr. Kendig married Miss Fannie Dambach, daughter of Martin and Elizabeth (Herr) Dambach, farming people near Columbia, who had a family of twelve children, all yet living, namely: Mary, Susan, John, Fannie, Martin, Henry, Joseph, Catherine, Amos, Adam, David and Lizzie. Mr. Dambach passed away Nov. 12, 1875, aged sixty-two years, one month, twenty-one days. The mother passed away July 19, 1901, in her eighty-fifth year and was buried in a private cemetery near Letort. She was a member of the Mennonite Church. Mr. and Mrs. Kendig joined the Mennonite Church in 1901.

CHRISTIAN S. B. HERR (deceased) was in his life time one of the leading men of Lancaster county. Born in West Lampeter township, Sept. 11, 1838, he was a son of Benjamin and Catherine (Barr) Herr. His boyhood days were passed on the old homestead, and his education was secured in the public schools. Early in life he associated himself with a manufacturing establishment in Lancaster, under the firm name of Backman, Stoner & Herr, engaging in the manufacture of farm implements. After a short time the business was suspended, and Mr. Herr returned to farming, locating at Big Springs, West Lampeter township, on a place containing forty-five acres. His attention was given to agricultural pursuits. Mr. Herr was at one time tax collector in the town, and was among the most highly esteemed citizens of the township. His death occurred Feb. 21, 1884. His religious affiliations were with the old Mennonite Church.

Mr. Herr was married Sept. 29, 1868, to Miss Elizabeth, a daughter of Daniel and Annie C. (Brenneman) Herr. Mrs. Herr was born in Strasburg, on the old homestead, where her son Jefferson is now established. To this union were born: Enos B., born Sept. 14, 1869, died July 21, 1870; Harry B., born June 21, 1871; Daniel Jefferson, born July 5, 1873; Anna Catherine, born March 31, 1876, is the wife of Frank Hauser, and they reside with the mother at her home in Big Springs, in West Lampeter township. Mrs. Herr and her children are all members of the Old Mennonite church, and move among the most respected people of the county.

JOHN K. LINEAWEAVER, M. D., is one of Columbia's best known and most successful practitioners. His birthplace was Lebanon, and his father, George P., was also a physician. His paternal grandparents were Peter and Susanna (Gilbert) Lineaweaver, also of Lebanon, his grandfather being a hotel keeper and for many years the proprietor of a stage line, running between Reading and Harrisburg. Dr. Lineaweaver was the third of a family of six sons. His two elder brothers, George P. and Simeon T., were also members of the same profession, and are both deceased. His younger brothers were named Samuel T., Washington K. and Albert. Samuel is the editor of The Daily Season, of Philadelphia.

Mrs. George P. Lineaweaver, the mother of the gentleman whose life is so imperfectly sketched in these paragraphs, was Sarah Toby. Her father, Simeon, was of English birth, and commanded his own vessel, which was engaged in the trans-Atlantic carrying trade. He enjoyed an enviable reputation, both as a mariner and a man. His wife, Dr. Lineaweaver's maternal grandmother, was born in Philadelphia.

On June 2, 1868, at Columbia, the Doctor was married to Miss Jane McClung Strickler Crane, a daughter of the distinguished Col. Robert Crane, a sketch of whose life and family may be found in the succeeding paragraphs. Of this union were born four children. Robert C., the eldest, died in infancy. Jeannette C., the only daughter, was the wife of H. B. Stauffer, of Columbia. John K. died before completing his third year, and Fred W. is a student at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Mrs. Lineaweaver and Mrs. Stauffer are members of Chapter The Witness Tree, of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Col. Robert Crane, her father, was a man of pronounced public spirit, wide popularity and eminent distinction. He was born in the town of Liberty, then within the old limits of Lycoming county, but now within the confines of Clinton county. His parents were George Crane and Christiana Covenhoven. His mother's family was among the first to settle in the New Netherlands, in 1630, and her more immediate ancestors were among the distinguished pioneers of the Lycoming valley, and played a prominent part in protecting the white settlers from the midnight raids of the savages. Her father, Wolfert Covenhoven, was born in Monmouth Co., N. J., in 1755. He was a civil engineer by profession, and served as a scout in the army of Washington. He lived to the remarkable age of ninety-one years, dying Oct. 29, 1846. George Crane owned an extensive farm in Tippecanoe township, stretching along the river three miles from Jersey Shore, on which he settled in 1819. Robert was his second child and eldest son, and passed his boyhood and youth on the paternal acres. On reaching man's estate he married Elizabeth M. Strickler, of Columbia, and he and his young wife took up their home in Jersey Shore. Mrs. Strickler's parents were Jacob and Jane (McClung) Strickler, of Lancaster county. Jacob was a farmer, a large land owner and a miller.

Robert Crane was a man whose business ability was as pronounced as his moral character was unspotted. While yet a young man he evinced a remarkable aptitude for managing enterprises of magnitude. He erected the large brick block in Jersey Shore, near the approach of the bridge across the river, a structure which was long known as the Crane Arcade, and was prominently identified with milling and lumber interests. In 1860 he became interested in the building of the Columbia & Reading Railroad, and removed to Columbia. For several years after the completion of the line he was its superintendent. He was also an influential factor in the organization of the company which built the Bound Brook Railroad, and was largely interested in the road's construction. At the time of his death he was president of the Delaware & Lancaster Railroad Company, whose line extended from Lancaster to Phoenixville.

Politically Col. Crane followed his ancestral traditions. He was always a Democrat, yet while opposing the election of President Lincoln he gave the national administration loyal and hearty support in its efforts to suppress the rebellion. When the Confederate forces, led by Lee and "Stonewall" Jackson, approached Columbia, he was the first to apply the torch to the bridge, the rebel forces being within one hundred feet of the farther approach across the river. His prompt action saved Columbia and a large portion of Lancaster county from invasion, and for it he was thanked and commended in a general order promulgated by Gen. Crouch, commanding the Division of the Susquehanna.

In addition to the other responsible posts so ably filled by Col. Crane, he was for several years a director of the Susquehanna Iron Company, and vice-president of the First National Bank of Columbia. About 1885 he removed from Columbia to Philadelphia, where he engaged actively in real estate and insurance business. He received his title of colonel through being appointed on the staff of Gov. Bigler, with that rank. In 1858 he was elected to represent Lycoming county in the lower house of the legislature. He served his constituents so well that he was chosen to represent them for a second term, and his public record is without stain.

He was a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, and a liberal supporter of the cause of religion. He was, nevertheless, tolerant of all faiths, and genuinely charitable toward the failings of his fellow mortals. His temperament was affectionate and genial; his instincts generous; and his urbane manner made him a welcome guest in social intercourse. In 1856 the late John F. Meginness dedicated to him the first edition of his "History of West Branch Valley," in recognition of the sympathy and encouragement extended to him by one who never turned a deaf ear to a worthy appeal for help, and who regarded God's poor as the continuing heritage of God's children.

To Col. Crane and wife five children were born, of whom Mrs. Dr. Lineaweaver is the eldest. The others were: George; Creacy, Mrs. H. O. Chapman, of Germantown; Robert, the husband of Alice Hershey, of Philadelphia; and Elizabeth, who is unmarried and resides in Columbia.

H. FRANK ESHLEMAN, attorney-at-law, with convenient and well appointed offices at No. 48 North Duke street, Lancaster, belongs to one of the oldest, most numerous and most influential families in the county, his first ancestor in this country, Jacob Eshleman, having arrived in America, from Rotterdam, in August, 1729.

David B. Eshleman, the father of H. Frank, was a son of David Eshleman, who was born in Hempfield township, this county, in 1805, and who spent a goodly portion of his life in his native place, but about 1830 removed to Martic township, where he became recognized as a prominent farmer and where he followed his agricultural pursuits to the time of his death, which occurred in 1876. The others of the family were: Jacob; Harry; Barbara, who married Jacob Stauffer; and Hettie, who married a Mr. Bear; all of these have long since passed away. David Eshleman was twice married. His first wife was a Miss Harnish, who died about 1850, and his second wife was Mrs. Sensenig, a widow, who passed away several years ago.

David B. Eshleman, son of the above, was born at Marticville, in Lancaster county, on Aug. 28, 1841, and was, like his father, a progressive and prominent farmer. In early manhood he married Miss Mary Elizabeth Charles, who belonged to another prominent family of this county. His death took place on Nov. 16, 1898, but his widow still survives. From this union six children were born: Martin C., who married Bernarda Miller and has two children,—Edith and Anna; Charles R., who married Kate Buckwalter and has three children,—Elizabeth, Mary and Leigh; Martha; Anna; William G.; and H. Frank.

H. Frank Eshleman was educated in the schools of his district and remained on his father's farm until he reached the age of eighteen, at which time he entered as a student at the State Normal School at Millersville, and was graduated from that great institution of learning in 1890. For the following year he engaged in teaching in the public schools of Lancaster county and the two subsequent years he was a member of the faculty of his Alma Mater, devoting all the leisure time he found during the last two years to the study of law.

The next step was his entrance into the senior class of the law department of the University at Ann Arbor, Mich., from which he was graduated in 1894, with the degree of LL. B. During the spring of that year he was admitted to practice law in the lower courts of Michigan, as well as in the Supreme Court of that State, and in the U. S. District Court, but the following fall he returned to Lancaster and entered the office of Hon. Marriott Brosius, member of Congress from this district, where, after reading law for six weeks, in order to familiarize himself with the practice in this State, he passed a very creditable examination and was admitted to practice in the courts of Lancaster county. This was in Oct., 1894; and from that day to this he has been pressing steadily to the front as a lawyer, being now associated in different cases with many of the oldest members of the bar, and enjoying a most lucrative practice.

Socially Mr. Eshleman is a member of Charles M. Howell Lodge, No. 496, F. & A. M., of Millersville; of Kosciusko Lodge, No. 374, I. O. O. F., of Rawlinsville, this county; Jay Council, No. 1003, Jr. O. U. A. M., of this county; White Cross Commandery, Knights of Malta, Lancaster; Emanuel Senate, No. 959, Ancient Essenic Order; to the Lancaster Bar Association, and to the Young Republicans, being a stanch and ardent Republican.

Up to the spring of 1901 Mr. Eshleman maintained his residence in the country, but in April of that year he brought his mother and sisters, to whom he is greatly devoted, to Lancaster, and established the family home at No. 332 North Lime street. With a magnetic personality, the ability quickly to grasp a legal point, and studiously devoted to the honored profession which he has adopted, Mr. Eshleman's future is confidently anticipated by all who know him, as one of unusual promise.

GEORGE W. GILLESPIE, M. D. A prominent physician of Lancaster county is Dr. George W. Gillespie, of Fulton township. He was born in Lancaster county Jan. 22, 1852, and is a son of N. H. Gillespie, of Maryland, and Mary Y. (Davis) Gillespie, of Chester county, Pa. The family is of Scotch, Irish and English origin.

George Gillespie, the grandfather, was a native of Cecil county, Md. He married Miss Sallie Hall, of Maryland, and was the father of seven children, namely: Elisha; Samuel E.; Mary S.; Gertrude; G. Washington; Nicholas H., the father of Dr. George W. Gillespie; and John E.

Col. Elisha Hall, the Doctor's great-grandfather, was one of the "Mount Welcome" Halls, whose ancestry settled on a large tract of land in Cecil county, Md., in 1690. His great-great-grandfather, John Ewing, D. D., was an eminent Presbyterian minister of his day.

Nicholas H. Gillespie was married to Mary Y. Davis, of Chester Co., Pa., June 6, 1848. The lady was a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Young) Davis, of Chester Co., Pa. This union resulted in the birth of six children: S. Davis Gillespie, who is a superintendent of coal mines in West Virginia; Dr. George W.; John E., who is deceased; Sallie H.; Gertrude E., the wife of William P. Haines, of West Virginia; and Miss Mary, of Philadelphia. Nicholas H. Gillespie was born Jan. 6, 1820, and came to Lancaster county in 1850; he then removed to Virginia, returned again to Lancaster county in 1889, and died there May 12, 1895. He was a strong Democrat all through life. He followed the mercantile business for over forty years. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church for many years. He was also a member of the I. O. O. F. Mrs. Gillespie was born Jan. 20, 1825, in Chester Co., Pa., and died in Cecil Co., Md., in 1879.

Dr. George W. Gillespie was with his father in the store during his early life. On April 9, 1885, he married Miss Lizzie W. Nivin, of Newark, Del. She was a daughter of David E. Nivin, of Delaware, and comes of an English family. She was born March 9, 1850. Two children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Gillespie, Nivin D. and J. E. H., both of whom are at home. Dr. Gillespie received his education in the district and high schools of Lancaster county, and graduated from the school of Medicine at the Maryland University in 1880. He first located at Conowingo, Md., followed his profession there for nine years, and then came to Pleasant Grove, where he has met with merited success in the practice of his chosen profession. He is a self-made man, having received few advantages which were not gained by his own efforts. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., K. of P. and I. O. Heptasophs. He is a Democrat in politics, and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

The Doctor is devoted to his practice and, being of a benevolent character, has given considerable time to the poor of his neighborhood. He comes of distinguished Pennsylvania and Maryland families and holds well to their traditions. Both sides of his house were prominent in Revolutionary times and took leading parts in that struggle for liberty. The Doctor is well posted on all topics of the day and keeps closely in touch with all scientific matters of interest to him.

GEORGE WEILER, a retired farmer of New Holland, was born in East Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Sept. 11, 1824, a son of Elder George and Anna (Gouchenauer) Weiler. George Weiler was born in Caernarvon township, and his wife in East Hempfield township.

Elder Weiler was a farmer, and held the position of school director for six years. He died in 1865, having lived retired for fifteen years, and attaining the advanced age of eighty-seven years, less five days. He was an elder in the Reformed Church, and with his wife, who died in 1871, at the age of seventy-one years, was buried in the Petersburg Mennonite cemetery. The family of Elder Weiler and his wife consisted of the following children: David, who died young; George; Fanny, who died in infancy; Henry, who was a farmer, and died at the age of sixty; and Joseph, who died at the age of fifty-nine.

The paternal grandparents of George Weiler were Andrew and Anna M. (Mark) Weiler, natives of Switzerland. Andrew Weiler was a child when he came to this country with his parents, and here he became a successful farmer. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Weiler were Joseph and Anna (Kauffman) Gouchenauer, of whom the former was a farmer and a weaver in Lancaster county.

George Weiler was married in 1877, in East Earl township, to Levenia Kendig, and to their union were born: Anna M., Ruth E. and Elizabeth L., all of whom are at home.

Mrs. Levenia (Kendig) Weiler was born in Iowa in 1843, a daughter of George and Mary (Sausman) Kendig, of Earl township, where they were married. Her father was a merchant and a farmer, and about 1840 removed to Ohio, going from there to Iowa, where he was engaged in farming many years. About 1874 he returned to Lancaster county and engaged in a mercantile business at first in Beartown, and then in Lancaster. In his younger days he operated a distillery, from which he went into a general store, and for a time was engaged in farming. His death occurred in 1882, at the age of seventy-one. His widow died in 1885, at the age of seventy-two. Both were buried in Lancaster, where they died, and whither they had removed in 1874 from Kansas, living retired the last years of their lives. They were both members of the Methodist Church. They had the following children: Sarah, who married William Weidel, and is now deceased; John, deceased; Edwin, deceased; George, a farmer in Kansas; Levenia, noted above as the wife of Mr. Weiler; William, deceased; Mary, who lives unmarried in Lancaster; Ottomar; Evelyn; Ida; Edward, deceased, as are also the last three members of the family; and Isaac, a clerk in Oakland, California.

Mr. Weiler remained at home with his parents until their death, and in 1871 he came to New Holland, where he lived until his marriage, when he began farming in that township. In 1899 he retired. In religion he holds to the Reformed Church, of which he is a zealous and active member. In his politics he is a Republican. Mr. Weiler has sold his farm, and in the spring of 1902 located in Lancaster.

SAMUEL M. SELDOMRIDGE. As merchant, farmer, banker, tobacco dealer and representative public man, Samuel M. Seldomridge is well and favorably known to the people of West Earl township. He was born Dec. 17, 1831, on what is known as the Jacob Musser farm, near Stumptown, son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Miller) Seldomridge.

Frederick Seldomridge, his grandfather, accompanied by his brother, Tobias, emigrated to America and located in Lancaster county, Pa., while Tobias established a family of the name in Virginia. Frederick Seldomridge was the father of John, Isaac, Samuel, George, William, Sarah and Mary.

Samuel Seldomridge, the father of Samuel M., was born March 30, 1793, and died April 13, 1856. On Sept. 28, 1820, he married (first) Christiana Glowser, who was born July 20, 1801, and died Sept. 28, 1828. The children of this union were: Sarah, born Aug. 8, 1821, who died in childhood; Jacob, born Feb. 28, 1825, who died in 1862; and George, born April 28, 1827, who died unmarried. The second marriage of Samuel Seldomridge, in 1829, was to Elizabeth Miller, and to this union came: Joanna, born Aug. 23, 1829, married George Bear, of Lancaster county; Samuel M. is the subject of this sketch; Isaac, born Jan. 8, 1835, died in young manhood; John, born Feb. 12, 1837, is a retired farmer and merchant of the borough of Ephrata; Amos, born May 9, 1840, died in childhood; Elizabeth, born March 5, 1843, married William Gross, a shoemaker, of Farmersville; Levi, born Aug. 20, 1846, is a farmer and painter, of Farmersville; and Christian, born Nov. 14, 1848, still unmarried, is the proprietor of a hotel in Dayton, Ohio.

Samuel M. Seldomridge was reared on the farm and was educated in the common schools of Leacock township, attending until twelve or thirteen years old. His youth was passed in industry, as his parents had but limited means and a large family, and he was engaged in farm work until April 1, 1845, when he entered the store of J. L. & S. L. Robison, merchants at Intercourse, this county, as a "prentice boy." He drove team and did boy's work about the store and remained with them three years at a yearly salary of $40. On April 1, 1848, Mr. Robison sold the store to Jacob Holl, of Mechanicsburg, Pa., and it was conducted by his son, B. F. Holl (now of Philadelphia). When he took charge Mr. Seldomridge was promoted to the position of head clerk, at a salary of $80 per year, and he remained with Mr. Holl as clerk until January, 1856; at the end of his nine years' service he was receiving $200. In January, 1857, shortly after his marriage, he bought out the store of Isaac Roland, at Earlville, with the help of friends, and conducted same until January, 1859, when he purchased the store of Christian F. Groff, at what is now Farmersville, and moved from Earlville. There he has continued to reside and carry on the mercantile business. Meantime, besides building up a profitable mercantile business, he has branched out, engaging in various lines, in all of which he met with the same measure of success which attended his first venture. Farming has received a goodly share of Mr. Seldomridge's attention, as he owns three fine farms, and he has also dealt heavily in tobacco, having his own warehouses. He has a commodious dwelling opposite his store, and in addition he owns five houses, which he rents. He became interested in the Farmers' National Bank, of Lancaster, and in January, 1877, was elected a director of that institution, and after serving about five years on the board became, in 1881, vice president, in which incumbency he has since been retained. Mr. Seldomridge is strictly a self-made man, having started in life with no capital but his native ability and habits of industry, and he stands as one of the solid, substantial and reliable citizens of his township, a fit representative of the best class of residents in Lancaster county. As an employe Mr. Seldomridge proved himself, from the very outset of his career, to be faithful and trustworthy, and after he had gained five years' experience his services were eagerly sought and well paid for. His courtesy made him popular, and the lessons he learned in those early years, not only of a strictly business character, but also in dealing with people, were of inestimable value to him when he entered upon his independent career. Mr. Seldomridge enjoys a fine patronage among the prosperous farmers of his section, as he has always had the reputation of paying the highest prices for farm products, which he ships to New York. Judicious buying has been one of the principal secrets of his continued prosperity, and his stock is unusually well selected and desirable. He has been obliged to enlarge his establishment three times to accommodate his increasing trade, and it is up-to-date in every appointment. Several successful merchants have been trained for their business career in this house. To him is due the greater part of the credit for the building up of Farmersville.

In political faith Mr. Seldomridge is a Republican, and he has been prominent in the councils of his party for many years, his advice on county, State and National affairs being sought and highly valued. He has served three or four times as delegate to the county conventions; on June 19, 1888, he was a delegate to the National Convention held at Chicago, where he supported Gen. Harrison throughout. On Aug. 25, same year, he was chief marshal at the large Harrison convention held at Lancaster—the largest since 1844. The interest he takes in local affairs is not less, and his name has always been associated with the progress and development of his township. Since 1858 he has been town clerk at Farmersville, West Earl township. In July, 1859, he was appointed postmaster, under James Buchanan, and has continued to hold that office through all the changes up to the present day. He has served as juror on road views, as juryman several times, as United States juryman three times, and has settled up a number of estates. Such marks of confidence and approval from a man's fellow citizens do not come undeserved, and in the case of Mr. Seldomridge they are the simple acknowledgment of duty well done.

Samuel M. Seldomridge was married March 20, 1856, to Miss Sarah Swope, of Upper Leacock township, who was born July 19, 1838, a daughter of Daniel and Leah (Hiller) Swope. This union has been blessed with children as follows: Harvey C., born in 1857, married Clara Graybill; he is a merchant at Rothsville, Pa. Charles E., born in 1859, married Annie Myers; he is a miller at Hinkletown, Pa. Daniel W., born in 1860, died in infancy. Morgan Rufus, born in 1862, married Susan Buch; he is a merchant in Farmersville. Nettie A., born in 1865, died in childhood. Lillie May, born in 1872, is the wife of Henry Oberholtzer, of Akron, Pa., who is a merchant of that place.

Mr. Seldomridge has been liberal of his means toward all deserving enterprises and charities, and has contributed generously toward the support of the Zeldenrich Church, in Leacock township, although he is not a member.

BRACKBILL. Among the early families of Paradise township, Lancaster county, the Brackbills deserve prominent mention. Honored representatives are identified with the interests of the county today, and stretching into three centuries, the eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth, the family has been actively and influentially associated with the development of the region.

(I) Rev. Benedictus Brackbill was born in the seventeenth century, near Weiler, on the river Harre, in Germany, and sailed from there, with his wife Maria and three children, Ulrich, Barbara and Maudlin, landing in Philadelphia Aug. 24, 1717.

He located between Strasburg and Bunker Hill, in Lancaster county, and there died.

(II) Ulrich Brackbill, son of Rev. Benedictus, was born in Germany in 1708, married Fanny Herr and left four children, Fanny, John, Benedict and Anna.

(III) Benedict Brackbill, second son of Ulrich, was born in 1730, and married Mary Kendig. They had eight children, John, Elizabeth, Mary, Henry, Anna, Susanna, Benjamin and Christian.

(IV) Henry Brackbill, son of Benedict, was one of the successful agriculturists of Paradise township. He was born Aug. 25, 1771, and occupied and tilled a farm adjoining on the south what is now Leaman Place. He married Miss Susan Eshleman, by whom he had a family of five children, as follows: John, a lifelong farmer near Strasburg, Lancaster county; Maria, who died unmarried at the age of thirty-seven years; Benjamin, a sketch of whom appears below; Jacob, who died unmarried Dec. 20, 1882, in the seventy-seventh year of his age; and Henry, who died in Paradise township Jan. 25, 1879, in his seventieth year. The father of these children died July 6, 1837, aged sixty-five years.

(V) Benjamin Brackbill, son of Henry, was born in Paradise township Nov. 10, 1803, and throughout the many years of his life he remained a resident of that township, where he engaged successfully in farming. He married, Jan. 5, 1837, Miss Susan Howry, who was born March 14, 1813, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Funk) Howry. To Benjamin and Susan Brackbill was born a family of eight children, namely: Mary Elizabeth, born Nov. 21, 1837, unmarried, a resident of Vintage; Elam H., born July 7, 1839, a farmer near Vintage; Elias E., who is named below; Susan, born Feb. 4, 1844, residing with her brother, Elias E., and her sister at Vintage; Lydia Ann, born March 23, 1846, who married Peter Hess, of Cumberland Co., Pa., and died Dec. 7, 1888; Benjamin O., born Sept. 19, 1848, a farmer of Salisbury township, who died Sept. 26, 1896; Jacob F., born May 19, 1850, a farmer of Paradise township, who died Oct. 22, 1887; and Henry P., a merchant of Vintage, a sketch of whom follows. The mother of these children died Feb. 16, 1865, in the fifty-second year of her age. The father survived until Sept. 11, 1891, passing away at the ripe old age of eighty-eight. Benjamin and Susan Brackbill were devout members of the Old Mennonite Church, with which faith all the children except Jacob and Henry P. are now connected.

(VI) HENRY P. BRACKBILL, a prosperous merchant of Vintage, the son of Benjamin and Susan (Howry) Brackbill, was born on the homestead farm in Paradise township May 11, 1853. He was reared on the farm, attending the neighboring public schools. At the age of sixteen years he entered the store of E. H. Esbenschade, at Leaman Place, as a clerk, in which capacity he remained for two years. He then accepted a similar position in the mercantile establishment of David Houston, at Bethania, where he also remained two years. With the experience in commercial life thus gained he came at the age of twenty-one to the store at Williamstown, or Vintage, which he now occupies, succeeding to a business there conducted by Henry Rutter, and since then carrying on a general mercantile trade. It is one of the notable establishments of Lancaster county, outside of Lancaster, for he carries a full and attractive stock. Mr. Brackbill is one of the progressive and active business men of his part of the county, and it is largely to his energy and keen insight that he owes his marked success in the mercantile field. He has been postmaster at Vintage since the office was established there, during the administration of President Harrison. Mr. Brackbill is one of the directors of the Gap National Bank, and is connected with other interests.

On Jan. 1, 1870, Henry P. Brackbill was married to Miss Emma Diller, daughter of Lewis Diller. To this union have been born three children, Cora, Bessie and Harry D., all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Brackbill are active and prominent members of the Presbyterian Church at Leacock, of which he is now elder and trustee.

ELIAS E. BRACKBILL, son of Benjamin and Susan (Howry) Brackbill, was born Aug. 25, 1841. He has been an active and successful farmer of Paradise township, and now lives retired, with his two sisters at Vintage, highly respected and esteemed by his many friends and acquaintances.

GEORGE A. MAYLING (deceased), in his early life a cooper, and subsequently a prominent farmer of East Drumore township, was born in the city of Lancaster Sept. 20, 1827, a son of John Frederick and Rebecca (Deitrich) Mayling, residents of that city, where the father worked at the coopering trade some years. In 1838 the parents moved to Marietta, Lancaster county, where the mother died in 1858, and the father did not long survive, passing away in 1861. They were the parents of ten children, three of whom survived them: George A., Selina and Sarah A. Selina, born in Lancaster in 1834, married Edward Rusing, and they had one son, Harry. Mr. Rusing was for many years a prominent coachmaker at Marietta. After his death, which occurred in 1895, his son, who was a very fine coach painter, inherited the business, which he conducted very successfully; he was a talented artist and died in 1899. Sarah A., who was born in Lancaster in 1836, is unmarried, and lives at the old Marietta home.

George A. Mayling began his education in the parochial schools of the city of Lancaster, and subsequently attended Susquehanna Institute at Marietta. He very early applied himself to mastering the coopering trade, and under the instruction of his father became a very competent workman. After the death of his father he continued in the business successfully on his own responsibility, building a handsome and comfortable home into which he moved, and where his family of four children were born. Mr. Mayling was a competent business man, and was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Marietta, which was the first national bank in the county, and the twenty-fifth in the United States. He served as councilman in the borough of Marietta. In 1873 he purchased a farm in East Drumore township, which he improved by enlarging the house, and the following year moved thereon, living there until his death, which occurred March 8, 1901. Mr. Mayling was a great reader and student, and became thoroughly informed on current history and international affairs and politics. He devoted more time and study to ancient and current history than most ordinary citizens; was perfectly familiar with the great national questions and policies of all countries, and was quite as conversant with foreign politics as with our own. At his home, or wherever engaged in conversation, his talks afforded not only entertainment but instruction, and his fellow citizens regarded him as one of the best informed and best read men in the lower end of the county. In politics he was for many years a Republican, but left the party, as he was a free trader, and although he did not affiliate with the Democratic party he generally voted their ticket.

Mr. Mayling was married, Dec. 25, 1865, to Miss Rebecca M. McComsey, of Lancaster City, a daughter of Matthias and Mary M. (Vanderau) McComsey, residents of Lancaster county. Her paternal grandfather, Samuel McComsey, was a farmer and stonemason, and in 1790 helped construct the splendid stone bridge over the Conestoga creek at Potts Landing. Her father was born in Paradise township in 1789, of Scotch-Irish parentage, and her mother was born in Culpeper county, Va., in 1791. They were married in Lancaster county in 1811, settling at first in Manor township, but subsequently buying a farm and making their home in what was then Martic township (now Providence), where Mrs. Mayling was born July 4, 1832. Matthias McComsey died leaving a wife and nine children. The widow survived until 1874, dying in Lancaster. Mrs. McComsey was a woman of superior endowments of both mind and character, and as she herself had not enjoyed the advantages of a thorough education she was very anxious to give her children every opportunity. As there were no facilities in the neighborhood for good instruction, she fitted up a room in her own house and engaged a teacher, a Mr. Harlen. The neighbors' children were also allowed to avail themselves of the privileges, and thus one of the first schools (if not the very first) in Martic was established. Mrs. McComsey later gave the land for one of the first public schools in the township. Her children were as follows: (1) Elizabeth, born in 1812, married William Long, a Methodist minister, and died in Indiana, leaving her husband and five children. (2) Samuel, born in 1814, in Manor township, married

Rebecca Deitrick, of Lancaster, where he was engaged in the forwarding and commission business, when the State owned what is now the Pennsylvania Road, and continued in that line after the change. He owned the large stone warehouse which stood where Long & Davidson's new building now is on West Chestnut street. He died in 1899, and his wife died in 1890. They left one son, Samuel Slaymaker McComsey. (3) John, born in 1816, began life as a farm boy, and worked at farming until about sixteen years of age. He then went to learn the trade of blacksmith with George Hegan, who was a well known smith carrying on business at Martic Forge. He served a full apprenticeship, but did not work at the trade long afterward; about 1835 he went to Philadelphia, and for a time worked at machine blacksmithing, which was different from the trade he had first learned. He became a very expert mechanic, and later went to work for William Norris, of the Norris Locomotive Works, Philadelphia, under whom he took up the trade of boiler-making, which he soon mastered. He became such an excellent workman that he was made foreman of the same works, and remained there a number of years, when he and his brother, Samuel, started in the forwarding and commission business in the old stone warehouse on West Chestnut street, Lancaster, owning and operating a freight line between Lancaster and Philadelphia. Later John purchased a farm in Martic township, where, with his mother and two sisters, he made his home. He died in February, 1891, unmarried. (4) Matthias, born in 1818, married Lizzie C. Rex, of Clearfield county. Prior to his marriage he was engaged in teaching in the public schools of Martic township, and was one of the most efficient instructors of his day. It was as his assistant that his sister, Rebecca M., commenced teaching. After being engaged in the commission business in Lancaster in company with his brothers, Samuel and John, Matthias became the partner of his brother, John, in agriculture in Martic township, where he died April 16, 1859, leaving a wife and one son, William, now of Boston, Mass. His widow took up the study of medicine after the death of her husband, graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and is now a distinguished physician of Boston. She married John Keller, of Philadelphia, who died some years ago. (5) William, born in 1820, remained at home on the farm until he was seventeen years of age, when he left for Philadelphia to seek employment. He called on Samuel D. Orrick, who at one time ran the Conowingo furnace, the only person in Philadelphia that he knew. Mr. Orrick was surprised to see him, and still more so when he told him that he had left home to make his own living. Mr. Orrick admired his pluck, gave him a few days' work unloading cars and then put him on the road as a conductor, he being engaged in the commission business. His employer was pleased with his work, and for a long time he remained with him. For a time he was connected with his brothers, Samuel and John, in the transportation and commission business. Later Mr. McComsey became connected with the Seners in the coal and lumber business in Lancaster, being a member of the firm of Sener & Co. He ended his connection with the Seners as a member of the firm of William McComsey & Co., in 1877. After the dissolution of this last named partnership, by his withdrawal, he became connected with the coal business of the late James Stewart, and was also interested in stone contract work, and managed Mr. Stewart's numerous business enterprises when that gentleman was absent from the city. Mr. McComsey finally retired from active business. In 1881 he was elected city treasurer. It was in 1865 that he was elected to the council, afterward serving as select councilman. In 1866 he was elected to the Lancaster school board, on which he continued to the time of his death, which occurred in 1895, a period of twenty-nine years, for some years and at the time of his death being chairman of the important superintending committee. He enjoyed the sobriquet of "Father of the School Board." Mr. McComsey was an active member of the Board of Trade about 1870, and was chairman of the committee of general affairs of the city. In 1880 he assisted in taking the census, was city auditor until the office was abolished, and for three years was jury commissioner. He was an active member of the city Agricultural and Horticultural Society. As a staunch Democrat he had been a member of county committees for years, and was chairman of the city executive committee for a long time. In conclusion it may be said that there had not lived in the city of Lancaster a man who had given more time to the public service without compensation than William McComsey. Mr. McComsey was married in 1844 to Mary A., daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Dorwart, of Lancaster. She died in 1879. Their surviving children are Mary E. and William H., the latter a resident of Lancaster. The daughter, a former school teacher of Lancaster, married Prof. John M. Conroy, for many years principal of one of the Pittsburg high schools; he is now engaged in the manufacturing of mirrors, plate glass, etc., and is the head of the firm of Conroy, Prugh & Co., Allegheny, Pa. Another son, Benjamin A., died in the army during the Civil war; and two others, J. Frank and David D., died in the West. (6) Levi, born in 1822, married Miss Lizzie Amer, of Philadelphia, and they located in the city of Lancaster, where he was engaged with his brother in the commission business, and for many years was a conductor on the Pennsylvania Railroad. He died in November, 1884, leaving a widow and seven children, Anna (wife of Alfred Hubley, of Lancaster), William B. (who married Miss Martin and died in Pittsburg), John A., Rebecca, Horace, Harry and Kate. (7) Leah died in childhood. (8) Mary A., born in 1824, died in 1889, unmarried. (9) Francis, born in 1829, died in 1897, unmarried. (10) Rebecca M., born in 1832, is the widow of George A.

Mayling. Her education was secured in the common schools and the high school at Lancaster. She began teaching in May, 1848, when only fifteen years old, and was long known as one of the most successful teachers of Lancaster county, where she taught for a period of fourteen years, eight years of that time in the public schools of the city of Lancaster; she was the first female teacher employed in public schools of Martic township. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Mayling continues living on the farm homestead.

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Mayling: (1) Mary R. married Daniel R. Kiehl, and lives in the city of Lancaster. (2) Morris A. purchased the home farm, and is engaged in farming. (3) Minerva V. is at home on the farm. (4) Milford G. died in infancy. In religion Mr. Mayling was born a Lutheran; his widow and children belong to the Methodist Church.

EDWARD EDGERLEY, the prominent carriage-manufacturer, of Lancaster, erected his present carriage works more than a third of a century ago, and within a short time after he had returned from a long and honorable career as a soldier in his country's defense during the Civil war. The military spirit of Capt. Edgerley, may, in a way, be said to have been inherited, for his grandfather, Jacob Keller, was a Revolutionary soldier, and his great-grandfather, Capt. Edward Edgerley, who was a member of the 5th Maryland Regiment, fell mortally wounded in the fiercely contested and winning battle of Eutaw Springs, S. C., in September, 1781. His son, Edward Edgerley, the grandfather of Edward, was born in Cecil county, Md., and married Elizabeth Kirk, of Little Britain township, Lancaster Co., Pa., who lived to be ninety-five years old.

Gideon E. Edgerley, father of Edward, was born in 1794, and was fifteen years of age when he came to Lancaster City. He was a hatter, having acquired his knowledge of the trade with his uncle, Levi Knight. Later in life he was employed ten years in the comb factory at Lancaster. In 1818 he married Elizabeth Keller, a native of Lancaster, and to them were born eleven children, namely: Rebecca, who died in infancy; Maria, who died young; Jacob, who died when thirty-one years of age; Anna, deceased, who was the widow of William Kahl, of Lancaster; Harriet, widow of William P. Leonard, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Gideon, who died young; Mary, widow of Luke Suydam, of Lancaster; Levi, who died at the age of thirty years; Sarah, who married John Barnhard, now deceased; Charlotte, widow of Samuel Gross, of Lancaster; and Edward. The father died in 1849, aged fifty-five years, and the mother survived until 1882, passing away at the age of eighty-one.

Edward Edgerley, son of Gideon E. and Elizabeth (Keller) Edgerley, was born at Lancaster, Sept. 13, 1837. His attendance at school during boyhood was irregular, for at the age of ten years he entered the comb factory, and remained one of its active and reliable employes for eight years. Believing that a trade offered him better opportunities in life, he began in 1855, at the age of eighteen, an apprenticeship to the trade of carriagemaker. Completing his trade, he began business for himself in 1858, and was progressing steadily when the clouds of Civil war darkened the land. He felt the call to duty, and on Sept. 16, 1861, enlisted in Company K, 79th P. V. I., known as the Lancaster County Regiment, and he followed the regiment through its long and brilliant career. He participated in all the engagements in which his gallant regiment was engaged, and there were many of them, as shown by the following official record: Perryville, Ky., Oct. 8, 1862; Stone River, or Murfreesboro, Tenn., Dec. 31, 1862, Jan. 1, 2, 3, 1863; Hoover's Gap, Tenn., June, 1863; Chickamauga, Ga., Sept. 19-20, 1863; Tunnel Hill, Ga., February, 1864. He veteranized at the close of his first term of service, and participated during 1864 in the battles of Buzzard's Roost, May 9th and 11th, and Snake Creek, May 12th; Resaca, May 13th and 15th; near Dallas, May 25th and June 4th; New Hope Church, near Dallas, Marietta road, June 18th; Kenesaw Mountain, June 20th, 23d and 27th; Chatahoochie River, July 6th and 10th; Peach Tree Creek, July 20th, in charging column on the 21st; siege of Atlanta, July to September; Utoy Creek, Aug. 5th and 6th; Jonesboro, Aug. 31st and Sept. 1st; Sherman's famous march to the sea, Nov. 16th to Dec. 21st; siege of Savannah, Dec. 13th, 21st; campaign of the Carolinas, Jan. 18 to April 25, 1865; Ivesboro, March 16th; was especially conspicuous in the battle of Bentonville, N. C., March 19th and 20th, where the regiment was in the charging column, and held the left under a murderous fire during flanking movement of the enemy; moved to Goldsboro, March 22d; Raleigh, N. C., to Richmond, Va., Washington, D. C.; was in the Grand Review of May 2d, and was mustered out of service July 12th, Capt. Edgerley was promoted from first sergeant to second lieutenant Nov. 1, 1862, and was commissioned captain Sept. 11, 1864. It is a notable fact, a matter of record, that during the three years and ten months of Capt. Edgerley's military service he was not absent from active duty a single day, from sickness or any other cause.

Returning to his old home, Capt. Edgerley resumed his trade. In 1867 he erected the carriage factory in which he still conducts a successful manufacturing business. He married at Lancaster, in 1859, Miss Rosanna Stehman, and to Capt. and Mrs. Edgerley were born eight children: Edward Everett; Bertha, wife of Herbert Eichholtz, of Lancaster; William Sherman; Anna, wife of Abraham Rohrer, a florist; Mary; Harry Emery; Mabel; and Catherine, deceased wife of Charles Clark.

In 1871 Capt. Edgerley was elected a member of the city council, and served five years. In 1878 he was elected register of wills of Lancaster county, serving a term of three years in that office. In 1888 he was elected mayor of the city of Lancaster, for a term of four years, enjoying the distinction of having been the first and only man elected for that number of years; the courts deciding that the law extending the term from two to four years was unconstitutional, he served only two years. He was highly commended for his administration and eminent business ability. It was his genial nature and good citizenship that led the Republicans of his district to again elect him for a term to the common council, and two terms of two years each to the select council; he resigned his seat in the latter branch Dec. 30, 1902, in order to take his position as county treasurer of Lancaster county on Jan. 5, 1903, an office to which he was elected for a term of three years, by an overwhelming majority, in November, 1902. While in the city councils Capt. Edgerley succeeded in having the fences from the reservoir grounds removed, thus giving the city a beautiful park, and he was also the prime mover in creating the beautiful park around the Lancaster county prison. In brief, no man in the city has left his impress for good in more directions than has Capt. Edward Edgerley.

MARTIN K. MYLIN, a retired farmer, and at one time in his life a very successful hotel man, who is now residing at Gordonville, Pa., was born in Pequea township, Lancaster county, April 28, 1839, son of John and Elizabeth (Kendig) Mylin, of East Lampeter and Conestoga townships, respectively.

Five brothers, of the name of Mylin, came early from Switzerland, and settled in Lancaster county. With them begins the history of the Mylin family, of which the gentleman whose name introduces this article is an honorable representative.

John Mylin was a farmer, born in 1804, a son of Jacob Mylin, of Lancaster county, and he died April 28, 1857. His wife, Elizabeth, who was born in 1806, died at the age of seventy-two. Both were members of the Mennonite Church, and were buried in the cemetery connected with the Herr meeting house. Mr. and Mrs. John Mylin were parents of the following family: Isaac died in infancy; Amos died in 1890; Jacob died when six years old; Eliza died in infancy; Eli is on the home farm; Martin K.; John died in infancy.

Martin K. Mylin and Barbara K. Charles were married in Lancaster in January, 1860. To their union were born: John C., a ticket and freight agent at Leaman Place, married Anna Feinniger; Elizabeth C. died at the age of twenty-two years; Barbara C. died at the age of twenty-three years; Ida died at the age of nineteen years; Alice C. married Elam Kreider, a farmer and music teacher at Leaman Place, Pa.; Clara C. died at the age of eighteen years; Miss Emma C. is making her home with her sister at Leaman Place; Martin C. is a sergeant in the regular army of the United States, and in 1901 was stationed at Fort Princes, Cuba;

Amos C. is attending the State College; and Anna died at the age of four years.

Mrs. Barbara Mylin, who died in January, 1901, at the age of fifty-three, was buried in the cemetery connected with Herr's Church in Pequea township, where also repose the bodies of her children who have passed away. She was a daughter of Henry and Susan (Kreider) Charles, of Lancaster county, where her father was a lifelong farmer in Pequea township.

Mr. Mylin remained at home until the death of his parents, when he moved to Ohio, where he was engaged in farming operations, and sold machinery for a year, in company with a brother. At the end of that time he returned to the old homestead and was employed by his brother a year, when he purchased a farm in West Lampeter, devoting the ensuing six years to its cultivation. Then he sold out, and was employed in the Wheatland Mill for a few years. In 1874 he came to Gordonville and purchased a hotel, which he operated until the spring of 1897. That spring he retired from the active management of the hotel, though he still retains the ownership of the property, and is enjoying that easy and comfortable existence that rightfully follows long and laborious years.

Mr. Mylin is prominent in fraternal circles. In Masonry he has taken the thirty-second degree; and for thirty years he has been a member of the I. O. O. F., in which he has risen to the Encampment degree. In politics he is a Republican, and is regarded as one of the leading and influential citizens of the town.

JACOB SNEATH. The strong, forceful personality of Mr. Sneath has made him for more than a half century one of the leading citizens of Lancaster county. Possessing an active temperament, he acquired the trade of a carpenter, from which he rose in a few years to contractor and builder. He has been eminently successful in business, and to movements for the general welfare he has contributed the same energy and enthusiasm that have been so happily applied in his vocation. In Sunday school work he has been especially interested and is perhaps the oldest superintendent in this county, having served continuously in that capacity for the past fifty-one years, with the exception of one year.

Mr. Sneath was born in Mountville, Lancaster county, Nov. 11, 1828, the son of Robert and Mary (Todd) Sneath. His paternal grandfather was William Sneath, of Scotch-Irish extraction, who married a Miss Lingerfelter, of German parentage, and who was accidentally killed on the railroad while on his way to Rohrerstown. Robert Sneath, the father, in his earlier life followed farming and fence building, and was later appointed sexton of the cemetery at Columbia, a position he filled for many years. He married Mary Todd, and to them were born six children, as follows: Jonathan, who died young, at Rohrerstown; Jacob, whose sketch appears herewith; Mary, wife of Isaac Conklin, a carpenter of Columbia; John, who served as a volunteer in the 49th P. V. I., and died at the age of thirty-seven years; Anna, wife of John M. Reed, retired, Philadelphia; and Benjamin, who was a soldier in the 79th P. V. I., and is now deceased.

Jacob Sneath was reared on a farm until he reached the age of seventeen years. He then began an apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade at Mountville, and at its completion continued his trade until he was twenty-three years of age, when he began contracting and building. Possessing the essential executive and mental qualifications he has ever since been prominent in construction work in Lancaster county, and has met with financial as well as professional success.

In Oct., 1855, Mr. Sneath married Elizabeth Witmer, who was born in Manor township, Lancaster county, daughter of Hon. Daniel W. and Anna (Hershe) Witmer, granddaughter of Daniel and Elizabeth Witmer, of Manor township. Daniel W. Witmer was a prominent farmer of Lancaster county. He served for three terms in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and in his later years was a merchant and drover in Mountville. He married Anna Hershe, daughter of Abraham Hershe, an old resident of Lancaster county, and to them were born the following children: Benjamin A., deceased; Mary, who married David H. Wideler, of Mountville, and is now deceased; Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Sneath; Elias H., who was a soldier of the Civil war, wounded in battle and is now deceased; Abraham, who served as lieutenant in the Civil war and is now deceased; Jacob H., a bank clerk at Mountville, Pa.; Kate, wife of Levi Myers, a tobacco merchant of Lancaster; Harry C., a merchant at Lancaster City; and Sarah, who died young. Daniel W. Witmer, the father, died in 1896, aged eighty-eight years; his wife in 1870, aged sixty years. She was a member of the United Brethren Church, and both are buried in Mountville cemetery.

To Jacob and Elizabeth (Witmer) Sneath have been born three children, Isaiah W., Elias H. and Emma E. Isaiah W. was graduated from Yale College, married Ell I. Mark and is a Congregational minister at Franklin, Mass. Elias Hershe was also graduated from Yale College, married Anna Camp, of Middletown, Conn., and is a professor in Yale College. Emma E. married H. C. Bruner, a coal merchant of Columbia.

Mr. Sneath is one of the most prominent members of the United Brethren Church at Columbia. He is a trustee, leader and, superintendent of the Sunday School. He began his Sunday School work at Mountville more than half a century ago and was one of the pioneers in that locality. He had never attended a Sunday School, but, receiving a little instruction from a lady who had visited one, he entered zealously upon the work, which he has ever since continued with most gratifying results. In politics Mr. Sneath is a Democrat. He served in the borough council for three years, was burgess four years, and for seven months acted as United States internal revenue inspector. He is identified among fraternal orders with the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. M. P., and is one of the best known residents of Columbia.

HENRY MILLER HERR, chief of Lancaster's police, has been a school teacher, was a member and secretary of a large manufacturing concern in Lancaster for ten years, and besides can fill prescriptions in a drug store.

Mr. Herr is a descendant of Hans Herr, the progenitor of the numerous Herr family in Lancaster county and Pennsylvania. His grandfather, David Herr, was a well known farmer of Manor township and his father, Dr. E. B. Herr, is a widely known East King street physician and druggist.

Dr. E. B. Herr married Miss Elizabeth Miller, daughter of Christian Miller, farmer of Manor township. Two sons were born, J. Edwin, a printer, who died in 1882, in his nineteenth year; and Henry Miller Herr, the chief of police.

Henry Miller Herr was born in Millersville April 14, 1856, and educated in the State Normal school there, from which he graduated in 1878. He taught for some time and then became a traveling salesman for the Columbia Manufacturing Co., and later on associated himself with the Lowell Harness and Collar Co., of Lancaster. He was a member and secretary of that company for ten years, up to the time of its dissolution as a stock concern. After this Mr. Herr was strongly urged to accept the Republican nomination for mayor, but declined in favor of another Republican and was appointed chief of police, an office which he fills very capably. Mr. Herr is a member of the St. Paul's M. E. Church. He belongs to the Blue Lodge, Masons, to the Odd Fellows and to the Elks. At spare times in the past Mr. Herr has assisted his father in the drug business, becoming in this manner proficient in pharmacy. Personally and politically Mr. Herr is one of Lancaster's most popular men.

JOHN McNEAL RUTTER, a farmer of Sadsbury township, was born in Salisbury township, this county, March 20, 1840, a son of Adam and Margaret (Skiles) Rutter and a descendant of Conrad Rutter, a native of Prussia.

Conrad Rutter was the first of his name in Pennsylvania. In 1683 he and his wife, Jane Douglas, of Scottish extraction, whom he wedded in England, came to America with Daniel Pastorius. They landed at Germantown, Pa., on Aug. 30th of that year. About 1720 Conrad Rutter purchased of William Penn 588 acres of land, in Leacock township, Lancaster county, where they located, and where he died in 1739. One of their family, Andrew, settled in Montgomery county, where he left a family.

Joseph Rutter, son of Conrad and Jane (Douglas) Rutter, was born in Leacock township, and there married Barbara Glenn, also a native of that locality.

George Rutter, son of Joseph and Barbara (Glenn) Rutter, was born in Leacock township, but lived and died in Salisbury township. He married Margaret Lightner.

Adam Rutter, Sr., son of George and Margaret (Lightner) Rutter, was born in Leacock township in 1763, and was a farmer in Salisbury township, where he died Nov. 25, 1810. He married Margaret Skiles, who was born May 15, 1773, and who died July 19, 1859. Like the other members of the Rutter family, they were Episcopalians. Their children were: (1) James, born in Leacock township, in June, 1797, married Hannah Leaman, and settled in Leacock township. He was drowned in Witmer's dam, near Paradise, in 1828, leaving the following children: Nathan S.; Margaret, wife of George Geishard, of Asheville, N. C.; Mary, wife of John Capp, of Lebanon, Pa.; and Hannah, who married in the West. (2) Jane, born in May, 1799, married William Rhodes and settled in Mercersburg, Franklin county, where she died, leaving a family, all of whom are since deceased. (3) George, born in May, 1801, married Elizabeth Rutter and settled in Leacock township, where he worked at the blacksmith trade. Of his children only one is living, Rachel, the wife of Samuel Dague, of Philadelphia. (4) Anna, born July 16, 1804, married Henry McClellan and moved to Franklin county, where they died leaving three children: Hays, Harry and Hetty. (5) Nathaniel, born Nov. 14, 1806, went to Wilkesbarre, Pa., where he married his first wife, Ellen Seiss, who died in 1850, the mother of Augusta, deceased; Emily, who married E. P. Darling and is deceased; Margaret, who married Col. Eugene Beaumont, a hero of the Civil war; James, who married and lives in Wilkesbarre; and Hervey, born in Wilkesbarre, who died when a young man. Nathaniel Rutter married for his second wife Mary (Seiss) Dunlap, a sister of his first wife, who has borne him two children, Hervey (deceased) and Natalie. By her deceased husband, Rev. Mr. Dunlap, a Presbyterian minister, Mrs. Rutter has one daughter, Jennie. (6) Adam, Jr., is mentioned below. (7) Rachel Rutter, born March 15, 1810, married Christian Weldy and moved into Franklin county and has one child living in New Jersey.

Adam Rutter, Jr., the father of John M., was born Nov. 26, 1808 and in 1828 married Margaret Skiles, who was born Aug. 3, 1807. Mr. Rutter worked at his trade as a blacksmith in Salisbury township until 1850, when he purchased a farm near Cambridge, where he remained until 1855. That year he bought the "Green Tree Hotel" property in Bart township, and conducted that hostelry with success until April 1, 1859, when he bought a farm near Georgetown, Lancaster county, on which he spent a year. He then bought a hotel and farm property at Nine Points, where he lived until 1866, when he repurchased the "Green Tree Hotel" property, which he held for two years, and then bought the McKee property, one of the fine farms of this section, which now belongs to John M. Rutter. It has a stone house of generous proportions and fine appearance, and large barns. The last years of the life of Adam Rutter were spent on an adjoining farm, which he bought in 1875, and where he died April 21, 1885. His widow survived until Oct. 5, 1893, when she passed away full of years and honor, in the eighty-seventh year of her age. Both Mr. and Mrs. Rutter were devout members of St. John's Episcopal Church. In early life Mr. Rutter was a Whig, and in his later years became a Democrat. In fraternity matters he belonged to Lodge Number 43, F. & A. M., of Lancaster. To him and his wife were born five children: (1) Jane, born in November, 1829, married Jacob Stambaugh, and moved to Philadelphia, where he died in 1874, leaving a widow and the following children: Adam R., of Lancaster; Emma, of Philadelphia; Anna, the wife of Howard Brinton, of Colerain; Laura, unmarried; George, a mechanic in the Baldwin Locomotive Works, of Philadelphia; and James, of Philadelphia. (2) George, born Oct. 14, 1831, married Harriet Ray, of Sadsbury township, and engaged in a hotel business at the Gap, Lancaster county, where he died July 16, 1869, leaving two children: Ella, now the wife of Frank Taylor, of Philadelphia; and John M., who is married, and is also living in Philadelphia. (3) James. (4) John M. is next in the order of birth. (5) Rebecca E., born April 15, 1842, married Jacob Keylor, of Bart township, where they are now living on his farm, with a family of five children: Margaret, Ella, Howard, Adam R. and Henry.

John M. Rutter was educated in the public schools of Bart township and the select school of Thomas Baker (where he spent three terms), and for two years he was a student at the Unionville Academy in Chester county. When the Civil war broke out he enlisted in Co. E, 122d P. V. I., under Capt. Birely, with Judge Fell as one of the lieutenants. They were assigned to the Army of the Potomac, reporting at Arlington Heights, and participating in the battle of Chantilly. The regiment was engaged in the desperate three days' fighting at Fredericksburg, and was fighting four days at Chancellorsville. After these severe engagements the time of the regiment expired, and it was honorably discharged at Harrisburg.

John M. Rutter came home and engaged in the mercantile business at Nine Points, in partnership with Robert A. Ferguson. His health, however, did not stand the confinement, and he turned again to farming. After his marriage Mr. Rutter settled on his present place, which he purchased after the death of his father, in 1886; he has made extensive improvements, and has continuously engaged in general farming.

On Feb. 11, 1875, Mr. Rutter was married to Miss Emma C. Davis, who was born in Colerain township March 2, 1848, daughter of Joseph B. and Elizabeth Davis. Mrs. Rutter acquired her education in the select school of Thomas Baker, and in the Union school under Prof. Andrews: for six years she was a successful teacher, and she is a lady of marked ability. To Mr. and Mrs. Rutter have come four children: (1) Howard was well educated in the high schools in Octoraro and Christiana, and learned the trade of blacksmith, which he still follows at Nine Points; he married Effie Brown and has one son, Eugene, born in 1900. (2) V. Davis, born April 26, 1876, received his education in the Octoraro high school, and is at home. (3) Emile D., born May 22, 1881, studied in the Gap and the Christiana high schools, and is at home. (4) Augusta E., born March 2, 1883, spent two terms in the Gap Academy, one term in Union high school, and is now a student in the Bart High school.

Politically Mr. Rutter is a Republican, and has been town auditor and school director. In 1870 he was enumerator of the census for Bart, Sadsbury and Christiana borough. He belongs to Post No. 358, G. A. R., Christiana, in which he has held the offices of commander and adjutant. Mr. and Mrs. Rutter and their daughters belong to the Episcopal Church, and are all people of high character and pronounced ability.

REV. JOHN G. FRITCHEY. On March 12, 1885, in the fullness of years and good works, there entered into rest Rev. John G. Fritchey, a faithful laborer in the Master's vineyard.

In the latter part of the eighteenth century there came from Germany to America one John Godfrey Fritchey, a young man of gentle birth and good education. In the beginning it had been his intention to return to the Fatherland, but the beauties of the Pennsylvania hills and the broad opportunities of the life in a new country proved so attractive that he decided to remain, and located near Harrisburg. Like so many of his countrymen, he was a musician of considerable merit. In his new home he met and married Dorothy Bucher, a faithful and sincere member of the Reformed Church, and an aunt of Rev. John Casper Bucher, D. D., a noted divine of that denomination. Mr. Fritchey had been reared in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church, but was too broad to object to his children following the teachings of the church of their mother. Thirteen children came to brighten their home.

John G. Fritchey, son of John Godfrey and Dorothy Fritchey, was born Feb. 6, 1802, and was reared amid the refining influences of a pure Christian home. He was baptized by Rev. Mr. Mueller, and in 1821 was confirmed by Rev. John Winebreuner, the popular pastor of Salem Reformed Church, five miles from Harrisburg, who had taught him the Heidelberg catechism. His home training and his natural inclinations alike turned him toward the ministry, and at the suggestion of his beloved teacher and pastor, he entered a classical school at Sandy Hollow, taught by a Mr. Cummings, a graduate of Princeton College, where for two years he pursued a course in Latin and Greek, preparatory to a course in Theology. In the spring of 1825, at the invitation of Rev. Mr. Winebreuner, he accompanied that gentleman to Carlisle to attend the opening of the new theological seminary then and there established by authority of the Synod of Bedford. He witnessed the inauguration of the first Professor of Theology, Rev. Lewis Mayer, D. D., and became the first enrolled student of the institution. Having completed the course, he in 1828 was ordained to be a missionary, his intention being to labor in the destitute regions of the West. With this idea he left home, traveling on horseback, with his face toward the setting sun. At Chambersburg, however, he came under the influence of the pastor of the Reformed Church, Rev. Mr. Rahausser, who had an extensive knowledge of the home missionary field, and who persuaded him to change his course southward, to the mountains of North Carolina. Arrived in the vicinity of Lincolnton, in that State, he found a field ready for the harvest, and for twelve years thereafter engaged in arduous labor, establishing many churches in that time, and rejuvenating the work of the church generally. His field of labor extended over seventy miles down into South Carolina. In 1840, having secured a pastor for the South Carolina churches in the person of Rev. William C. Bennett, and being unwilling to rear his family amid the influences of the slave system, he returned North. He was successively pastor of churches at Mechanicsburg, Cumberland Co., Pa., East Berlin, Adams county, and at Taneytown, Md., being at the latter place thirteen years. In each of these places Rev. Mr. Fritchey was a power for good, building up the churches and freeing them from financial burden. In 1865 he moved his family to the town of Lancaster, and from that time to the date of his death engaged in active service for his Master in the county. He preached in many places, but was particularly helpful in New Holland, Millersville, Elizabethtown, Maytown and at Shoop's Church. He was also very helpful to the Zwingli German Church in Harrisburg. His method of work was to go into a disorganized field, or in communities where the cause of religion was languishing for any reason, and by the magnetism of his energies fan the dying embers into flame again. When the fire burned brightly he would secure the establishment of a regular minister at the place, and move on to other less favored communities. In this manner he was instrumental in building up a number of churches in the county which are now lasting monuments to his efficient labor. At the Zwingli Church he was peculiarly effective in the raising of a large debt that sapped the vital forces of the church, undertaking this work and carrying it through under the weight of fourscore years. The missionary spirit, the carrying of the Gospel to those who had it not, was the all-consuming force in his character, and dominated his actions all through a long life of usefulness. No journey was too long, no day too unfavorable on account of the weather, to respond to a call in which he saw an opportunity to do good.

On Oct. 12, 1828, Rev. Mr. Fritchey was united in marriage with Mary Ann E. Hendel, who was born in Carlisle, Pa., May 13, 1809, and who died in Lancaster Feb. 17, 1875. She was a daughter of George Hendel, and a granddaughter of Rev. William Hendel, the latter of whom was pastor of the Race Street Church, Philadelphia; he fell a victim to the scourge of cholera which swept over that city in 1798. Mrs. Fritchey was also a niece of Rev. William Otterbein, a power in the early church, and of Dr. William Hendel, of Womelsdorf, Pa. Rev. Mr. Fritchey and his bride made for their wedding journey the trip to North Carolina, where he was to devote his labors, in which his good wife heartily sympathized and greatly assisted. In her girlhood she had publicly professed her faith and had been confirmed by Rev. John S. Ebaugh. Thirteen children blessed the home of Rev. Mr. Fritchey and his wife, as follows: (1) Sarah E., born Sept. 27, 1829; married Joseph Eberly. (2) William A., born May 4, 1831, died Nov. 18, 1861. (3) Ann Catharine, born Jan. 24, 1833, died Jan. 6, 1851. (4) Mary E., born Nov. 24, 1834, died June 12, 1851. (5) Martha A., born Sept. 14, 1836, died Dec. 31, 1880. (6) John H., born Dec. 7, 1838, died July 22, 1869. (7) Theodore L. Mayer, born Feb. 21, 1841, died April 15, 1880. (8) Alfred N., born May 25, 1843, died Feb. 6, 1895. He enlisted in the Union army when but seventeen years of age, being assigned to Company C, under Col. Cole, in the Maryland Cavalry. He was taken prisoner in 1862, and was confined several months in Libby prison, and on Belle Isle, and after his exchange rejoined his command. On Jan. 1, 1864, he was again taken prisoner, this time being confined in the prison pen of Georgia, known to the whole world as Andersonville stockade. His comrades in the same company said of him, after his death, that he was not only a born soldier, but a most intelligent and companionable comrade. (9) Frances A., born Feb. 19, 1845, died May 13, 1875. (10) Laura J., born Jan. 27, 1847, is the widow of Dr. Amos A. Roth, a prominent physician of Frederick, Md. (11) James G., born April 6, 1849, died Nov. 4, 1871. (12) Joseph U., the only survivor of the family, is mentioned elsewhere. (13) Addison H., born Nov. 9, 1853, was a graduate of Franklin College, a prominent member of the Bar of Lancaster county, and an accomplished musician; he died May 7, 1899.

HON. WILLIAM UHLER HENSEL was born in Quarryville, Lancaster county, Dec. 4, 1851.

George W. Hensel, his father, now deceased, came of German-Lutheran and English-Quaker stock. He was a resident of Quarryville for over half a century, and was recognized as the representative citizen of the lower end of the county. Much of the substantial progress and improvement of Quarryville were due to his efforts and influence. He conducted a large general store, was president of the National Bank, a director of the Quarryville Railroad, head of a local insurance company, county auditor, a trustee of Franklin and Marshall College, a pillar of the Reformed Church, and prominent socially. He resided in a handsome home in Quarryville, long noted for its generous hospitality. Mr. Hensel married Anna M. Uhler, who belonged to the well-known Uhler and Light families, of Lebanon, pure Pennsylvania German.

William Uhler Hensel received his early education in the common schools of his home district, and afterward attended the academies at Chestnut Level, Parkesburg and Paradise. In the autumn of 1865, he entered the Preparatory Department of Franklin and Marshall College, and from that time he has been identified with Lancaster and its interests. He was graduated from Franklin and Marshall College in 1870, holding the second place in scholarship throughout the whole course, and he closed his collegiate career with the honor of class valedictorian, delivering a thesis that attracted marked attention, and was an augury of his intellectual future. Mr. Hensel's devotion to his Alma Mater has been conspicuous, and he is always at the front of any movement looking to the promotion of its welfare. He is a member of the Diognothian Literary Society and Phi Kappa Sigma Fraternity, and in the latter has held the highest office of the order in the United States. Three years after graduation he was elected to deliver the Master oration, and chose the subject "Robert Burns," for a masterly and elaborate address. While still at college he displayed great talent in journalism, for he was one of the founders of College Days, afterward known as the College Student, and his facile pen, ready wit and fine literary judgment, insured its success from the start, and gave it an impetus that made its growth an assured thing. It is today a deeply interesting periodical, reflecting the literary and social life of Franklin and Marshall College. Mr. Hensel was long foremost in the management of the annual alumni dinners at the College, and is almost invariably booked for a speech. At the Commencement in 1887, when the College Centennial was celebrated, he delivered a memorable address on "What the Community Owes to the College," which evoked unstinted encomiums from press and people. He has been for years a trustee of the College.

Mr. Hensel, turning his attention to the legal profession, studied law under the late Hon. Isaac E. Hiester, and after his death continued under David G. Eshleman, being the first law student that counselor had. Mr. Hensel was admitted to the Bar Jan. 23, 1873, and soon afterward entered journalism, in May, 1874, buying Henry G. Smith's half interest in the Lancaster Intelligencer, of which paper he became an editor and one of the proprietors. He never abandoned the law while in journalism, but kept up a close relationship to the local Bar, and continued to practice law to some extent, despite his onerous duties and multifarious cares in politics and journalism. He has been one of the Censors of the Bar Association since its organization. For years he has been the solicitor of the First National Bank, of Strasburg, the Quarryville National Bank and the Trust Co., of Lancaster; of one of the national banks at Ephrata; of the bank at Christiana; and that at Gap; both banks at Mt. Joy and Elizabethtown; the Exchange Bank at Marietta; the Fulton National Bank, Lancaster; the Quarryville Bank and Water Cos.; the Edison Electric and Lancaster Gas Cos.; the Consolidated Street Railway and Traction interests; and many minor corporations; as well as the boroughs of Mt. Joy, Akron, Quarryville and Christiana.

Mr. Hensel's name gained a State reputation in his double capacity of lawyer and journalist in the famous disbarment case of Steinman & Hensel. In the report of the trial of a Quarter Sessions liquor case, in January, 1880, the Intelligencer declared the acquittal of the defendant on the plea of a previous acquittal was accomplished by an imposition upon the Court, and that the judges took no cognizance of it because all of the parties implicated, as well as the judges themselves, belonged to the Republican party. Judge Patterson, then associate judge of the Courts of Lancaster county, took a rule on Messrs. Steinman & Hensel (both lawyers), editors and proprietors of the Intelligencer, to disbar them for contempt of court. It was a famous case and attracted wide attention. The lawyers' names were stricken from the roll April 3, 1880, by ruling of the lower court, but the case was appealed to the Supreme court, and was argued in the May term, 1880. The arguments made by A. K. McClure and R. E. Shapley, the defendants' counsel, were of a high order, and were widely copied. In October, the ruling of the lower court was reversed, and Steinman and Hensel were re-instated, after having been six months debarred from practice. After the restoration the former amicable relations between the court and Mr. Hensel were renewed. Mr. Hensel's ability as a practitioner is so marked and so well-known, his forensic talents so brilliant, that we need scarcely make comment upon them here. Suffice it to say that his reputation as a lawyer is second to none in the State.

In the journalistic field Mr. Hensel found work eminently suited to his keen intellectual powers and high literary tastes, having been, even as a college student, a frequent contributor to the daily papers, and as a law student continuing to edit College Days, the paper he had helped to found. As an editor of the Intelligencer he brought that paper to the front, not only as a good local newspaper and influential as an exponent of Democracy, but notably for its general literary excellence. In August, 1886, he disposed of his interest in the Intelligencer to Richard M. Reilly, Esq., and Robert Clark, A. J. Steinman continuing therewith, his interest in the paper ante-dating Mr. Hensel's by some years.

Mr. Hensel was also a contributor to many out of town newspapers notably the New York Sun, the Philadelphia Times, the New York Independent and others. In 1880 he wrote the biography of Judge Black for the Times "White House Gallery," and about the same time contributed a sketch of "Honest John" Strohm for Forney's Progress, both of which elicited high praise for their author. He also wrote, not long after, for the Philadelphia Press, some fresh reminiscences of Francis Scott Key that were intensely interesting. During the political campaign of 1884 Mr. Hensel edited and published the Post, a Democratic weekly which reached a circulation of 40,000, and which President Cleveland pronounced the best thing of its kind he ever saw. During the same year he wrote a campaign biography of Vice-President Hendricks, which was published in book form along with that of Dorsheimer's life of President Cleveland, and which was republished almost entire by the Democratic National committee as the authorized textbook of the campaign. In 1888 he was the campaign biographer of Cleveland and Thurman. He is also the author of the "Resources and Industries of Lancaster," published by the Board of Trade in 1886-87.

Mr. Hensel's acquaintance among the editorial fraternity naturally was, and is, most extensive. He was president of the Pennsylvania Editorial Association in 1882, and was re-elected in 1883. In 1878, when, as spokesman of the Ohio, Pennsylvania and Kentucky Editorial Association, he replied to the address of welcome delivered by Henry Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, he carried the people of Louisville by storm, and unlimited praise was showered upon him by the press. He was one of the founders of the Crematist, which has become the national organ of the cremation system, which he has espoused from the first. Mr. Hensel's retirement from journalism was universally regretted, and the press had many sincere and highly complimentary things to say of his career in the field. He was regarded as the most honest, able and indefatigable young editor of his day, and at the time of his withdrawal from newspaper work it was well known that a desirable and responsible position on a metropolitan paper, whose editor was one of the ablest in the country, was open for his acceptance. But Mr. Hensel had no desire to leave the scenes and associations of the place endeared to him by long residence, so the press elsewhere did not gain by Lancaster's loss.

With all the cares of journalistic work Mr. Hensel turned his attention closely to politics, in which he was long prominent. Although his father, George W. Hensel, was a Republican in political faith, the son's convictions led him to identify himself with the party of Jefferson and Jackson. The first State convention Mr. Hensel attended was the Democratic gathering at Reading, in 1872, when he was strongly for Buckalew. Becoming impressed with the dominancy of the better element in the Democratic party, he cast his fortunes with the Democracy, opposed Grant, and took the stump for Greeley. Though not yet twenty-one he made thirty enthusiastic speeches in York, Lancaster and Chester counties, and from that time continued active in politics. He was first elected chairman of the Democratic county committee of Lancaster in 1875, and harmoniously every year thereafter (except during two years of his service as State chairman) until 1887, when he declined re-election. He attended all State Conventions, and participated in all their proceedings. In 1878 he was sent as Senatorial delegate to the Pittsburg convention, becoming secretary of the committee on Contested Seats, which marked the beginning of his prominence in the Democratic party. Thereafter he became a dominant force in the conventions and affairs of his party, making entire, or in part, every Democratic platform for years, serving as chairman of important committees, making nomination speeches, and in organizing and directing the party generally. At the convention of 1882 he was enthusiastically named for Congressman at large, and would have been unanimously elected had he assented. He declined the post, and turned the tide of favor to Mortimer F. Elliott, who was chosen and elected. He was a delegate to the Democratic National Conventions of 1880, 1884, 1888 and 1892, being chairman of the Pennsylvania delegation in the last, and making one of the Cleveland nomination speeches. He was largely instrumental in compassing the splendid victory that placed Robert E. Pattison in the Governor's chair in 1882, and after that brilliant campaign, in which he had rendered such signal service to his party, he caused it to be understood that he neither desired nor would accept any office in the gift of the governor. About one hundred leading Democrats of Philadelphia and the State showed their appreciation of his services by tendering him a handsome complimentary dinner at the Commonwealth Club, Philadelphia, where the successful candidates and others prominent in Democratic circles spoke in praise of his party management.

At this time, for private and personal reasons, it was Mr. Hensel's desire to quit the field of politics, but one consideration and another, and his services seeming indispensable, he kept at the party helm for four more State campaigns, a longer time than any other one man had ever held the Democratic chairmanship of Pennsylvania. He was re-elected practically without opposition in 1883 and 1884, and in 1885 and in 1886, but declined re-election in 1887, and formed a law partnership with J. Hay Brown, now justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. In 1891 he was appointed attorney-general of the State of Pennsylvania by Governor Pattison, and his appointment was unanimously confirmed by the Republican State Senate. He held this responsible office for four years, and during an unusually busy term collected nearly $3,000,000 for the State, mainly from delinquent corporations. Among the notable cases arising from the Bardsley defalcations, he made the city of Philadelphia pay the State losses, and compelled the newspapers to refund the rebates paid by them to Bardsley. While attorney general he also prosecuted the auditor general and the State treasurer before the Senate. His career as attorney general was a brilliant and notable one, and marked by the same honesty, disinterestedness and sound judgment that distinguished him in all political affairs. It was said of him, as it is said of few aspirants in the political arena, that he had the party's good, and only and solely that, at heart. He sought office neither for himself nor friends; nor cared for personal advantage, power and patronage. Friends and foes alike have conceded his political career to have been in every sense manly and honorable.

From the year 1887 Mr. Hensel practiced law with Hon. J. Hay Brown, until that gentleman was honored with a seat on the Supreme Bench in 1899, since which time Mr. Hensel has practiced alone, maintaining the supremacy which had been attained by them jointly as practitioners of the law. This law firm was a rare combination of energy and brains, both gentlemen having been prominent and tireless in their services to their respective parties, but making politics subsidiary to the law when they formed the partnership that was to become so famous the State over. In 1898 Mr. Hensel was president of the State Bar Association, and is now vice-president of the American (or National) Bar Association.

Mr. Hensel's remarkable versatility displayed itself in belles-lettres, as a relaxation from the heavier, graver affairs of law and politics. Having a literary taste of the widest range, and being an omnivorous reader, Mr. Hensel's scholarly attainments found fruition in masterpieces of the pen. He wrote and delivered many brilliant addresses, among them being, "Some Wives of Famous Men," an able scholarly address full of wit and deep research; "The College in the Community," delivered on Founders' Day, at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., in which he pointed out some of the dangers of the mercantile—the utilitarian spirit of the age, and the inestimable value of its counteracting influence—the college; and, "The Town We Live In: What It Has, and What It Wants," a lecture delivered by invitation before the Board of Trade in 1886, and of absorbing interest to those who had the town's welfare at heart, a masterly presentation of the subject, able and exhaustive, which created wide and most favorable comment, and gave a new impetus to Lancaster's material progress. These are but a few of the addresses Mr. Hensel has delivered in his remarkable career. Orations on anniversary occasions, at colleges throughout the State and elsewhere; speeches at the Clover Club's famous banquets; treatises on farming that displayed knowledge of husbandry; speeches to the Germans, Irish and Hebrews. Indeed, his literary scope seems to have no bounds or limits, and his trenchant pen and eloquent tongue to be ever ready to add their force to the furtherance of any cause making for the advancement of his fellow men. Few men have had wider acquaintance with the prominent men of their time than Mr. Hensel has enjoyed, or had closer intimacy with them. He has numbered among his personal friends, Cleveland, Randall, Thurman, Hill, Tilden, Hendricks and nearly every Democrat in high place in the last quarter of a century.

Mr. Hensel was married years ago to Miss Emily Flinn, daughter of A. C. Flinn, of Lancaster, and one daughter, Elizabeth, was born of the union. Mrs. Hensel passed away, deeply lamented for her lovely nature, in 1882. Mr. Hensel is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

JOSEPH U. FRITCHEY, a leading contractor of Pennsylvania, having been connected with many large public enterprises, is the only surviving member of the family of children born to the late Rev. John G. Fritchey.

Mr. Fritchey was born in Mechanicsburg, Pa., June 28, 1851, and grew to manhood amid surroundings that taught the value of integrity as a component part of character. He received a good education in the common schools of the different places where the family resided, and was destined for a collegiate course. This, however, was averse to his tastes, as he early developed a desire to enter upon the active duties of life in the business world. At seventeen years of age he entered the jewelry store of Charles Gillespie, in Lancaster, and after two years with him engaged with Zahm & Jackson, who were in the same business. After applying himself with this firm diligently for four years, Mr. Fritchey resolved to start a business of his own. Locating opposite the courthouse, he conducted a jewelry business until 1879, when he sold out and accepted a position with the Meriden Silver Plate Company. After a year he became associated with the Pierpont Manufacturing Company, at New Bedford, Mass., with whom he was connected for some eighteen months, when he took a similar position with Simpson, Hall, Miller & Company, of Wallingford, Conn., for whom he traveled seven years. Mr. Fritchey then left the road and coming to Lancaster established the first successful plant there for the manufacture of umbrella handles and fancy silverware, as a member of the firm of Osborn & Fritchey. After eighteen months he sold out his interest in this concern and began the business in which he is now engaged. From the first he was successful in his new role, showing a grasp of detail contract work which few can excel, his strong point being that he carries through what he undertakes, regardless of obstacles.

Mr. Fritchey has succeeded well in life and is reputed to be wealthy. He is genial, frank and generous, which traits make him popular with his friends. From his father he inherits a strong dislike for the artificialities of life. Politically he is a staunch Republican, and delights to aid in the success of that party, but does not care for office. Fraternally Mr. Fritchey is a member of the I. O. R. M., the B. P. O. E., the Hamilton Club and the Young Men's Republican Club. He is a member and liberal supporter of the First Reformed Church of Lancaster.

On Jan. 16, 1879, in Lancaster, Mr. Fritchey was married to Alice Herr Marks, daughter of Jacob M. and Elizabeth C. (Herr) Marks, one of the city's accomplished young ladies, and who has been a large factor in the success which has attended her husband. Jacob M. Marks was for years a prominent dry-goods merchant of Lancaster, and died in April, 1882, at the age of sixty-seven years. His widow, who still resides in the city, is well preserved at the age of seventy years. They were the parents of six children, three sons and three daughters, of whom the three daughters now survive: Mrs. Fritchey; Elizabeth C., widow of Addison Fritchey; and Catherine E., wife of Rev. William Dorwart, an Episcopal clergyman, of Newport, Pennsylvania.

Mr. and Mrs. Fritchey are the parents of three children, George Marx, Elizabeth Herr and Alice Hendel. The family reside in a handsome and commodious home on the outskirts of Lancaster.

ELIAS DILLER, a retired farmer of New Holland, Pa., was born in Earl township, two miles from his present home, Oct. 11, 1827, a son of Jacob and Mary (Besore) Diller, the former a native of Earl township, and the latter of Leacock.

Jacob Diller was a farmer, but for a while before his death was living retired, making his home with his daughter, Louisa Ranck, at the time of his death, Dec. 28, 1878, at the age of seventy-six. Mrs. Jacob Diller died March 1, 1861, at the age of sixty-eight. She was a member of the Lutheran Church, and with her husband was buried in the Lutheran cemetery at New Holland. To their union were born the following children: Catharine; Elias; Mary A., who married Robert J. Knox, a resident of Intercourse, and a subject of a sketch on another page; Elizabeth, who married Henry K. Graybill March 17, 1890, and died at the age of fifty-three; and Louisa, wife of John Ranck, of New Holland, whose sketch appears in another place.

The paternal grandparents of Elias Diller were George and Mary (Eckert) Diller, farming people of Lancaster county; his maternal grandparents were Balser Besore and wife, of Lancaster county.

Elias Diller was twice married. In 1857 he wedded Lucinda Seldomridge, and to them was born one child, Harriet, who is unmarried and living at home. Mrs. Lucinda Diller was born in Leacock township, daughter of Benjamin and Harriet (Scott) Seldomridge, the former a farmer and a heavy cattle dealer (he owned two farms); she died in East Earl township in 1871, at the age of thirty-eight years. Her remains are resting in the Roland Church cemetery in Earl township. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Seldomridge were: Lucinda; Justin F., who died in Colorado Springs; Milton, deceased; Albert, deceased, of Philadelphia; Harriet Knox and Annie Tweed, who live in Philadelphia; and Savilla Atkinson, who is deceased. The second marriage of Mr. Diller was in 1875, when he married Mrs. Eliza A. (Graybill) Bare. Mrs. Diller was twice married, her first husband being Samuel Bare, who was a farmer of Lancaster county. She was born in Earl township Oct. 2, 1834, a daughter of Samuel and Maria (Miller) Graybill. Her father was a farmer, and in 1874 he located at New Holland, but was retired twenty years before his death, which occurred in October, 1879, at the age of eighty-one. He held various township offices and settled many estates. Her mother died in 1892, at the age of eighty-one. Both were buried in the cemetery connected with the United Brethren Church at New Holland, of which she was a member. Eliza Ann was their only child, and her paternal grandparents were Isaac and Nancy (Schrontz) Graybill; her maternal grandfather was Tobias Miller, whose wife's maiden name was Hurst. All were farming people of Lancaster county.

Elias Diller remained with his parents until his marriage, and then engaged in the cultivation of his father-in-law's farm until the death of that gentleman, in 1862, when he went to his father's old homestead, which he cultivated until March, 1881. That year he retired and came to New Holland, buying for $5,000 from Mrs. Anna Eby, his present brick home. Mr. Diller is a Republican. He has a pleasant family, and is prominent and thoroughly up-to-date.

JOHN ERISMAN, a retired farmer of Rapho township, was born on the same farm on which he now makes his home, Nov. 22, 1831. He is the son of Jacob and Mary (Metz) Erisman, who during their lives also resided on the present family homestead.

Jacob Erisman, the father, was born March 11, 1784, and died May 7, 1868, while Mary, his wife, was born Feb. 26, 1789, and died in 1857. Both are buried in the old Erisman cemetery adjoining part of the farm. Both parents were members of the Mennonite Church. There were born to Jacob Erisman and wife the following children: Maria, born Nov. 7, 1808, died in 1820; Elizabeth, born Feb. 4, 1811, died Sept. 1, 1893, unmarried; Anna, born March 7, 1813, died in 1898, the wife of Christian Hershey; Christian, born Feb. 2, 1816, is now retired and living in Rapho township; Jacob, born March 28, 1818, died in 1889, was a lumber merchant in Marietta, Pa.; Abraham, born Nov. 20, 1820, died in 1899, a farmer in the State of New York; Fanny, born Nov. 2, 1822, is the widow of John Becker, living near Petersburg, Pa.; Henry, born Nov. 26, 1825, unmarried, is a retired cattle and tobacco dealer, and lives with his sister, Mrs. Becker; Mary, born Oct. 9, 1829, is unmarried, and lives at Salunga, Pa.; and John, born Nov. 22, 1831, is the subject of this sketch.

The first members of the Erisman family in America were three brothers who emigrated from Switzerland, one settling at Millersville, another in Lancaster county, and the third in Rapho township.

John Erisman was married in May, 1861, at the home of the bride, in Rapho township, to Miss Fanny Strickler. To this union have been born the following children: Anna S., unmarried, and at home with her parents; Tillie S., unmarried and living at home; Mary S., unmarried, residing in Boston, Mass., and a prominent teacher in that city of music and elocution; Jacob S., a clothing merchant of Leonard, Ill., married to Miss Wolf; Lizzie, wife of Israel Witmer, of Hanover; and Frances, a school teacher in Wyoming.

Mrs. Fanny (Strickler) Erisman was born in Rapho township Aug. 2, 1832, daughter of John and Mary C. (Haverstick) Strickler, of Rapho township and Lancaster City, respectively. The father died July 12, 1877, in Mt. Joy township, after living a retired life for ten years, at the age of eighty-two years. Mrs. Strickler died April 21, 1888, at the age of seventy-nine years. They are buried in Eberly's cemetery at Mt. Joy, Pa. In life they were members of the United Brethren Church. Mr. Strickler was a man of prominence and held the office of school director for a long period. There were born to them: Fanny is the wife of John Erisman; Henry H., a grain merchant of Mt. Joy, married Miss Adeline Wycoff; John, a merchant of Lancaster city, was twice married, first to Miss Anna Gable, and second to Miss Mary Harmon; Jacob, a furniture merchant and undertaker, in Illinois, married Miss Anna Kertz; Anna died at the age of eight years; Emily, unmarried, lives at Mt. Joy; William, a furniture and dry-goods merchant at Polo, Ill., married Miss Mary Weyman; Attila is the widow of Dr. William Brookhart; and Samuel, a ranchman in the Big Horn country, Wyoming, married Miss Margaret McKenzie. Mrs. Erisman's paternal grandparents were Henry and Attila (Erisman) Strickler, of Rapho township. The grandfather was a farmer all his life and is buried on his old home. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Erisman were George and Fanny (Stricker) Haverstick, of Lancaster county, and later of Philadelphia. He was a gold and silversmith and after leaving off work retired to Lancaster county, where he died. His wife died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Strickler.

Mr. John Erisman is a prominent man in his district, and while an earnest Republican in politics has steadily refused many proffers of office at the hands of the party. In 1895 he retired from the active duties of life, and since then has occupied himself by keeping posted on current events and enjoying a well deserved rest. He is well thought of by all for his strict integrity and kindly disposition.

MILTON K. SHULTZ, of Manor township, residing one mile south of Washington borough, belongs to one of the oldest and most respected families of Lancaster county, and was born on his present homestead Oct. 23, 1841.

Isaac and Mary Ann (Keasey) Shultz, parents of Milton K., were also natives of Manor township and reared a family of eight children, born in the following order: Milton K.; Stephen K., of Manor township; Israel and Sylvester, deceased; Joseph K., lumber dealer of Manor township, whose life sketch may be found on another page; Benjamin K., whose sketch appears elsewhere; Mary Ann, wife of Henry Wertz, of Washington borough, and William K., a farmer of Manor township. Isaac Shultz was born March 7, 1815, was a cooper by trade, and worked at that business in winter; but in the spring was employed as a pilot on the Susquehanna river for lumber rafts, running down the stream from Marietta, Lancaster county, to Peach Bottom, in York county; he followed this business until it became obsolete. For fifty years Isaac Shultz was a member of the Church of God, and a greater part of this period was an elder. His wife passed away about the year 1889, and his own death occurred August 16, 1893.

Milton K. Shultz was educated in the public schools, and his boyhood days, when not at school, were passed in his father's cooper shop in the winter season, and on the river rafting, during the summer, and in the practice of the latter he early became an expert pilot. After the method of transporting timber to market had been changed, Milton K. resorted to farming, purchasing his present farm of thirty-six acres in 1889, tobacco being the principal product, together with garden produce. This farm he has improved with every possible modern convenience, and has made of it the most desirable home of its dimensions in the township.

Dec. 6, 1864, Milton K. Shultz was united in matrimony with Emma, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Poist) Collins, natives of Washington borough, and the parents of three children, namely: Amanda, who died at the age of twenty-two years; Emma, now Mrs. Shultz, and Jacob, who died in June, 1890. The father of these children was a butcher by calling and died in 1842 at the comparatively early age of thirty-seven years; his widow survived until 1875, when she expired at the age of fifty-four years.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Milton K. Shultz has been favored with seven children, of whom, however, only three survive. The births of the seven may nevertheless be recorded as having taken place in the following order: Mary E., who is the wife of Samuel Abel, a cigarmaker of Wrightsville, York county; Elmira, wife of Jacob Shultz, an employee at the rolling mill in Columbia, Lancaster county; Benjamin, still under the parental roof; and Calvin, Rosa, Ira and Warren, deceased. Milton K. Shultz and wife are likewise grandparents of eight children; of whom Jacob and Elmira Shultz are the parents of six—Theresa, Cora, Ruth, Floyd, Oneida and Beatrice; to Samuel and Mary E. Abel have been born two, Edgar S., and Milton L.

The Shultz family are consistent members of the Church of God, to the support of which they liberally contribute, and no one in the township or county is more highly respected than Milton K. Shultz and wife.

JOHN KLAUS (deceased), formerly a highly respected resident of Columbia, Lancaster county, was born in Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, Jan. 28, 1828, came to America in 1854, and died in Lancaster county May 30, 1886, his remains being interred in Mount Bethel cemetery, Columbia, Pennsylvania.

Ernest Klaus, father of the deceased gentleman whose name opens this article, was born in Hessen-Darmstadt in 1799, and to his marriage with Margaret Collenbaugh the following family were born: Wendell, Ernest, John, Philip, Jacob, Frederick, Henry and Katherine, the last named being the wife of John Hook, of Lancaster, Pa. Mrs. Margaret (Collenbaugh) Klaus was called from earth in 1845, and in 1851 Ernest Klaus and seven of his children came to Pennsylvania, direct from Germany, settling at York Furnace, York county, where he was employed as a day laborer until his death. With the exception of Jacob, a farmer in Iowa, and Mrs. John Hook, these children have all passed away. Henry, the youngest son, after serving three years in the 9th P. V. C., died of disease in Louisville, Kentucky.

In 1876 John Klaus was married, in Columbia, Pa., to Katherine Holder, who was born in Wittenberg, Germany, July 2, 1849, a daughter of Adam and Christina (Muchler) Holder, the former of whom was a farmer and died in Germany in 1884, at the age of seventy-three years. The latter died in 1886, when seventy-two years old. Mr. and Mrs. Holder were the parents of six children, viz: Rosie, married to Frederick Stoll, a farmer in Columbia, Pa.; Frederick, Mary, John and Agnes, all in Germany; and Mrs. Katherine Klaus, of Columbia. Mrs. Klaus came to America in 1873, lived three years in Marietta, Pa., and then came to her present place of residence. To the marriage of John Klaus, deceased, and Katherine Holder were born two children, Frederick and Rosa, both still residing with their mother, who is the proprietress of the very popular "Rising Sun Hotel" at Columbia.

When the late lamented John Klaus came to America, in 1854, he first located in Lancaster, where he followed his trade of shoemaker until 1857, when he came to Columbia and continued to pursue his calling until 1864. At that time he engaged in the hotel business, which he continued to follow until he died, in the faith of the Lutheran Church. He was a member of the Knights of Pythias, in politics was a Democrat, and socially was held in the highest esteem by his fellow citizens. Mrs. Klaus has rebuilt the "Rising Sun" and increased its capacity from eleven rooms to twenty-three, has introduced steam heat and and electric lights, modernized it in all other respects, and charges transient guests the modest sum of $1.50 per day. She has made the house the favorite stopping place for the traveling public, as it is quite homelike and the table is supplied with the best the market affords, while she and her assistants are ever attentive to every need of the patrons.

GEORGE HIPPEY. It is perhaps a characteristic of the solid prosperity prevailing throughout Lancaster county, that industry, integrity and thrift were the usual foundation. Among the citizens of Columbia, George Hippey, one of the best known and most highly respected residents, represents those sterling traits to a notable degree and his success in life has been commensurate with his winning qualities.

Mr. Hippey is a native of Columbia, born Sept. 15, 1837, son of William and Elizabeth (Cross) Hippey, and grandson of John and Mary (Hoff) Hippey, natives of Breslau, Germany, who migrated to America and became industrious and worthy citizens of Lancaster county. Their children were: William; John, who died suddenly on a shoal in the Susquehanna river; and Mary K., who married John Kame and died in Lancaster county from the painful injuries resulting from her clothes being accidentally set on fire.

William Hippey, the father of George, was a sturdy and conscientious resident of Columbia. He was born April 13, 1803, and in his youth was injured to honest toil. With his parents he often walked barefooted to church, and carrying their shoes with them, from Columbia to Lancaster, and worshipping on their arrival at the old Trinity Church. He was a cooper, following his trade through his active years at Columbia. He was the census enumerator there in 1850. In politics he was a Whig, and himself and wife were members of the Lutheran Church. She died of cholera at Columbia, Sept. 9, 1854, aged forty-four years, the second victim of the terrible plague during its visitation that year. William Hippey lived to a good old age, passing away June 13, 1892, aged eighty-nine years and two months. To William and Elizabeth Hippey were born the following children: Justina, wife of George Hoyer, a retired tinsmith of Harrisburg, Pa.; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Solomon Duck, of Columbia; Louisa (deceased); John, who died at Columbia; George; Henry, a brickmason of Columbia; Charles, deceased; Allen C., who died at Roanoke, Va.; Amanda (deceased), and Samuel, a brickmason of Columbia.

During his boyhood at Columbia, George Hippey worked in his father's cooper shop, remaining at home until he was twenty-two. He was employed two years in a rolling mill as a mule driver. For seven years following he was boss in an ore bank and in the Henry Clay furnace for John Q. Denney. At the expiration of that time Mr. Hippey began work for John Yeager, remaining with him seven years and thoroughly learning the butcher business. He then began the business for himself at Columbia, continuing a prosperous butcher until his retirement from active life in August, 1898.

Mr. Hippey married, April 14, 1861, at Wrightsville, Pa., Miss Rachel Hammond. Six children were born to them: James, Mary, Mary (2), Margaret, Ida and Rachel. Of these only one survives, Mary (2). She is the widow of William E. Blaine, who was born in Milton, Pa., son of George and Elizabeth Blaine, the former a retired farmer now living at Washington, D. C. For eight years William E. Blaine was employed as a nurse in a government hospital in Washington, D. C. He came to Columbia in 1891 and was, until his death (Jan. 20, 1900, at the age of thirty-eight years), employed by George Hippey, the subject of this sketch. To William E. and Mary (Hippey) Blaine were born five children, namely: George, Rachel, Eliza Lee (deceased), Margaret, and James G. (deceased).

In politics Mr. Hippey is a Republican. He is a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church, and in business and social circles is influential, and esteemed for his keen judgment and high character.

JOHN GERHART, a retired farmer of Providence township and one of its most respected residents, was born in Wallerstadten Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, Aug. 10, 1840, a son of Peter Gerhart, who died in his native land.

In 1865 John Gerhart landed in America as a poor man, with little capital except his strong arms and his industrious habits. He had received a good German education and had learned farm work, and to this he turned in the new country. Although he has labored very industriously and has been careful in the accumulation and expenditure of his means, he has no reason to regret his years of toil, as now, when he wishes to live at ease, he has the means to do so. His farm in Providence township is well improved and quite valuable, and his home in the village of Refton, to which he retired in 1901, is excellent property, while he is also the owner of other property.

Mr. Gerhart was married in Lancaster county to Miss Mary Kerner, who came to this county with her parents when but six years of age. This marriage has been blessed with one son and two daughters, namely: Emma, born Jan. 1, 1869, is the wife of Jacob L. Frank, a miller, of Refton, Pa.; Mary N., born Feb. 26, 1871, is the wife of Simon Lynes, of Providence township; and John P., born Feb. 12, 1882. In politics Mr. Gerhart favors the Democratic party, although he is not an active politician and has never cared to accept any office. With his family he belongs to the Old Mennonite Church. Mr. Gerhart and family are known in the community as honorable and upright people, and he is much respected. He is the only member of his father's family to come to America.

MARTIN Z. LINDEMUTH (deceased) was born in West Donegal township, April 9, 1819, and died in his native township, in 1883, on the old farm where he had resided thirty-seven years. He was a son of Jacob and Barbara (Ziegler) Lindemuth, farming people of East Donegal township. His father died in West Donegal township in 1876 at the age of seventy-nine years, having led a long and useful life as a farmer; his mother died in 1886 when eighty-six years old. They were members of the Lutheran and the Brinsler Dunkard Churches, respectively. The children of Jacob and Barbara Lindemuth were as follows: Martin Z.; Martha, who married John Engle; Fanny, wife of John Brenner; Barbara, wife of Christ S. Nissley; Elizabeth, wife of John Myers; Mary, wife of J. W. Nissley; Leander, who married Fannie Martin; Anna, wife of Christ Garber. Barbara and Elizabeth were twins, and all the family are dead excepting Mary.

The paternal grandparents of Martin Z. Lindemuth were Martin and Magdalene (Wolf) Lindemuth, both of Lancaster county, both belonging to old and honorable families.

Martin Z. Lindemuth was married in Lancaster, Nov. 26, 1839, to Miss Elizabeth Engle, by whom he became the father of the following family: Fanny, who married Eli Hoffman, a farmer in Kansas; Anna, unmarried and at home; Barbara, wife of Frank Bishop, of Harrisburg, Pa.; John, married to Kate Meckly, and engaged in farming in Mt. Joy township; Hiram E., who married Emma Grush, and lives in Steelton, Pa.; Mary, deceased; Susan, who married David Hoffer, a traveling salesman from Lebanon, Pa.; Elizabeth, wife of Peter Bachman, of Lebanon; Martha, who married Christ Goss, a farmer and a school teacher, of Conoy township; Solomon, deceased; Samuel, who married Fanny Stoner, and is engaged in farming on the old Engle homestead near Wild Cat station, where that important Lancaster county family was first located in this country; Sarah, unmarried and living at home; Alice, deceased; Martin, who married Annie McLanachan, and is a farmer in Mt. Joy township.

Mrs. Elizabeth (Engle) Lindemuth was born in Conoy township, Dec. 15, 1821, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Myers) Engle, natives of Lancaster and Franklin counties, respectively. Her father was a farmer, and had a long and useful life, dying in Conoy township in 1861, at the age of eighty-one years. Her mother died in 1840, at the age of fifty-three years. They were both buried in a private cemetery on their old homestead and were members of the River Brethren Church. They had the following family, all of whom are dead excepting Elizabeth, who became Mrs. Lindemuth: Jacob, Henry, Fanny, Daniel, John, Samuel, Susan (who became Mrs. John Longenecker), Elizabeth, Martha (who became Mrs. Jacob Hoffer) and Hannah (who married Peter Hoffer).

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Elizabeth Lindemuth were Jacob and Frances (Shoch) Engle, farmer people of Lancaster county, where they lived and died. Her maternal grandparents were Henry and Barbara (Brillhart) Myers, natives of Lancaster and Franklin counties, respectively.

Martin Z. Lindemuth was a life-long farmer, and made a most enviable record for himself as an honest and industrious man. When he attained his majority he left home to make his own way in the world, and by upright character, force of will, unwearied industry and strict integrity, attained a good position for himself. He was a Republican, and held the office of school director. In 1884 Mrs. Lindemuth with two daughters and a son moved into Elizabethtown, and here they have since resided. She is a member of the River Brethren Church, and her daughters of the Church of God. Mrs. Lindemuth is still living at an advanced age, and while she is delicate, she is bright and active for her years, notwithstanding the experiences through which she has passed. Her daughters are devoted to her comfort, and watch over her health and happiness with tender solicitude.

ABRAM L. SHENK. For four generations the family of Shenk has lived in the old homestead in which Abram L. Shenk was born Oct. 12, 1826. The farm was first settled by the great-grandfather of the present owner, who died at the age of ninety-seven years, and there his grandfather, Henry, and his father, Abram, were born.

Abram Shenk, Sr., was a farmer by occupation. He was a Republican in politics, and a Mennonite in religious faith. He died in 1841, at the age of forty-six. He married Anne Landis, daughter of John Landis, and she survived him for many years, dying in the spring of 1861, at the home of her son. They were the parents of six children, of whom Abram L. is the eldest. The others were: Lizzie (deceased), the wife of Jacob Lutz; Christian, a farmer of Manor township; Annie (deceased), who married Benjamin Neff; Daniel, a resident of Safe Harbor; and Mary, who died in early childhood.

Abram L. Shenk remained at home, assisting his mother in the care and management of the farm, until he reached the age of thirty, when he was married to Fannie, daughter of Peter Musser. She died in 1873, the mother of four children, namely: Lizzie, Fannie and Mary and Abram M., (twins).

Lizzie married David Dambach, and Fannie married Albert M. Stoner, both of Manor township. Mary became the wife of Samuel Rodkey, of Columbia. Abram M. lives in the old homestead, and conducts the old Shenk farm; he married Katie Rohrer, daughter of Christian Rohrer, a successful farmer.

After the death of his first wife Abram L. Shenk married Lizzie, daughter of Christian Rodkey, and to this marriage came one daughter, Martha, who is now the wife of Charles Myers, a machinist, of Columbia. Mr. Shenk continued to live in the old homestead until 1892, when he removed to his present farm, situated a half mile north of Central Manor. There he cultivates thirty-three acres, with marked success, and, despite his seventy-six years, is able to devote his entire time to farm work. He is held in high esteem by his neighbors for his many admirable qualities, and is one of the influential farmers of Lancaster county. His political and religious faiths are the same to which his father held; he upholds Republican policies, and is a member of the Mennonite Church. His old age is cheered by memories of a life well spent, and he looks forward to the future without fear.

ADAM JOHN EBERLY (deceased), late one of the most conspicuous and able members of the Bar of Lancaster, was descended from an old and well-known family of the county.

The first of the name in this section came from Switzerland, having been driven from his native land by religious persecution, the family being Mennonites. At the time they came here, Lancaster was known as Hickorytown, and consisted of but two houses. Jacob Eberly, great-grandfather of Adam J., was a farmer, and his son, Henry, grandfather of Adam J., was a miller, distiller and manufacturer of linseed oil.

Samuel Eberly was born Feb. 8, 1793, and died Jan. 29, 1876, in what was at that time a part of Elizabeth township, now Clay township, Lancaster county. He was a well known scrivener and conveyancer of Clay township, where he built a house for himself in 1832, which old homestead is still in the possession of the family. Samuel was the first recorder of Lancaster county elected under the constitution of 1837, prior to which date the office had been an appointive one, and his son Henry S. was the first treasurer of Lancaster county elected by the people under the new constitution of 1873. Samuel Eberly married Miss Catherine Wike, daughter of John Adam Wike, a farmer of Lebanon county, and four children were born of this union, two sons and two daughters, the latter of whom both died in infancy. Of the sons, Henry S., who was a merchant in Durlach, Lancaster county, served as county treasurer one term, and died in 1898.

* Adam J. Eberly, the other son, was born Jan.

9, 1840, on the old homestead at Durlach, and died Aug. 5, 1901, at his residence No. 314 West Chestnut street, Lancaster, after a brief illness of three days, the complications resulting in heart disease. His earlier education was received in the district schools, and later he took a one-year's course at Schaefferstown Academy, and then attended Franklin and Marshall College, graduating therefrom in the class of 1861. After his college graduation he spent one year at home, and commenced to read law. Taking up his residence in Lancaster, he entered the law office of the late Alexander H. Hood, and in 1864 he was admitted to practice in the county, only four persons being admitted that year, and of these Hon. Amos Mylin is the sole survivor. In 1866 Mr. Eberly was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court, and in 1867 to the District and Circuit Courts of the United States.

In 1864 Adam J. Eberly was married to Miss Mary E. Pearson, a native of Lancaster and a daughter of William and Salome (Shirk) Pearson, and five children blessed this union, four of whom are yet living: Emma E., wife of J. Harlan Landis, engaged in the U. S. postal service, and running between New York City and Pittsburg, Pa.; William J., a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, and now a member of the Lancaster Bar, practicing law in his late father's office at No. 49 E. Grand street; Elsie E., widow of Robert Reilly, formerly of Lancaster; and Robert P., who attended Franklin and Marshall Academy, Elizabethtown College, and is at present at home. In religious faith Mr. Eberly was a member of St. Paul's Reformed Church, and he was held in the highest esteem by the community at large.

In his political preferences Mr. Eberly was a stanch Republican, his time, influence and means being always given to the advancement of his party. The Republicans of the Fifth ward of Lancaster had elected him at various times to a seat in the common council, as well as to the select branch of the city councils; he was also a member of the Lancaster board of school directors. In 1883 he was elected by a handsome majority to the office of district attorney of Lancaster county, taking his seat on the first Monday in January, 1884, and discharging the duties of that responsible office with intelligence and fidelity. At the time of his death he was a director of and solicitor for the People's Trust Savings Deposit Co., and of the People's National Bank, and was president of the Union Building and Loan Association, all of Lancaster.

When the Confederate forces invaded Pennsylvania during the Civil war, Mr. Eberly was among those who enlisted for the purpose of repelling them, joining Co. I, 51st P. V. I., and doing duty along the Potomac river in the State of Maryland.

BENJAMIN SHERTZER (deceased), who was one of the representative men of Lancaster county, Pa., was born about 1818, and resided in Manor township, where he died in 1889. There were four children in the family of which Benjamin was a member, the other three being: John, deceased; Lizzie, who was married to Martin Funk; and Mary, married to Christ Herr. The father, John Shertzer, married Mary Young and died when thirty years old.

Benjamin Shertzer was but eight years of age when his father died and the lad went to make his home with Benjamin Kauffman; he worked out by the day until after his marriage, but shortly after this event he purchased a tract of twenty-eight acres in West Hempfield township; a few years later he came to Manor township and for three years lived on the Samuel Kauffman farm, then purchased a tract of eight acres and later a farm of eighty-four acres adjoining the village limits, made some valuable improvements, and there passed the remainder of his life.

Benjamin Shertzer married Elizabeth Funk, who is still living, at upwards of seventy years of age, and is a devout member of the Mennonite Church, to which her husband also belonged. To their marriage were born seven children, four of whom grew to years of maturity, namely: Mary, wife of George Henry; Elizabeth, married to Harry Graver; Jonas F.; and Benjamin F., all of Manor township.

BENJAMIN F. SHERTZER was born April 7, 1859, in Manor township, received a public school education, and remained on the home farm until the death of his father. About 1894 Benjamin F. purchased the home place, made some needed improvements, has since conducted general farming with satisfactory results and is classed among the leading agriculturists of Manor township.

On Oct. 11, 1883, Benjamin F. Shertzer married Miss Susan B. Newcomer, daughter of Rev. Jacob Newcomer, of Manor township, and this marriage has been blessed with a family of eight children, born in the following order: Annie N., Lizzie N., Amos N., Mary N., Benjamin N., Aaron N., Amanda N. and Ada N.

HENRY POWNALL, who died Feb. 9, 1901, at the early age of forty-three, was born in Sadsbury township, Lancaster county, and was a son of Henry and Deborah W. (Walker) Pownall.

Henry Pownall was married Oct. 21, 1880, to Louissa Smedley, at the home of the bride, in Fulton township. To this marriage were born: Norman J., who was killed by his horse running away, Nov. 21, 1899; Mary L., a teacher, who lives at home; Bertha A., J. Clifton, Alta D. and Chester H. are at home.

Mrs. Louissa (Smedley) Pownall was born in Fulton township, Lancaster county, the daughter of James and Adeline (Ambler) Smedley, natives of Fulton township, and of Montgomery county, respectively. Both her parents are now dead. Her father was a farmer in Fulton township, where during his active days he held the position of school director for many years, and where he passed away. He died in 1888 at the age of sixty-nine. His widow, who was born in 1818, died in 1899. Their remains rest in Penn Hill cemetery. They were members of the Society of Friends. Born to them were: Clarinda, who married Vincent S. Richards, of Little Britain township; Louissa, the wife of Mr. Pownall; Elizabeth P., who married Samuel P. Paxson, and lives on the old homestead.

Ellis and Elizabeth (Hamilton) Smedley, the grandparents of Mrs. Pownall, were farming people of Fulton township; her maternal grandparents were William and Elizabeth (Penrose) Ambler, both of Montgomery county, and settlers in Lancaster county in 1822, where they engaged in farming in Martic township.

Henry Pownall, who remained with his parents until his marriage, was born and reared a farmer, and followed that vocation all his life. For two years after his marriage, he remained on the old homestead, a portion of which he cultivated; at the end of that period he purchased his father's farm, and engaged in its tillage for the rest of his life. This farm comprised 135 acres, and still constitutes a part of the family estate.

Mrs. Pownall with her family removed to her present abode in April, 1901, locating on a farm of sixteen acres, and making a very attractive home for her family.

Henry Pownall was a farmer who made a success of his work, and stood high in the community. For some fifteen years he filled the office of school director. Both he and his wife belonged to the Society of Friends. He was politically a Republican.

SAMUEL R. MYER (deceased). For many years the Myer family has been a prominent one in the State of Pennsylvania. Though found among the humbler walks in life, a number of them have been noted as being kind neighbors, true friends, worthy Christians, and exemplary citizens. To this family the late Samuel R. Myer was an ornament, and when he died on May 6, 1876, in the forty-third year of his age, the whole community in which he lived expressed feelings of sorrow and regret. Samuel R. Myer was born in Upper Leacock township, Jan. 2, 1833. He was a son of Elder Joseph and Esther (Rohrer) Myer. Joseph Myer was a son of Jacob Myer. Jacob Myer was a son of Johan Myer, the pioneer settler of the family who came to America from Switzerland and founded the Myer family in Pennsylvania. Elder Joseph Myer died on the old homestead in Upper Leacock township in 1892, at the age of eighty-five years. His faithful wife preceded him to the eternal world two years before, in the eighty-first year of her age. Both of them were laid to rest in the old family burial ground.

For many years Joseph Myer was a leading farmer of the community, and at the time of his decease was elder of the Conestoga congregation of the German Baptist Church in Lancaster county. Elder Joseph Myer was the father of fourteen children, and we have record of John, who is a retired farmer of Ephrata township and an elder in the West Conestoga Church; Elizabeth, deceased, who was the wife of Benjamin Stauffer; Samuel R., deceased, the subject of this sketch; Daniel, a retired farmer and machinist, residing in Lancaster; Jacob, who is a retired farmer of Earl township; Moses, deceased; Maria, who married Michael Houck, living near Landis Valley; Sarah, wife of Jonathan Weaver, a farmer of Upper Leacock township; Abram, who lives on the old homestead farm; Isaac, deceased; Hettie, who is married to Elam Bushong, a farmer of Upper Leacock township; and Joseph, deceased.

Samuel R. Myer was reared on the home farm and acquired his education in the district schools. Until the age of nineteen years he assisted in the various labors on his father's estate. But his tastes ran in another direction; so in 1852 he was employed as clerk in Moses Eby's store at Intercourse, in Leacock township, Lancaster county. Several years later he moved to Bareville, and there engaged in the mercantile business until the time of his decease, May 6, 1876. He became a member of the German Baptist Church in 1864. At the age of thirty-two years, he was elected to the ministry, becoming one of the most esteemed and able ministers of the district. He was frequently asked to assist at funeral services in the neighborhood, being perhaps the only English minister among the German Baptist Brethren in that district.

On Oct. 2, 1856, he married Miss Amanda Evans, daughter of John and Eliza (Nagle) Evans. Mr. Evans was an auctioneer, and also carried on the butchering business near Neffsville, in Manheim township. Later he moved to Lancaster, where he died in 1863, at the age of sixty-four years, and was laid to rest with his wife in the Lancaster cemetery.

To John and Eliza (Nagle) Evans were born fourteen children, of whom Sarah died young; Henry also died young; Isaac (deceased) was married to Catharine Grube, and resided in Lancaster city at the time of his death; David was a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, and for a number of years superintendent of the public schools in Lancaster county; John, a retired drover in Warwick township, married Susan Grosh; Frederick (deceased) enlisted as a soldier in the Civil war; Benjamin (deceased), a prominent butcher of Manheim township, married Eliza Groff; William, a prominent retired farmer, married Elizabeth Kauffman, and now resides in Lititz, Pa.; Charlotte married John K. Stoner, a retired merchant living in Lancaster city; Anna E., unmarried, resides in Lancaster; Harrison died in infancy; Maria, deceased, was the wife of Hiram Campbell, of Neffsville.

The paternal grandparents of Amanda (Evans) Myer were residents of Lancaster county, all of Scotch-Irish extraction. Her maternal grandparents were Frederick and Charlotte Nagle, both of Lancaster county.

To Samuel R. and Amanda (Evans) Myer were born twelve children: Ella E., who married J. D. Buckwalter, and now resides in Los Angeles, Cal.; H. Alice, at home; Charlotte A., who married Martin R. Shaeffer, and now resides in Bareville, Pa.; Caleb L., who married Ida Hunchberger, and now resides in Los Angeles, Cal.; Elizabeth, a teacher in Elizabethtown College, Elizabethtown, Pa.; Anna, who married Samuel L. Miller, and now resides in Philadelphia; Joseph, who died at the age of nine months; J. Evans, who died at the age of two years; Amanda, deceased, who married C. W. Guthrie, and resided in Los Angeles, Cal.; Eva, who married W. S. Groff, and resides in Philadelphia; Sadie, living at home; Samuel R., who married Carrie Saylor, and resides in Bareville, Pennsylvania.

Miss Elizabeth Myer, one of the above named daughters of Samuel R. Myer, taught for a number of years in the public schools of Lancaster county. She is now a teacher in the college at Elizabethtown, Pa., having held this position since the establishment of the college, Nov. 15, 1900. Elizabethtown College is located in Elizabethtown, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad. The town is centrally located, being eighteen miles distant from each of four county seats, namely: Harrisburg, Lancaster, York and Lebanon, and is surrounded by one of the richest agricultural districts in the State. This college, though under the control and management of a Board of Trustees consisting of men who are members of the German Baptist Brethren Church, is open to all who desire to avail themselves of its educational advantages. In the third annual catalogue of the Elizabethtown College may be found outlines for the following courses of study: Literary Course, Teachers' Training Course, Commercial Course, and Bible Course.

The college building is a substantial brick structure, 45x90 feet, three stories above the basement. It is situated on elevated ground, commanding a magnificent view of the town, the valley and the adjacent hills, and is surrounded by a campus of about seventeen acres. The building is equipped with modern conveniences, such as electric lights, steam heat, toilet and bath rooms, and is a model in its plans and arrangements for school purposes.

JOHN B. HERR. Christian Herr, Jr., was born Oct. 2, 1808, the son of Bishop Christian Herr, of Pequea, and died Jan. 14, 1885. His entire life was spent in the vicinity of Lime Valley, and in his active years he was known as one of the leading men of the town. For some years he was engaged in the distillery business, though farming was his main occupation. Miss Susan Brockbill, who became his wife, was born in Strasburg township, Oct. 14, 1811, the daughter of John Brockbill. At the time of her death she lacked but twenty-five days of being seventy-six years old. Both she and her husband were members of the Old Mennonite Church. They were the parents of five children: John B., born Nov. 10, 1834; an infant, born March 14, 1837; Levi B., born Jan. 14, 1838, a well driller in Strasburg township; Christian, Jr., born Sept. 22, 1840, who lives in Lancaster; Eliza Ann, the widow of Eby Hershey, lives in Strasburg township.

John B. Herr was born on a farm adjoining that he now owns and occupies, and was educated in the district school. His marriage occurred Oct. 21, 1856, after which he located on the farm where he is found at the present time. It comprises 120 acres, and lies a mile south of Lampeter. The original farm buildings, still standing, were greatly remodeled by Mr. Herr, and in 1879 he put up a thoroughly modern brick residence. For eighteen years Mr. Herr has sought to retire from active business life, but his energies have been too great to permit it. So he is constantly on the move, and, notwithstanding his advanced years, is ready to help wherever he can. Mr. Herr owns a second farm of forty-three acres in West Lampeter.

John B. Herr was married to Fannie, a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Herr) Hess, of Pequea township, who was born Dec. 9, 1836. To this union have come seven children. (1) Christian H., born Sept. 18, 1857, resides on the homestead, and is married to Amanda, a daughter of Daniel Book, of West Lampeter township, by whom he has had the following family: Ada F., Henry B., Roy D., Christian, Amanda, Walter, Ira, Mary, Clarence and Maud. (2) Henry B., born July 21, 1859, married Barbara Harnish, by whom he had six children, John B., Anna M., Bertha, Mary, Cora and Victor. They live on part of the homestead, and Henry B. Herr has always taken a lively interest in Sunday-school from the time he attended the school conducted by his father; he was the founder of the Lampeter Bible and Music School, and through his efforts the church edifice at Lampeter was erected, where ministers of all creeds have a free pulpit. Henry B. is the superintendent of the Sunday-school and is also chorister. His work is regarded as of a high grade, and deserving of much consideration by the community. (3) Milton F., born March 24, 1861, died March 31, 1864. (4) Lizzie N., born Jan. 9, 1864, married Samuel E. Rauck, of Intercourse, by whom she has had three children, Carrie, David and Bertha. (5) Susan I., born May 19, 1866, died Jan. 11, 1873. (6) John L., born Jan. 23, 1869, died Feb. 12, 1873. (7) Anna M., born Aug. 26, 1872, is the wife of B. D. Groff, of West Lampeter township, and is the mother of Lizzie, John and Fannie.

Mr. and Mrs. Herr are both members of the Mennonite Church, as are all the children and their families. He was the first Sunday-school superintendent of the Mennonite Church of Lancaster county, holding his position for twenty-three years under Bishop Benjamin Herr and the Rev. Amos Herr. Mr. Herr has assisted in the organization of many Sunday-schools, and has visited freely outside schools that he might gain information to use in his own work. He is a man who has done much good in his day, and is much respected by a large circle of friends.

WILLIAM AUGUSTUS HEITSHU, residing at No. 512 East King street, Lancaster, is a descendant in the fourth generation of Jacob Heidschuh (as the name was originally spelled), who was born in the Palatinate, and emigrated to this country in 1728 [Col. Rec., Vol. XVII, Second Series, p. 15], reaching Philadelphia after a voyage lasting from June 15th to August 19th. Jacob Heidschuh, together with others of his fellow immigrants, located in Loudoun county, Va., where he bought land and engaged in farming. He died at that place in 1775, leaving three sons, Jacob, Nicholas and Philip, and one daughter, Elizabeth. Philip, the youngest son, soon after his father's death, moved to Reading, Pa., to live with an uncle located there, with whom he learned the trade of hatter. In 1784 he was married to Catharine, daughter of Philip Rupert, who at that time lived in Reading, but who later moved to Sunbury, Pa. In 1798 Philip Heitshu removed to New Holland, Lancaster county, where he resided until 1806, when he came to Lancaster and opened a hat factory, which business he continued until, in 1827, he retired from trade, the business being continued by his sons William and Daniel. He died in 1846, at the age of eighty-two, his wife dying four years previously. His children were: William; Daniel; Elizabeth; Mary, wife of Daniel Keller; Catharine, wife of James Russel; Sarah, wife of Jacob Kurtz; Margaret; Sybilla; and Henrietta, wife of Samuel Dorwart.

Daniel Heitshu was born in 1798, at New Holland, Lancaster county, where his father, Philip, then resided. As already stated, he, in conjunction with his brother, William, succeeded his father in business, and after William's retirement he conducted the factory until 1856. In 1831 he married Elizabeth, daughter of George Weitzel, of Lancaster, and their children were William Augustus, whose name opens this sketch; John, a farmer at Dover, Del.; Samuel, a wholesale druggist at Portland, Oregon; and Harriet, residing at No. 30 North Lime street, Lancaster.

William Augustus Heitshu, son of Daniel, was born in Lancaster city Aug. 20, 1833. He was educated in the schools of that place, always noted for their excellence, and there learned the hatter's trade in his father's establishment. From 1856 to 1867 he carried on business at No. 21 North Queen street. He then went to Philadelphia, and engaged in the same business for a period of seven years. Later he removed to Brooklyn, continuing in trade in that city, and in 1883 returning to Lancaster, where he has since resided. Although not actively engaged in business in recent years, Mr. Heitshu continues to be what he always has been, a very busy man. The management of his estate, and the exactions of the various charitable, educational and other organizations with which he has long been connected, have made large demands upon his time, and have afforded him a broad field for the display of his well-known executive abilities. He has contributed not a little to the advancement and improvement of his native city by the erection of superior dwelling-houses for its rapidly growing population. His wide experience in that direction led to his being chosen the treasurer of the building fund for the erection of the just completed palatial Young Men's Christian Association building, the burden of which work largely devolved upon him, and was most efficiently discharged. He is, at the present time, an active member of the building committee engaged in the erection of the new Reformed Church at the corner of North Duke and Orange streets. He is also connected with the management of the Lancaster General Hospital, and has been untiring in his efforts in behalf of that excellent institution. Mr. Heitshu has for some years been president of the Mechanics' Library Association of Lancaster city, and has served at various times as treasurer of numerous associations and organizations, and is at the present time a member of the board of directors of the West End Building & Loan Association.

So generally is Mr. Heitshu's faithful and unselfish work in every worthy public cause recognized, that he is always among the first to be placed in management. Yet, his natural disposition is to keep in the background, rather than to make himself prominent so that only those associated with him are aware of the extent and value of his good work in every cause that has for its purpose the benefit and uplifting of the community. In his quiet and unostentatious way, he has done much more than many whose deeds sound louder in the trumpet of fame. In his religious affiliations he adheres to the Reformed Church, the church of his fathers, and has for many years held the office of elder in St. Paul's Reformed congregation.

Mr. Heitshu responded to his country's call during the war of the Rebellion, going to the front as a member of the 122d Regiment, Pa. Vols., and taking part in the battles of Fredericksburg, Chantilly and Chancellorsville.

In 1863 Mr. Heitshu was married to Mary, daughter of Christopher Geiger, a well-known ironmaster in this county. She is descended from one of three brothers named Geiger who came to America from Germany and settled at Gibraltar, Berks county. Of these, Anthony Geiger bought a tract of land from John, Richard and Thomas Penn. That he reached Berks county at least as early as 1735 is shown by a land warrant issued to him in that year.

Christopher Geiger, son of Anthony, was born in 1720, married Mary Robeson, and died in 1805.

Elisha Geiger, son of Christopher, was born in 1776. He married Mary Jones, daughter of Thomas Jones, Jr., and died in 1821, leaving two sons, Christopher and Elisha, and several daughters.

Mrs. Heitshu's father, Christopher Geiger, together with Philip and Samuel Small, of York county, Pa., in 1840 built Manor furnace, in York county, Pa. Later, in 1846, he, in partnership with the Small brothers and Edward and Joseph Patterson, of Baltimore, the brothers of Jerome Bonaparte's wife, built the Ashland furnace in Baltimore county, Md. Still later, in 1884, Mr. Geiger built the Sarah furnace, in Harford county, Md., which he operated.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Heitshu has been blessed with the following offspring: Samuel Parke, who is connected with the engineering corps of the Pennsylvania Railroad; William Augustus, Jr., at present a student at Cornell University; and three others, now deceased.

Mrs. Heitshu, like her husband, has for many years been prominent in the community for her many good works. She was for years president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Lancaster, and a member of the board of managers of the Young Women's Christian Association, and, also, a member of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Young Men's Christian Association. For the past six years she has been one of the lady managers of the Home for Friendless Children. She is active and aggressive in all the duties that fall to her lot in the various schemes of benevolence that enlist her sympathies and assistance. Although reared in the Presbyterian faith, she has united herself with St. Paul's Reformed Church, in which she is known as a strong and active worker in all the various organizations connected with the church. A woman of vigorous intellect, and an able debater, she is frequently heard in Reformed Church and other assemblies.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Heitshu are descended from sturdy Revolutionary ancestry. John Paul Weitzel, the great-grandfather of Elizabeth Weitzel, Mr. Heitshu's mother, was a native of Switzerland, and came to America in 1742, his son Paul, a lad of seventeen years, accompanying him. John Paul was a baker, and young Paul learned the trade with his father, carrying on the business after the latter's death. He was an active business man, and took much interest in the affairs of his adopted city. He was one of the founders of the Julianna Library, and built the first three-story house in Lancaster. At the breaking out of the Revolution, he became an active supporter of the cause of the Colonies. Six of his sons were at one time in the patriot army; John, as a colonel; Paul and Casper, as captains; Jacob, as a lieutenant; while John Paul, a private, was killed in the battle at Hackensack, N. J., and Philip went with the patriot forces to the Carolinas and was reported missing after one of the engagements there. Lieut. Jacob Weitzel was a member of the Order of the Cincinnati, and Mr. Heitshu has his original certificate of membership, dated Oct. 31, 1785, bearing the signatures of George Washington as president, and John Knox, as secretary, hanging in his library. Paul Weitzel also had one daughter, Charlotte, who was married to Jacob Johns.

Philip Rupert, the father of Catharine, wife of Philip Heitshu, grandfather of William A., was also a German immigrant, coming to this country in 1754, and locating in Reading Pa. He enlisted in the British army during the French and Indian war, and saw four years' active service against the French in Canada. When the trouble between the Mother Country and the Colonies broke out he gave his adherence to the cause of the latter. As a lieutenant he was present with the patriot forces at the capture of the Hessians at Trenton, and also at the battle of Princeton. He was wounded at the battle of Brandywine, and closed his long and patriotic career at Catawissa, Pa., in 1827, in his ninety-second year.

Along maternal lines, the ancestors of Mrs. Mary (Geiger) Heitshu, the Smiths and Parkes, were of sturdy Revolutionary stock. James and John Smith, brothers, came to America from Scotland, bringing with them their sister Mary, who was the grandmother of Robert Fulton. Col. Robert Smith, her direct ancestor, was born on the voyage across the Atlantic. For a period of nine years he was the chief executive of Chester county. In 1775 the Executive Committee, a Colonial body, gave him a vote of thanks for his efficient services. Rev. Thomas Jones, ancestor of Mary Jones Geiger, mentioned above, was a native of South Wales. He came to America with two sons, Rev. Samuel and Thomas, Jr., in 1727. The latter settled down to a farmer's life near Sinking Springs, Berks county, and the lands then purchased by him are still in the family name. During the Revolutionary struggle he served as a major in the Pennsylvania Line, and also in various civil capacities. In those days Pennsylvania was a slave-holding State, and slaves were kept on the Jones estate. Some thirty years ago Mrs. Heitshu saw one of these ex-slaves, the last survivor of her great-grandfather's lot, who had lived to reach a great age.

Mrs. Heitshu's ancestors in the Parke line came from Ireland, in 1720, and settled at what is now Parkesburg, Chester county, that town being named for them. Arthur Parke, the founder of the family in this country, came from County Donegal, bringing with him his wife, Mary, and their four children: Joseph, John, Samuel and a daughter, the wife of William Noblett. They were well-to-do, and took up several large tracts of land. Joseph Parke, the direct ancestor, acquired a large portion of that property. He died July 28, 1787, aged eighty-one years; his wife, Elizabeth, survived him thirty-seven years, dying May 21, 1824. Their children were Arthur, Joseph, John William, Mary, Elizabeth, Jane, Daniel and Samuel. The family were Presbyterians, and gave that church five ruling elders in as many successive generations, and four clergymen, one of whom was Rev. Samuel Parke, Mrs. Heitshu's grandfather. As an example of the persistency of family characteristics along the line of ancestral occupations, faiths and professions, it may be stated that Samuel Parke, just mentioned, married Martha Grier, daughter of Rev. Nathan Grier, one of the early Presbyterian preachers of Brandywine Manor, and whose two sons, John N. C., of Brandywine, and Robert, of Gettysburg, and two sons-in-law were clergymen. The old Octoraro Presbyterian Church, near Parkesburg, was organized in 1720, and the first Arthur Parke was an elder there; another Arthur Parke, a direct descendant, is an elder there today. For 175 years there has never been wanting a Parke on the board of elders of that church. Mrs. Heitshu has in her possession two of the "tokens," as they were called, which were distributed at communion in those early days in Presbyterian Churches to those thought worthy to partake of this sacrament. They are made of lead, and somewhat resemble worn coin. One of these has stamped on it the letters U. O., meaning the Upper Octoraro Church; the other S. R., meaning Slate Ridge, the church where her grandfather preached for more than forty years.

A direct descendant from two lines of Revolutionary sires, Mr. Heitshu has naturally gravitated into the patriotic order of the Pennsylvania Society of the Sons of the Revolution, as has also his son, Samuel Parke Heitshu. Mrs. Heitshu's claim to membership in the order of Daughters of the American Revolution comes through three distinct lines of ancestry, a somewhat unusual occurrence. She is a member of the Donegal Chapter, and has been prominent in its general affairs and management for a number of years, and her voice is frequently heard when the good of the order calls for active participation in the deliberations.

HENRY KURTZ BAUMGARDNER, one of Lancaster's most prominent citizens, and a leading coal and lumber dealer, comes of an old settled family of the State.

Leonard Baumgardner, his great-grandfather, was a Hessian soldier in the pay of Great Britain during the Revolutionary war in this country, but deserted his colors and fought under Washington. The war ended, he settled in York, Pa., and there passed the rest of his days, dying at the age of seventy-nine years.

Thomas Baumgardner, son of Leonard, was a prosperous and well-to-do farmer and hatter of York, who died in 1872. He married a Miss Raymond and became the father of nine children.

Henry Baumgardner, youngest in the above mentioned family of children, was born in York in 1821. He acquired his education in the public schools and in a college at Gettysburg, Pa. Having inherited a commercial instinct from his father, he chose a business life, and came to Lancaster, where, associated with his brother Thomas, he engaged in the dry goods business. Their store was on the site at present occupied by Hirsh & Bro., and they met with great success. In 1852 Thomas retired, but Henry continued in the dry goods business, and was soon one of the leaders in that line in the city. He was connected with various other enterprises in the city, and his name is still associated with the coal trade, so great a success did he make in that line. For years he was president of the Reading Gas Co., which he helped to organize. He was one of the founders of the First National Bank, in which he was a stockholder and a director, and he was also a director in the Lancaster Trust Co. He was connected with the Hubley Manufacturing Co. and the Lancaster Construction Co. These concerns were all in Lancaster, but his interests were not bounded by his home county, and he was interested in the concrete paving company, Filbert & Co., of Philadelphia, and for ten years he operated large cordage works in Beverly, New Jersey.

Politically, Henry Baumgardner was a Republican, and served on the school board and in the city council. In his religious belief he was a Lutheran, and belonged to St. John's congregation. He was a liberal contributor to the charitable enterprises of all denominations, and a firm believer in the work of the Y. M. C. A. Fraternally, he was a Mason, uniting with the order in 1852, and becoming Worshipful Master of Lodge No. 43, A. Y. M., in 1858 and 1864. He helped to organize Lamberton Lodge, and for ten years was its treasurer. From 1875 to 1880 he was district deputy grand master.

In 1846 Henry Baumgardner was united in marriage with Anna Louisa Kurtz, by whom he had children as follows: One that died in infancy; Thomas, who died in infancy; Clara, wife of Rev. Rufus W. Hufford, D. D., of Reading; Henry Kurtz; Anna Mary, who married J. F. Cross, of East Orange, N. J. The mother died Nov. 22, 1875. For his second wife Mr. Baumgardner married Mary Salina Prosser, widow of Jay Caldwell. Mourned not alone by his family but by a wide circle of acquaintances, who esteemed him for his many virtues, Henry Baumgardner entered into rest May 30, 1898.

Henry Kurtz Baumgardner, the subject proper of these lines, was born Jan. 29, 1851, in Lancaster, Pa., and received his education in part at the public schools of the city, in part at Franklin and Marshall Academy. On concluding his studies he removed to Beverly, N. J., where he became associated with Baumgardner, Woodward & Co., in an extensive rope and cordage factory, his connection with that firm extending to the long period of twenty-one years, at the end of which time, the plant having been sold to the National Cordage Co., of New York, Mr. Baumgardner returned to Lancaster. Here, in the fall of 1888, he entered into partnership with his father-in-law, B. B. Martin, in the coal and lumber trade, under the firm name of B. B. Martin & Co. On Jan. 1, 1902, the firm of B. B. Martin & Co. was incorporated into a stock company, called the B. B. Martin Co., and Mr. Baumgardner became its president and treasurer, he owning the controlling interest. In August, 1891, Mr.

Martin died, leaving Mr. Baumgardner sole proprietor of the business, which is one of the most extensive of its kind in the city. In the latter part of 1900 he erected a new office building on North Charlotte street, one of the finest and most commodious coal and lumber offices in the city. Our subject in politics is a Republican.

In 1877 Mr. Baumgardner was married to Miss Lilly Elizabeth Martin, daughter of the late B. B. Martin, in his day one of the best known and most influential men in Lancaster, one of whom it may be said was the pioneer in the erecting of elegant suburban homes in the West End of the city, a section he helped in a marked degree to develop. Mr. Baumgardner is identified with St. John's Lutheran Church, being a member of the church council, and for some years served as superintendent of the Sunday-school. Fraternally he is affiliated with Lamberton Lodge, No. 407 F. & A. M. He is treasurer of and stockholder in the Hubley Manufacturing Co., and an active member of the Lancaster Board of Trade. He is justly regarded as one of Lancaster's influential citizens, and is popular alike in business, church and social circles.

CHRISTIAN G. SHERK. Among the prominent and successful agriculturists of Mt. Joy township is Christian G. Sherk, a well-known citizen, and also an old soldier of the Civil war.

Mr. Sherk was born in West Hempfield township, Oct. 25, 1841, a son of John R. and Catherine (Gochenauer) Sherk, the former of West Hempfield township, and the latter a native of Lancaster county. The father died in West Hempfield, where he was a farmer and a school director for a number of years, his death occurring in 1868, at the age of fifty-three; the mother only lived to be thirty-five, her death occurring in 1852. They were buried in the Sherk burying ground, a private family cemetery. They were members of the Old Mennonite Church and lived up to the belief of that organization, in peace and charity with all men. Their children were: Martha, who died when young; Sarah A., deceased; Christian G.; Mary A., who married M. L. Greider, of Mt. Joy; Emanuel S., who died in 1878, at the age of thirty-three; Elizabeth, who married Dr. G. W. Bernheisel, of Columbia, Pa.; Elias, who died in infancy; and Elias (2), who also died in infancy.

The paternal grandparents of Mr. Sherk, were Christian and Magdelina (Rohrer) Sherk, who were married in 1807, in West Hempfield township, where he was a man of wealth and owned large tracts of land. The great-grandfather was Joseph Sherk, born in 1734, who married in 1755, Susan Strickler. The maternal grandparents were Henry and Elizabeth (Rohrer) Gochenauer, of Lancaster county, the former of whom married Elizabeth Reigle for his second wife.

Christian G. Sherk was reared on the farm and early became well instructed in the practical management of a large estate; when he was about sixteen years old, however, he accompanied his parents to Mt. Joy, where they remained from 1856 to 1865. He enlisted, Sept. 20, 1861, in Co. C, 77th P. V. I., under Col. S. C. Stumbaugh, and was discharged Oct. 11, 1864.

After the return of his father to the farm, Christian remained with him for several years, but then moved to a farm of his own, in West Hempfield township, engaging there in general farming for five years; in 1872 he returned to Mt. Joy. There he again resumed farming and for a few months conducted a butchering business, but later confined himself exclusively to looking after his agricultural interests.

Mr. Sherk was united in marriage in Lancaster county, on Nov. 2, 1865, to Elmira E. Detwiler, who was born on her old family homestead, a daughter of Joseph Detwiler, of Mt. Joy. Two daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sherk: Anna, who married Dr. Samuel S. P. Lytle, a dentist of Mt. Joy, Pa.; and Lucy, who died young. Mr. Sherk votes independently, as his judgment directs, is a consistent member of the U. B. Church; for twelve years has been an efficient school director in Mt. Joy borough, and is a man who enjoys the respect and esteem of the community.

MAJOR BENJAMIN FRANKLIN BRENE-MAN, of the well-known firm of Flinn & Breneman, leading house furnishers, Lancaster, is, by virtue of his exalted business position and his social qualities and functions, well entitled to prominent mention in this work.

Melchoir Breneman, the first of the family in this country, came from Switzerland, landing Sept. 17, 1717, in Pennsylvania. Here he took up a grant of 700 acres of land from the Penns, this land lying just south of Lancaster, on both sides of Mill creek. Subsequently he took up two other grants of land of 90 and 125 acres, respectively. Major Breneman's descent from Melchoir is through Adam, Henry, Henry (2) (who was a Mennonite preacher as well as a farmer), and Benjamin, the last named being the Major's father.

Benjamin Breneman, who was a prosperous merchant of Camargo, this county, married Susan, daughter of Christian Herr, one of the largest landowners and most prominent citizens of the southwestern part of Pennsylvania, whose landed estates were located in East Lampeter township, this county. Some of these ancestral acres near Strasburg are still in the possession of Major Breneman, being a legacy from his mother. Christian Herr married a daughter of Capt. John Withers, of Revolutionary fame, the latter having been one of the three sons born to Augustine Wither (as the name was then spelled). These three sons, Michael, John and George, were prominent in the Revolution. Michael Withers was a manufacturer of firearms in Lampeter township. His muskets and rifles were celebrated, and were used by the soldiers of the Revolutionary war. He was elected a member of the Committee of Correspondence from Strasburg township Nov. 22, 1774. Capt. John Withers was born Dec. 24, 1729, and died Dec. 24, 1813. In the business world the three brothers were also prominent as men of wealth and enterprise, owning a large body of land. They built the Sadsbury forges in 1800; Mt. Eden furnace, which went into blast in 1809; and Conowingo furnace, in Drumore township, in 1810.

To Benjamin and Susan (Herr) Breneman were born three sons and one daughter, the latter of whom died in childhood. The sons were: Christian H., at one time a member of the firm of F. Shroder & Co., proprietors of the Conestoga Cotton Mills; Henry H., who was in the wall-paper business in Cincinnati; and Benjamin Franklin.

Major Benjamin F. Breneman was born in Camargo, Lancaster Co., Pa., and received his education in the district schools of the locality of his birth, and at the Strasburg Academy. His first employment was as a clerk in the dry-goods establishment of the late R. E. Fahnestock, of Lancaster, after which he became associated with his brother in the Camargo Mfg. Co., whose paper-mill was located at Camargo. Associated with one of his brothers, he then established a branch business in Cincinnati. Thence, after conducting that concern some four or five years, the Major removed to St. Louis, and for a time engaged in the cotton business in that city. Returning, however, to Cincinnati, he concluded, after a brief sojourn there, to engage in business in New York, and accordingly betook himself thither, and spent a year on Wall street. From New York he came to Lancaster and in 1868 entered into partnership with the late A. C. Flinn, in the stove and heating business, under the firm name of Flinn & Breneman. In 1880 Major Breneman sold his interest in the business to George B. Willson, and spent a year or more in foreign travel; then returning to Lancaster, he bought back his interest from Mr. Willson, and the firm has since continued as Flinn & Breneman. In 1895 the Major took another trip to Europe, and brought back many souvenirs of his visit, besides delightful and entertaining experiences.

At all times an ardent and active Republican, Major Breneman has, nevertheless, neither sought nor accepted public office. At one time he was president of the Lancaster Board of Trade, and assisted in the organization of two such boards in that city. In religious faith he is a member of St. James Episcopal Church, at Lancaster, and was a vestryman in same for a number of years. Socially he has been president of the Hamilton Club since its organization, twelve years ago, having been one of its incorporators. He was the seventh president of the famous Five O'clock Club, of Philadelphia, and is still a member of same; an interesting sketch of his life, together with a portrait of him, appears in the history of that club, published some years ago. The Major has been a member of the Union League Club of Philadelphia for twenty-five years; was one of the original members of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia; and one of the original members of the old Masonic Club of that city, which club has passed out of existence. For years he was a director of the Lancaster Fire Insurance Company; was one of the organizers of the Lancaster Mfg. Co.; was a director of the Lancaster & Quarryville Railroad; was a promoter of and stockholder in the "Stevens House" Company of Lancaster; was a director and president of the Lancaster Watch Company; a director of the Pennsylvania Traction Company; interested in the New Holland Railway, and a director of the New Holland & Lancaster Traction Company; is interested in the traction companies of Lancaster generally; and, in fact, for the past twenty years, has been identified with every movement tending to the advancement and improvement of the city and its people.

If, however, the Major is more prominent in one direction than in another, it is in Masonry, and from The Keystone, a Masonic publication, we glean the following:

Eminent Sir B. Frank Breneman was made a Mason on May 12, 1869, in Lodge No. 43, in Lancaster, Pa., and elected W. M. of the lodge on Dec. 10, 1873. On April 27, 1870, he received the capitular degrees in R. A. Chapter, No. 43, and was elected M. E. High Priest, Dec. 22, 1875. He received the Cryptic degrees in Goodwin Council, No. 10, June 1, 1870, and the degrees of Order of the Red Cross and of the Temple in Lancaster Commandery, No. 13, stationed at Lancaster, April 28, 1874. Sir Breneman was elected Eminent Commander of Lancaster Commandery on April 29, 1875. After having served as Grand Sword Bearer from 1878 to 1882, Major Breneman, on June 12, 1882, was elected R. E. Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar, of Pennsylvania, which distinguished station he held with honor to himself. During his administration occurred, on Oct. 26, 1882, the grand Templar display in connection with the Bi-Centennial celebration of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. On this occasion R. E. Sir Breneman displayed great energy and ability in the conduct of the Templar pageant, and has just cause to feel proud of the eminent success of the Templar day, which was universally acknowledged to have been the day of the Bi-Centennial Celebration.

Major Breneman was also District Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, from 1880 to 1882. The eminent service that Major Breneman has rendered Freemasonry in its Ancient Craft, Capitular and Templar branches entitles him to the praise of a devoted and earnest craftsman.

Major Breneman earns his title through having been an ordnance officer on the staff of Gen. Frank Reed, of the National Guard. His home, a delightful and commodious residence, stands at the corner of East Orange and Lime streets, Lancaster, and there also reside his brother's widow, Mrs. Louisa A. Breneman, and her only daughter, the wife of Leon Von Ossko, an artist of considerable repute, whose work has attracted marked attention in New York and other art centers.

JACOB WISE, a general farmer of Salisbury township, was born Oct. 11, 1839, in Leacock township, son of Michael and Maria (Miller) Wise, the former of Upper Leacock and the latter of West Earl township.

Michael Wise was a blacksmith by trade and worked at this during his early life, but later became a farmer; prior to his death, he removed into the village of Gap, where he died in 1887, at the age of eighty years. His widow lived until 1892, dying at the age of seventy-seven years. Both parents were interred in the cemetery at Gap, and both had been consistent members of the Presbyterian Church. Their children were as follows: Mary A., deceased wife of Amos Townsend; George, a resident of Braddock, Pa.; Jacob; Henry, Isaac and Reuben, deceased; Sarah, who married Edmond McCachren, of Philadelphia; Harriet, who married Elias McCachren, of Columbia; Levi, a farmer and blacksmith at Gap, Pa.; Susannah, deceased wife of Christian Shank; Michael, of Cochranville; John, deceased; Adam, a farmer of Salisbury township; and Clara, married to August Henness, of Atglen, Pa. The paternal grandfather was Jacob Wise, a carpenter of Leacock township; and the maternal grandfather was George Miller, also a carpenter in Lancaster county.

Jacob Wise remained assisting his father on the farm until he reached his legal majority. He became interested in the threshing business and followed it for three years in partnership with his brother George. His first farm was that known as the Frantz place, in Salisbury township, where he worked for one year very successfully. The following year he alternated according to the season, between the fish and the threshing business, and then purchased an adjoining farm and operated that for eighteen years. After buying the present fine farm, he moved his residence to it and now carries on the work of both. Few men are better posted as to agricultural matters than Mr. Wise. The best years of his life have been devoted to this work and he is generally regarded as a very excellent farmer. In politics he has been a lifelong Democrat. With his family he belongs to the Presbyterian Church, to which he is a liberal contributor.

In September, 1862, in Lancaster, Mr. Wise was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Ann McNeal, who was born in Sunflower, Bart township, in 1843, a sister of Samuel McNeal, of Salisbury township. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wise were the following: Thomas M., a farmer in Chester county, who married Lucinda Futer, and has eight children; Mary R., who married George H. Stern, in the creamery business in Chester county, and who has two children; Catherine M., who married Rev. H. F. McNelly, a minister in the United Brethren Church at Pottstown, and has two children; William W., in the creamery business in Chester county; Charles H., a farmer in Salisbury township, who married Mary Rissel, and has two children; Edmund McC., a farmer in Salisbury township, who married Hannah Henry and has one child; John M., at home; Cora J., who married Leonard Pickel, a farmer in Chester county, and has one child; Jacob P., a moulder at Pottstown; and George P., Ida M. and Samuel P., at home.

The family is one that is most highly respected in Salisbury township, where it is prominent in social life. Mr. Wise is one of the reliable citizens who are representative men.

JAMES MITCHELL JENKS, the senior member of the well-known firm of J. M. Jenks & Co., manufacturing jewelers, located at the corner of Queen street and Centre Square, is one of the leading men in the commercial life of Lancaster, as well as one of the most popular in social circles.

The founder of the Jenks family in America was Lady Jenks, who came to Pennsylvania from England in company with the Penns, locating in Philadelphia. Of the same religious belief as were the Penns, she wished to have religious liberty and resolved to make her home in the goodly land to which they had come. All of the tract now occupied by Kensington, Philadelphia, was ceded to the son of Lady Jenks, by the Penns. Other illustrious names appear in the ancestry of James Mitchell Jenks, as his maternal grandmother, was a Miss Stockton, a cousin of Commodore Stockton, and his grandfather was Daniel Trimble Jenks, who settled in Bucks county and established, at Newtown, a woolen mill. This property passed out of the possession of the family as late as 1897, at the death of the grandmother of Mr. Jenks, she having lived to the unusual age of ninety-three.

Abraham Stockton Jenks, the father of James Mitchell Jenks, was for many years a member of the prominent Philadelphia wholesale dry-goods firm of Harper & Jenks, and for twenty-nine years was connected with the board of education from the First district of Philadelphia. His death occurred several years ago, and he was a man universally respected and beloved. His wife, who had been Miss Rosanna Montgomery, a daughter of Hillman Montgomery, a linen worker, from the north of Ireland, who settled in New Jersey, survived him for a time. Three children were born to this union: Daniel Trimble and Mary Stockton, both of whom have passed away; and James Mitchell, of Lancaster.

James M. Jenks was born in Philadelphia, March 25, 1849, and was educated in the public schools of that city until he reached the age of thirteen, when an adventurous spirit took him to Colorado, and there he was engaged by Wells, Fargo & Co., as a stage driver, freighting on the Plains for four years, during which time the lad developed both physically and mentally. He returned to the East in the fall of 1869, and soon after he connected himself with the firm of Warn Bros., at No. 712 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, in the jewelry trade, and remained with that firm for nine years, as buyer and as traveling salesman. His next business connection was with a New York City jewelry commission house, with which he remained six years, coming then to Lancaster. Here he was engaged as traveling salesman for the great manufacturing jewelry house of Zahm, and for the past nineteen years has been connected with it, buying the business in March, 1899, and changing its name to the present firm title of J. M. Jenks & Co.

For thirty-five years, Mr. Jenks has made periodical trips through the country from New York to San Francisco, supplying jewelry to an immense trade. The Zahm plant was offered for sale by Mrs. Clara Zahm, and when, on March 18, 1899, Mr. Jenks became its owner, he associated with him in the business, Louis Sondheimer as partner, and since that time the business has increased and become known all over the world. The specialty of this house is Masonic and other fraternity marks, but it also does a general jewelry making business, there being absolutely nothing that can be manufactured out of gold that it does not make. To be the head of a great business like this requires great good judgment and an intimate knowledge in many connecting lines, and that Mr. Jenks is thoroughly qualified is proved by his prosperity.

In 1876 Mr. Jenks was married to Miss Rosa Hughes, daughter of Arthur Hughes, of Southwark, Philadelphia, and one daughter, Mary Stockton, has been born to this union. Mr. Jenks is a thirty-second degree Mason, and in politics is a stalwart Republican. As an agreeable member of social circles, he is highly valued, his constant travel having given him a fund of anecdote, and a broad and liberal tone that make of him one of the most desirable companions and delightful hosts.

JACOB C. FORREY, an extensive farmer and well-known citizen of Manor township, Lancaster county, Pa., who lives on his homestead of 132 acres one mile and a half south of Mountville, was born in West Hempfield township, June 15, 1842, and is a son of Jacob and Mary (Copenhaffer) Forrey, both from highly respected families of Lancaster county.

Jacob C. Forrey was reared to agricultural pursuits on the old homestead, was educated in the public schools, and at twenty-one years of age began farming on his own account on his present farm in Manor township. This place has subsequently been improved in every respect and is acknowledged by all to be one of the best homesteads in the county. General farming is carried on, and the well-cultivated fields are the pride of the neighborhood.

In 1862 Jacob C. Forrey married Miss Elizabeth Eshleman, daughter of Benjamin Eshleman, of West Hempfield township, and this marriage has been fruitful in the birth of ten children, viz.: Mary, Emma, Alice, Annie, Jacob, Benjamin and John, all still under the shelter of the parental home; Harry, a conductor on an electric railway at Columbia and married to Mary Walker; Lillie, wife of Abraham Crider, of West Hempfield; and Fannie, deceased.

The Forrey family are among the most respected of the residents of Manor township and worship at the Mennonite Church; while Jacob C. Forrey is an active Republican in politics, he has been contented to pursue the even tenor of his way as a farmer, regardless of public office.

REV. JAMES YOUNG MITCHELL, D. D., is the popular pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, at Lancaster, the impress of his strong personality having been felt in the city for more than twenty-five years.

His parents came to this country from County Derry, Ireland, in 1828, landing in New York, but going on to Philadelphia, where the husband and father engaged in the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods. His business in Ireland had been that of a linen manufacturer. He was very successful and was able to retire in 1857. Twenty-four years later he died, and his widow, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Young, followed him to a blessed reward in 1884. Five children were born to them, all of whom lived to mature years, but only two of whom are now living: Mrs. Martha Graham, the widow of the late Robert Graham, of Philadelphia; and Dr. James Young, of Lancaster.

Rev. James Young Mitchell, D. D., the eloquent Presbyterian clergyman, was educated in the public schools of Philadelphia, and when within six months of finishing the course in the High school, left that institution to enter the Newark (Del.) Academy to prepare for Delaware College. This was in 1850, and after passing through the Freshman and Sophomore years of that school, he in 1852 repaired to Union College, at Schenectady, N. Y., then under the presidency of Eliphalet Nott, widely known as a leading educator in a former generation. From this school Mr. Mitchell was graduated in 1854, with valedictory honors. For three years he studied in the Princeton Theological Seminary, and was then licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, and, locating at Phillipsburg, N. J., was ordained July 14, 1857.

The church at Phillipsburg was unfinished, and the congregation much in debt. Mr. Mitchell completed the erection of the building, and secured the removal of the debt, working there very effectively until 1862. That year he accepted a call to what was then known as the Central Presbyterian Church of the Northern Liberties in Philadelphia. Here, too, he secured the payment of a heavy debt, and selling the church to the Reformed Congregation, Mr. Mitchell and his congregation secured a building site at the corner of Franklin and Thompson streets, where they erected a large structure, which was known as the Temple Church. This location was within two squares of where Dr. Mitchell was born, and his father, mother and family were members of his church, his trustees and elders being from among those with whom he had gone to school and played in boyhood. He continued a very pleasant and harmonious pastorate with this people for about fifteen years.

Dr. Mitchell accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church in Lancaster, in July, 1876, and since that time has worked in the pastorate in this city. His church building has been twice remodeled, an elegant chapel erected, one mission church established, and one organized. One of these, the Memorial Presbyterian Church, is now an independent church society, though it was a mission from 1869 to 1885. The other mission is that of the Bethany chapel, a beautiful structure on West End avenue, where an interesting Sunday-school is now conducted. The mother church, under the pastoral care of Dr. Mitchell, has with all this extension more than doubled its active membership.

In 1858 Dr. Mitchell was married to Miss Henrietta Michler, a daughter of Peter S. and Mary (Howell) Michler, of Easton, Pa. Her father was largely interested in coal and iron in the Lehigh Valley. From this union were born seven children, all of whom but two reached maturity. These children were: James, a sketch of whom appears below; Mary Howell, who married H. H. Hoyt, of Milwaukee, Wis., and has six children, (Lansing W., J. Mitchell, Henrietta M., Howard H., Gerald and Olive); Elizabeth and A. Lincoln, who both died in childhood; Martha Graham, who became the wife of Col. Crane, of the U. S. army, and died in Cuba, Feb. 4, 1890, universally regretted, leaving two children, William Cary and James Mitchell, who live with their grandparents; Warren, a civil engineer, now in the service of the Penn Coal Gas Co.; and Henrietta, married to J. A. Maxwell, and now living in Lancaster.

Dr. Mitchell, who was a student of elocution under the great James E. Murdock, is recognized as in the first ranks of pulpit orators. His pulpit presence is fine, his oratory brilliant, and his grasp of religious themes thorough and comprehensive. The sermons which he delivers draw large congregations, and secure the earnest attention of the most thoughtful and cultivated people of the community, often being spread before the public in the daily press. His mind is distinctively literary, and among his earliest efforts was the writing of a history of his church in Philadelphia. He was a strong advocate of the Union cause during the Civil war, and his voice was often heard in earnest defense of the Nation.

Dr. Mitchell has repeatedly been moderator of the Presbyteries to which he belongs, and was the last moderator of the old historic Synod of Philadelphia. Seven times he was a commissioner to the general assembly, and has been president of the Lancaster Ministerial Association, serving the Lancaster City Bible Society in the same capacity. With all these labors he has found time to be a good citizen, and to take a deep interest in the public questions of the day, making the influence of his faith felt in his relation to the life around him.

JAMES MITCHELL, M. D., eldest son of Rev. James Y. Mitchell, D. D., whose history as well as that of his ancestry, is given above, has had a remarkable career.

James Mitchell was born Oct. 10, 1859, at Philipsburg, N. J., where his father was then stationed, and when only two or three years old removed with his parents to Philadelphia. There he attended the public schools and was graduated from the Rugby Academy, after which his parents removed to Lancaster, and he entered the class of 1880 in Franklin and Marshall College. After graduating from the latter institution Mr. Mitchell entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated in 1883, receiving distinguished mention for his thesis. Immediately after his graduation from the University Dr. Mitchell was elected, after competitive examination, to the position of physician of the Philadelphia (formerly Blockley) Hospital, the first competitive examination held by that institution; and he also passed the examination for the Presbyterian Hospital. The Doctor thus became resident physician of the Philadelphia Hospital from 1883 to 1884; and of the Presbyterian Hospital from 1884 to 1885, at the expiration of which time he opened an office in Philadelphia for the general practice of medicine and surgery. During this time he was elected visiting physician of the Presbyterian Hospital, and assistant surgeon to the Wills Eye Hospital, and to the Ear, Nose and Throat Dispensary of the Pennsylvania Hospital.

When the Spanish-American war broke out in 1898, Dr. Mitchell was commissioned as first lieutenant assistant surgeon to the 9th U. S. Vol. Inf., and after a few months was commissioned major surgeon. At the end of ten months he was mustered out with his regiment, at Camp Meade, and was then made assistant surgeon in the United States Army, being ordered to the Philippines. There he was with Gen. Lawton, and directly attached to Gen. Young's division, 8th Army Corps, serving in the field with the 4th U. S. Cav., and participating in nineteen engagements, after which he was stationed with the 32nd and 35th U. S. Inf., and also with the 13th and 17th, and he served eighteen months in northern Luzon and other islands. During his last year in the Philippines Dr. Mitchell had charge of the United States government hospitals at Orion and Bautista, the latter the base of hospital operations; there were thirteen posts connected therewith, and six other surgeons. Going to the Philippines Dr. Mitchell visited Japan on the "City of Sydney," and returned on the United States steamship "Indiana," having 520 sick and 250 disabled and discharged soldiers on board. Two days were spent at Honolulu on the way to San Francisco. The Doctor resigned from the government service in April, 1901, and in September, of that year, opened a suite of most elegantly furnished and completely equipped offices at No. 164 King street, Lancaster, where he is now located in the general practice of medicine and surgery.

Dr. Mitchell is a member of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity, and of the Philadelphia County Medical Society, the Philadelphia Pathological Society, and the Lancaster Pathological Society. He is also a member of Lancaster Lodge, No. 134, B. P. O. E. Having a most pleasing personality, coupled with his remarkable experiences in various hospitals and in the field, his location in Lancaster will be hailed as a blessing to the community.

EDWIN LESHER REINHOLD, president of the Pennsylvania Construction Company and general contractor, at Marietta, Pa., was born in the city of Lancaster April 1, 1847, and is a son of Rev. Jacob and Mary (Leshner) Reinhold, natives of Lancaster county.

Jacob Reinhold died at the age of seventy-two years, and was one of the substantial and most highly respected business men of the city, where his widow, who was born in 1824, still resides. The children born to Jacob and Mary Reinhold numbered five, and were born in the following order: Elizabeth, wife of George Brindle; Mary, married to J. W. Byrne; Edwin L., whose name opens this article; Anna, wife of Prof. C. H. Nagle; and Susan, wife of W. C. Eichler.

The paternal grandparents of Edwin L. Reinhold were Henry and Mary Reinhold, the former of whom was a justice of the peace for many years. His ancestor, Christopher Reinhold, was born near the city of Heilbronn, Wurtemberg, Germany, April 10, 1728, and was a scrivener by profession. He sailed for America in 1753, and settled in Lancaster county. He served in the 2d Regiment, Continental Line, in the Revolutionary war.

Mr. Reinhold's maternal grandparents were John and Mary (Miller) Leshner, natives of East Cocalico township, the former a descendant of Nicholas Leshner, who was naturalized in January, 1729.

Edwin L. Reinhold was educated in the city of Lancaster, and at an early age was engaged in the hardware business with his father. In 1871 he became a member of the firm of Becker & Reinhold, and operated a rolling mill at Chickies, and for six years managed the Marietta Hollow Ware & Enameling Company, of which he was one of the principal organizers. He was also active in the organization of the Northern Market House, in Lancaster, the Pennsylvania Electric Company, the Pennsylvania Monument Association, and the Pennsylvania Construction Company (a very successful business enterprise).

In June, 1870, in Marietta, Mr. Reinhold married Miss Isabella H. Becker, who has borne him seven children, viz.: Edwin B. (a member of the Pennsylvania Construction Company), Anna B., Ethel B., John Jay, Jessie M., Albert C., and Paul, all with the exception of the eldest still under the parental roof. Mrs. Isabella H. (Becker) Reinhold was born four miles from Lititz, Pa., and is a daughter of John and Anna (Hoover) Becker, of Donegal township, Lancaster county. John Becker settled in Chickies in 1852, and conducted a rolling mill until his death, Aug. 3, 1893, at the age of seventy-six years; his remains were interred in the Marietta cemetery; his widow, who was born in 1824, is still a resident of Chickies. Their family consisted of six children, viz.: Catherine, wife of Harry Stauffer, of Mt. Joy; Nathan, who died in infancy; Isabella H., now Mrs. Reinhold; Norman, who died at the age of three years; Emma, wife of Owen Bricker, an attorney at Lancaster, and Fremont, a clerk in Marietta. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Reinhold were Henry and Mary Becker, who were agricultural people of Lancaster county, and the original homestead in Warwick township, purchased from William Penn, is still in the possession of the Becker family. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Reinhold were Michael and Sarah Hoover, of Donegal township, and the family homestead, also purchased from William Penn, is still in the possession of the descendants.

Politically Edwin L. Reinhold is one of the most popular Republicans in Lancaster county. In 1884 he was elected a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, and in 1888 was elected recorder of deeds of Lancaster county, having received 22,000 votes. He is very active in promoting his party's interest on all occasions.

Fraternally Mr. Reinhold is a Master Mason, a Knight of Pythias, and a member of the Order of the Golden Eagle and of the Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks. Religiously, all the Reinhold family are members of the Episcopal Church, and are highly respected in the community. As a business man Mr. Reinhold bears a name that has never been impeached.

EDWIN BECKER REINHOLD, member of the Pennsylvania Construction Company, general contractors, at Marietta, Pa., was born at Chickies, East Donegal township, Lancaster Co., Pa., July 27, 1872, and is a son of Edwin L. and Isabella H. (Becker) Reinhold.

Mr. Reinhold was educated in the public schools of Marietta and at the Millersville State Normal School, after leaving which he entered the office and laboratory of the Chickies Iron Company, where he remained four years. As designing was to him a natural gift, he entered the draughting department of the Fenton Art Metallic Company. On his return to Marietta he joined his father and Hon. H. Burd Cassel in the organization of the Pennsylvania Construction Company, which became an extensive and lucrative business. He is also a director in the Exchange Bank, Pennsylvania Electric Company, Pennsylvania Monument Association, and Electric Light Company.

In October, 1898, at Springfield, Ohio, Mr. Reinhold married Miss Delle Downey, a native of that city, and daughter of William C. and Frances (Snyder) Downey. Mr. Downey was at the head of a Steel Wire Manufacturing Company, and is now living in retirement. Mr. and Mrs. Reinhold are members of the Episcopal Church, and are held in high esteem.

In politics Mr. Reinhold is an ardent Republican, but has never aspired for any office. During Gov. Hastings' Administration, he was appointed designer of the art metal work in the Capitol buildings.

AMOS H. HERR, one of the most prominent citizens of Neffsville, Manheim township, is a direct descendant of Hans Herr, the founder of the family in Lancaster county, is the son of Henry and Catherine (Herr) Herr and the grandson of Frederick Herr, who was born in Manor township. The father of Catherine Herr was a son of John Herr.

Frederick Herr, the paternal grandfather, died when his son Henry was only about two years old, thus throwing him at a very early age among strangers. Henry grew to manhood and worked for farmers. When a young man he was employed by his uncle at six dollars a month. After his marriage he began farming, renting a place of his father-in-law, Abraham Herr, in Manor township, which he later bought. It comprised 162 acres, two miles west of Millersville, and there he spent his life. Success attended his operations, and he bought other farms, until he owned at one time 417 acres of very desirable land. Beginning life with $700, from this small capital he accumulated a very considerable fortune. When he died, in 1884, he was eighty-three years old, and was a member of the German Baptist Church. Catherine (Herr) Herr, was born in 1805, and died at the age of fifty-nine years. She was the mother of the following family: Mary, the wife of Martin Bear, who is living near Sterling, Ill.; Tobias, who died in January, 1901, for many years a farmer and a minister in the German Baptist Church; Henry, a resident of Manor township, on the old home place; Martha, the wife of N. C. Baker, of Freeport, Ill.; Amos H.;

Fannie, the widow of Isaac H. Kauffman, of West Hempfield township; Abraham, a resident of Penn township; Catherine, who died in childhood; Elizabeth, the widow of Jacob B. Good, of Lancaster; Christian, of Lancaster.

Amos H. Herr was born Nov. 28, 1834, and received his education in the public schools and in the State Normal at Millersville, being among the first pupils of that old and famous institution. After graduating he taught three terms of school, one each in 1855, 1856 and 1858, in Manheim, Manor and Penn townships.

In 1858 Mr. Herr began farming in Manor township, where he remained five years; then he came to Manheim township, making a location on the farm adjoining the one he now owns, which came into his possession in 1868. It was owned prior to him by his father, and contained seventy-five acres; to this he has added four more acres, and here he has lived, retired since 1898. Mr. Herr has been one of the successful men of the township, and for fifteen years was a member of the school board.

Mr. Herr was married in 1858 to Mary, a daughter of David and Fannie (Forrey) Harnish, and to this union were born: David, a farmer in Manheim township; Josiah; Jonas, a machinist in Ephrata; Henry, a butcher in Neffsville; Amos, a farmer on the homestead; Elam, a farmer in Manheim township; Enos, now dead; Susan, the wife of Martin Funk, of Manor township; Zenas, at home; Emma, deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Herr and their oldest son belong to the Baptist Church, and hold a creditable position in this community.

CHRISTIAN SEITZ, a venerable and well-known general farmer of Rapho township, was born in Strasburg, Pa., Feb. 8, 1824, a son of David and Mary (Wade) Seitz.

Mr. Seitz's parents, who were married May 29, 1817, were both born near Lancaster. David Seitz was born Jan. 19, 1797, son of George Seitz, a farmer of Lancaster county, and he, too, became a farmer, and also operated a mill near Lancaster, but for some time prior to his death he lived retired. He passed away March 10, 1858. The mother, Marv Wade, was born Jan. 8, 1795, and died Nov. 9, 1871. Their ashes now repose in the Mennonite cemetery below Landisville, although the body of the father was first buried where he died, and then removed to its present location at the request of the widowed mother. She belonged to the Mennonite Church, and he was a man of fine moral character, upright standing, and possessed of many friends in the community where his peaceful and useful life was passed. These were their children: Martha, who married Christian Shirk, and is now deceased; Mary, who married Adam Brenner, and went West; George, a farmer and Dunkard preacher in Manor township; and Christian.

When he was twenty-four years old, Christian

Seitz was married in Lancaster, Pa., to Susannah Hershey, who was born in West Hempfield township in 1826, is a daughter of Andrew Hershey. They had one child, Frances, who married Harry C. Horner, cashier of the First National Bank of Lancaster, and is the mother of five children.

Christian Seitz remained with his parents until a year after his marriage, when he rented a small farm on shares for a year, and then operated the home farm two years. After this he carried on the farm of his father-in-law on shares for nine years. In 1860 he established himself on his present farm, where he still remains. His wife is making her home with the daughter in Lancaster. Mr. Seitz has been very prosperous in his business enterprises, and owns two fine farms in Rapho township. From 1860 to 1897 he was engaged in cattle driving in addition to his farming, and made considerable money in that line of labor. He is a member of the Old Mennonite Church, and in politics is a Republican. His career has been a creditable one, and he is now enjoying its results. Notwithstanding his advanced age he keeps his health to a remarkable degree, and is still spry and active.

JOHN K. JACKSON, of Columbia, Lancaster county, is one of the most reliable engineers on the Pennsylvania railroad. He was born in Pequea, this county, Oct. 25, 1839, a son of David and Catherine (Petrie) Jackson, both natives of the same county. The mother was called away in January, 1860, at the age of forty-six years, expiring in Strasburg, and in 1881 the father came to Columbia to reside with his son John K., and there died in 1883, at the age of seventy-three. In early life he was a cooper but in his latter years lived retired on a well-earned competency. To Mr. and Mrs. David Jackson were born thirteen children, viz.: Lavinia, wife of Hiram Skeene; Sarah, who married William Stigleman, of Lancaster county; Ann, married to William McEntire, who is living in retirement in Columbia; William, who served three years in the army, and is now deceased; Amanda, of Christiana, Pa., married to George Helem; John K.; Julia, wife of John Rowe, a boiler inspector in Columbia; Susan, widow of Theodore Eyde, who was shot in the eye in the Civil war, from the effects of which wound he died; Newton, boilermaker foreman at the roundhouse at Columbia; Elizabeth, wife of John Zell, a boilermaker; Isaac, a railroad conductor, Diller, who died in infancy; and Henry, who was a farmer in Illinois, but is now deceased.

John K. Jackson lived on the home farm until twenty-one years old, when the tocsin of war called him to arms, and he enlisted June 4, 1861, at Lancaster, in Co. E, 1st Pa. Reserves, under Capt. Neff, for three years; he was mustered into the State service at West Chester, and into the United States service at Baltimore, Md. He participated in many important engagements, among them being: Gaines Mills, White Oak Swamp, Charles City Cross Roads, Malvern Hill, Manassas, Bull Run, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Mine Run, North Anna River, Spottsylvania Court House and Bethsaida Church. He was never wounded, and was mustered out at Philadelphia, June 13, 1864. Returning home he remained until January, 1865, when he came to Columbia, and began working in the boiler shops of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., where he remained one year, then worked as fireman four years, and was next promoted to engineer, the position he now holds.

On March 24, 1867, Mr. Jackson married Miss Joanna Sourbeer, and to this union have been born the following named children: M. Catherine, who is married to Whitehill Hunter, a railroad passenger conductor, residing in Columbia; Harry G., a boiler-maker in the same borough, who married Marguerite South; Ella R., wife of Harry Myers, floor-walker in a store at Brooklyn, N. Y., John E., a silk-weaver, residing with his father; Sarah M., Charles N. (a printer), Minerva S., William D., Elmer E., and L. Ethel, all with their parents.

Mrs. John K. Jackson was born in Columbia, Sept. 3, 1844, a daughter of Henry and Catherine (Stock) Sourbeer, of Martic Forge, Lancaster county, who came to Columbia in 1821, when the father became a pilot on the river; he was honored with several local offices, including membership in the borough council. He lost his wife, Feb. 24, 1857, at the age of forty-seven years, and his death occurred Dec. 30, 1887, when eighty-two years old. Mr. and Mrs. Sourbeer had a family of five children, viz.: Uriah, a stationary engineer in Columbia, now retired; Harry, a dry-goods merchant in Harrisburg; Jacob, who served four years in the army, and was severely wounded by a grape shot at the battle of Cold Harbor, but is now deceased; Joanna; and Charles, with the railroad company in Columbia.

Mr. Jackson is a member of Susquehanna Lodge, I. O. O. F. In politics he is a Republican, and he is very highly respected in the community in which he lives.

PETER B. NISSLEY, who died on his farm in his native township, Jan. 19, 1869, was born in West Donegal township, Aug. 31, 1823, a son of Martin and Anna (Bachman) Nissley, natives of Lancaster and Lebanon counties, respectively, both of whom died in West Donegal township. The father was a farmer, and died in 1832, at the age of thirty-three years. The mother died Nov. 4, 1888, at the age of eighty-nine years, and both were buried in a private cemetery on the old home farm. Their children were: Daniel, who lived in East Donegal township; Jacob, who died at the age of eighteen years; Anna, who died in infancy; Christian, who died in Ohio; and Peter B., whose name introduces this article.

Peter B. Nissley was twice married, the first time in Harrisburg, Nov. 15, 1853, by the Rev. Charles A. Hay, to Miss Elizabeth Hoffman, by whom he had the following children: Martha, who married David Heisey, a farmer in East Donegal township; Anna, who married Abraham Heisey, now retired and living in Elizabethtown; and Amanda, who married Levi Risser, a farmer in Mt. Joy township, and is deceased. Mrs. Elizabeth (Hoffman) Nissley was the daughter of Michael Hoffman, and died Sept. 11, 1859, at the early age of twenty-five years. Mr. Nissley was married second, in Harrisburg, Feb. 26, 1863, the same minister officiating, to Miss Elizabeth Hoffer, and there were born to this marriage the following children: Simon H., a well-known character in the political circles of this county, is living at home; Martin H., a contractor and builder, married Sarah E. Sheetz; Hiram H., of Elizabethtown, is mentioned elsewhere; Peter H., Jr., a farmer, married Anna Gish, and lives in Elizabethtown. Mrs. Elizabeth (Hoffer) Nissley, was born in Dauphin county, near the Lancaster county line, March 25, 1838, and is a sister of Tobias Hoffer, one of the leading citizens of Elizabethtown.

Peter B. Nissley was reared a farmer, and followed that occupation all his days. After the death of his father, young Peter was taken into the home of his uncle, Joseph Nissley, where he remained until he reached the age of twenty-one years, being given a good district-school education and thoroughly instructed in the principles of an honorable and manly life. When he left the hospitable home of his uncle he began farming on the place where his entire life was spent, and where he died. His remains rest in Mt. Tunnel cemetery. Mr. Nissley took a deep interest in the welfare of the community, and served as school director in his district. In his politics he was a Republican. In his life work he was successful and attained a prominent place among the well-to-do men of his township.

JOHN W. FERGUSON, a successful farmer and honorable citizen of Providence township, Lancaster county, was born in Colerain township, in this county, Nov. 11, 1838, son of William and Mary (Hogg) Ferguson, both of Colerain township and both deceased. The family is of Scotch-Irish origin.

John Ferguson, the grandfather of John W., came from Ireland to America, and settled in Lancaster county, where he reared a family of nine children, viz.: Abraham, Robert, William, Thomas, John, Benjamin, Nathaniel, Margaret and Eliza, all of whom have passed away.

William Ferguson, the father of John W., was born June 9, 1802, in Colerain township. On Feb. 11, 1838, he was married to Mary Hogg, and died March 25, 1889. Mrs. Ferguson was born Dec. 27, 1815, and died Nov. 15, 1879. They had eight children, as follows: William H.; Benjamin F.; Alexander M.; John W.; Mary A., the wife of John Woodward, of Chester county; Abraham M., of Chester county; Nathaniel, of Philadelphia; and Margaret, deceased.

The early life of John W. Ferguson was passed on the farm, his time being occupied in various agricultural duties, and in attendance upon the district schools. It was necessary for him to be energetic and industrious, and he met with the success that comes to those who are thrifty and frugal. Mr. Ferguson has the satisfaction of now owning the best fifty-two-acre farm in Providence township, which he has made very valuable with first-class improvements. In his political belief he is a Democrat. In religion he belongs to and supports the German Reformed Church, in which he is highly esteemed.

On March 9, 1865, Mr. Ferguson was united in marriage with Miss Cecelia Clendennen, born Dec. 4, 1844, who died Sept. 26, 1893. A family of eight children were left to mourn the loss of a devoted and beloved mother: Anna L., who married William Rank, of Ocean City, N. J.; William A., who is a resident of Oak Bottom, Pa.; Ellis, who lives in Quarryville; Miss Mary, who is a successful teacher in the Lancaster county schools; John W., who resides in Pueblo, Colo.; Edgar and Clarence, both residents of Ocean City, N. J.; and Carrie E., who is her father's very capable housekeeper. The family is one which is held in high esteem in Providence township, and Mr. Ferguson is regarded as one of the most honorable and reliable men in his community.

JOSEPH MILLER, of the firm of Musser & Miller, the leading lumber manufacturers in East Donegal township, Lancaster county, is a native of the township, and was born Jan. 10, 1840. His father, John Miller, was a retired farmer and lumberman who married Mrs. Musser, the widow of Jacob Musser, and who bore the maiden name of Stauffer. Of the parents more information may be gleaned from the biography of John S. Miller and that of H. S. Musser, on other pages of this work.

Joseph Miller assisted on the home farm until he had attained his majority and then made an effort to supplement his early education by an attendance at Millersville Academy, but had been there a few months only when the war of the Rebellion broke out. Mr. Miller then enlisted for nine months in the 122d Pa. V. I., under Capt. Barley, professor of languages in the Millersville Academy, and was mustered into service at Harrisburg. He took part in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, but happily passed through both without receiving a wound, and was honorably discharged at Harrisburg in 1863. He then worked in the present lumber business for his father until 1868, when he bought or succeeded to his father's interest.

On Dec. 16, 1885, Mr. Miller married in Marietta, Miss Anna R. Libhart, daughter of Hon. John J. and Anna L. (Reinhart) Libhart, natives of Helm township, York county, and Coventry in Chester county. Hon. John J. Libhart came to Lancaster with his parents in 1812; they settled on Front street, where they built the first brick house in the neighborhood. John J. Libhart was a portrait painter in his young manhood, but in 1846 engaged in the drug business and continued therein until his sons became competent druggists, and in 1870 he turned the business over to them. In 1835 he married, for his first wife, Harriet Goodman, of Lancaster, who bore him one child—Pauline H., now the wife of Warren R. Grosh, a farmer of Elkton, Md. To the marriage of John J. Libhart with Anna L. Reinhart were born five children, viz.: A. Canova, a druggist in Marietta; S. S. Haldeman, deceased; Kate, wife of John A. Breneman, of Marietta; Anna R., now Mrs. Joseph Miller; and John P., late a dentist in Marietta, but who died in 1892. John J. Libhart, who was appointed lay associate judge by Gov. Geary to fill out an unexpired term, retained the office eleven consecutive years, and he died in Marietta Nov. 6, 1883, at the age of seventy-eight. He had also held all the borough offices. His wife had passed away April 14, 1852, when thirty-four years old.

Joseph Miller in politics is a Republican, and one of whom it is never asked which side he is on. He is an earnest, active worker, and has always had the success of his party deeply at heart. Election day finds him at his post and always ready to work until the last vote has been polled. And thus far his labor and his means have been spent in the interest of his party and his friends, as he has never held office, although solicited at different times to accept the office of county commissioner, county treasurer and a seat in the State Legislature. He was a delegate to the State convention which nominated Gov. Beaver, and was elected a county committeeman three successive terms, and then declined to serve any longer. He has been very active as a business man, and besides giving his lumber business close attention, he has helped to organize and invest his money in the various manufacturing industries of Marietta, chief among them being the Marietta Castings Company, the Hollow Ware & Enameling Company, and the Silk Mill. He is a part owner of the second story of Central Hall, and is a director in the Marietta & Maytown Pike Company. He served as a director of the Exchange Bank, of Marietta, from its organization until 1896, since when he has served as its vice president. He and his wife are held in high regard by their friends and acquaintances, and although they have no children, their home is always cheerful and a favorite resort for their many social associates.

GEORGE J. SMITH (deceased). With his brothers, his sisters and his father, a widower, George J. Smith when a boy emigrated from Germany to America. The family settled at Columbia, Pa., where its members have since been actively and prominently engaged in business, worthy representatives of that thrifty, intelligent, energetic element of German emigration, which has contributed so materially to the advancement of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Smith was born in Germany, Aug. 1, 1824.

Joseph Miller

All of the seven children, of which George J. was one, are now deceased. They were as follows: John G., who lived in Philadelphia; Henry, who resided at Covington, Ky.; John, a resident of Lancaster, Ohio; George, who migrated to California; Martin, of Columbia; Julia, who married George Seibert, a cabinet maker and undertaker; and George J.

George J. Smith engaged in a bakery and confectionery business at Columbia, which his family has ever since conducted. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religious faith a prominent member of the First Lutheran Church. Among the fraternal orders he was prominently connected with the I. O. O. F. For his first wife he married Maria C. Hageman, by whom he had one son, Luther F., who became a Methodist Episcopal minister and died at Hollidaysburg, Pa. For his second wife he married, March 3, 1856, Christiana C. Kleinsmith, a native of Columbia, daughter of Diedrich C. and Sabilla (Swartz) Kleinsmith, of Wurtemberg, Germany. Diedrich C. Kleinsmith was a carpenter and bridge builder, who settled in Columbia in 1831, and there died in 1858, aged sixty-five years. His wife, Sabilla, who came to Columbia in 1831 with her parents, survived him ten years. They were married at Columbia, and their children were: Christiana C.; Anna M., wife of Frank Triebel, a confectioner of Columbia; and John F., a bricklayer of Columbia.

The children of George J. Smith by his marriage to Christiana Kleinsmith were, as follows: Lillie S., a school teacher; Capt. Martin H., who died in the Spanish-American war; Laura J., who married Samuel P. Graver, a painter of Columbia; Winfield D., who moved West; George D., deceased; and Anna G., manager of the bakery and confectionery business.

Capt. Martin H. Smith was a prominent citizen of Columbia. In 1887 he succeeded his father in the bakery business. Becoming imbued with the gold fever the Captain in 1897 started for the Klondike, and had reached Alaska when he heard that hostilities had been commenced between his country and Spain. He hastened back to Columbia in order to participate in the struggle. Eighteen years before he had enlisted in the Pennsylvania National Guard, and by his soldierly qualities had won promotion in that organization. For three years prior to his trip to Alaska he had been the captain of Co. C, 4th Regiment. When he reached Columbia on his return from Alaska, the Fourth had already entered service fully officered. Not deterred from his purpose, however, he recruited a new company, which was mustered in as Co. K. of the 4th Regiment, of which he was commissioned captain. He went South with his company July 1, remaining at Camp Thomas and Newport News till ordered to Porto Rico, where he contracted the disease of which he died Sept. 5, 1898. The remains were brought back to Columbia amidst the profound sorrow of the community, and were accorded impressive funeral services. Capt. Smith had an excellent record in the National Guard, and from 1892 to 1897 was inspector of rifle practice of the 4th Regiment. He was one of the best rifle shots in the Guard, and a member of the Third Brigade rifle team. In physique he was an athlete, large and powerful. He was active in the Columbia fire department, a member of the Vigilant Fire Co., and prominent in local Democratic politics. He had married Miss Mary E. Moore, of Columbia, and was the father of two children, Mildred M. and Gertrude C.

George J. Smith died Aug. 1, 1886. After an active and influential life, the latter years of his life had been spent in partial retirement. The bakery business some years prior to his death had been transferred to his wife, who conducted it successfully for ten years, then transferred it to their son, Capt. Martin H. Smith, who was succeeded by his sister Anna, now in charge of the business for the M. H. Smith estate. The family is prominent in the local affairs of Columbia, and is most highly respected.

TOBIAS HOFFER, who is a retired farmer of Elizabethtown, was born in Dauphin county just across the Lancaster and Dauphin county line, Feb. 20, 1837, a son of Jacob and Mary (Horst) Hoffer, natives of Dauphin and Lancaster counties, respectively, now deceased.

In 1858 Jacob Hoffer and his wife settled in Mt. Joy township, where the latter died Oct. 12, 1877, at the age of sixty-five years. The father returned to Dauphin county a few years after the death of his wife, where he resided for a time, and then made his home with his son, Tobias, until his death Oct. 13, 1881, at the age of sixty-nine years. Both were buried in the Green Tree Church cemetery, in Mt. Joy township, Lancaster county. They were both members of the German Baptist church, and were farmer people. The father was school director at the time the free school system went into effect. The children of Jacob and Mary Hoffer were as follows: Tobias, whose name introduces this article; Elizabeth, the widow of Peter Nissley, whose sketch appears elsewhere; Abraham and Henry, who both died in infancy; John, who died in 1882; Levi, who died in infancy; Mary, who died in infancy; Catherine, the wife of Harry Nissley, a retired farmer of Florin, Pa., and David and Martin, both of whom died in infancy.

The paternal grandparents of Tobias Hoffer were Joseph and Elizabeth (Fisher) Hoffer, who were both born and reared in Dauphin county, and who spent their lives in farming. Tobias Hoffer's maternal grandparents were Jacob and Elizabeth (Longenecker) Horst, both born and reared in Lancaster county.

Tobias Hoffer and Elizabeth Nissley were united in marriage at Lancaster, in October, 1860, and they became the parents of the following children: (1) Franklin, who was a hardware merchant in Christiana, married Elizabeth Miller; (2) Allen N. married Virginia Sidle, and is a clerk in a jewelry store in Lebanon, Pa.; (3) Jacob, in the jewelry business at Homestead, Pa., married Jenette Lawson.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hoffer was born in Dauphin county April 17, 1842, a daughter of Jacob C. and Barbara (Bossler) Nissley. Her father, who was born in Dauphin county, a son of Martin and Elizabeth (Crider) Nissley, natives of Lancaster county, was a farmer and miller all his days. He died in 1895 at the age of eighty-one years. Her mother, who was born in Lancaster county in 1814, died in 1891, and both were buried in Dauphin county. They were both members of the River Brethren church. Their children were: Anna, deceased, wife of Christ Peck; Elizabeth, whose name appears above; Martin, who died young; Fanny, who married D. W. Engle, and is now deceased; Mary, Solomon, Samuel and Jacob, who all died young; and Barbara, wife of John L. Ulrich, a farmer in Dauphin county.

Tobias Hoffer remained with his parents until he attained his majority, when he went into Elizabethtown, where he worked three years, and then located on the old home of his father-in-law in Dauphin county, where he remained twenty-six years. At the end of that time he gave up active farm life, and made his home in Elizabethtown, where he is enjoying that well-earned rest and leisure that should properly follow laborious and useful years. Mr. Hoffer was a school director in Dauphin county, and with his wife belongs to the German Baptist church. In politics he is a Republican, and is one of the prominent and leading men of the community. Both he and his wife are universally respected, and for their kind hearts, clean and wholesome lives and genial dispositions are widely known and much esteemed.

CHARLES R. KLINE, a member of the Lancaster Bar, is a son of the late Edmund M. and Anna M. Kline.

Edmund M. Kline, the father of Charles R., was for many years an editor and one of the proprietors of the Lancaster Examiner, and he is well remembered as one of the most graceful and forcible writers who has ever been connected with the local press. Mr. Kline married Miss Anna M., daughter of the late Jonathan Foltz, and a sister of the late Dr. J. M. Foltz, Surgeon-General of the United States Navy. Mr. and Mrs. Kline had three children: Emma M., unmarried; Laura L., the wife of Rev. B. B. Ferrer, pastor of the Reformed church at Riegelsville, Bucks county; and Charles R., of Lancaster.

Charles R. Kline was born in Lancaster in 1856, and received his education at Yeates Institute, Franklin and Marshall Academy, Nazareth Hall and Lafayette College. From this last institution he was called home before his graduation by the serious illness of his father, and never returned. He then took up the study of law under the guidance of his uncle, the late George M. Kline, who in his lifetime was known as one of the very ablest members of the Bar of Lancaster county, and he was admitted to practice in the courts of Lancaster county in 1879, and in due time was admitted to the Bar of the Superior and Supreme courts. He filled the office of city solicitor for the years 1900 and 1901.

Charles R. Kline married Miss Caroline A. Keffer, a daughter of the late Prof. W. H. Keffer, well remembered as having been for many years the leading orchestral musician of the city. Mr. and Mrs. Kline have one son, Edmund K., who was eight years old in 1902.

Mr. Kline is affiliated with Lamberton Lodge No. 476, F. & A. M.; Chapter No. 43, R. A. M.; Lancaster Commandery No. 13, K. T.; Herschel Lodge of Odd Fellows; and the Lancaster Lodge of Elks.

THOMAS JEFFERSON MARSH, now deputy controller of Lancaster county, is one of the most prominent citizens of the eastern part of the county.

Reuben Marsh, his grandfather, was a prominent farmer, and his father, Jehu Marsh, who died a few years ago, was a contracting mason of Salisbury township, and for many years foreman on the Pennsylvania Railroad. His mother, whose maiden name was Rosanna Diven, belonged to a well known Cumberland county family. Six children were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Jehu Marsh, four of whom are living, as follows: William, a clerk of Gap, this county; James, a merchant of Gap; Thomas J., our subject; and Miss Elizabeth.

Thomas Jefferson Marsh was born in Salisbury township Feb. 4, 1840, and was educated in the schools of that district. Leaving school he found employment as clerk in a store at Gap, and, after a time, entered into the general merchandise business at Christiana, with James Coates as a partner, trading as Coates & Marsh. This partnership lasted for several years, when Mr. Marsh sold his interest in the business, and next represented his father's interest in a store at the Gap, the firm being J. Marsh & Son. He continued in this connection about twelve years, at the end of which time he was elected, by the Republicans of Lancaster county, to be one of the county auditors. He served one term, and was re-elected for a second term, after serving over a year of which he resigned, on May 17, 1901, to accept the position of deputy controller, to which he had been appointed by Controller A. B. Hassler.

Mr. Marsh has been twice married. His first wife was Rebecca Brooke, daughter of Kinzey Brooke, a wagon manufacturer and farmer of Sadsbury township. Three children were born to this union, two of whom are living: Carrie, wife of Rev.

David S. Sherry, of Baumgardner, this county; and Mary, wife of Ira C. Linville, a book-keeper in Philadelphia. Years after the death of his first wife Mr. Marsh married Elizabeth Davis, daughter of John P. Davis, of Christiana, and six children have been born of this union, five of whom are living: Della, Florence, Elsie, Edith and Charles P. Mr. Marsh has been prominent in Republican politics from early manhood, and several years before being elected to a county position, was assessor of Sadsbury township for one term. He belongs to Christiana Lodge No. 417, F. & A. M.; and is a member of the Presbyterian church at Gap, where he resides, although spending all the week days at Lancaster, in the discharge of his responsible duties for which he is eminently fitted, and to the performance of which he carries a most pleasing personality.

SILAS HOWARD PURPLE (deceased), was for a third of a century, and until his decease in 1891, at the age of sixty-four years, one of the forceful men of Columbia. He inherited from his parents great strength of character, and was always a man of restless energy, which he invariably employed in constructive work. Reared on a farm, operated by his father, he applied himself to farming and the lumber business, and after his young manhood, and while thus engaged, came to Columbia and engaged in nursery work and brick-making, pursuing a successful and increasing business career that ended only with his death.

Mr. Purple was born in Potter county, Pa., April 5, 1827, son of Ansel L. and Maria (Howard) Purple. The former, a native of Middle Haddam, Conn., of English extraction, migrated to Potter county, became prominent in political affairs, and was the first sheriff of that county. The mother had been a resident of Ohio. To Ansel L. and Maria Purple were born five children: Elisha; Silas Howard; Mary, wife of Luther Barker, of New York State; Martin V., and Isabella, who married Joseph Ingham.

Silas H. Purple was reared in Tioga county, Pa., where he engaged in farming and lumbering until 1859. In that year he moved to Columbia, Pa., where he started a nursery, conducting it successfully for a period of fifteen years. In the meantime he began the manufacture of brick, having purchased a yard in 1860 from a Mr. Cowden. This was enlarged from time to time until it developed into a steam plant covering seven acres of ground. Mr. Purple remained in its active management until his death, Dec. 26, 1891, and since that time the business has been conducted by the heirs. In 1894 they organized the Columbia Brick Co., which now owns and operates the plant. The marriage of Silas Howard Purple and Margaret Ann Lowrey was solemnized June 21, 1855, at Columbia, Pa. She was born in Columbia, Pa., Jan. 6, 1831, daughter of John and Ann (Wilson) Lowrey, of Chester county and Columbia, respectively, and granddaughter of Andrew and Margaret (Hood) Lowrey, and of John and Mary (Todd) Wilson, who migrated from the north of Ireland and were married at Lancaster, Pa. To Silas Howard and Margaret Ann Purple were born six children, all of whom survive, namely: Annie Bell, who resides at home; John Lowrey, who married Susan Taft, of Knoxville, Tioga Co., Pa., and now resides in the old homestead; Ansel, who married Emma Lieberknecht, of Geneseo, Ill., and resides in Columbia; Mary Elizabeth, widow of Joseph F. McMakin, who was a civil engineer; Margaret Howard, a school teacher, at home; and Silas Howard, who acquired in the Reading Railroad shops the trade of machinist, which he followed a number of years, and who is now residing at his mother's home, and is engaged in brick manufacturing. Silas Howard Purple, the father of these children, and the subject of this sketch, died Dec. 26, 1891, and was buried at Mount Bethel cemetery. He was a member of the Presbyterian church, and a ruling elder therein for twenty-five years, and in politics was a Republican. He was highly respected for his many estimable qualities, and his widow and children are among the prominent and influential residents of Columbia.

The Lowrey family is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. The old homestead was granted to William Lowrey in 1740. Lieut. Andrew Lowrey, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Purple, was a son of William Lowrey, and was born in this homestead farm near Oxford, Lower Oxford township, Chester county. He was first ensign, and afterward promoted to be lieutenant of his company, serving in the war of the Revolution. In this same company were his brother William, and brothers-in-law, Walter and Samuel Hood. Lieut. Lowrey was a man of more than ordinary ability and intelligence. He died in September, 1796. His wife, Margaret Hood, was a daughter of Walter Hood, of Oxford township, Chester county, who left a portion of land in what is now Oxford borough, for a Presbyterian church and cemetery; this tract is now a commons in the heart of Oxford. To Lieut. Lowrey and his wife Margaret were born six sons, whose progeny are now scattered over the United States.

John Lowrey, one of the six sons of Lieut. Andrew, and the father of Mrs. Purple, moved from Chester county, to Lancaster county, Pa., in 1820, settling at Columbia, where he married Ann Wilson, daughter of John and Mary (Todd) Wilson. In his younger days he was a pilot on the river, and rapidly accumulated a competence, which enabled him to spend his last years in retirement. He engaged, also, in the buying and selling of real estate. He lived a strictly temperate life. Both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian church, in which faith he died in 1857, and she passed away in 1874, aged sixty-seven. Both are buried in Mount Bethel cemetery. To John and Ann Lowrey were born eight children, of whom Margaret Ann, widow of Mr. Purple, is the eldest and the only survivor. The others were: Mary Elizabeth, wife of John Fendrich; Jane, who died aged eighteen years; John Andrew, who died at the age of fifteen; William F., who died at the age of twenty-seven; Sarah R. and Emily (twins), both of whom died young; and another child who died in infancy.

JOHN S. MILLER, a prominent farmer of East Donegal township, Lancaster county, was born on his present homestead Aug 6, 1837, son of John and Martha Stauffer (Musser) Miller, of Strasburg and East Donegal townships, respectively.

John Miller, born April 27, 1806, was a farmer and lumberman. He retired from active work in 1865, and removed to another house on the same farm, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying Sept. 20, 1867. The mother, who was the widow of Jacob Musser when she married Mr. Miller, was born Aug. 13, 1802, and died in 1885. They were Dunkards in religion, and their remains lie interred in Marietta cemetery. They were the parents of four children, namely: (1) John S. is mentioned below. (2) Joseph is a lumber merchant in East Donegal township. (3) Isaiah married Miss Fanny Hoerner, who bore him three sons, John H., born Jan. 23, 1875; Ethelbert, born Jan. 6, 1877; and Harry T., born July 5, 1880. All three of the sons are engaged with their uncle in the hardware business in Marietta. Isaiah Miller died Dec. 14, 1892, and his wife Jan. 31, 1898. (4) Sally is the wife of John Connelly, a retired bank cashier in Lancaster.

The paternal grandparents of John S. Miller were John and Betsey (Cramer) Miller, of Strasburg. The former died in September, 1874, aged ninety-eight years, eight months, and the latter died in 1876, at the age of ninety-seven. They lived at what is known as the Lancaster Junction, where the grandfather worked at his trade of carpenter and builder until he had acquired sufficient means to purchase a farm. In farming he was also very successful, and at the marriage of his children presented each with $1,000. John and Betsey Miller were members of the Mennonite Church. They were the parents of seven children, viz.: John, born April 27, 1806, was the father of John S.; Joseph died in Manheim, Pa.; Sally was married to Ulrich Strickler, and died in Salunga, Pa.; Mary is the widow of Henry Wittmer, late of New Market, York county; Hattie is the widow of Joseph Sowder; Jacob is a retired farmer of Manheim; Elizabeth, born May 27, 1825, is the widow of Daniel M. Grove. The great-grandfather of John S. Miller, also named John, was a native of Germany, was a carpenter by trade, and early settled in Strasburg. He was shot by Indians concealed in his barn.

John S. Miller has always resided on his present farm, and in conjunction with agriculture has carried on a coalyard for several years. His place comprises 103 acres, on twelve of which he grows tobacco, and part of which he has laid out in town lots. He also has an orchard of 1,000 peach trees, and his dwelling is one of the handsomest country homes in the county. Mr. Miller is one of the most respected citizens of East Donegal township, has been a director in the Exchange Bank of Marietta for the past six years, and has always been recognized as one of the most public-spirited residents of the township of his nativity. In politics he is a Republican. He worships at the Church of God.

On Dec. 26, 1865, in East Donegal township, Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Herr, and of the five children born to this union Elizabeth died young; Martha A. is still at home; John A. is the next in order of birth; Emma A. is deceased; Mary Amanda is the wife of Dr. George Reich, of Marietta. Mrs. Mary A. (Herr) Miller is a native of East Donegal township, and is a daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Stehman) Herr, natives of Manor and East Donegal townships, respectively, and the parents of six children, viz.: Hiram, a farmer in West Donegal township; Benjamin, deceased; Elizabeth, widow of Christ Rohrer, at the time of his death a retired farmer of Canton, Ill.; Mary A., wife of John S. Miller; Amanda, widow of Harry Geish, late of Elizabethtown, this county, and Cyrus S., deceased. Benjamin Herr, who was born Dec. 2, 1808, died in East Donegal township in 1879, and his widow, who was born Nov. 10, 1810, died there Aug. 3, 1889. Benjamin Herr, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Miller, and Jacob and Elizabeth (Linemuth) Stehman, her maternal grandparents, were also natives of Lancaster county.

CYRUS STEHMAN HERR (deceased) was born March 29, 1846, four and a half miles above Maytown, Conoy township, son of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Stehman) Herr, farming people, who were most highly respected. They died in 1879 and 1889, respectively, in the faith of the Church of God.

Cyrus S. Herr was reared to farming, which he followed until March, 1881, when he retired from that vocation, and located in Marietta, where he engaged in the sand trade, in connection therewith carrying on a grain and produce business until 1896, when he retired. He was a director in the Donegal Fire Insurance Company. He was an officer in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the faith of which he died, March 24, 1900, and in politics was a Republican.

Cyrus S. Herr was married Nov. 3, 1869, to Miss Emma Sultzbach, and to this union were born two children, Anna H. (who is married) and Bayard S. Mrs. Emma (Sultzbach) Herr was born in Marietta, daughter of Henry and Helena (Obedar) Sultzbach, who came from York county to Marietta, where Mr. Sultzbach engaged in farming and tanning for many years. He died in 1863, at the age of sixty-five years, and the mother passed away Nov.

EAST DONEGAL RESIDENCE AND FARM OF J. S. MILLER TOWNSHIP

23, 1894, aged eighty-one, in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church; they were buried in Marietta. Their children were ten in number, viz.: George W., who died in 1898; John F., a tobacco grower of Marietta; Calvin A., deceased; Samuel A., who was a dentist, and is now deceased; Joseph G., ticket and freight agent at Marietta; Anthony H., deceased; William, who died in Philadelphia; Emma H.; Bayard, deceased; and Howard A., deceased. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Herr were Henry and Susan Sultzbach, of York county, Pa., the former of whom was a farmer and miller, and was three times married. To the third marriage were born five children: Henry E., who is still on the old homestead; Mary, wife of Barr Spangler; Susan, deceased; and two who died in infancy.

BENJAMIN G. MUSSER, an extensive and highly esteemed farmer of West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Pa., was born in that township, one mile west of Silver Spring, Sept. 1, 1838, and descends from one of the oldest families in the county.

Michael and Elizabeth (Garber) Musser, parents of Benjamin G., were born in West Hempfield and East Donegal townships, respectively; by vocation the former was a farmer, but he held several town offices, among them that of school director for several years.

Benjamin G. Musser remained on the home farm with his parents until he had attained his majority, when he settled on his present farm of 268 acres. On Dec. 18, 1857, Benjamin G. Musser married Barbara C. Newcomer, who bore him three children, viz.: Isaiah N.; Myra, widow of Clayton Bushong, feed merchant at Columbia, Pa.; and Nora, deceased. Mrs. Barbara C. (Newcomer) Musser was born in Manor township, was a daughter of John S. and Frances (Charles) Newcomer, and died Jan. 16, 1898, at the age of sixty-five years, her remains being interred at Mountville. Mrs. Frances Newcomer died in West Hempfield township at the age of seventy-two years. Benjamin G. Musser is a member of the German Baptist church and in politics is a Republican.

ISAIAH N. MUSSER was born in West Hempfield township, Nov. 8, 1866, and is now a farmer and manufacturer of cider at Locust Grove, in his native township, where he has a farm of eighty-four acres. On Oct. 31, 1890, he was married in Manheim township to Miss Leah B. Keller, who has borne him two children: Norman K. and Alvin K. Mrs. Leah (Keller) Musser was born at Lime Rock, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1871, and is a daughter of Samuel G. and Fanny (Brubaker) Keller. Samuel G. Keller was born in 1828, is a retired farmer and drover, who owned two good farms, resides in Penn township near Manheim, was a director in the First National Bank of Manheim, and relinquished active business in 1887. Mr. Keller and his wife, who was born in 1837, are members of the German Baptist Church, and are the parents of the following children: Lizzie B., wife of Ezra S. Kline, a farmer of Lancaster county; Katie B., married to David Hershey, of Manheim; Fanny, married to William Evans, a butcher; Naton B., a miller at Lime Rock; Mary, who died young; Leah B., now Mrs. Isaiah N. Musser; Anna, Maggie B., and Ella, who all died young; Minnie, still at home; Samuel, deceased; Sadie, at home; and Emma, the youngest, deceased.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Musser were Frederick and Catherine (Groos) Keller, who both died on their old homestead in Penn township; the maternal grandparents were Christian and Barbara (Longenecker) Brubaker, the former of whom is still living in Manheim township, at eighty-five years of age.

Benjamin G. Musser is a Republican in his political proclivities, but has never been a very aggressive politician; in religion he clings to the faith of his forefathers, the German Baptist.

SAMUEL M. MYLIN, one of the leading agriculturists and prominent citizens of Pequea township, who for a quarter of a century has been a conspicuous trial justice of the peace of this county, is a member of one of the prominent and pioneer families of Lancaster county.

Squire Mylin was born Nov. 30, 1841, in what is now Pequea township, a son of Abram B. and Elizabeth (Myer) Mylin. He was reared on his father's farm, receiving only limited educational advantages in the district schools of the neighborhood. But by home reading and study he early became possessed of a fund of good information and attained creditable scholarship and culture. He acquired a knowledge of civil engineering and gave some attention to that line of work; however, his chief occupation has been tilling the soil, and in that vocation he has met with success and is the owner of a well improved farm in Pequea township. He is a man of excellent judgment, broad and liberal in his views and progressive, making a good neighbor and valuable citizen. In his political views he is a Republican. In 1874 he was chosen a justice of the peace for his township and has held that office by re-election from that time to this, and it is but just to the Squire to add that he has been a most conscientious and discreet officer, making justice to all concerned the ruling principle in his settlements. Probably no docket in the community will show fewer appeals and reversals where appeals have been made than the records of Squire Mylin. The Squire is a member of the Pennsylvania German Society and also is a director in the First National Bank at Lancaster.

On Nov. 5, 1870, Squire Mylin was married to Mary Ann, daughter of Jacob Brenneman, and to this union have been born children as follows: Christian, who married Mary Fullerton, and has one child, Aaron; Samuel; Martin; Annie, who married Amos M. Shenk, a farmer in Conestoga township; Martha; Frances, and Alice. The parents and children are members of the Old Mennonite church.

FRANKLIN. Henry Franklin, the progenitor of the family in America, a member of the Society of Friends, was a merchant who came from England during the latter part of the seventeenth century and settled on Long Island. His son Thomas Franklin, born at Flushing, L. I., was a merchant in New York, and the latter's son Thomas, born in New York in 1734, removed to Philadelphia in 1775. During the Revolutionary war he was appointed commissary of prisoners at Philadelphia, and while acting in that capacity objection was made by the Society of Friends, of which he was a leading member, but he maintained his position. It was his son Walter Franklin, who was the first of the family to settle in Lancaster county.

WALTER FRANKLIN was born in New York on May 5, 1773. He was admitted to the Bar in Philadelphia in 1792, and rapidly rose to the front rank in his profession. In January, 1809, he was appointed by Governor Snyder to the office of Attorney General of Pennsylvania, which position he held until Jan. 26, 1811, when, upon the death of Judge Joseph Henry, he was appointed President Judge of the Second Judicial District, comprising the counties of Lancaster, York and Dauphin, to which were subsequently added Cumberland and Lebanon, and he thereupon removed to Lancaster, where he resided during the incumbency of his office and until his death, Feb. 7, 1836, having been upon the Bench a period of twenty-five years.

Judge Franklin was a man of rare talent and broad culture. He was distinguished for clearness of conception, vigor of mind, refined sensibility, and the most rigid integrity. As a jurist he ranked among the ablest in the State. An extract from one of his charges will show the clearness and force of his mind. On the breaking out of the war of 1812, the public mind became instantly crazed, and insults and contumely were heaped upon those who had the courage to raise their voices against the war. The civil authorities were in many places prostrated, and mob law ruled supreme. The most respectable citizens were insulted and the offices of the press opposed to the war were in many places destroyed. In the midst of this state of excitement and feeling, Judge Franklin delivered a charge to the grand jury of York, of which the following is an extract:

The existing state of our foreign relations and the sensibility of the public mind on all questions connected with it, call for peculiar care in those who are concerned in the administration of justice, to guard against every occurrence which may have a tendency to promote a spirit of popular tumult, or of lawless violence. A disposition to riot and commotion may in general be easily suppressed, in its first stages, by proper firmness and decision on the part of the magistrate; but if neglected and suffered to gain ground and extend itself, it soon grows too powerful for the ordinary exertions of civil authority and bears down everything before it in a resistless torrent of rage and desolation. Fear is said to be the basis of arbitrary government, and virtue the ruling principle of republics. Law, and not faction, should have the sway in every free country. No condition is more deplorable than that produced by anarchy; and experience has abundantly proved, that of all governments, a mob is the most despotic and sanguinary.

Judge Walter Franklin married, on June 13, 1802, Ann Emlen, daughter of James Emlen, "a highly esteemed and accepted preacher of the Society of Friends." They had twelve children, among whom, attaining majority, were Hon. Thomas E., Col. Emlen, Rev. Walter, Sarah, wife of the eminent surgeon, Dr. John L. Atlee; and Mary, wife of Washington Hopkins, the distinguished lawyer and orator, who was stricken while addressing a jury and expired.

THOMAS E. FRANKLIN, LL. D., was born in Philadelphia April 20, 1810, and came to Lancaster the following year, when his father was appointed to the Bench. He graduated from Yale College with honors in 1828. After graduation he read law with his brother-in-law, Washington Hopkins, and was admitted to the Bar in 1831, and at once began the practice of law in Lancaster, where he spent his entire life, and a period of over fifty years in his profession. He enjoyed a large and lucrative practice and adorned many positions of public trust and confidence. He was twice Attorney General of Pennsylvania. His first appointment was under Governor Johnson in 1851, and his second under Governor Pollock in 1855. He was appointed by Governor Curtin a member of the Peace convention that met in Washington immediately prior to the War of the Rebellion. He was a member of the Protestant Episcopal church, was for many years prominent in church councils, and at the time of his death was Chancellor of the Diocese. His death occurred Nov. 28, 1884. Few men have left a deeper impression on the community. He was possessed of a well-endowed mind, which was thoroughly trained, and his character was molded upon the highest type of Christian manhood. He was a learned and able lawyer, a public spirited citizen, and a refined cultured gentleman.

Thomas E. Franklin married, Nov. 7, 1837, Serena A. Mayer, daughter of Col. George Mayer, hardware merchant of Lancaster, and Colonel of the 69th Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, in the war of 1812. They had twelve children, of whom the eldest was Capt. George M., and there survive the following: Serena M., wife of Hon. H. M. North, of Columbia, Pa.; Frances O., wife of S. P. Galt, of St. Louis, Mo.; Thomas W.; Henry S.; Walter M.; Dr. Charles M.; Blanche, wife of J. W. B. Bausman, Esq.; Robert L.

GEORGE M. FRANKLIN, eldest of the children of Thomas E. Franklin, was born in Lancaster

June 19, 1839. He entered Yale College in 1854, and graduated with distinction in 1858. He read law with his father, and was admitted to the Bar Sept. 16, 1861. He had not been long engaged in the practice of his profession when he responded to the call for volunteers in the War of the Rebellion, and enlisted in the 122nd Regiment. He was elected first lieutenant and was afterwards promoted to captain and took command of Co. A. After his regiment was mustered out of service he accepted an appointment on the staff of Gen. William B. Franklin, as captain and assistant adjutant general, proceeding at once to the Department of the Gulf, where he experienced hard service. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of law, but in 1869 he became a member of the firm of G. M. Steinman & Co., and turned his attention to mercantile affairs. He became prominently identified with many of the business interests of the community, and at the time of his death, which occurred on May 15, 1899, he was president of the Hamilton Watch Co. Capt. Franklin was one of the most widely known and highly esteemed men in the community. He had a busy career, and came in contact with great numbers of people, and was of such a sympathetic nature, constantly helpful to others, that he enjoyed extraordinary popularity. He was married in 1856 to Sarah M., daughter of Gen. George M. Steinman. They had four children, George S., William B., Frederick S. and Thomas E.

MARTIN R. BITZER. Lancaster county, Pa., has not only become noted for its fine productive farms, but also for the class of citizens who have grown up and been nourished by the land, presenting to the State some of the best types of honest, upright and respected men and women to be found anywhere within its borders.

Among those who have been reared in Ephrata township is Martin R. Bitzer, who is spending a comfortable old age, his fine farm of eighty-five acres in Ephrata township being managed in his interest. The Bitzer family is of German origin, and the founder, John Bitzer, came to Lancaster county about 1720, his son, Michael Bitzer, being a prominent and successful farmer of the county. John Bitzer, the father of Martin R., was born in 1795, and married Elizabeth Royer, in 1819, rearing a family of twelve children: Michael, born Sept. 28, 1819, who lives in New Berlin, O.; Martin R., born Sept. 29, 1821; Daniel, a resident of Illinois; Urias, a resident of California; Mary, deceased; Magdalena, who married Levi Mohler; Henry, who died in childhood; John, deceased; Susanna, who married Christian Johns; Louisa, who married Peter Johns; Fianna, deceased; Catherine, who married James Bryson.

Reared on the farm in Ephrata township, Martin R. Bitzer followed agricultural pursuits all his life until his retirement from active duties, some eight years ago. Always industrious, his labors yielded him ample returns and he is now enabled to enjoy the fruits of his former toil.

Martin R. Bitzer was married on Nov. 15, 1849, to Annie, daughter of John and Esther (Mohler) Royer, who was born Oct. 24, 1825, and died Nov. 15, 1897. To this marriage were born these children: Adam, born in Sept., 1850, who married Mary Landis; Mary, born in April, 1852; Susannah, who died in childhood; Maranda, born in 1854, who married D. H. Yeartz; John C., born in 1856, who married Sue Graybill, and lives in Lancaster; Urias, born in 1858, who resides in Canton, O., and married Lillie Landes; Fianna, in Philadelphia; and Lizzie A., at home, caring for her beloved father.

Although a Republican in politics and always interested in public affairs, Mr. Bitzer has not cast a vote for the past twenty years. Much of his time is pleasantly spent in reading the newspapers and the scriptures. His life has been one of honesty and uprightness and he has the satisfaction of knowing that he possesses the confidence and esteem of the neighborhood in which he has spent his long and most worthy life.

JOSEPH D. HASTINGS, a wealthy and prosperous farmer, who is now living retired in Colerain township, Lancaster county, was born on the farm where he is still making his home, in November, 1826, and is a son of Peter and Sarah (Andrews) Hastings. They were both born in Colerain township, the father in 1778, and the mother in 1785. She was a daughter of Joseph Andrews, and her forefathers had much to do with the early history of Lancaster.

Peter Hastings was the son of Peter and Rachel (Sloan) Hastings, and the grandson of the Peter Hastings who came from England to this country as early as 1734. Peter Hastings, the first of the family, purchased land of William Penn, in Colerain township, a property that has passed down through five generations of his descendants, built a log house and settled down there for the remainder of his life. In a will dated Dec. 8, 1768, he left the estate to his son, Peter (2), and the latter sold it to his son, Peter (3), on Jan. 4, 1808; the son, in turn, about 1860, willed it to Joseph D. Hastings.

Peter and Rachel (Sloan) Hastings had two sons, John and Peter. John Hastings married a Miss Cameron and made his home on a part of the original family property. He died leaving three sons.

Peter Hastings, the father of Joseph D., married for his first wife, Elizabeth Hess, Aug. 22, 1799. They settled on the family homestead where their lives were spent, and where Mrs. Elizabeth Hastings died, leaving a family: Christopher, born in January, 1800, who died in Wilmington, Del.; Rachel, deceased wife of Samuel Hess; Peter, born in 1805, who died a young man; James S., born in 1808, a farmer in Colerain township, deceased; Ann Eliza, born in 1812, who married Daniel Howett, and moved West, where both died.

Peter Hastings later married Sarah Andrews by whom he had three children: Robert, who died in childhood; Mary J., born in 1823, who died unmarried Dec. 17, 1870; and Joseph D., the only surviving member of this family. The father died Oct. 2, 1867, in the ninetyeth year of his age; the mother died Oct. 5, 1861. They were active members of the Presbyterian church and were among the founders of the Union church in Colerain township. Peter Hastings was a Whig, and became a Republican in his last days. During his active years he filled various local offices.

Joseph D. Hastings was educated in the district schools. After the death of his parents he remained as manager of the home farm. He married in September, 1855, Louisa E., a daughter of Benjamin and Mary E. (Stauffer) Esshelman. Her father was born in Paradise township, and with his wife settled in Providence, where they lived some years, and then moved to Barts' Mills, where he carried on the double occupation of farming and milling. He was the son of Jacob Esshelman, at one time a wealthy and prominent citizen of Lancaster. Mr. Esshelman retired to Strasburg, some time before his death in 1853. His widow lived with her children in Philadelphia. Mrs. Hastings was born Jan. 31, 1828, and had her education in the West Chester High School, and in the Lewisburg Seminary. After their marriage they settled on the old Hastings homestead, where they have lived forty-six years. In 1869 Mr. Hastings built a large modern house, remodelled the barn, and made other valuable and extensive improvements. To him and his wife have come four children: (1) Celesta B., was educated in the Union High School, and was given a classical education. She is a lady of culture and natural refinement, and lives at home. (2) Edgar E. had a business education, went to Omaha, where he held a responsible position as a superintendent of a department in the Cudahy Packing House, and has proved himself a capable business man. He married Miss Harriet Short, of Kansas City, Mo. They have one daughter, Winnefred. (3) J. Albert was educated under Prof. Andrews at the Colerain Union High School, taking up farming as his occupation, and for fourteen years has been manager of the old homestead. In 1900 he made a trip to the Pacific Coast, travelling very extensively through the West and South, and spending some time in Florida. His standing in Colerain is beyond question. (4) Emma married Dr. Kauffman, of Lancaster, and they have one daughter, Louise.

Joseph D. Hastings has always been identified with the Whig and Republican parties, though he has never sought office. He and his family are connected with the Presbyterian church, where they have taken a prominent part.

Mr. Hastings has kept a record of interesting events in his neighborhood for more than twenty years, and is a man of more than ordinary intelligence. His education was limited, but he became a deep reader, and is widely informed as to the history and progress of the world. For a time, from 1856 to 1865, he kept a general store at his house, but he has given this up. To-day he is one of the best bookkeepers and finest penmen of the neighborhood. His books are models of neatness and correctness.

JOHN M. FROELICH, president of the Mountville National Bank, president of the Mountville Manufacturing Company, and a leading contractor and builder at Mountville, Lancaster county, was born in Mountville, Sept. 4, 1834, son of John and Fanny (Meyers) Froelich, who were born in Lancaster county, near Strasburg.

John Froelich, father of John M., was a weaver by trade, and died in Mountville in 1858, at the age of fifty-one years. His widow survived until 1888, dying at the age of seventy-four years. Both were members of the United Brethren Church, and are buried in the Mountville cemetery. To their marriage were born nine children, viz.: Elizabeth, widow of Henry S. Colm, of Mountville; Henry, deceased; John M., of whom more will be said; Annie, wife of William Seitz, a leaf tobacco merchant of Mountville; Jacob, Elmina and Susan, deceased; Rebecca, married to John S. Carter, a blacksmith, at Liberty Square; and Fanny, deceased.

Jacob Froelich, paternal grandfather of John M., was a farmer in West Hempfield township, where he died. His death was caused by a fall from an apple tree. Henry Meyers, the maternal grandfather, lived and died in the southern end of Lancaster county.

John M. Froelich earned his livelihood on a farm until eighteen years old, and then apprenticed himself to learn the carpenter trade with Sneath & Conklin, of Mountville, Pa., and after acquiring his trade, he became actively engaged in the contracting and building business. Many evidences of his skill and handiwork may be seen in the spacious houses and barns built in the townships of West Hempfield, East Hempfield and Manor, and some of the beautiful homes built in the city of Lancaster.

His business interests, however, have not been wholly confined to this calling, but have been varied and extended, and his success gives great evidence of Mr. Froelich's broad capacity as a financier and executive officer. He was one of the originators and organizers of the Mountville National Bank, and has served as one of its directors, and for the past five years as president. He likewise was one of the originators and organizers of the Mountville Manufacturing Co., served as one of its first directors and is now its president. He has also been engaged in the leaf tobacco business, buying from the farmer or raiser, and packing the same. He is likewise engaged in the lumber business, having yards at Mountville, at which an extensive business is done. He is also the owner of considerable land.

John M. Froelich was married to Susan Fridy, of Mountville, Pa., in the year 1857, and to this union there have been born the following named children: Joseph, who is now associated with his father in business, and also a dealer in fertilizers; John, who is with his father and works at the carpenter trade; Sherman is likewise engaged with his father in the carpenter business; Harry, now deceased, was married to Elida Musser; she is still living; Callie, his daughter, is intermarried with Elias Solms, who assists his father-in-law at the carpenter trade; Milton and Cecilia died in their infancy.

Mrs. Susan (Fridy) Froelich was born in West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Oct. 25, 1837, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Hougen-doubler) Fridy. Her father, Joseph Fridy, who was in the butchering business, died in 1871, at the age of sixty-three years; her mother died in 1895, at the home of John M. Froelich, at the age of eighty-three years, both passing away in the faith of the United Brethren Church. They were the parents of the following family: Mary A., who died young, as also did Elias; Joseph H., a carpenter at Mountville; Susan, Mrs. Froelich; Elizabeth, deceased wife of William Sneath, who is likewise deceased; Catherine, married to Frank Gerfin, a blacksmith of Mountville; Barbara, wife of Henry Rhodes, also a blacksmith, of Mountville; Mesiah, who died young; and Jacob, a carpenter in the city of Lancaster.

John M. Froelich has always been prominent as a Republican and has been active in promoting his party's interests on every possible occasion. He served on the school board three years. Fraternally he is a member of Lodge No. 67, I. O. O. F., of Lancaster. Socially the family stand very high and Mr. Froelich is recognized as one of the most progressive as well as substantial citizens of Mountville.

MARTIN H. GRUBE, proprietor of the "Union Stock Yards Hotel" at Lancaster, is a natural born hotel keeper, and his success in his present hostelry attests the truth of this statement. To entertain from ninety to one hundred and fifty people at dinner is considered very ordinary, and the menu and service are noted for their excellence.

Mr. Grube was born in Caernarvon township, Lancaster county, Nov. 23, 1847, and was reared and educated in that section, remaining in school until he was sixteen years of age, when he ran away Dec. 16, 1863, to enlist in Co. M, 19th Conn. V. I., and the following spring the regiment became the 2nd Conn. Heavy Artillery. He served until June 11, 1865, when he was mustered out at New Haven, Conn., after a faithful and creditable record as a private. After doing garrison duty at Forts William, Ellsworth and Albany, he was ordered to the front April 27, 1864, with his regiment, which joined the 6th Army Corps at Bell Plain, and was marched to the Wilderness, where they participated in the battles of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania Court House, and then marched to North Anna River, where Mr. Grube was detailed to picket duty with two comrades, James Kegan and James Graham, all on the same post. Kegan was killed and Graham wounded, but Mr. Grube escaped, and remained on duty until morning, when he was relieved. The regiment then marched to the Peninsula, where the enemy was checked, and in eleven hours they made a march of thirty-three miles to Cold Harbor, where the command was also heavily engaged. For two weeks this regiment had been under fire, and had lost over 700 men, among them Mr. Grube's last close comrade of five, Amaziah Livingston, from Harrisburg. The regiment was under fire a week at Petersburg, and assisted in the destruction of the Weldon Railroad, with the enemy pouring in hot shot at close quarters. At Washington they assisted in the repulse of the Rebels who had endeavored to rush the National Capital. It would fill a volume to give the story of all the thrilling experiences through which Mr. Grube passed. It is enough to say, that at the beginning of September, 1864, his company had been reduced to eight men, Mr. Grube and seven others. Eight recruits were received, and at the battle of Winchester, all but three of these fell, Mr. Grube being wounded in the right arm by a minie ball. He kept on fighting until he was struck a second time, a ball entering his abdomen and coming out between the hip and the backbone. He was removed to the field hospital with thirty-three comrades, where he remained for six weeks, when three of the thirty-three were sent to the hospital at Philadelphia, the rest having died. At this point he was cared for until in April, 1865, when he was sent to New Haven, Conn., where he was mustered out, June 11, 1865, having passed through all these terrible experiences before he was seventeen years old. After his discharge Mr. Grube returned to the home of his parents in Lancaster county. After leaving the hospital he had already been home on a furlough, but was so emaciated, that even his brother failed to recognize him.

When Mr. Grube had attained his majority he rented the "Blue Ball Hotel," in East Earl, which he operated for a few years as a rented property and then buying it, conducted the place fourteen years. For ten years he was in the cattle business, in agricultural pursuits and also in the leaf tobacco trade, and is still dealing in leaf tobacco. It was in 1895 that Mr. Grube leased the "Union Stock Yards Hotel," which he has since most successfully conducted. His tobacco warehouse is at Blue Ball, where he owns several other properties—one of the buildings, which is a handsome one, having been erected by himself.

A staunch Republican Mr. Grube was honored with the position of director of the poor, which he held for six years. He was a member of the building committee on the erection of the new and handsome Lancaster County Insane Asylum. He has also served as assessor and collector of East Earl township for two terms. Mr. Grube takes much interest in fraternal matters, and belongs to several societies, among them being Admiral Reynolds Post, No. 405, G. A. R. He is a past master of Howell Lodge, No. 405, F. & A. M., and is a member of the Knights of the Golden Eagle.

In 1869 Mr. Grube was married to Miss Maggie Cox, a daughter of William Cox. To this union have come seven children: Harry F., associated with his father in business, married Rachel Seldomridge and has two children, Sarah and Harry; John C., proprietor of a hotel at New Holland, married Katie Stauffer, and has three children, Margaret, Anna and Jay; Nora is at home; William C., secretary of the board of directors of the poor, married Clara Kurtz, and has two children, Helen and Franklin; Winfield Scott, representing the Beaver Manufacturing Co., of Beaver, Pa., married Belle Morrow, and has two children, Catherine and Esther; Martin L. is at home; and Annie died in infancy.

The parents of Mr. Grube were born in Lancaster county. His father was a farmer in Caernarvon township where he owned a good farm and died at the age of seventy-eight, his wife also dying at about the same age. Of their children we have the following record: Elizabeth married Philip Furman, and both are now deceased; Martha married George Spotts, and is deceased; David is deceased; John H. is a resident of Caernarvon township; Mary Ann is the widow of John Myers, of Caernarvon, Berks county; Rachel is the wife of William Shuler, of Kansas; Daniel H. was at one time proprietor of the "Imperial Hotel," in Lancaster; Martin H. is mentioned above; and three others died in infancy.

ADAM R. GROFF (deceased), was for many years one of the most respected farmer-citizens of Pequea township, and passed his entire life on the farm now occupied by his family. He was born there April 20, 1838, son of Jacob Groff, who was also a native of Lancaster county, and followed farming all his life on the farm which afterward became the property of his son Adam. Jacob Groff died in 1872. He married Miss Mary Rush, of Lancaster county, and they were the parents of nine children, namely: Henry and Jacob, both of whom died in childhood; John, deceased; Elizabeth (deceased), wife of Christian Good; Adam R., our subject; Susan, (deceased), wife of Benjamin Rissel; Nancy, widow of Jacob Breneman; Hettie, wife of Simon Good; and Amos, of Quarryville, who died July 3, 1902. The father was a member of the Old Mennonite church.

Adam R. Groff was educated in the local public schools, and farmed with his father until he was about twenty-five years of age. He married for his first wife, Miss Elizabeth Sterneman, who became the mother of six children: Aldess, of Philadelphia; Annie, deceased; Cyrus, foreman of the car shops of the Wilmington trolley line, who died Jan. 14, 1902; Jacob, of Wilmington, Del.; Enos, deceased; and Mary, who is living at home. Mrs. Elizabeth Groff died Jan. 18, 1874, and on Nov. 3, 1875, Mr. Groff wedded Miss Mary Herschok, daughter of John Herschok, of Lancaster county. To this union were also born six children: Martha, wife of Edward McMichael, of Pequea Valley; Ella N., who is at home; Harry, who lives at home and has charge of the farm; Tillie, at home; Katie, who died when twelve years of age; and Charles, at home.

Mr. Groff was a member of the Old Mennonite church, as are also his widow and eldest daughter. He was a Republican in politics, and held the office of county committeeman for some time. Mr. Groff died Feb. 21, 1901, and was sincerely mourned in the community where his long and useful life had been spent. He was a man of high character, and occupied an enviable position among his neighbors and fellow-citizens.

WILLIAM YOHN, a resident of Caernarvon township, descends from a good German parentage, and the family has long been known in Lancaster county, whither the grandfather of William Yohn came from Germany; he established himself in Caernarvon township, where he died at an advanced age. He married and cultivated a small farm.

His son, the father of William Yohn, was born in Caernarvon township, where he was reared. The most of his active years were spent in Brecknock township, where he was known as one of the most extensive farmers and public-spirited citizens of the community. In politics he was a Democrat, and filled several of the local offices. When he died he was about seventy-seven. His wife, Catherine Styer, was a daughter of Frederick Styer, a native of Caernarvon township. She was a member of the Lutheran church, and lived to be ninety-eight; Mr. Yohn belonged to the Reformed church. They had a family of thirteen children: John deceased, a farmer in West Hempfield township, who for many years kept the hotel at Mountville; Jacob, who was a farmer and stock dealer in Caernarvon township, now dead; Elizabeth, late wife of Christ Snader, of East Earl township; Sarah, who married E. Moser, and went to Minnesota; Catherine and Peter, both dead; William; Adam, who died young; Caroline, deceased wife of Jacob Hudson, who settled in Wayne county, O.; Rachel, deceased wife of Anthony Good; Mary, who married Samuel Faltz, of Terre Hill; Ellen, who married Peter Faltz, both deceased; David, deceased, a retired farmer of Mountville.

William Yohn was born April 8, 1818, on the farm adjoining his present location, about a half mile north of Churchtown. His education was secured in the subscription schools, and when he was twenty-one years of age he began working for wages. When he was thirty years old he was married, and rented the farm where he was born. For nine years he farmed there, and then purchased the place, which he has since made his home; it comprises 167 acres of fine farm land and is known as one of the best farms in Lancaster county. He is both a general farmer and stock raiser, and has proved himself one of the most successful agriculturists of the county. He is a lover of out-of-door recreations, and an enthusiastic devotee of the fox hunt, and the baying of the hounds was always music in his ears.

Mr. Yohn was married in 1848, to Miss Mary Bechard, a daughter of Philip Bechard, of Caernarvon township. She died in February, 1890, at the age of sixty-one. To their union came the following children: Theodore, who died in childhood; Edward, Barton, Martin and Thomas, who all died in infancy; Clement, a tobacco farmer on the old homestead; Linford, who lives in Lancaster, in the employ of Peter Ammon, and married to Annie Shank; Emma, who married Barton Gable, and lives in Springfield, Pa.; Margaret, who married William Shirk, and lives in Philadelphia; William, who married Annie Curley, and farms on the old homestead, also dealing in fat horses.

Mr. Yohn is a member of the Reformed church, and has been one of its most active and valuable members.

GEORGE KREIDER, a well known and enterprising farmer of East Lampeter township, is a native of Lancaster county, born Sept. 5, 1841, in Pequea township, son of Michael Kreider.

George Kreider, his grandfather, was also born in Pequea township, and followed farming all his life. He was one of the Old Mennonites in religious faith. He married Miss Sabina Benedict, and they reared a family of six children: Michael; George and Christian, both deceased; John, of East Lampeter township; Barbara, wife of Christian Harnish; and Mary, wife of George Kridig.

Michael Kreider was born in Pequea township in 1818. He followed butchering during the early part of his life, and later engaged in farming in Strasburg township. In politics he was a Republican, and held the office of supervisor in Pequea township for some years. For his first wife he married Miss Nancy Byers, and they became the parents of seven children, one of whom died in infancy; Benjamin is a resident of Eden;

Annie is the wife of Elias Hershey; George is our subject; Barbara is the wife of John Huber; Elizabeth is the wife of Ed. Miller, of Strasburg; Mary is the wife of Elwood Kreider. The mother dying in 1853, Mr. Kreider married for his second wife Mary Leckey. To this union came seven children: Sarah, wife of Harry Rohrer; David, of East Lampeter; Tabitha, wife of John Eby; Susan, widow of Abram Rank; Frances, wife of Jacob Rank; Kattie, unmarried; and Martin, of West Lampeter.

George Kreider lived at home until he was twenty-eight years of age, and was educated in the common schools of Lancaster county. He married Miss Annie Melinger, of Soudersburg, and lived on the farm of his father-in-law over twelve years, after which he purchased the farm where he now resides, and where he has continued farming until the present time. He is actively interested in the affairs of his locality, and was school director for six years. Mr. and Mrs. Kreider are both members of the Old Mennonite church. They are the parents of thirteen children, five of whom died in infancy: John is a Mennonite preacher in Missouri; Sarah is the wife of Ira Hershey; Benjamin is a resident of Soudersburg; Jesse lives on his father's farm; Jacob clerks in Esbenshade's store, at Leaman Place; Margie married Parke Book, a farmer living about a half mile from Strasburg; Susan and Esther are unmarried, and at home.

JOHN M. GROFF, of Strasburg township, who resides upon his valuable farm about one and one-half miles south-east of Strasburg, belongs to one of the old and substantial families of Lancaster county.

John M. Groff was born in Eden township, near Quarryville, Dec. 11, 1839, a son of Martin and Mary (Eshleman) Groff. Grandfather Jacob Groff owned a large farm and the mill which is now known as Bassler mill, near Camargo, in this county, and there he probably passed his whole life. His family consisted of seven children: David; Benjamin; Martin; Jacob; Susan, who married Christian Lefever, of Quarryville; Catherine, who married John Welch, of Quarryville, who later moved to Drumore township; and Elizabeth, who married John Brown, of Little Britain township.

Martin Groff was reared on the farm and around the old mill, near Quarryville, where he attended school, and while yet a young man, he went to Lampeter for a time, where he was employed in a store; later he went to Harrisburg, where he was employed for some time in a hotel, about a year later returning to Lancaster county and following clerking. After his marriage, at the age of twenty-eight, he opened up a mercantile business of his own, in Hawkesville, and also became interested in lime burning, continuing in those lines until about 1840, when he purchased a farm of sixty acres in Strasburg township, where he finally died, after some years of retirement, and where his son now resides. Mr. Groff was known through the community as a man of high moral character, generous and charitable, and always in favor of measures which promised benefit to the community. For a long term he served on the board of education and was much regretted at the time of his death, which occurred March 17, 1887, at the age of eighty-three years and three months. His widow survived him until 1895, her years reaching eighty-seven. A family of six children had been born to them: Alice A., who died in January, 1899; Susan K., who resides with John M., on the old homestead; Mary N., who married A. K. Warful, of Lancaster City; Joanna, who died in 1877; John M.; and Saloam, who died in childhood.

John M. Groff was reared on the farm and was educated in the public schools, going from there into the Strasburg Academy, and later to the Millersville State Normal School, thus obtaining a thorough education which has fitted him to cultivate his land more intelligently and scientifically, and also to take prominence in the public affairs of this part of the county. Like his father, he is progressive and public-spirited and interested in educational matters. Although an ardent Republican, he has never been willing to assume the cares of office. For a number of years he has been a consistent member of the M. E. church, and is one of the most respected citizens of his neighborhood.

BENJAMIN HOFFMAN, whose prominence in the agricultural world has brought him to the front rank among Lancaster county's progressive citizens, was born in East Donegal township Nov. 2, 1827, son of Michael and Magdalena (Musser) Hoffman.

Michael Hoffman was born in Hanover township, York Co., Pa., son of Michael and Anna (Long) Hoffman, prominent farming people of that county, who later removed to East Donegal township, Lancaster county, where the former died. They had two children, Elizabeth and Michael. Michael, father of Benjamin, was an industrious farmer, and by his thrift and enterprise became one of the large land owners in his section, owning four fine farms. He married Magdalena Musser, daughter of Jacob Musser, a farmer of East Donegal, and to their union came children as follows: Anna, deceased wife of John B. Engle, now of Cumberland county, Pa.; Benjamin, mentioned below; Michael M., of East Donegal township; Mary, widow of Daniel M. Engle, now of Philadelphia; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Peter B. Nissley; Jacob, deceased; Henry, deceased; and John, now of Snyder county, Pa., who wedded Martha Engle. The mother died in 1840, at the early age of thirty-two years. Mr. Hoffman then married Nancy Hershey, who bore him two children: Susan, wife of Cyrus L. Engle, of Conoy township; and Abraham, a farmer, who married Sarah Shank. The father died in 1862, aged fifty-eight years, and sleeps his last sleep in the cemetery in East Donegal.

Benjamin Hoffman worked on the home farm during his boyhood and early manhood, remaining with his parents until he was twenty-six years of age, when he married and moved to his present farm of 100 acres. He has been very successful, and though he has continued to make his home on his present farm he is the owner of four other fine farms, all of which are under a high state of cultivation, and are very productive. In connection with farming he has engaged in the leaf tobacco business since 1864. He is a hard worker, and has found that in order to succeed he must give his personal attention to all his workmen, and he keeps in constant touch with all the various labors performed on his estate.

In spite of the time necessarily devoted to his own affairs Mr. Hoffman has found ample opportunity to keep well informed on public events, and is very progressive, and thoroughly up-to-date in everything he does. He is greatly interested in the advancement of education and the improvement of the district schools, and for six years has served very capably as school director. In politics he is a Republican. In religious connection Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman are identified with the River Brethren Church and Church of God, respectively.

On Dec. 6, 1853, Mr. Hoffman was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Rhoads, the ceremony being performed by Rev. J. Strine. Mrs. Hoffman was born in Manor township, Lancaster county, Oct. 23, 1829, one of the seven children of George and Elizabeth (Sweigart) Rhoads, farming people of Lancaster county. Mr. Rhoads died in East Donegal township in July, 1854, aged fifty-four years, and his wife, who was born in 1802, died in 1887. The other children born to Mr. and Mrs. Rhoads, and carefully reared in the faith of the Lutheran Church, were as follows: Abraham S., of Maytown, Pa., died in 1901; Fannie S., deceased, was the wife of George Lutz; Levi S. is a retired farmer of Eden township; Mary S., deceased, was the wife of Henry K. Shenk, of West Hempfield township; Susannah S. is the widow of Christian L. Brandt, of Maytown, Pa.; George S. is residing in Maytown. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman was blessed with the following named children: Paris R., born Sept. 11, 1855, died at the age of nineteen. Michael R., born Jan. 31, 1857, is a leaf tobacco merchant of Maytown, Pa.; he married Ida Risser, and has six children, Paris R., Michael R., Jr., Amos R., Guy S., Mary and Esther. Emma M., born Nov. 3, 1858, married W. B. Detwiler, of Mt. Joy. Anna Martha, born July 27, 1860, married John S. White, a farmer of Maytown, and has three children, Norman H., Hoffman and Susannah H. Mary H., born July 24, 1862, married Jonas E. Geyer, a miller of Marietta, and has three children, Viola H., Clayton E. and Hoffman. Benja-

Elizabeth R., born Aug. 17, 1869, married Christiana N. Mumma, of Mt. Joy. MICHAEL M. HOFFMAN. The farming interests of East Donegal township, Lancaster county, are in the hands of capable and progressive men, who have done much to place that part of the county in the favorable position it now occupies. Among those who for many years have been prominently identified with its growth and progress is Michael M. Hoffman, a farmer of means, who conducted a flourishing leaf tobacco business in Maytown for a period of eighteen years.

Mr. Hoffman was born on his present farm Oct. 4, 1829, son of Michael and Magdalena (Musser) Hoffman. When eleven years of age Michael Hoffman came to this farm, and remained upon it until 1854, when he removed up the road into Conoy township, there passing the remainder of his life. He retired from active labor some nine years prior to his death; he and his wife were buried in East Donegal cemetery. Both had been good and pious members of the River Brethren Church. Their children were: Anna (deceased), who married John B. Engle; Benjamin, a resident of the old farm on which his father died; Michael M.; Mary, widow of Daniel Engle, of Philadelphia; Elizabeth (deceased), who married Peter B. Nissley; Jacob, deceased; Henry, deceased; and John, a farmer of Snyder county. The second marriage of Michael Hoffman, the father, was to Anna Hershey, and their children were: Abraham, a farmer of Conoy township (his wife is the postmistress at Lobata); and Susannah, who married Cyrus Engle, of Conoy township.

Michael M. Hoffman, whose name opens this biography, was reared on the farm and educated in the common schools of his district, remaining with his father, on his farm, until he had attained his majority, at which time he moved to an adjoining tract. He remained there three years, thence moving, in 1876, to the farm he now occupies. Later Mr. Hoffman saw a fine opening in the leaf tobacco business, and moved into Maytown, where he succeeded so well that he remained one of the prominent merchants, for eighteen years, but finally returned to the comforts and pleasures of farm life again. During the whole progress of the Civil war he was enrolling officer, and he has been a leading Republican in his part of the county for many years.

Mr. Hoffman was married Dec. 10, 1850, in Harrisburg, Pa., to Anna L. Zeigler, who was born on an adjoining farm in East Donegal township, May 22, 1831. To this marriage have been born: Helen; Sabilla and Horace, who died in infancy; Walter; Ephraim; Jacob, who married Maud Pratt, and is a practicing physician in Wichita, Kan.; Eli, a tobacco buyer, in Maytown, who married Eiva Jacobs; William G., assistant manager of the South American Trust Company, residing in Havana, Cuba; and Bertha, a trained nurse of Philadelphia—all intelligent and most highly respected in their several localities.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman are consistent members of the Church of God, are known throughout the neighborhood as most estimable people, and are among the best representatives of the fine old township of East Donegal and that part of Lancaster county.

MICHAEL R. HOFFMAN has been identified with the leaf tobacco business in Lancaster county throughout the period of his independent business career, and his connection with the Hoffman Leaf Tobacco Company, of which he is now a member, has gained added prestige for that concern of high standing. Mr. Hoffman is a strong man in every sense of the term, and his influence in the county in which he has passed his life has been felt in various directions. He is likewise a representative of some of the best of the old stock of Lancaster county, being descended both paternally and maternally from pioneers of this part of the State. He was born Jan. 31, 1857, on the farm in Conoy township, where his parents, Benjamin and Elizabeth (Rhoads) Hoffman, still reside.

(I) John Hoffman, his first ancestor in America in the paternal line, emigrated to this country from the Swiss Palatinate in about 1717, and settled in Lancaster county, Pa., near Chiques creek, in the neighborhood of Newtown, Rapho township. Michael R. Hoffman traces his descent from this pioneer through his son, (II) Christian Hoffman, born in 1730, who served under Washington at Braddock's defeat, in 1755. Christian Hoffman had six sons, Christian, David, Jacob, Joseph, John (born about 1775), and Michael (born in 1766, the next in line to Michael R.). Of this family, Christian settled in Bedford county, at Morrison's Cove, and was the progenitor of a large and prosperous family. Jacob was located for a time in Richmond, Va., and was at one time a prosperous slave dealer, but he returned to Pennsylvania and spent his latter days in East Donegal township, Lancaster county. John and David settled near Newtown, Rapho township, this county.

(III) Michael Hoffman, son of (II) Christian, born in 1766, settled in what is now East Donegal township. He had two children, Michael and a daughter.

(IV) Michael Hoffman, born Oct. 5, 1803, son of Michael, died Feb. 25, 1862. He married Magdalena Musser, who was born Jan. 18, 1809, and died Nov. 30, 1840.

(V) Benjamin Hoffman, son of Michael, and father of Michael R., is mentioned elsewhere.

On the maternal side, the first of Mr. Hoffman's ancestors in this country of whom we have record, was Ludwig Rhoads (now written Rhoads), who was of German descent, and who served as a soldier in the Revolution. His family consisted of four daughters and six sons: Henry, David, Peter, John, Jacob and George, all of whom but George, the youngest, moved to Canada and Erie, Pa., early in the nineteenth century; they left numerous descendants. George Rhoads, just mentioned, was the grandfather of Michael R. Hoffman. He was born in 1800, and died in 1854, in East Donegal township, near Marietta, highly respected in the community where his useful and successful life had been passed. He married Elizabeth Sweigart, and they had a family of seven children—three sons and four daughters—namely: Abraham, Levi, George, Fannie, Elizabeth (mother of Michael R. Hoffman), Mary and Susanna.

(VI) Michael R. Hoffman attended the Millersville school until he was sixteen years old, after which he taught for a few years. But the profession did not open to Mr. Hoffman the prospects for success which a man of his energy and ability would naturally seek, and before long he had embarked, in 1878, in the tobacco business in Maytown, Pa., in partnership with a Mr. Grove, and his uncle, Michael M. Hoffman, the firm being known as Grove, Hoffman & Co. They continued in business together until 1880, when the partnership was dissolved. Mr. Hoffman's next location was in Bainbridge, this county, where he remained about seven years, continuing in the same line on his own account, and meeting with flattering success. In 1888 he moved his office and tobacco interests to Marietta, Pa., which offered a wider field for his operations, and where he has remained up to the present time. His business has shown a steady increase from year to year. It was gradually merged into the Hoffman Brothers, and later into that of the Hoffman Leaf Tobacco Company, a concern now well and favorably known all over the country. The business has so expanded that they now have packing houses in Marietta, Columbia, Emigsville and Maytown, Pa., and in the States of Ohio, Indiana and Wisconsin, and employ, in the busy season, about two hundred people. It is the largest establishment of its kind in Lancaster county, the company controlling at the present writing, fifteen thousand cases of tobacco. Mr. Hoffman has, in his long connection with this particular branch of business, acquired an intimate knowledge of its details which makes him an authority in his line.

Mr. Hoffman's success is due as much to his courteous personal treatment of patrons as to his honorable business methods, and he is the same in his intercourse with all, having a kind word for everyone. He has worked hard all his life, augmenting his fine business talents with an untiring energy and industry made possible by a strong physique. Mr. Hoffman also devotes considerable time to the advancement of agricultural pursuits in the county. He is a power for good throughout his community, aiding and promoting many good works. In political belief Mr. Hoffman is and always has been an ardent Republican. He is now serving his fourth term as school director in Maytown, where he resides, in a home provided with all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. He is one of the directors of the Exchange Bank of Marietta, was promoter of the Marietta Castings Company, and is a director in the Columbia Flint Company, of Columbia borough.

On Nov. 27, 1884, Mr. Hoffman was united in marriage with Miss Ida Risser, daughter of Jacob and Anna Risser, of Rapho township, a union which has been blessed with six children, born and named as follows: Paris R., Dec. 24, 1885; Michael R., Jr., July 27, 1887; Amos R., April 6, 1889; Guy S., Nov. 3, 1893; Mary, March 25, 1897; and Esther, April 2, 1901.

BENJAMIN F. HOFFMAN, proprietor of the Locust Grove Grist Mill, and extensive dealer in leaf tobacco, was born in Conoy township Oct. 21, 1863, son of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Rhoads) Hoffman, whose sketch may be found elsewhere.

The Locust Grove Mill is one of the historic buildings in its section of Lancaster county. It was built by John Haldeman and wife in 1790, and is located on the river road, seven miles from Marietta, and a half mile from the Bainbridge water power grist-mill. It was operated by Mr. Haldeman for some years, and was then in the hands of H. H. Wiley for many years. Mr. Hoffman became proprietor in April, 1899. At one time, long ago, a distillery was operated on this farm, near the present site of the mill.

Benjamin F. Hoffman and Miss Grace Stauffer were united in marriage Nov. 27, 1888, and to their union have been born the following named children: Olivia S., Ruth M., Pauline S. and Jean D.

Mr. Hoffman remained with his parents until he became of age, and was then engaged in farming in Dauphin county for three years. Coming back to Lancaster county, he spent a year with his brother in the leaf tobacco business at Maytown, at the end of that time opening up the tobacco business in Conoy township which he carried on for a time, when he went back to Maytown to farm and deal in tobacco for four years. In 1899 he bought his present business, as noted before, and has already achieved a decided success as a miller. In connection therewith he still buys and sells leaf tobacco. Mr. Hoffman is a genial and polished gentleman, thrifty and well-to-do, and is one of the prominent men of the township, and his character and standing are in every way beyond question. In politics he is a Republican.

NORMAN R. HOFFMAN, a dealer in leaf tobacco and one of the intellectual and enterprising young business men of the thriving little village of Bainbridge, whose name is synonymous with honesty and fair dealing, was born in Conoy township Nov. 28, 1867, son of Benjamin Hoffman.

The Hoffmans are an old family in Lancaster county, and the various representatives have always been characterized by industry and integrity to a marked degree. The young man whose name appears at the beginning of this article well sustains the family reputation, and is an energetic and pushing character, attending to business with an eye single to success, and yet scorning a mean or underhanded action and despising trickery or deception.

On Christmas Day, 1892, Mr. Hoffman went to Janesville, Wis., where he spent some six months engaged in packing tobacco. At the expiration of that period he came back to Bainbridge, where he has since found his time and interests fully occupied, though he is absent much of the time on important business deals. Mr. Hoffman has been engaged in the tobacco business since 1888, and in that time he has achieved a marked success. Personally he is a fine character, and has a host of friends. He is "well fixed," as the saying is, owns a fine farm, though he does not work it, and gives himself to his business for the sake of doing something more than because he needs to earn money. He assisted in the organization of the Union Trust Co., of Lancaster. In the summer of 1902 he bought four properties in Bainbridge, including the fine "Central Hotel" at that place. Politically Mr. Hoffman is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Blue Lodge, F. & A. M.

Mr. Hoffman was married, Jan. 1, 1902, to Iva N. Hackenberger, daughter of G. W. Hackenberger, druggist of Bainbridge. The young couple occupy the finest residence in Bainbridge, which Mr. Hoffman bought.

CLAYTON R. HOFFMAN, a young and thrifty general farmer of Elizabethtown, was born on the old Hoffman homestead in Conoy township, Sept. 10, 1871, son of Benjamin Hoffman, a well-known resident of Conoy township.

Clayton R. Hoffman was reared on the home farm, where he remained until his marriage, when he removed to Maytown, to enter the employ of his brother in the leaf tobacco business, working in his warehouse three years. At the end of this period Mr. Hoffman removed to Rowenna, where he was engaged in farming until February, 1901, when he removed to Elizabethtown to follow the same vocation. He now lives two and one-half miles west of Elizabethtown, on the Harrisburg pike.

Mrs. Hoffman in her maidenhood was Miss Mary

Gish. She is the daughter of Mrs. Amanda Gish, and comes of a prominent family of West Donegal township, mentioned elsewhere. Mr. Hoffman is a Republican. He is not a member of any church, but stands high in the estimation of the community as an intelligent and industrious young man, with a high character, and an integrity that is beyond question. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman are greatly esteemed in the community for their many good qualities, and a host of friends bear witness to their genuine worth.

JACOB BAKER LONG, son of the late John F. Long and brother of Charles E. Long, is, and has been for many years, a leading broker of Lancaster.

Jacob B. Long was born in the old family home on East Orange street, opposite the First Presbyterian Church, Oct. 25, 1849, and was partially educated in the public schools of Lancaster city. He attended Yeates Institute for a time, and was then sent to Eastman's Business College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., from which he was graduated in due time. After completing his schooling he entered the dry goods business in this city, his first engagement being with Hager & Bro. A short time was spent there, and he then found employment with Howes & Macey, private bankers on Wall street, N. Y., where he remained two and a half years. We next find him a clerk in the bank of Reed, McGrann & Co., at Lancaster, with whom he spent a year, and then began the banking business on his own account, on the corner of Center Square and North Queen street, continuing there for two years. After the expiration of this period he was the local representative of a well-known Philadelphia banking house. Mr. Long was then made paying teller in the Farmers' National Bank, with which he continued for three years, from 1876. Mr. Long became a dealer in local stocks, bonds and other securities in 1879, on the second floor of the Long building, No. 10 North Queen street, and for many years he has been recognized as an authority on investments. From 1895 to 1900 Jacob B. Long was connected with the extensive house of H. F. Bachman & Co., bankers and brokers of Philadelphia. He returned to Lancaster in the spring of 1900 and opened a branch of the business of this company at No. 147 North Queen street. Here fine rooms were fitted up, and the business assumed large proportions. In Nov., 1901, he became manager for E. C. Miller & Co., bankers of Philadelphia, in their branch office, No. 313 Woolworth Building, Lancaster. J. B. Long & Co., No. 315 Woolworth Building, continue the leading brokers in local securities.

On June 30, 1881, Mr. Long was married to Ellen (Hayes) Hagar, the daughter of the late Judge Hayes, for many years an occupant of the judicial office in Lancaster county, and justly regarded as one of the most learned and intelligent gentlemen who ever wore the legal ermine in this county. Mr.

Long, on his return to Lancaster, made the beautiful colonial cottage on Wheatland avenue his home until the winter of 1900, when he moved into the large and commodious Calder home on East Orange street, which he had bought and thoroughly remodelled the previous summer.

JOHN F. LONG, junior member of the firm of J. B. Long & Co., brokers, at No. 10 North Queen street, Lancaster, enjoys a social standing second to that of no other young man in the city, is the youngest son of Charles E. Long, the druggist, and is a nephew of his partner, J. B. Long. Our subject has had a very active and successful business career for a man of his years. He was born in Lancaster June 29, 1875, and, after attending the public schools, left the Boys' High School of Lancaster to take a special business course in Weidler's Business College. On leaving the latter institution he was employed by Christopher Hager, in the fire insurance business, continuing thus from 1893 to March, 1895, when he entered the office of his uncle, J. B. Long, as manager, the uncle at that time being connected with a large banking house in Philadelphia, necessitating his residence in the latter city. From 1898 on Mr. Long was an acting partner with his uncle, and on April 1, 1900, became a full partner, under the firm title of J. B. Long & Co. This firm is the leader in local securities, of which they make a feature, and no establishment in the community is better known.

John F. Long was married, June 5, 1900, to Miss C. May Stauffer, daughter of J. Newton Stauffer, owner of the extensive hat house of Stauffer & Co., and member of the firm of Shreiner & Stauffer, dealers in hardware and house furnishings. Mr. Long is a member of the Young Republicans, and of the Elks, and is a Lutheran in religion, uniting with the church of the Holy Trinity.

HUGH RAMSEY FULTON, Esq., a prominent member of the Lancaster Bar, is a descendant of John Fulton, who was born in Scotland in 1713, emigrated to America, and settled in Nottingham, Chester Co., Pa., in 1762.

The historian Macaulay says: "They who take no pride in the deeds of a remote ancestry will hardly be likely to accomplish anything worthy to be remembered by a remote posterity." The Fulton family has a crest, reproduced from Fairbairn's "Book of Crests of Great Britain and Ireland," with the legend, "Things which we ourselves have done," and the motto, "Rest is attained by labor." This crest may be seen in the State Library at Harrisburg, but the Fultons have not attempted to gather any lustre from it, though every one of them has been a "doer of noble deeds." Their men have been industrious and intelligent, and many of them have won rank and standing as tried and valiant soldiers in the American armies; and their women have been earnest and noble workers in the home circle, in the church, and in the doing of blessed charity, chief of all the virtues.

Hugh Ramsey Fulton, of the fourth generation in this country, was born in East Nottingham, Chester Co., Pa., Nov. 16, 1843. His primary education was received in the subscription and public schools of his district, and at the Chestnut Level Academy. While employed at the chrome banks near his home the war of the Rebellion broke out, which, putting a stop to the chrome industry, threw him out of work. For a time he worked at hod carrying, and then the spirited lad joined the Union army, on June 27, 1863, as a member of Co. G, 1st Battalion, six-months volunteers, which afterward became the 187th P. V. I. At that time the four brothers, Dr. James Fulton, Major William T. Fulton, Joseph M. and Hugh R., were all in the army, and their father was doing what he could at home for the cause in which they were fighting. Soon after the expiration of his first term of enlistment Hugh R. re-enlisted, in the regular army, and was assigned to Battery E, 5th Regiment, United States Artillery, then located at Chambersburg, soon joining the Army of the Potomac in Virginia. The young artilleryman served with his command in the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court House, North Anna River, Cold Harbor, the first attack on Petersburg, and through the entire siege of that city. At the time of the springing of the mines in front of the Rebel stronghold he was stationed at Fort Hell, regarded as the hottest place on the fighting line. Young Fulton nobly bore his part amid these trying scenes, and was in the last battle of the Army of the Potomac, which was fought at Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; he was also one of the brave thousands who participated in the exciting events of the close of the war, and the Grand Review at Washington. Remaining in the army until the close of his term, he served in Florida and the Carolinas, and was honorably discharged, his discharge papers bearing this endorsement, signed by Truman Seymour, Brevet Major General, and Captain of the 5th Artillery. "One of the most faithful and intelligent soldiers I have ever known." He also gave this endorsement: "Sergeant Hugh R. Fulton, now discharged from the United States army, has served three years in the field with a steadiness and fidelity that might be equalled, but could not be surpassed."

On returning from the army Mr. Fulton entered Taylor's Select School, at Oxford. In August of the same year he became teacher of the Union school in Elk township, where he taught three terms. He registered with his brother, William T. Fulton, Esq., at Oxford, as a student of law, in the spring of 1868. In October of that year he matriculated at the Law Department of the University of Michigan, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in March, 1870. Coming at once to Lancaster, where he had determined to follow his professional career, he was admitted to practice April 19, 1870. He entered the office of the late Hon. William A. Atlee.

Mr. Fulton has received many evidences of the public confidence and trust which his upright and manly life have commanded, in his election to important and responsible public positions where are demanded ability, public spirit and character of a high type. In 1872 he was elected solicitor for the Home for Friendless Children in Lancaster, and held that position four years; he was afterward chosen as a trustee of that institution, and in 1876 its treasurer; as such he served the high and noble interests this institution conserves until 1902, a period of twenty-six years. In January, 1879, he was elected on the Republican ticket as County Solicitor, and received unstinted praise from all interested in the proper administration of the duties of that responsible position for his faithful and intelligent discharge of its functions. His term was marked by a large number of land damage cases, arising from opening numerous streets in the city of Lancaster, and by his recovery from the State of Pennsylvania of a claim of $23,000 for excess taxes in previous years. In 1883 he was chosen City Solicitor, and won more than a local reputation by his collection of claims long unsettled, and his vigorous action in compelling certain influential corporations to comply with the city ordinances.

An organizer of the Lancaster General Hospital, one of the most worthy charities of the city, Mr. Fulton has served it as a director and secretary. He was also one of the organizers and superintendent of the Bethany Presbyterian Sunday-school, and served on the building committee of the church in the erection of the beautiful chapel which that body now occupies, on West End avenue. He was a member and an elder of the First Presbyterian Church, for several years, and took an active part in organizing the new Bethany Presbyterian Church, and was elected a member of the Session.

Mr. Fulton united with Oxford Lodge, F. & A. M., in 1867, and with Lancaster Chapter in 1873; he is a member of the Jr. O. U. A. M. For five years he was president of the Y. M. C. A. of Lancaster, and for many years has acted as one of its directors. Twice commander of Post No. 84, G. A. R., he has frequently been a delegate to the department encampments; has been assistant inspector-at-large of the Grand Army posts of the county, and was aide-de-camp on the staff of the commander-in-chief, Gen. Saxton.

In addition to his work previously mentioned Hugh R. Fulton has compiled and published an interesting work, the "Genealogy of the Fulton Family, Being Descendants of John Fulton," which was issued from the press of the New Era Printing Company in 1900, and contains 238 pages. Here is shown clearness of thought and expression, combined with a manly attitude towards all questions of right and conscience, ever characteristic of Mr. Fulton's actions.

In 1871 Mr. Fulton married Sallie T. Kerr, daughter of John A. Kerr, of East Nottingham, Chester county, and to their marriage were born the following children: Hugh Kerr, Eleanor Jane and John. Eleanor Jane Fulton was graduated from the Lancaster High School in the class of 1899, and from the State Normal School at Millersville in 1901. John Fulton graduated from the Lancaster High School, and is in the class of 1904 at Franklin and Marshall College.

Hugh Kerr Fulton, born in Lancaster, was graduated from the city high school in 1891, and four years later from Franklin and Marshall College. Organizing and teaching the Octoraro Academy in 1895 and 1896, he attended during this period the Reformed Theological Seminary at Lancaster, was graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1899, and is now pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Perrineville, Monmouth Co., New Jersey.

AMOS WEAVER, now living retired in East Lampeter township, is spending the balance of a long life of usefulness in well-earned ease and comfort. He was for many years prominently identified with agricultural interests in his section of Lancaster county, being a successful farmer in West Lampeter township. The family has long been well known in this county.

Jacob Weaver, the grandfather of Amos, was born in West Lampeter township, and lived there during his entire life, following farming exclusively. He married a Miss Neff, and they were the parents of nine children: Jacob; Samuel; David; John; Joseph; Elizabeth, wife of Henry Bowman; Martha, wife of Martin Harnish; Annie, who died unmarried; and Esther, wife of Jacob Lantz.

John Weaver, the father of Amos, was born in West Lampeter township. He also followed farming all his life. He married Miss Elizabeth Kreider, daughter of Christian Kreider, of West Lampeter township, and they had a family of nine children: Martin, of Strasburg; Christian, of Virginia; Amos; Elizabeth; Annie, who died unmarried; Cyrus, of Chester county, Pa.; Frank, of West Lampeter; Jacob, a physician of Strasburg; and John, who resides on the old homestead in West Lampeter. The parents were members of the New Mennonite Church.

Amos Weaver was born in West Lampeter township, near the old place, May 22, 1825, received a common school education, and lived at home until he was about twenty-five years of age. He then began life for himself, farming in West Lampeter, on the farm where his son, Frank M., now lives, and remaining there until about 1886. In that year he moved to East Lampeter, where he now lives retired, making his home with his son, Martin H. In religion he is a member of the New Mennonite Church.

Amos Weaver wedded Miss Mary Harnish, and to this union were born eight children: Emma, who died unmarried; Frank M., who lives on the old homestead, married Annie Metzger and has one daughter, Minnie; Susan, deceased wife of S. John Curtis, of Jersey City; Aldis J., who married Rebecca Miller and has one son, Ross; Amos K., who married Susan Gochenaur; Martin H., at home, who married Katie N. Howery; Ella F., deceased wife of Frank Miller; Phares B., deceased, a druggist in Lancaster. The mother of these children died in April, 1895.

DAVID BRANDT, in his life time one of the prominent and respected citizens of Lancaster county, was born in the vicinity of Mt. Joy, Dec. 6, 1820, and died March 2, 1863. His earlier life was passed on the home farm and his education obtained in the common schools. Mary Ann Stoner, his wife, was born Sept. 28, 1827, and died in August, 1898. They settled after their marriage some four miles from Mt. Joy, and there they passed their active lives. She was a member of the Old Mennonite Church, and became the mother of two children, Harriet, who was born March 5, 1852; and Christian, who was born July 5, 1853, and died Aug. 6, 1854.

The parents of David Brandt were Christian and Fannie (Zeamer) Brandt. The family has long been established in the vicinity of Mt. Joy, and it is supposed that Mr. Brandt was born near that village. He was a farmer and lived to be over eighty years of age. Christian and Fannie Brandt were members of the Dunkard church, and had the following children: Isaac; Christian; David; Fannie; Katie, Anna and Mary. The surviving members of the family are members of the Lutheran church at Manheim.

Harriet Brandt, daughter of David Brandt, represents the family in Landisville. She married Henry Sherer, Oct. 26, 1874, by whom she had one child, Lizzie, born Aug. 12, 1875, now the wife of Amos Cooper, a retired merchant of Landisville. As Mrs. Sherer's property is quite extensive, her son-in-law, Amos Cooper, looks after it for her. She owns three good farms, two in East Hempfield township and one in Dauphin county, besides a three-story, buff brick mansion in Landisville, with all modern improvements. She is a woman of manifest culture and refinement, and her home gives every indication of culture and good taste.

CHRISTIAN DUTT, once one of the most prominent business men of Lancaster county, Pa., and for years a worthy and highly respected citizen, was born in the county Feb. 14, 1818, and died April 8, 1891. He was a son of George and Elizabeth (Erb) Dutt, the former of whom was born and reared in Penn township, this county, was a blacksmith by trade, and passed his entire life in the township of his nativity.

Christian Dutt learned blacksmithing under his father and worked at the trade many years, until he was disabled by a kick from a horse. He then located in Lititz and became a drover, handling live stock in large numbers, and especially a high grade of cows.

Mr. Dutt was twice married; his first wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah Fulmer, died in 1850, the mother of one child, Mary, wife of Martin Bolinger, a resident of Lititz; by his second wife, Catherine Bolinger, he also became the father of one child, Lizzie, born Feb. 19, 1865, wife of Samuel G. Bare, likewise a resident of Lititz. Mrs. Catherine (Bolinger) Dutt was called from earth in 1879. Miss Lizzie Dutt was married to Mr. Bare Feb. 23, 1892, and to this union have been born three children: Gilmore, born Aug. 4, 1893, and died Sept. 7, 1893; Theodore, born Jan. 17, 1895, and died Feb. 22, 1902; and Le Roy, born Sept. 5, 1901.

SAMUEL G. BARE was born Nov. 18, 1867, in Brownstown, Lancaster county, and by vocation is a farmer, but has retired from active labor. He is a member of Lodge No. 253, Knights of Pythias, and of Golden Eagle Lodge, No. 67. Mr. and Mrs. Bare have the handsome and comfortable home on Broad street near the Square, and are among the most worthy and respected residents of the borough of Lititz.

JOHN G. BOOK. One of the thrifty and prosperous farmers of Drumore township is John G. Book, who was born in Strasburg township June 9, 1836, a son of John and Annie (Gist) Book, both of whom were natives of Lancaster county.

Grandfather David Book was a German by birth and one of the early settlers of Lancaster county. The family there born to him was as follows: Daniel, George, David, John, Michael, Elizabeth, Catherine and Martha. The father, John Book, married Annie Gist and they had nine children: Catherine, Levi and David, all deceased; Rebecca, wife of Benjamin Weaver, of Illinois; John G.; Mary Ann and Daniel, deceased; Elam, a farmer of Strasburg township; Amos, a farmer of Strasburg.

John G. Book was reared upon the farm and attended the common schools of his district. Although he started out in life a poor man, he is now one of the most substantial farmers in Lancaster county and owns a fine farm of 140 acres, on which is a fine residence, good barn and other buildings. With money in the bank and excellent crops each year he may well feel satisfied with the result of his labors.

On Nov. 19, 1863, Mr. Book was married to Miss Martha Miller, of Providence township, a daughter of George H. and Elizabeth (Lee) Miller, farmers, of German birth. The Miller family also comes of German extraction. Mr. and Mrs. Miller had ten children, eight of whom grew to maturity: Joseph, deceased; Mrs. Book; Benjamin; George; Martin; Elizabeth, widow of Abraham Mylin; Mary, deceased; Rachel; Samuel, the youngest. The remainder of the children died young. Mrs. Book is a cousin of Amos Hollinger, a farmer of Lancaster City, and her family is known as one of the oldest in this county. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Book: Mary, wife of Daniel Le Fefer, of East Drumore township, a farmer; Aldus, a baker of Quarryville, Pa.; Miller, married and living in Philadelphia; Enos, Elmer and Wesley, at home. The birth of Mrs. Book occurred on August 6, 1842.

In politics Mr. Book is a Republican and takes an active part in party matters. Honorable in all his dealings, Mr. Book commands the highest respect of his fellow-citizens and is in every way worthy of their esteem. Both he and his estimable wife are very kind-hearted, one evidence of this being the adoption of a child, Celia, to whom they have given their own name. This pleasant girl was born in 1886 and is an agreeable addition to the home circle.

EDWARD KRECKEL. It is not due to luck or chance that Mr. Kreckel, after an active business career in Lancaster, is enabled, in the twilight of existence, to partially retire from the labors incident to earlier years and to enjoy the comforts which his own industry has provided. Inheriting forcible traits of character from his German ancestry, he developed these through constant exercise, and has always led a useful, industrious life. Practically his earliest recollections are of Lancaster, although he is a native of Nassau, Germany, born Oct. 9, 1839. His paternal grandfather, James Kreckel, spent his entire life in that country, following the occupation of farmer and grain merchant.

John Kreckel, father of Edward Kreckel, was born in Nassau, where he conducted farm pursuits for some time. During the struggles that threatened the disruption of Europe in the early years of the nineteenth century, he bore a part as a soldier in the regular army, and was present at the battle of Waterloo. After seven years of service he was honorably discharged and resumed the life of a farmer. In 1842 he brought his family to the United States and settled in Lancaster, where he made his home until his death, July 1, 1867, at the age of seventy-four years. His wife, Catherine (Hilbert) Kreckel, was born in Germany in 1802 and died in Lancaster in 1895. The bodies of both were buried in the cemetery connected with St. Joseph's Catholic Church, of which they were faithful members. Of the children of John Kreckel one son, who bore the father's name, became a priest in the Roman Catholic Church and died in June, 1899, while filling the position of rector of the parish at Ottumwa, Iowa. A daughter, Catherine, married Philip Finger; George is living retired, in Lancaster; and the youngest child, Rosa, who was born after the family came to the United States, is the widow of Stephen Myers, a farmer of Lancaster.

As soon as old enough to enter school Edward

Kreckel was sent to the Lancaster schools, remaining there until he was twelve, when he entered upon life's struggles and took upon himself the responsibility of self-support. One of his first employments was in the Conestoga cotton factory; another was as errand boy in a hat store, after which he returned to the cotton mill. At fourteen years of age he began to serve an apprenticeship to the trade of saddler and harness maker with a Frenchman, F. X. Motton, in a small shop in Lancaster. Two years were spent in that place, after which he finished learning his trade under Henry Pinkerton. Having thus acquired a practical knowledge of the trade, he felt justified in starting out for himself, and during 1858 opened a small shop in Fairfield, Lancaster county. A year later he went to Louisville, Ky., where he was employed as a journeyman several months. Returning to Lancaster, he married and worked a short time, thence went to Cincinnati, O., but soon came back to Lancaster. At first he worked in the employ of others, but in 1881 opened a shop for himself, and from a small beginning worked up an important trade. The increasing business justified him in making a move to better quarters, and accordingly, in February, 1891, he opened a shop on the public square, where he has since continued, conducting the largest saddlery business in the entire county.

Though a believer in Democratic principles and stanch in his allegiance to party, Mr. Kreckel has always been averse to office-holding, and the only position his fellow-citizens have prevailed upon him to accept was that of councilman, and this he resigned after filling it a year. Reared in the Roman Catholic faith, he is a firm believer in its doctrines, and an active member of St. Anthony's Church. In August, 1859, in Lancaster, occurred his marriage to Catharine Rice, who was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1837, being a daughter of Charles and Mary (McTammey) Rice, also natives of that country. During 1842 the family immigrated to the United States and settled in New York City, but after a short time removed to Jersey City, from there went to Philadelphia and thence in 1854 to Lancaster, where they subsequently made their home. By trade Mr. Rice was a weaver, and was considered an expert in the manipulation of the old-fashioned hand looms. The children of Edward and Catharine Kreckel are Mary, Edward and John (twins), Catherine S. and Lucy. The oldest daughter is the wife of Fred Ruof, a saddler who is engaged in business with Mr. Kreckel; they are the parents of seven children. The two sons are connected with their father in business, and John is also an alderman. Edward married Anna McElvoy, by whom he had eight children, but only two of these are now living. Catherine S. died at thirty-seven years of age. Lucy is the wife of Henry Dentz, of Baltimore, Md., and they have four children. In the society of his children and grandchildren Mr. Kreckel is happily passing his declining years, his sons relieving him to a large extent of business cares and thus permitting him to enjoy the rest which his long and active career justly merits.

CHARLES C. SEITZ, a retired educator of Mountville, Lancaster county, was born Jan. 13, 1838, in Manor township, one mile from his present home, son of Jacob and Barbara (Charles) Seitz, natives of the same township.

Jacob Seitz was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed all his life, but was also a popular leader and a man of influence among his fellow citizens. He was a school director for many years; prison inspector of Lancaster county for a long time; for years was a director of the First National Bank of Columbia, Pa.; was one of the incorporators of the Mountville Manufacturing Company; and a promoter in general of the interests of his town and county. His death occurred in June, 1892, when he was in his eightieth year, and he was interred in Habecker's cemetery, in Manor township, by the side of his first wife, who passed away in December, 1848, at the age of forty. To Jacob and Barbara Seitz was born a family of nine children, namely: Anna, who is the wife of Henry Mann, a farmer; John, a retired farmer at Mountville; Jacob, a retired farmer of Manor township; Charles C., whose name appears at the opening of this sketch; Barbara, who died in Mountville, July 4, 1901, in her sixty-second year; Elizabeth, wife of Jacob R. Myers, a retired farmer of Manor township; Christian, who died young; Amos, a retired farmer living in Mountville; and Henry, who died young. By his second marriage, to Anna Charles, a sister of his first wife, Jacob Seitz had no children.

John and Anna (Garber) Seitz, the paternal grandparents of Charles C., resided on the old homestead in Manor township until they died, John Seitz passing away in 1847, at the age of seventy-five years, and Anna, his wife, in 1862, in her ninetieth year. He was a son of Jacob Seitz, who was born in Rhenish Bavaria, Germany, came to America in 1764, and soon afterward settled in Manor township, Lancaster Co., Pa. He married Elizabeth Witmer, a native of Lancaster county, and a member of the old family of that name here, her father being Michael Witmer, who came from Germany in 1732, and settled in Manor township. Jacob Seitz died in 1822, at an advanced age, his wife passing away some years before. Eleven children were born to Jacob and Elizabeth Seitz, five sons and six daughters, namely: John, grandfather of Charles C.; Jacob, a farmer and minister, who removed to Cumberland county, Pa., where he died at an advanced age; Michael, a farmer of East Hempfield township; Abraham; Henry, who removed to Springfield, Ohio, where some of his descendants still live; Veronica, who became the wife of John Forrey, of West Hempfield township; Barbara, who married Christian Newcomer, of Manor township;

Anna, wife of Jacob Forrey, of West Hempfield township; Catherine, who married Michael Kauffman, of Manor township; Magdalena, wife of Abraham Lantz, of Strasburg township; and Elizabeth, who married Henry Musser, of near Marietta, Donegal township.

The maternal grandparents of Charles C. Seitz were Jacob and Barbara (Herr) Charles. The ancestors of Jacob Charles came from Switzerland in 1734, and were pioneers of Manor township, Lancaster county, where they followed farming. To Jacob and Barbara (Herr) Charles were born eight children, in the following order, all now deceased: Elizabeth, who married John Hertzler, of Rapho township; Fanny, deceased wife of Rev. John S. Newcomer, a pastor of the German Baptist Church, at Mountville; Barbara, the mother of Charles C.; Catherine, deceased wife of John E. Newcomer, a retired farmer of Manor township, now residing in Mountville; Jacob; Mary, deceased wife of Jacob Froelich; Christian; and Anna.

Charles C. Seitz was reared on the home farm in Manor township, where he remained until he had attained his majority, acquiring in the meantime a solid common-school education. After becoming of age he attended the Millersville State Normal School, for three terms, after which he taught school for twenty-five years, with but few interruptions, in Lancaster county, principally in Manor township, and the last six years in Mountville, whither he had come in 1874. In 1889 Mr. Seitz abandoned the teacher's profession, and soon afterward entered the Internal Revenue office at Lancaster, as cashier for Collector Sam Matt. Fridy, serving four years under Harrison's administration. He also served in 1882 and 1883 as assistant paymaster for Major J. C. Muhlenburg, paymaster in the United States Army, being in the Department of Texas, with headquarters at San Antonio, Texas; but he did not like the position and resigned.

Mr. Seitz has been a director in the Mountville National Bank since 1892, and in January, 1901, was elected vice-president of that institution. He was also a director of the Mountville Manufacturing Company for three years, but resigned Aug. 4, 1900. Fraternally Mr. Seitz is a member of Lodge No. 67, I. O. O. F., of Lancaster, and is an honorary member of the Jr. O. U. A. M. In politics he is a Republican.

JOSEPH CHARLES, one of the most worthy and respected citizens of Lancaster county, Pa., was a son of John and Anna (Witmer) Charles, was born Feb. 25, 1825, on the old homestead, two miles southeast of Mountville, and died Dec. 2, 1899.

Joseph Charles was educated at the old log school house at the Habecker Church, remained on the homestead until twenty-five years of age, and then located on a farm about three-quarters of a mile from his birth-place, where he passed the remainder of his life. This tract, containing 111 acres, was improved by Mr. Charles principally, later by his sons, and was converted into one of the best farms in the county. Since then it has been divided into three distinct farms, each containing a good dwelling and all requisite out-buildings; still more recently one of these farms has been subdivided, and a subdivision containing thirty-eight acres sold to C. H. Charles and now occupied by David B. Charles. The other subdivisions, two in number, contain, respectively, forty-three and thirty acres, the larger one being the homestead, on which the widow and her son, David F., reside.

Joseph Charles married Miss Fannie Forrey, a daughter of John Forrey; she was born March 12, 1833, in West Hempfield township, about one mile east of Columbia. To this marriage there were born twelve children, in the following order: Benjamin F., a farmer near Petersburg, East Hempfield township; Anna and Ephraim, who both died in childhood; Christianna F., deceased wife of C. H. Hess, of West Lampeter township; John F.; David F., on the old homestead; Sue, wife of C. K. Rutt, of Manor township; Elizabeth, who died in childhood; Joseph F., a farmer in Manor township; Jacob F., a farmer in West Lampeter township; Frances F., wife of C. K. Herr, of Manor township; and Hettie, married to H. D. Charles, also of Manor township. The father of this family was quiet, unobtrusive and decidedly domestic in his habits, was a farmer all his life, was for nearly fifty years a member of the Mennonite Church, of which his wife was also a member, and was one of the most highly respected residents of the township and county.

JOHN F. CHARLES was born on the old homestead in Manor township Dec. 16, 1857, was reared a farmer, was educated in the public schools, remained with his parents until twenty-two years of age, and still resides on a part of the old homestead. On March 20, 1880, John F. Charles married Miss Sue H. Kreider, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Herr) Kreider, and after marriage he settled down to farming on his present thirty acres. To this marriage have been born two children, Walter K. and John K. The family attend the Mennonite Church, of which Mr. Charles served on the building committee when the Habecker edifice was rebuilt. In politics John F. Charles is a Democrat, has officiated as supervisor of the township four years and is the second Democrat that has ever held an office in Manor township—a clear indication of more than ordinary popularity.

FREDERICK STIVELY. Among the leading citizens of Lancaster county, a native son and esteemed resident is Frederick Stively, son of Frederick and Anna (Barr) Stively, born Nov. 25, 1839, in Drumore township.

Frederick Stively, the father of Frederick, Jr., was born in Germany in 1803, and died in June, 1891. His wife, Anna (Barr) Stively, was a daughter of Jacob Barr, who was one of the highly esteemed citizens of Lancaster county. She was born in 1805, in Eden township, and her death was in October, 1897.

The parents of Frederick Stively, the elder, came to America from their German home and settled in Paradise township, when their son was a babe, and both of them and their only daughter died before he had reached manhood. The only survivor of his family, the lad grew up in Paradise township, where he found friends and resided there a short time after his marriage, moving then to Drumore township, where for a number of years he engaged in farming. Later he made a purchase of a large tract of wild land in Colerain township, cleared and cultivated it, erected convenient and commodious buildings and made that place his home for many years. In 1874 he disposed of it and purchased extensive tracts of farming land near Camargo, in Strasburg township, erected a fine home and there he and his wife lived in comfortable retirement for the balance of their lives. There Frederick Stively, the younger, lived until he removed to his present home, in 1893.

Mr. Stively became prominent and wealthy and he was a leader in the Mennonite Church, being widely known in that connection; his name is associated with the founding of this religious body in that locality. The children born to Frederick Stively and his wife numbered nine, and they were as follows: (1) Frances, the eldest, born in this county, is the widow of John M. Shank, of Providence township, and has a family. (2) Jacob, born in Lancaster county, married Miss Sarah Stafford, of the same county, and they settled in New Providence, where he became one of the leading business men. His widow resides in Quarryville, and his one son, Jacob E., is a successful merchant of White Rock, Lancaster county. (3) Christianna and (4) Martha A. died in childhood. (5) Mary, born in Lancaster county, is the wife of David Miller, of Harrisburg, and they have one daughter, Lillie M. (6) Abraham L., born in this county, is a prosperous merchant of Colerain township, married Miss Emma Herr, of Quarryville, and has one daughter, Mary. (7) Lizzie, deceased, was the wife of Martin Mowry, of Camargo, in this township; she left one son, Frederick, who resides in Philadelphia. (8) John M., born in Lancaster county, married Miss Anna Brown, deceased, and they had one daughter, Anna, now the wife of George Bracken, of this county. His second marriage was to Miss Ella Wells, and his five children are Frances, Mary, Edna, John and Charles. They reside on a beautiful farm near West Grove, in Chester county. (9) Frederick was the youngest.

Frederick Stively was reared on his father's farm and was given a good common school education. In January, 1865, he was united in marriage to Miss Martha Brison, the worthy and estimable daughter of William and Martha (Harsh) Brison, a family well known throughout Lancaster county. Mrs. Stively was born in Paradise township Sept. 19, 1845, and grew up at Quarryville, where she was well educated. She lost her mother when she was very young and she remained her father's companion and housekeeper.

After marriage Frederick Stively took his bride to the old family home, in Strasburg, and there they resided for some twenty-seven years. Then Mr. Stively purchased the old Benjamin Fritz homestead, in 1893, where they have made many improvements, until now they own one of the very best farms in the township, fertile, productive and well situated. Mr. Stively also is the owner of two other farms in Eden township, these adjoining the old homestead.

Mr. Stively and his devoted wife have become the happy parents of ten children, their names and homes being: William F., a farmer, born in February, 1867, who married Miss Emma Lefever, of Quarryville, and has two children, Anna and Ada; Annie E., born in June, 1869, the wife of William Eckman, engaged in the grocery business in Lancaster City, where they reside with their two children, John and Martha; Ella M., born in September, 1871, the wife of John Dull, a farmer in Eden township, who has one daughter, Sarah E.; Emma M., born in August, 1873, who married William Dull and resides on a farm in Lime Valley, in this county, with one daughter, Mary; Laura A., born in October, 1875, who is the wife of Abraham Hostetter, of Strasburg township, and has one daughter, Helen; Abram L., born in March, 1877; John H., born in December, 1880; F. Laberta, born in November, 1882; Mable M., born in July, 1885; and Elsie B., born in September, 1889.

Although through life Mr. Stively has been an active and useful member of the Republican party, he has not aspired to public office and has never consented to serve. Religiously both he and wife have the pious, simple faith of the Mennonite Church. Mr. Stively is one of this county's leading agriculturists and his farm testifies to his excellent care and management. In Mrs. Stively he has had a cheerful, capable help-mate, and both have been blessed in their children and in each other.

GEORGE STAMBAUGH GEYER, or "Col." Geyer, as he is familiarly called by his friends, has one of the oldest Pennsylvania ancestries of any man in Lancaster county, the Geyers having settled in this county several generations ago.

One of the first party of Geyers to land in America settled in Lancaster county, while two of them went to Montgomery county, and one settled in New Orleans. Col. Geyer's great-grandfather, George Geyer, was a farmer of Warwick township, and the grandfather, John Geyer, who was a weaver by trade, also kept a store in Warwick township, and there was born the father, George Geyer, who was made a colonel of militia, his commission being given him by Gov. Porter, this same commission being among the valued possessions of the present Col. Geyer.

On the maternal side of the family the great-grandfather was Jacob Lindy, who served in the Revolutionary war, and when it had ended started for his home in Lancaster, his residence being the one now occupied by Jacob S. Frey, on West King street. As he passed through Philadelphia he purchased a rare piece of china, which is also one of the much prized relics of the genial colonel.

Col. George Geyer married Ann Mary Stambaugh, who was born on West King street, in this city, and who was a daughter of Anthony Stambaugh, and from this union seven children were born: two who died in early childhood; John A., a retired veteran of the war of the Rebellion, lives in Manheim; Jacob A., a retired farmer of Rothsville; Col. George Stambaugh, of this biography; Susan, the wife of Jacob R. Landis, of Rothsville; and Ann Mary, the wife of Zachery Keller, who is the agent for several counties for a large agricultural implement house, and resides in Manheim.

George Stambaugh Geyer was born in Rothsville, this county, March 7, 1839, and was educated in the public schools of the district, and in the State Normal school at Millersville. At the age of eighteen he began teaching school, and continued in this profession until he was twenty-four, having successfully taught for six terms, and then went to auctioneering and trading in cattle. In 1885 he came to Lancaster and took charge of the "Franklin House," on North Queen street, where he became celebrated as a host and built up an immense trade. Much to the regret of the traveling public, at the end of five years he gave up hotel-keeping, having been elected by a handsome majority of the Republicans of Lancaster county to the office of register of wills, and his term in that very important office won him approbation, on account of the intelligent and conscientious manner in which he conducted its affairs. At the close of his term as register he retired to private life, and has ever since lived in his elegant home on Prince street, near the Fulton Opera House.

Col. Geyer was married in 1860 to Miss Susan R. Royer, daughter of Daniel Royer, a farmer of Manheim township, and to this union six children were born, of whom Grant died in his eighth year, and the survivors are: Elmira, the wife of Clayton S. Carpenter, a farmer of Elizabeth township; Agnes, the wife of Harry W. Tetchmeyer, a sewing machine dealer, of Harrisburg; Elmer G., a graduate of the Lancaster high school, who now is clerking for the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, at Philadelphia; Susan R., a graduate of the Millersville State Normal school, who is now a successful teacher; and Hayden R., a graduate of Mercersburg Academy, who enlisted in the navy Feb. 2, 1902, and is serving on the "Columbia."

Col. Geyer was honored by the people of Warwick township, by being their choice for five successive terms for the assessorship of the township, and he has ever been held in the highest esteem in the community in which he has lived. Prominently identified with the Masonic order, he has been very active in relation to it, and is a valued member of Commandery No. 13. When the Confederates invaded Pennsylvania Col. Geyer was among the first to enlist to repel them, and he has an honorable discharge from this service. A Republican of the most earnest type, he has served a number of times on the Republican county committee, and is everywhere regarded as a man who can be depended upon in every campaign.

At one time Col. Geyer was a director of the Lincoln National Bank and is among the most influential citizens of Lancaster. Perhaps, though, it is as a host that Col. Geyer is at his best, and his hospitality knows no limit. In his beautiful and elegant home, where he is surrounded by every comfort, Col. Geyer treasures a number of very interesting relics, and one among these is a most comfortable antique arm-chair, which was fashioned by one of his ancestors in 1711.

PETER JACOBY (deceased) was throughout life a thoroughly respected citizen of Ephrata township, where he established a family whose members now rank among the leading citizens of their locality. His business was that of a stonemason, and while he left no large fortune to his heirs he left them an example of honesty and industry, and an unblemished name.

Peter Jacoby was a son of John Christian Jacoby, a native of Germany, who came to the United States while still a young man. John Christian married Miss Elizabeth Ridenbach, in Earl township, Lancaster county, and reared a family of six boys and three girls: Samuel; Jesse; Martin; Peter, born Dec. 31, 1819; Henry; William; Leah, who married Henry Snyder; Harriet, who died single; and Rachel, who married John C. Martin.

The marriage of Peter Jacoby was to Miss Anna Strohl, of Ephrata township, in 1846, and to this marriage eight children were born. William, the eldest, was married to Sarah Renninger, of East Calico township, in the fall of 1870. She was a daughter of John Renninger, a wealthy and esteemed farmer in that locality. This marriage was blessed with five children: Harvey, who died at the age of two years and nine months; Anna May, who married Wilson Stauffer and has one daughter, Grace; S. Grace; W. Howard; and Warren E. The other children were: (2) Lizzie, who married Christian Messner, of this township, and has five children, Emma, John, Jacob, Clara and Eva. (3) Emma, who married George S. Kemper, of Akron, and has three children, David, Maggie and Anna; (4) Annie, who married A. G. Killian, of Lititz, a retired merchant, and has three children, Peter, William and Florence; (5) Isaac, who married Susan Zorn, of Earl township, and has one child, Doris;

(6) Reuben E., who married Emma Reinhold, their living children being Margie, Robert and Wilson; (7) Leah, who married George Rutt, of Terre Hill, Pa., and has four children, Clayton, Walter, Henry E. and Anna; (8) Harry S.

REUBEN E. JACOBY was born Oct. 16, 1865, and was reared on a farm, although he has not pursued agricultural labor for some time. After finishing the common school course, and spending a season in study at the Normal School at Millersville, he learned the trade of a cigar-maker and then went upon the road as a traveling salesman; but for the past eleven years he has been engaged in the manufacture of cigars, and is now regarded as one of the leading business men of this locality, his residence and place of business being in Rothsville, this county.

Reuben Jacoby married Miss Emma Reinhold, of Warwick township. Socially he is connected with the I. O. O. F. and the K. of P., in both organizations being a valued member.

HARRY S. JACOBY, another worthy member of the Jacoby family, is a farmer, is also a teacher in the public schools in the county and has held the office of justice of the peace. His educational advantages were those of the common schools and the Normal School. He deserves the high esteem in which he is held in the community, being a man of character and stability and a most worthy representative of the founder of the family.

MICHAEL WIMER, a wheelwright of Quarryville, Lancaster county, was born in Providence township Feb. 15, 1838. He is the son of Joseph S. and Elizabeth (Everly) Wimer.

Joseph Wimer, the father, was born on the ocean in 1818, while his parents, Michael and Elizabeth Wimer, were on their way to America. They were born in Germany and settled in Eden township, Lancaster county, in 1818, where Mr. Wimer engaged in farming until his death, in 1830. He left a wife and seven children, as follows: Sallie, the eldest, born in Germany, who married George Stenmiller, of Germany, and settled in Lancaster county, where she died, leaving a family; Joseph, father of Michael; Susan and Michael, both deceased; Henry, at present living in Providence township with his family; John, deceased, who lived in Providence township, where his family still resides; Barbara, the deceased wife of Adam Rowe, of Strasburg.

Joseph Wimer grew to manhood in Lancaster county, and learned the trade of wagon-maker, which he has followed ever since, with the exception of five or six years, during which he lived on a rented farm. His first wife, Elizabeth (Everly) Wimer, died in 1852, leaving three children, who are still living.

Mr. Wimer married for his second wife Miss Elizabeth Keen, who died in 1896, leaving no children. The children of Mr. Wimer were: (1) Michael. (2) Anos was born in Eden township, Lancaster Co., in 1839; he enlisted during the Civil war, in 1862, in Co. G, 122d Pa. Regiment, and took part in several engagements; after his term of service he married Miss Maggie Miller, of Lancaster county, and they now reside in Harrisburg, Pa., where Mr. Wimer worked at his trade of wheelwright until the last few years, when he has lived retired. He has a family of four children: Harry and William, both in Harrisburg; Charles, unmarried; and Maud, at home. (3) Marinda J. was born in Eden township, Lancaster county, and is the wife of William Gaul, of Eden township; they have six children: George, of Quarryville; Fred, of Eden; Joseph; Ira; Lena, wife of Charles Waltham, of Quarryville borough; and William, living at Quarryville.

Michael Wimer grew to manhood in Lancaster county, where he received a district school education. While a young man he learned the trade of wagon-maker, and he has followed it practically all the time since then. In 1860 he married Sarah L., daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Graham) Rineer, of Lancaster county. Mrs. Wimer was born in the town of Quarryville in May, 1842, and was reared in that village. After his marriage Mr. Wimer settled in Quarryville borough, and has since resided there, except during his absence at the time of the Civil war, in which he enlisted as an artillery man, 152d Regiment, Army of the James. His first service was at Fortress Monroe, and then at Fort Harrison, where he did duty until the march on Richmond, during which campaign he took part in every action. At Signal Hill his company was detailed to guard the barracks at Deep Bottom, until Richmond was evacuated by the enemy in the spring of 1865. Mr. Wimer again joined his regiment at Richmond, and was soon transferred back to Fortress Monroe. While at Richmond Mr. Wimer helped to build the bridge across the James river, burned by the Rebels at the time they evacuated the place. Mr. Wimer was discharged at Fortress Monroe June 12, 1865, and then returned to his wife and two children in Pennsylvania. He purchased a home in Quarryville, and has continued a citizen since its incorporation.

To Mr. and Mrs. Wimer a family of thirteen children have been born, two dying in childhood. (1) Elizabeth, born in 1862, is the wife of Jacob Baughman, of Bart township, a carpenter by trade; this couple have four children, Bertha, Anna, Charles and Stella. (2) Emma, born Aug. 2, 1863, is the wife of George M. Eckman, of Wilmington, Del., and they have four children, Clyde, Effie, Elsie and Lottie. (3) Martha A. was born Nov. 18, 1864, is the wife of J. O. Myers, of Quarryville borough, and they have one son, Frederick. (4) Joseph, born June 25, 1866, married Miss Lydia Rineer, of Quarryville; they reside on their grandfather's place in Eden township, where he has a saw-mill and other business interests; they have nine children, Charles, Elizabeth, Elsie, Bennie, Ethel, Joseph, Willis, Mary and Amos. (5) Amos F. was born Feb.

23, 1868, and married Miss Lizzie Myers, of Eden township; they reside there and have six children, Elsie, Ray, Stella, Ira, Minnie and Myrtle. (6) Ida M. was born Dec. 9, 1869, and is the wife of Fred Beck, of Steelton, Pa., who is engaged in the Iron Works of Columbia, Pa.; they have no children. (7) Minnie L. was born Feb. 9, 1871, and is the wife of Howard Wimer, of Strasburg township; they have one son, Luiley. (8) Laura M. was born May 24, 1872, and is the wife of Monroe Landis, of Lancaster City; they have no children. (9) Michael W. was born April 6, 1875, and is a representative of the Metropolitan Insurance Company at Lancaster City: he is unmarried. (10) Edie Sue was born March 11, 1878, and is unmarried, making her home at present at the "Quarryville House." (11) John R., who was born Dec. 27, 1883, is unmarried, and is living at home with his parents.

Michael Wimer is a Republican in politics, was the first assessor of the borough and always takes an active part in the affairs of his party. He is a member of the W. S. Birely Post, No. 511, G. A. R., of Quarryville, and has been quartermaster of the post. He is at present assessor of his borough. His father, Joseph Wimer, was a leading Whig in his day. Mr. Wimer and his family are members of the German Reformed Church. Respected by all who know him, Michael Wimer has certainly filled an honorable position in the history of his county, and his character ranks among those of the best citizens of the borough.

JOHN BEST (deceased). Few men in the city of Lancaster were so highly considered or so generally esteemed as was John Best, and few had retained so high a standard of business integrity through a long and active life.

John Best was born at Soudersburg, Lancaster county, Aug. 22, 1822, a son of John Best, who was of Scotch-Irish ancestry. Mr. Best's grandparents, with their children, once made an ineffectual effort to emigrate to America, the vessel they were on being wrecked on the northern coast of their native country. They then settled down in that part of Ireland. John Best, Sr., married there and about 1808 he and his wife emigrated to this country, settling in Philadelphia. He was one of thirteen sons, all men over six feet in height except the emigrant himself. In 1812 he enlisted in the American army, and fought against the British in our second war against that country. He then settled in Soudersburg, Lancaster Co., Pa., and worked around on farms in the neighborhood. He reared a family of seven children, of whom the last survivor, Thompson Best, of Farmington, Minn., died July 18, 1902, at Farmington. In 1823 the family removed to Lancaster, but the death of the mother, in 1829, broke up the home.

When John Best, whose name opens this sketch, heard the uncertainty of his fortunes and his future discussed, he packed up his small effects and started out to begin a career for himself, although he was a child of less than eight years. When he reached what he thought a long distance from home, the Malone farm, on the New Holland turnpike, he asked the family for work, and was there sheltered for the night. The next day he was returned to Lancaster, as it was supposed he was but a runaway boy. When the kind-hearted Mr. White, of the farm, learned that his story was true, he was taken back to the place, which was his home for the succeeding nine years. However, they were years of toil, and he had no school advantages whatever. Before he was seventeen years of age Mr. Best came to Lancaster, and in three years' time learned the blacksmith's trade with John R. Russel, whose shop was on East King street, later the site of Mrs. David Bair's residence. About 1843 Mr. Best went into business for himself as a blacksmith at Molasses Hill, a mile east of Bird-in-Hand, where he scored his only failure. In less than six months he went to Philadelphia after work, but getting none proceeded to Wilmington, Del., where he became an apprentice at boilermaking in Betz, Harlan & Hollingsworth's shipyard, now the great works of the Harlan-Hollingsworth Company. The young man not only learned boilermaking, but ship-building as well. He had a remarkable eye for form and measurements, a faculty which served him well. He soon became a department foreman, and did work that had formerly to be done by men brought from Philadelphia and Baltimore. One day he was in an accident in which he came near being killed, and was about giving up such dangerous work when increased salary induced him to stay. He remained with the firm long enough to help build twenty-seven vessels. Later he worked at his trade of boilermaker in Baltimore, Cincinnati, Gosport, Va., St. Louis, Louisville, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and New York. Meantime he had married, and his family accompanied him on his removals.

In the winter of 1852-53 Mr. Best was engaged by the Philadelphia firm of Merrick & Sons to superintend the fitting up of the Government vessel "Mississippi," for Commodore Perry's famous expedition to Japan, which work he performed so satisfactorily that he received a gift of $100 from the firm, above his wages. He had under him workmen who belonged to some of the worst gangs of toughs Philadelphia then had, Moyamensing hose-men and Schuylkill rangers, men who shirked work whenever possible, but his tact and management soon had these men all under control and doing their full duty.

Mr. Best returned to Lancaster in 1859, renting an old stable back of the Pennsylvania railroad depot for a shop, for which he paid five cents a day rental. For a few months it was uphill work to get along, even on these terms, and then Jacob Auxer, whose boiler shop had been burned out, formed a partnership with Mr. Best. Finally the latter insisted on taking a $7,500 contract for Manager S. S. Spencer, of the John Farnum & Co. cotton mills, and the magnitude of the risk was such in Mr. Auxer's eyes that he first protested against accepting it and then left the firm. Mr. Best finished the contract successfully. Business then enabled him to move his plant to Chestnut street, near Duke, where he occupied a frame structure originally erected for a union church and then recently abandoned. This was about the period of the outbreak of the Civil war, and there was plenty of work to be done in his line. After a few years contracts came in for boilers seventy feet long and it became necessary to enlarge his quarters. He then, in 1865, purchased from the late William Miller a tract of ground at Plum and Fulton streets, and the first buildings of the present large plant were erected by Swartzwelder & Morrow, contractors and builders. Since then the works have been enlarged until this is now one of the important industrial establishments of Lancaster, and the product is known and bought all over the world. The works occupy a square of 245 feet, fronting on Plum, Fulton and Tobacco avenue, and employment is given to 110 men.

Mr. Best's interests did not entirely concentrate on his Lancaster boiler works, as he was also proprietor of the Eureka Bark Mill Company, and was interested at different times in the watch factory, the Lancaster Bolt Company, the Lancaster Chemical Works and The Miller Soap Company. In political life he was a Democrat, and he spared one term out of his busy life to serve in the city council from the old Northeast ward. Fraternally he was a member of Lodge No. 43, F. & A. M., Lodge of Perfection, Goodwin Council, Chapter No. 43, Lancaster Commandery No. 13, K. T., and Lancaster Lodge, No. 68, K. of P. The last named lodge was organized at his home, and he was elected past chancellor. Mr. Best was a member of the First Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Best married (first) Miss Anna Maria Albright, daughter of Jacob Albright, and of the children born to this union the following survive: Emily L., widow of George F. Pritchard, of Asbury Park, N. J.; James B., who for many years has been connected with his father's business; Elizabeth B., the wife of T. Park Guthrie; and Mary K., now deceased, who was the wife of Dr. F. F. Frantz. Two children died in infancy. Mrs. Best died in July, 1855. On Sept. 17, 1856, Mr. Best was married (second) to Miss Esther A. Eagles, and the surviving children of this marriage are as follows: Esther A., who married Charles Johnson, a machinist, in Lancaster; George U., who is a clerk in the office of the boiler works; E. Bertha, who married Edward G. Eby, of Lancaster; Anna N., who married J. Paul Snyder, a druggist, in Philadelphia; Lillian M., married to Amos H. Landis, the receiving teller of the Conestoga National Bank; John H., who is a machinist and electrician at the General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y.; and Misses Aimee and Adele, at home. Mr. Best passed away Nov. 25, 1901, at his residence in Lancaster, aged seventy-nine years, and was buried in a beautiful plot in the Lancaster cemetery, where, nine months previously, he had placed a substantial, plain, granite headstone.

Mrs. Esther A. (Eagles) Best, the widow of John Best, was born on the site of the present home, No. 227 East Chestnut street, a daughter of George and Catherine (Wisner) Eagles, who came to Lancaster in 1830, the former being a native of Newark, N. J., and the latter of Chester county, Pa. Mr. Eagles was a railroad engineer by trade. He belonged to the old State militia. His death occurred on Sept. 30, 1838, at the age of thirty-six years, while his widow survived until 1882, dying at the age of eighty. Both were members of Trinity Lutheran Church, and were interred in the Lancaster cemetery. Their children were as follows: Mary, who married Washington Rhoades, is deceased; George, deceased, married Mary L. Pennock; Esther A. married Mr. Best.

JAMES B. BEST, general manager of his father's estate and of the large boiler works in Lancaster, was born in January, 1852. In January, 1879, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. Kautz, born in Willowstreet, Lancaster county, daughter of Jacob and Rachel Kautz, the former of whom was a large brick manufacturer. His death occurred in 1894. His wife resides in Paterson, New Jersey.

Mr. Best was educated in the common schools of Lancaster, and at the age of sixteen years, in preparation for his future work, took up the business of plumbing and gasfitting, serving an apprenticeship for three years. He spent the following two years at the trade in Chicago, Ill., but returned to Lancaster in January, 1874, and entered his father's employ. In January, 1883, he became manager, and has been such for the past nineteen years, having been connected with the business for twenty-eight years. He is one of the reliable business men of the city, substantial, well educated and prominent. In politics he is independent.

It would not be just to close this sketch of a distinguished citizen of Lancaster without adding a few words as to the personal character of John Best. As a father, husband and friend, he met the highest ideals. His pleasant, genial manner and frank good feeling for everyone made him friends on all sides, and he was beloved by both old and young. Although always overwhelmed with business interests, and planning new lines of enterprise, he found time to enjoy the society of his family, taking delight in providing for their pleasure and welfare, and he will long be remembered as one of the representative men of the city of Lancaster.

ABRAHAM S. GROFF. The founder of the Groff family in Pennsylvania is believed to have been Abraham Groff, who came from Europe many years ago, settling in Lancaster county. He built a mill at Groffdale, which he operated in connection with farming. His family consisted of four sons and four daughters: Daniel, a prosperous farmer and miller at Groff's P. O.; Martin, mentioned below; Abraham, a successful miller and farmer, who lived to the advanced age of eighty-four; Samuel, an enterprising business man and merchant, who later in life engaged in farming; Elizabeth, who married a Mr. Eby; one that married Martin Shaeffer; Mary, who married David Landis; and Nancy, who married Samuel Hershey.

Martin Groff, the father of Abraham S., was born Feb. 11, 1803, and died in November, 1877. He became a farmer in Manheim township, where he was also prominently identified with the Republican party. He married Sarah Shively, a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Miller) Shively, and they became the parents of ten children: Maria, the widow of George Shriner, of Manheim township; Samuel, deceased, who was a well-known horse, cattle and sheep dealer of Lancaster; Elizabeth, the widow of Benjamin Evans, of Manheim township; Henry, a teacher in the public schools, who died at the age of twenty-five; Martin, first a farmer and then a store and tavern keeper at Kissel Hill, who died Dec. 25, 1899; Abraham S.; Sallie, widow of Abner McLaughlin, a merchant of Philadelphia; Nathan (deceased), a drover; Nathaniel, a farmer and drover of Manheim township; and Alpheus, who was a farmer and drover, and who died at the age of thirty-five.

Abraham S. Groff was born on March 6, 1833, was educated in the public schools of his district, later took a course at the Lititz Academy, and still later at the State Normal School, at Millersville, so well acquainting himself that at the age of nineteen he was engaged as a teacher in Lancaster county, acceptably filling the position for five sessions.

Desiring a more active life, Mr. Groff then engaged in the droving business, following this until 1885, having been very successful in the enterprise. Sometimes long journeys were made, and several times he drove large herds of cattle and sheep from Ohio across the mountains and disposed of these to the farmers in Lancaster county. Since giving up this business he has dealt in tobacco, in the line of packing, and has also given much time to the raising of the plant. The home farm consists of eighty-one acres, and he also owns a half interest in the old homestead, his time being principally occupied in general farming and the raising of tobacco, as above stated. Mr. Groff has also served as a director in the Farmers' National Bank of Lancaster.

Since 1876 he has been an active member of the Lutheran Church, is superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and one of the efficient officers of the church, for twenty years having been one of the trustees, and treasurer for nineteen years. In politics he is a Republican, and has cast his vote regularly, believing that to be the duty of a good citizen.

On March 30, 1869, Mr. Groff was married to Susannah Bard, a daughter of George Bard, of Upper Leacock township, and they had six children, five of whom died in infancy. The other, Albert B., was born in 1873 and educated at the State Normal School at Millersville, and later spent two years in the study of medicine, with Dr. Ege, of Reading, Pa.; but he now resides with his father, assisting him in the tobacco business, in which he is quite an expert. Albert B. Groff married Bertha Forney, a daughter of Joseph Forney, and they have two children, Nelson and Susan Elizabeth. The young people are also connected with the Lutheran Church.

ROBERT KELSO WRIGHT was born in Coatesville, Pa., Nov. 30, 1834, and died in New Holland Aug. 23, 1897. His remains were buried in Honeybrook, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Wright was a son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Frew) Wright. The parents were married by the Rev. John L. Grant Oct. 31, 1833. Joseph Wright was born in Chester county, and his mother in Lancaster county. The father was killed while on his way to church on Sunday morning. All his life he was a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church, and in his last years officiated as an elder in that body. He came of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His remains rest in Paradise township.

Mr. Wright and his worthy wife were the parents of the following family: Capt. Joseph S., who served as a Union soldier in the Civil war and was killed in the service; Robert K.; Thomas S., who died young; James, a molder of Coatesville; Andrew, a corporal in the Civil war, where he lost his life; David, a molder, who died in Coatesville.

Robert K. Wright was married Feb. 9, 1862, in Honeybrook, Pa., to Harriet M. Wright, by whom he had the following children: Anna died at the age of three years; Howard, the proprietor of a bakery at New Holland, Pa., where he married Flora Rutter, by whom he has had the following children, Earl, Anna, Florence and Robert; Lacy, unmarried, and a partner with his brother, Howard.

Mrs. Harriet M. Wright was born in Honeybrook, Pa., and is a daughter of John and Anna (Boyer) Wright. Her father came from England, settling in Pennsylvania, at Honeybrook, in 1821. He was well-known as a maker of boots and shoes, took an active part in political affairs and showed a general interest in the welfare of the community. The mother was born in Honeybrook, Chester county, passed her entire life there and there, with her husband, was buried. Her death occurred in 1892, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. They were both members of the Methodist Church. To this worthy and estimable couple were born the following children: Lewis, a retired banker at Grand Ridge, Ill.; Mary, who married George Griffith, a confectioner at Honeybrook; Elizabeth, who married James Boanes and is now dead; Sarah, who was born in Honeybrook and married George Lawrence, a farmer; Enos, a contractor at Honeybrook; Harriet M., wife of Robert K. Wright.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Wright were Benjamin and Mary (Wellington) Wright, natives of England. They came to this country in 1821, and settled in Honeybrook, where their peaceful and useful lives were passed. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Wright were Andrew and Elizabeth (Culp) Boyer, of Lancaster county. The grandfather owned and laid out the present site of Honeybrook, giving the sites of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches, the school houses and union burying grounds, and in his lifetime played a prominent part in the activities of the community in which he lived.

In early life Robert K. Wright followed the trade of a machinist, and was considered an expert in the foundry at Parkesburg, Pa., where he had charge of the rolling mill. He retired from that business in 1873 and, locating in Philadelphia, engaged in making sewing machines on contract, his business including the making of surgical instruments. In the spring of 1882 he came to New Holland and engaged in the bakery and confectionery business, in which he spent the last years of an active and useful life. For many years he had been overborne by ill health, but he worked hard, and long resisted the encroachments of disease.

Personally he was of a genial and obliging spirit, and of the utmost integrity. The esteem and confidence of all who knew him was freely given him. Socially he belonged to the I. O. O. F., of Cochranville, and in religion was a member of the Methodist Church. In his politics he was a Democrat. In his lifetime he filled a large place in the community in which he lived, and his loss was felt deeply throughout the township.

CHRISTIAN SHUEMAKER, a retired farmer of Florin, Pa., was born in Rapho township Jan. 12, 1828, and is a son of Christ and Anna (Brubaker) Shuemaker, natives of the same township. The father was a farmer and the proprietor of a saw mill. He led an industrious and highly successful life and died in 1860, at the age of seventy-two years. The mother died Jan. 15, 1828, while still very young, and was buried on the old homestead. They were members of the United Brethren Church. Christian was their only child. The father married Mrs. Anna Renert for his second wife, by whom he became the father of Jacob, a sawmill man in Lebanon county, and Anna, who died young.

The paternal grandparents of Christian Shuemaker were Jacob and Esther (Hershey) Shuemaker, both of whom were natives of Lancaster county, where they spent their lives, and where he was engaged in farming and in the operation of a distillery.

Christian Shuemaker and Elizabeth Hershey were united in marriage in the city of Lancaster, Pa., in November, 1852, and to this union, which has proved a very happy one, were born: Christian, who married Mary Foltz and is a farmer in Milton Grove, Lancaster county; Elizabeth, who married Monroe Shaffer and lives on a farm in the township of Mt. Joy; Anna, wife of Jacob Freye, a farmer in the township of Mt. Joy; Mary, wife of David B. Myers, of East Donegal; Hettie, at home, unmarried; John, who married Mae Raymond, of Florin; Harry, who married Bertha Morton; Sarah, who died young.

Mrs. Elizabeth (Hershey) Shuemaker was born in Lancaster county, died Jan. 4, 1892, at the age of fifty-eight years, and was buried in the cemetery at Florin. Her parents were Jacob and Magdalena Hershey, of Lancaster county, who were born and bred to a farming life. Her father spent his last days in retirement in Hummelstown, Pa., and there both he and his wife died and were buried. They had these children: Mary, deceased wife of Benjamin Brubaker; Elizabeth; Leah, who is living in Hummelstown; Martin, deceased; Anna, unmarried and residing in Hummelstown; John, a merchant in Manheim; Harry, a merchant in Steelton, Pa.; Reuben and Jacob, both deceased.

Christian Shuemaker remained with his father until he reached the age of twenty-five years, when he purchased a farm in Rapho township, on which he resided one year. For ten years following he was engaged in the cultivation of the home farm. At the expiration of that period he came to his present location, and there he is still actively engaged in the operation of his farm, though to a very large extent he contents himself with overseeing the work.

Mr. Shuemaker is a Republican, and he and all his family are members of the United Brethren Church. In the community he is regarded as a good man, one whose religion is genuine, and whose heart is full of kindness and good will.

EDWIN C. DILLER, the senior member of the firm of E. C. Diller & Son, was born in Union county, Pa., Nov. 26, 1839, and is a son of Amos and Mary Ann (Carpenter) Diller. His parents were natives of Lancaster county, but removed to Union county, where the father was engaged in a store in New Columbia. In 1841 he located at Vogansville, Lancaster county, where he kept a store two years, and then came to New Holland, where he was engaged in the mercantile business for more than twenty years. In 1865 he retired from the store in favor of his son, Edwin C. His death occurred in 1895, at the age of eighty-two years; his wife passed to her rest in 1873, at the age of fifty-four. Both were buried in the cemetery at New Holland.

Mr. and Mrs. Amos Diller had the following children: Emma, who died at the age of thirteen years; William, who died at the age of thirty-five; Edwin C. The parents of Amos Diller were Isaac and Maria (Graybill) Diller.

Edwin C. Diller was twice married, the first time in 1864, when Miss Cora Mason of White Horse, Pa., became his wife. To this marriage were born the following children: Charles M., in partnership with his father, and married to Gertrude Brubaker, by whom he has two children, Dorothy and Margaret; Alta, at home unmarried; Emma, married to Charles Meredith, an insurance agent at Chester, Pa., where they have two children, James and Edwin; Amos, in partnership with his father. Mrs. Cora Diller, who was born in Salisbury township, died in 1874, at the age of thirty years, and is buried in New Holland. She was a daughter of John and Jestina (Brimmer) Mason. The second marriage of E. C. Diller occurred in 1876, when Anna Roland, daughter of Jonathan H. and Elizabeth G. Roland, became his wife in New Holland; by her he has had one child, Roland.

Mr. Diller remained with his father until his retirement in 1865, when he took up his business. Mr. Diller has filled the position of county jury commissioner for five years, and was councilman two years. In his religion he has held to the faith of his fathers, and is a member of the Lutheran Church. In fraternity matters he is a member of the Knights Templars and I. O. O. F. In politics he is a Democrat. A man of prominence and prosperous circumstances, he holds a high position in the esteem of his community.

JACOB KONIGMACHER, a retired capitalist and farmer, who occupies the important position of vice-president of the Farmers' National Bank of Ephrata, is among the prominent men of Ephrata township, residing three-quarters of a mile north of the borough of Ephrata.

The founder of the family in America was Adam Konigmacher, who was born in Germany July 30, 1738, and died in Ephrata June 30, 1793. With his mother and stepfather he came to this country, but before landing the mother died, and her remains were consigned to the sea. The stepfather brought the orphaned boy to Ephrata, where he remained until he was twenty-one, when he went back to his own land, and there married Christiana Eicher, who was born Nov. 9, 1745, and who died Jan. 19, 1816. As soon as married Adam and his bride sailed for the United States, and they permanently located at Ephrata, founding a family which has become respected and honored through the locality. To Adam Konigmacher and his wife were born: Adam, Benjamin, Jacob, Abraham and Hannah.

Jacob Konigmacher, son of Adam, was the next in this branch of the family, and was born Jan. 4, 1771; he died April 8, 1839. For many years he was a successful physician in Ephrata. He married Rebecca Fahnestock, who was born July 7, 1775, and died Dec. 5, 1832. Their children were Adam, William and Hannah.

William Konigmacher, son of Jacob, was the grandfather of Jacob, whose name opens this biography. He was born Jan. 5, 1797, and died Feb.

Jac. Tonigmacher.

10, 1881, at the age of eighty-four years. His wife, Susan Bowman, was born May 20, 1798, and died June 15, 1833. They reared the following named children: Adam, Edwin, Mary (who married A. Seltzer, and now lives in Ephrata), and Susan (who died in childhood). The second marriage of William Konigmacher was to Lydia Miller, born Feb. 27, 1805, who died July 26, 1901, aged ninety-six years, four months, twenty-nine days. One child was born of this marriage, Rebecca, Mrs. Connell.

Adam Konigmacher, father of Jacob, was born Dec. 21, 1821, and died Nov. 11, 1889. He was a prominent and leading man in the county, a farmer, tanner and manufacturer of the Cocalico millstones. On Jan. 30, 1849, he married Miss Eliza Royer, of Ephrata, who died Sept. 15, 1857. The children of this union were: Jacob, born June 4, 1850, is mentioned below; Susan, born Dec. 9, 1852, married John P. Hess, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Lizzie, born July 20, 1854, married Dr. Nagle, a prominent physician of Centralia, Ill.; and William, born in 1857, died in infancy. Adam Konigmacher married for his second wife Miss Eliza Bowman, of Ephrata, who was born Aug. 23, 1823, and who died May 14, 1896. Two children came to this union: Mary, born Feb. 3, 1860, married Martin B. Musser, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; and Charles, born Oct. 28, 1866, resided for a time in the borough of Ephrata, but now lives in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

It is interesting in considering the "big" men of any locality, to find that for the most part they have been reared on the farm, and such was the case with Jacob Konigmacher, who represents the solid and substantial class of citizens in Ephrata township. His educational advantages were those of the common schools of his township, and after finishing the course he entered upon agricultural life, engaging therein extensively for many years, in the meantime becoming one of the influential factors in his community on account of the exercise of those virtues which cause men to respect and esteem good and estimable citizens.

On Oct. 21, 1872, Jacob Konigmacher was united in marriage with Miss Amanda Kraatz, who was born July 18, 1851, daughter of David B. and Mary Ann (Bear) Kraatz. To this marriage one son was born, William, who married Anna Steinmetz, by whom he has two children, Celestia and Helen, and they reside with his father on the home farm.

The old family homestead of the Konigmacher family was erected in the historic days of 1777, and there Jacob Konigmacher resides, living retired from all agricultural pursuits. His position in the community is one of prominence, especially in its banking interests. He is a director and vice-president of the Farmers' National Bank of Ephrata, of which he was one of the organizers. As a staunch Republican he has exerted much influence for his chosen party, and for many years he has been one of the pillars of the Lutheran Church, and is widely known for his charities and good citizenship. He is a trustee in the Ephrata Monument Association, of which he is secretary and treasurer. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to Lodge No. 43, F. & A. M., Lancaster, and he is also a member of the Pennsylvania German Society.

LEWIS AUGUSTUS RAUCH, alderman from the First ward of Lancaster, is descended from Revolutionary stock, and also has a war record of his own.

Christian H. Rauch, his grandfather, was justice of the peace in Warwick, Lancaster county, for forty-five years. Francis M. Rauch, father of Lewis A., was once owner of the Lititz Brewery, served several terms as a prison inspector for Lancaster county, and for twelve or more years was superintendent of Linden Hall Seminary at Lititz; he died March 16, 1886, aged seventy-two years. Francis M. Rauch married Miss Louisa F. Recksecker, sister of the late Major James F. Recksecker, one time city treasurer of Lancaster. Four children were born of this marriage, of whom Ellen died in infancy. The survivors are: Agnes, widow of the late J. B. Stauffer, farmer; Mary S., wife of M. J. Schmidt, of the United States Gas Improvement Co., Bethlehem; and Lewis A.

Lewis Augustus Rauch was born at Warwick Jan. 28, 1843, and was educated in John Beck's celebrated school for boys, at Lititz. At sixteen he left school and became an apprentice in A. B. Landis' coach works at Mt. Joy. He enlisted in April, 1861, in Co. B (Union Guards of Lancaster), 1st Regiment, Pa. Reserves, and served four years and two months, taking part in the actions of the Army of the Potomac, which comprised in all forty-two engagements. He was twice wounded, once at Charles City Cross Roads and at Spottsylvania Court House. He returned home a sergeant, and after the war went to the oil regions, whence he was sent to West Virginia as an oil superintendent, remaining there two years.

Mr. Rauch then went to Wilkesbarre and Scranton, where for about eight years he engaged in the coal business. From there he removed to Philadelphia, where he lived twenty years, engaging in the paint and papering trade. Afterward, removing to Chalfont, Bucks county, he conducted a wall paper store, and was elected secretary of the Republican county committee before he had been in the county a year. A protracted illness from la grippe caused him to leave Chalfont and come to Lancaster, his old home, and he has since resided here, engaging in the livery business. His establishment was at Nos. 17-25 West Lemon street. As a recognition of his services Gov. Stone appointed him alderman from the First ward Sept. 20, 1899, to fill an unexpired term. He was re-elected for five years in February, 1900, his term beginning May, 1900.

Alderman Rauch is a member of the G. A. R.; of the Knights of the Golden Eagle; and a member and exclusive organizer of the Lancaster Military Association, numbering nine hundred members, and its president since its organization, in 1896. Miss Lulu K. Rauch, his daughter, won the $50 gold prize and the offer of a $2,500 a year position at Detroit for her original design for The Illustrated Milliner. She declined the position because she had a successful business of her own at No. 1230 South Eighth street, Philadelphia. In view of the fact of a great competition for the prize the honor conferred upon Miss Rauch was a great one. Mr. Rauch is a nephew of Major E. H. Rauch, of Mauch Chunk, author of the "Pit Schafflebrenner" papers, and hand writing expert.

The Alderman is a leading spirit in the Lancaster Road Drivers' Association, and it is largely due to his efforts that so much has been accomplished by the organization, and he is also secretary of the Lancaster Turf Club, an organization devoted to giving strictly honest horse races.

JOHN M. FURNISS, a representative farmer of Little Britain township, was born Dec. 29, 1857, on a farm located within one mile of Tayloria, Pa. His parents were Benjamin and Catherine S. (Morris) Furniss, also of Little Britain township.

The Furniss family were originally from Scotland, near Furniss Castle. Thomas Furniss, the progenitor of the Furniss family in America, came to this country from the northern part of England about 1660, settling in Philadelphia, Pa., where he was married in 1682. His descendants settled in Delaware, Chester and Lancaster counties, Pennsylvania.

Thomas Furniss, the great-grandson of Thomas Furniss, settled at Chadds' Ford, Chester county, Pa., on a plantation comprising part of the territory on which the battle of the Brandywine was fought. Here were born Oliver Furniss, his brother Gardner and his sisters, Ann (Furniss) Twaddle, wife of John Twaddle, Phebe (Furniss) Pearce, wife of Ellis Pearce, and Hanna Furniss.

Oliver, the grandfather of John M. Furniss, was born Jan. 11, 1794. Thomas Furniss, together with his family, moved from Chadds' Ford to Little Britain township, Lancaster county, about the year 1800, settling on a farm near Oak Hill. He died there in January, 1831. Gardner Furniss, Sr., a brother of Thomas Furniss, settled in Drumore township, and died there in the year 1811. Furniss post office was named in his honor.

Gardner Furniss, son of Thomas Furniss, and nephew of Gardner Furniss, also settled in Drumore township, on a plantation bordering on the Susquehanna river, and died there some years after. His brother, Oliver Furniss, died in Little Britain township Nov. 19, 1858. The children born to Oliver Furniss were: Benjamin, Joseph, Esther, Gardner and Thomas. The last named died April 29, 1902, aged seventy-two years; Joseph is a physician in Lancaster; Gardner, a resident of Chester county;

Benjamin, a retired farmer; and Esther, the wife of E. Henry Haines, of Pleasant Grove, Pennsylvania.

Benjamin Furniss, the father of John M., was born Feb. 22, 1827, and Dec. 25, 1855, was united in marriage to Miss Catherine S. Morris, two children resulting from this union: John M.; and Mary, the wife of Frank Harkness, engaged in the grocery business in Philadelphia. Benjamin Furniss for many years was one of the leading citizens of his township, and also one of the largest land-owners. For some years he has been retired from active life, making his home in Philadelphia.

John M. Furniss was liberally educated, receiving every advantage possible from early boyhood. After completing the common school course he passed with honors through the Union High School of Colerain township, later became a student in the Millersville Normal School, and took a year's course in the Unionville Academy, in Chester county. For one year he engaged in teaching and then became interested in agricultural work, following the same line until the present time, and becoming one of the well-known and successful farmers of Little Britain.

John M. Furniss was married on Nov. 24, 1881, to Miss Laura M. King, of King's Bridge, Lancaster county, who was a daughter of Vincent and Annie Eliza (Morrison) King, and this marriage has been blessed with nine children, six of whom still survive: Mary A., born Oct. 14, 1882; Benjamin, Dec. 21, 1883; Carl, Sept. 7, 1885; Vincent K., Feb. 19, 1888; Ruth, Sept. 3, 1893; and Catherine S., Nov. 30, 1894.

The date of Mrs. Furniss's birth was July 25, 1859, and she was a member of a family of nine children: James, deceased; Elizabeth M., the wife of Emmerson Walton, of Colerain township; Albert, deceased; Vincent, of Colorado Springs, Colo.; Laura M., wife of Mr. Furniss; Horace, of Christiana, Pa.; Anna, deceased; Joseph M., of California; and Thorwald, of Philadelphia.

In politics John M. Furniss has always been an active Republican; he is socially connected with the Masonic order, belonging to Lodge 353, of Oxford, Pa. He was reared in the Society of Friends, and he has never departed from the peaceful teachings of that body. In Little Britain township he is most highly esteemed, and is classed with the best and most representative citizens.

WILLIAM WITMAN. One of the self-made, representative and substantial farmers of Little Britain township, in Lancaster county, is William Witman, who was born in that county, in Caernarvon township, Jan. 22, 1837. His parents were William and Catherine (Zell) Witman. The father was born in Berks county and the mother in Lancaster, but both were of German origin, the great-grandfather having come from that country. Grandfather Philip Witman was a native of Berks county, Pa., and was the father of these nine children, Betsey, Sarah, Kate, Isaac, Thomas, Amos, Cyrus, Philip and William.

William Witman, the son of Philip and the father of William (2), was born in 1799, and died in 1871. About 1823 he was married to Catherine Zell, who was born in 1801 and died in 1867. Their children were: Barton, now deceased, a farmer of Caernarvon township; William; Edgar, a farmer of Little Britain township; Ann, Harriet, Margaret, Catherine, Susannah and Ellen, all deceased. During a long and active life Mr. Witman became prominent in the Democratic party and was one of the leading business citizens, being for twenty-one years the manager and bookkeeper of the Pool Forge Iron Works, in Caernarvon township.

William Witman, the son, was reared on the home farm and received his education in the common schools, with two terms in Churchtown Academy during the winters of 1856 and 1857. When he started out for himself it was with very limited means, but he possessed what the world is learning to recognize as the elements that bring success, good habits, an inclination to be industrious, and an honesty that has never failed. When he views his well cultivated acres, his comfortable home and happy family, it must be with a feeling of justifiable pride. Mr. Witman came to Little Britain township in 1879 and bought the fine farm he now occupies, consisting of 127 acres, which he has put under a good state of cultivation and has improved with a comfortable residence and other buildings. Here Mr. Witman has engaged in general farming, raising the natural products of the locality in great abundance. In addition to this land, which is very valuable, Mr. Witman also owns another large estate in Chester county.

On Nov. 25, 1878, Mr. Witman was married to Mary E. Steffy, who was a daughter of Samuel Steffy, of Caernarvon township; the other children in the family were Sarah, Minnie, Carrie, Lily and Samuel. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Witman are Sue, William, Sarah, Hattie, Helen and Lillian, Edna and Lulu having died in childhood. Although Mrs. Witman was born in 1857, she is still youthful in looks and actions and a suitable mate for Mr. Witman, who in no way shows his sixty-six years. Both of these good people are highly esteemed in their locality and Mr. Witman is known as one of the most honorable and reliable as well as prosperous farmers in southern Lancaster county. Like his respected father, he has always upheld the principles of the Democratic party.

AARON HESS DIFFENBAUGH, register of wills in Lancaster county, and the owner of one of the handsomest homes in the county belongs to an old and much respected family. His grandfather, Abraham Diffenbaugh, was a well-known farmer of Fertility, East Lampeter township, this county.

Abram K. Diffenbaugh, the father of Aaron H., was a prominent farmer of Greenland, East Lampeter township. He married Miss Fanny Hess, a member of one of the old and respected families of Pequea, and this marriage was blessed with the following children: Mary, the wife of Aaron Denlinger, a farmer of Paradise township; Benjamin H., a farmer of Greenland; Elizabeth, the widow of Benjamin B. Denlinger, now living on South Ann street, Lancaster; Aaron Hess; Frances H., wife of A. E. Hartman, a farmer of Greenland; Amos M., in the life insurance business, of Lancaster; A. L., a cigar manufacturer, living on North Lime street, Lancaster; and M. H., in the real estate business in Lancaster.

Aaron Hess Diffenbaugh was born in East Lampeter township, March 2, 1855, and had his education in the common schools, spending his time out of school hours at work on the farm. His practical experience in this line early made him an efficient and careful tiller of the soil, and for years he worked on the home farm. For four years after his marriage he continued to manage the farm, and he then purchased six acres of it. Upon this he erected a home and out buildings and for sixteen years engaged in truck farming, meeting with abundant success, and in 1900 he began packing tobacco. In 1901, he sold this place, and, purchasing ten acres on the east bank of the Conestoga, near the city limits, erected his present beautiful residence. This home is strictly modern in all its appointments, and is thoroughly fitted with water and electricity. Mr. Diffenbaugh's success is wholly the result of his own labors. His first start was on borrowed capital, and his energy and perseverance have gained him his present high position.

On Nov. 27, 1879, Mr. Diffenbaugh was married to Lydia E. Leaman, daughter of Jacob K. Leaman, a farmer living near Intercourse. Five children blessed this union: L. May, born June 9, 1888, who is attending the State Normal School at Millersville; Guy L., born Sept. 15, 1892; Fay, born Aug. 11, 1898; and Roy L. and one not named, who both died in infancy.

For fifteen years Mr. Diffenbaugh was assessor of East Lampeter township, and during that time proved himself an enlightened and progressive citizen. He worked in the local literary society, seeking the improvement and the elevation of the schools, and generally looking toward the good of the community. In November, 1899, he was elected on the Republican ticket, as register of wills in Lancaster county, by a very flattering majority. Entering upon the duties of that responsible position with the opening of the year 1900, he has proved himself an efficient and capable official. He is a director in the Lampeter Mutual Fire Insurance Co., and also a director in the Fulton National Bank, of Lancaster.

Mr. Diffenbaugh is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Paradise, Lancaster county. Socially he is a Royal Arch Mason and an Odd Fellow. He is a splendid example of young manhood, intelligent, thoughtful, and full of kindly feeling and genuine friendliness, and is highly esteemed by the people of his community, holding the confidence and respect of all who know anything about him.

LEVI L. ENGLE, a retired farmer, whose home is in Elizabethtown, was born in Conoy township, July 18, 1836, and is a son of Jacob L. and Martha (Long) Engle, natives of Conoy and East Donegal townships, respectively. Both died on their old farm in Conoy township, where their long and useful career was passed, and both were members of the River Brethren Church. They had the following children: Levi L.; David, of Stacktown; Jeremiah, a farmer in Kansas; Elizabeth, who died at the age of fifteen years; Abraham, of Chester county; Martha, who is dead; Israel, of Stacktown; Mary, who is dead; Jacob and Isaac, farmers in Elizabethtown; John, who died young.

Levi L. Engle was twice married, the first time on Dec. 11, 1860, to Mary A. Horst, in Lancaster, and to this union were born the following children: Albert, Levi L. and Eli, who all died young; Clara A., who died at the age of twenty-four years. Mrs. Mary A. Engle, who was born in Conoy township, died in 1886, at the age of forty-seven years. She was a daughter of Henry and Leah (Kuhns) Horst, of Lancaster county.

The second marriage of Levi L. Engle occurred in 1889, when he was united to Miss Martha Z. Gorner, of Maytown. Mrs. Martha Z. Engle is the daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Bowman) Gorner, of Lancaster county, her father having been in his active years a locksmith and millwright. In 1864 he died at the age of seventy-four years, and his widow, the mother of Mrs. Engle, in 1865 at the age of sixty-eight; both died in Maytown. They were members of the Reformed Church. Their other children were: Maria L., who is dead; Barbara A., late wife of William Buller; Sarah, the widow of Samuel Pence, who has her home in Philadelphia; Philip, who died young; Catherine, wife of George Kendig, a wagon maker in Maytown; Elizabeth, Jacob, a blacksmith in Missouri; Henry B., a druggist in Kentucky, deceased.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Engle were Philip and Catherine (Gailbaugh) Gorner, both natives of East Donegal township, where he followed the calling of a locksmith and millwright.

Mr. Engle lived on the home farm until he reached the age of twenty-two years, when he set himself up as a truck farmer and tobacco grower in Conoy township until 1875. That year he removed to Elizabethtown to take a position with a New York firm as manager of their local tobacco warehouse, remaining with them until 1886. Mr. Engle was engaged in tobacco farming for the ensuing ten years, and in 1892 retired from active life.

Mr. Engle served as school director for a time in Conoy township, and is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the German Reformed Church. In politics he is a Democrat, and is regarded as one of the most reliable citizens of the day.

Mr. Engle had a somewhat brief army experience during the Civil war, enlisting March 3, 1865, at Lancaster, in Co. H, 195th P. V. I., under Capt. William Stauffer. Mr. Engle had six months' service in Virginia, and five in Washington, D. C., being mustered out in the opening of 1866. When he entered the service he weighed 187 pounds, and lost sixty pounds in Virginia. He had been drafted prior to his enlistment, but was excused for the somewhat remarkable lack of a rib on one side. Hence his friends feel that his enlistment was all the more creditable to him. Mr. Engle is well supplied with this world's goods, has a fine home and is much-esteemed in the community where his last days are passing.

ROBERT E. LOCHER, of Lancaster, enjoys an enviable standing in the business circles of that city as president and chief owner of the Park Run Tanning Company, and president and manager of the Lancaster Hotel Company, conducting the "Stevens House." In the management of this modern hostelry he takes the deepest interest, having reared up an institution of which he may well be proud. The house was built in 1872 by a stock company, and cost some $150,000, but has been greatly improved since, especially under the management of Mr. Locher. It is centrally located, and employs some fifty-four people to serve its guests, who are always sufficiently numerous to test its full capacity, and often so much more so that many of them have to be turned away, though this is always done with the greatest reluctance. The house is eagerly sought by its numerous patrons because of its thorough modern equipment and the genial disposition of its host.

Robert E. Locher has passed all his life in Lancaster. He was born there July 21, 1857, son of David P. and Clementine M. Locher, and brother of Charles H. Locher, of whom there is mention elsewhere in this work. He was early associated with his father, and has remained with his mother since the latter's death. Up to the age of fifteen years he attended the Lancaster schools, at sixteen he attended Franklin and Marshall College for a term, and then entered his father's tannery, where he remained associated with his father until the latter's death. He then bought his father's interest, and took up the management of the concern, the establishment being conducted as Locher Sons Conestoga Oak Tannery. This continued until fire destroyed the old tannery, in 1894. Previous to this disaster Mr. Locher had bought the A. A. Myers tannery, changing the name to the Park Run Tannery, which had previously been built and operated by his father also. Mr. Locher has enlarged this to about four times its original size, so that it now covers three acres of ground, with a two and one-half story, modern brick building, containing all of the latest improvements, operated and lighted by its own electric plant, and employing from sixty-five to seventy men. The business is manufacturing oak harness leather.

Mr. Locher is a man of affairs through and through. In addition to his large interests as director and president of the hotel company and the tanning company, he is a director as well as chairman of the finance committee in the Conestoga Fire Insurance Company, and has been one of the directors of the City Savings Fund Trust Company, and chairman of the finance committee, since its organization. He also manages the large estate of his mother, with whom he still lives. Besides being a clever financier Mr. Locher is a lover of good sport. Though a Republican politician of some note, he will not accept political office.

ENOS CARRIGAN, one of the leading farmers and prominent citizens of Drumore township, was born July 22, 1849, a son of Jacob and Ann (McLaughlin) Carrigan, of the same township. Jacob Carrigan was a son of Michael Carrigan, who came from Ireland to America in early days and settled in Lancaster county, rearing two sons, Jacob, the father of Enos Carrigan, and Amos, who died while serving his country in 1862.

Jacob Carrigan married Ann McLaughlin in 1848, and two sons were born to them, Enos, of this sketch, and Joseph, who is a retired farmer of Fairfield.

Jacob Carrigan was reared a farmer boy and as his father died when he was still young he was obliged to work for his widowed mother. Industrious and frugal, he was able to save a sum of $300 in three years, being paid $10 per month while he was learning the blacksmith trade. That Mr. Carrigan was a man of great energy and ability was proven by the fact that at the time of his death he was the owner of a valuable farm of 150 acres. In political belief Mr. Carrigan belonged to the Democratic party, and he was universally respected as an honest, hard-working, honorable man.

Enos Carrigan was reared on his father's farm and was taught the blacksmith trade, although after he finished his schooldays he chose farming as his occupation. He was possessed of only limited means, but he applied himself as his father had done, and as time has passed he has accumulated much property, has become one of the leading men of the community and is esteemed by his neighbors and friends. Mr. Carrigan owns the family homestead, which consists of one hundred and fifty acres, and also the family homestead of his wife. The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Carrigan is a large, handsome, comfortable dwelling and the farm is one of the richest and most productive in the township.

Enos Carrigan was united in marriage to Miss Roberta Penrose, of Drumore township, on Dec. 13, 1877; she was a daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Lukens) Penrose, of the same township, the former of whom was one of the wealthy and leading farmers of that part of Lancaster county.

The Penrose family was founded in America by Robert Penrose, who came here from Wales with three brothers, all of whom settled at Quakertown, Pa., in the year 1700. Joseph Penrose, son of Robert, the settler, was born on Jan. 10, 1737, and married Elmer Dehaven, and they settled in Bucks county, Pa., where they reared three children, viz.: Israel, who married Susannah Faulk, a daughter of Thomas Faulk, on Nov. 11, 1790, and who had five children, Elizabeth, Enos, Thomas, Jane and Benjamin; Eidith; and Joseph.

Benjamin Penrose, son of Israel, married Hannah Lukens, of Montgomery county, Pa. Joseph, another son, married Margaret Lukens, also of Montgomery county, on Nov. 28, 1839. She was a daughter of Enos Lukens, and they had three children: Sarah Jane, a maiden lady who resides with her sister, Mrs. Enos Carrigan; Elizabeth, who died young; and Roberta A., born July 7, 1854. The father of Mrs. Carrigan was born Sept. 6, 1808, and died Oct. 25, 1896; his wife, born Nov. 20, 1813, died in 1878. All of these excellent people belong to the simple faith of the Quakers.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Carrigan are: Rena M., born Sept. 20, 1878, who was a student in the Millersville Normal School, and resides at home; Leora A., who was born April 1, 1882, at present a student in the Millersville Normal School, although holding a certificate as a teacher; Harry Penrose, born Feb. 24, 1886; Lester Joseph, who was born Aug. 9, 1888, and died July 22, 1901; Grace, born Oct. 7, 1891.

Enos Carrigan is a man who stands high in the esteem of the community, and is noted for his sincere convictions of right and the courage with which he carries them out. Although he does not profess any particular creed, he believes in all moral influences and follows the Golden Rule in every relation of life, living up to a high standard. His interest in all educational movements has been constant and for a long period he has served as school director. The family and its connections are among the wealthiest and most prominent in the county.

ABRAHAM ROYER (deceased) was one of the residents of the northeastern part of the county of Lancaster, where he owned a large farm and was long engaged in its cultivation. In later life he moved to Lancaster, where he lived to an advanced age. He was twice married, and had several children, among them, Samuel, who resided near Strasburg, Lancaster county; and Jacob, the father of Abraham Royer.

Jacob Royer was a farmer of West Cocalico township, and died when almost seventy-seven years old. In his religious views he was a thorough and devoted Lutheran. Elizabeth Stober, his wife, died at the age of fifty years. They had six children: William, a resident of West Cocalico township, where he was engaged in farming; Jacob, who died young; John, a tailor at Reamstown, deceased; Henry S., whose name appears below; Samuel, a resident of Mt. Joy; Abraham, deceased.

Henry S. Royer was born Sept. 25, 1829, and was reared on the farm in Cocalico township. In 1849 he began to learn the cabinet maker's trade with Elias Rhodes, of Reamstown. In 1854, he began business on his own account in Terre Hill, where he has since been engaged as undertaker and cabinet maker, also carrying a line of furniture. Mr. Royer and his son George have also conducted a cigar business, in which they were engaged many years.

Mr. Royer was married in 1855 to Miss Margaret Weaver, a daughter of George Weaver. She was born in East Earl township. They have three children: Lizzie, who is the wife of Menno Good, of Bowmansville; George, deceased; and Jacob, a physician in Terre Hill. They affiliate with the Evangelical church.

JAMES BUCHANAN, of Soutter, Buchanan & Young, owners of the North Queen street dry-goods house, derives his origin from an ancient Scotch family. Buchanan Castle, on Ben Lomond, now the seat of Lord Roseberry, was the home of the family for many generations.

On the paternal side Mr. Buchanan's great-grandfather was Andrew Buchanan, who was born at Glasgow, and who married Marion Hardie, a native of Linlithgow; on his mother's side George Andrews, born at Linlithgow, married to Margaret Beattie, born at Lingholm. All these ancestors died at the age of sixty-four years.

James Buchanan, son of Andrew and Marion, was born at Linlithgow April 20, 1814, died at Dunfermline Dec. 5, 1887. He married Jane Andrews, born at Linlithgow, March 1, 1819. The following children were born to them: Margaret, Jan. 19, 1840; Andrew, Oct. 20, 1841; Marion, Nov. 23, 1844; Jane, Nov. 14, 1850; James, June 24, 1852; George, May 31, 1855; and Thomas, March 15, 1858. James, the father of these children, was a shoe manufacturer, and moved first to Glasgow, and later to Linlithgow, the place Mary, Queen of Scots, was born.

Andrew Buchanan, son of James and Jane, was born at Linlithgow, and after finishing school worked for his father for a time, and then moved to Dunfermline, where he married Eliza, daughter of John Grindley, owner of a weaving establishment. Of this union six children were born, four of whom are living: John, a theatrical manager of Dunfermline, now traveling in Scotland; Eliza, wife of Andrew Veitch, a linen merchant of Dunfermline; Jane, wife of Alexander Learmouth, a newspaper man of Stirling; and James, of Lancaster.

James Buchanan was born at Dunfermline Oct. 10, 1864, and educated in the public schools, after which he sought employment in a dry goods store in his native town. After four years' service he went to Glasgow, remaining there two years, when he left Scotland for America, landing in New York March 16, 1883. He soon after moved to Wilkes-barre, where he clerked in a dry goods store for six years. Moving to Binghamton, N. Y., he lived there seven years, part of the time being superintendent of an extensive business. Here he met his future partners, John C. Soutter, representative of a leading house, and George A. Young, employed in the same store with himself. These gentlemen opened their present business house April 11, 1896, and from that time to the present prosperity has attended their efforts. Though classed as a dry goods store, the establishment is really a department store, having a frontage of 32½ feet on North Queen street, running through a distance of 245 feet to Christian street. Departments for notions, gloves, laces, trimmings, children's wear, linings, dress goods, silks, muslins, wash-goods, hosiery, underwear, gents' furnishings, ribbons, handkerchiefs, embroidery, upholstery, etc., besides many others are maintained. Starting with thirty-two employes, the force now numbers sixty-eight regularly, and a larger number in busy seasons.

In November, 1897, Mr. Buchanan married Miss Mary L. Evans, daughter of the late David G. Evans, for years superintendent of Lancaster county public schools, and known during his life as a prominent educator of the district. Mr. Buchanan bought and resides in a fine home at No. 836 Marietta Ave. Mr. Buchanan is a member of the Blue Lodge and Chapter of Masons, is a Knight Templar, a member of the Elks, and of the Lucquan Piscatorial Association. He attends the Presbyterian Church. Both his parents are yet living in Dunfermline, Scotland, his father still carrying on his business. His grandmother, though eighty-four years of age, is in excellent health and bids fair to live many years. Although but thirty-eight Mr. Buchanan is likely to emulate this example of longevity, and should he do so he will certainly round out a very successful career in life.

DAVID F. BESORE, the clerk at New Holland, Lancaster county, was born in Waynesboro, Franklin county, Aug. 5, 1842, and is a son of D. S. and Eliza (Rhoads) Besore, the father of Franklin county, the mother of Lancaster county. They settled in New Holland, where for a time the father taught vocal music and had a day school. He died in 1867, at the age of sixty-five; the mother died in 1884, at the age of sixty-nine; they were buried at New Holland. They were members of the Reformed Church. Born to them were the following children: John M., a painter at Reading; Lucetta M., who married A. A. Williard, and lives at Coatesville, Pa.; David F., clerk in New Holland, Pa.; Henry J., a saddler in New Holland; Roxalena, who died young; Eliza, who married William Styer, of Lancaster; Levi, who lives in Lancaster.

The paternal great-grandfather of David F. Besore was named David, and in company with two brothers, one named Balser, he came to America at an early day, and made a home for himself and family in Franklin county; his brother, Balser, located in Lancaster county, and the other brother found a home in Lebanon county. David Besore, the grandfather of David F., lived in Franklin county, where his life was spent.

David F. Besore was married Oct. 17, 1871, in New Holland, to Susanna E. Townsley, by whom he had the following family: Anna E., who married the Rev. F. A. Rupley, a minister of the Reformed Church, and has her home in Fort Washington; Ella M., at home, unmarried; George F., a clerk in a bank in New Holland.

Mrs. Susanna E. (Townsley) Besore was born in New Holland in September, 1848, a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Bowers) Townsley. Her father was born in Chester county and her mother in Lancaster county. They came to New Holland when young, and there they spent their lives, the father working as a carpenter. He died in 1892, at the age of seventy-five years, and her mother died in 1879, at the age of fifty-six; both were buried in New Holland. They were members of the Methodist Church. Born to them were the following children: John and Mary, deceased; Jacob, a carpenter at New Holland; Margaret, who married S. J. Wiler, and lives at Reading, Pa.; Susanna E.; Amos, who died young; George, deceased; Emma, late wife of Lenuel Kizer; Eugene and Ellsworth, both dead; Ecadora, who married George Kissinger and lives in Philadelphia.

David F. Besore remained with his parents until the death of his father, when he cared for his mother for several years. When he was fifteen he entered a hardware store, working for Jacob Mentzer, and remained there until 1862. That year he enlisted in the Union army, joining a company in the 28th P. V. I., commanded by Capt. J. G. Moore. He was at the front a short time, when he returned home and re-entered the store. In the following year he again enlisted, in the 47th P. V. I. This time he enlisted for three months, and in 1864 he enlisted a third time as a sharp-shooter. At Petersburg his company captain died, and he was transferred to the 203d P. V. I. With this command he remained until the close of the war, receiving his discharge at Raleigh, N. C. He participated in several battles and skirmishes, and made a most creditable record as a loyal soldier.

Mr. Besore resumed his connection with the hardware store noted above, and there he remained until 1868, when he became a partner in the establishment. This arrangement continued until 1872, when he traded his part of the store to a brother of his partner, for a dry goods store in New Holland. There he remained two and a half years, after which he was employed in a notion house in Reading, Pa., for eight months. He returned to New Holland and worked for Jacob Mentzer for two years, having the management of a dry goods store. For six years he was in the grocery business in New Holland, and from 1886 until 1889 had charge of the post office. Then he went into the store of E. C. Diller & Son, with whom he remained until 1893, that year being again appointed postmaster, a position he held until 1897.

Mr. Besore belongs to the Encampment of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In religion he is a member of the Reformed Church. In politics he is a Democrat, and stands well in the community, both personally and as a business man of fine ability and high character.

JOSEPH HINKLE, deceased. The life of this well-known citizen of Columbia was typical of that success in agriculture which comes from well-directed effort, intelligently and persistently applied. Mr. Hinkle was a prosperous farmer, one whose later years were spent in the comparative ease and retirement which are the fitting sequel to well spent years of toil.

Joseph Hinkle was born in West Hempfield township Nov. 12, 1833, the son of Henry and Sarah (McGee) Hinkle. The parents were lifelong residents of Lancaster county, farmers by occupation, industrious and highly respected. They reared a family of eight children, as follows: Isaac, of Wrightsville, Pa.; Joseph, a farmer; David, proprietor of a hotel at Columbia; Catherine, wife of William Hardy, a machinist; John, William and Charles, all deceased; and Rebecca, late wife of Christian Hershey.

Joseph Hinkle adopted the vocation of his father. He received in his youth a good common school education, then assumed the arduous duties of farm life and was soon recognized as one of the bright, prosperous farmers of the township. He married at the age of twenty-one, May 31, 1855, in Hempfield township, Anna Melinger, who was born in Manor township, daughter of Martin and Anna (Kauffman) Melinger, who for many years engaged successfully in farming in West Hempfield township, and to whom were born the following children: John, deceased; Magdalena, wife of Jacob Frye, retired, of Hanover, Pa.; Martin, deceased; David, a farmer of Lancaster county; Christian, deceased; Anna, wife of Joseph Hinkle; Abraham, a baggage master on the railroad; Elizabeth, who married Christian Musser, a farmer of West Hempfield; Benjamin, deceased; Henry; Jacob, deceased; and Fanny, wife of Abraham Hershey, of Silver Spring. To Joseph and Anna (Melinger) Hinkle were born seven children, namely: Sarah J., wife of John Yeager, a butcher of Columbia; Isaac, who died in infancy; Martin M., a railroad engineer of Columbia; Anna, wife of Henry Wisler, a farmer of Columbia; Harry M., a railroad engineer of Columbia; David G., a railroad flagman at Columbia; and Calvin G., a railroad fireman at Columbia.

Mr. Hinkle continued farming actively in West Hempfield township from the time of his marriage, in 1855, to the spring of 1880, the last ten years of this period being spent on the old homestead. He retired from active life in 1880 and removed to Columbia, where he resided until his death, which occurred March 2, 1900. In politics he was a Republican. He possessed keen business sagacity and was well informed upon the general affairs of the world. His lamented death deprived the borough of a prominent citizen, whose counsel was discriminating and just, and whose life had been one of praiseworthy endeavor and achievement.

ABRAHAM R. FORNEY, a retired farmer residing in West Donegal township, near the borough limits of Elizabethtown, was born in West Earl township, Lancaster Co., Pa., Jan. 23, 1827, a son of Levi and Mary (Roop) Forney. Both his father and mother died in Penn township. The father was a farmer, and lived retired for the last twenty years of his life. In 1884 he died, at the age of eighty-four years, his wife having died in 1854, at the age of forty-nine years; both are interred in Erb's cemetery, in Penn township. They were the parents of the following children: Abraham R.; Leah; Aaron, who died young; John, who died at the age of fifty years; David, a farmer in the township of Mt. Joy; Joseph, a farmer in East Hempfield township; Elizabeth, who married Abraham Longenecker, a farmer near Lititz; Martin, a retired farmer in Lititz; Maria, the wife of Israel Kraybill, a farmer of Penn township, and a minister in the German Baptist Brethren Church; Levi, a farmer on the old Penn township homestead.

John and Elizabeth (Lemon) Forney, the grandparents of Abraham R. Forney, were natives of West Earl and Pequea townships, respectively. Mr. Forney had a tavern on the Reading road during the Revolution, and after the termination of that struggle devoted himself to farming.

Abraham Forney, the father of John Forney, and great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came from Switzerland in company with two of his brothers, one of whom settled in York county, Pennsylvania.

The maternal grandparents of Abraham R. Forney were Abraham and Elizabeth (Kertz) Roop, natives of West Earl township, where they followed a farming life, and were buried in Groffdale, on a part of their old farm, which is now owned and operated by the gentleman whose name introduces this article.

Abraham R. Forney was married May 14, 1846, in Lancaster, to Anna Keller, who died Sept. 12, 1901, and to this union were born the following children: Salinda, the wife of John H. Hertzler, a farmer of Rapho township; John K., of Abilene, Kans., who is vice-president, and his son secretary, of the Belle Springs Creameries, a large institution; Martin, of Elizabethtown, a farmer, and married to Anna Hemperly; Anna K., who died at the age of eighteen years, while on a visit to her brother, John K., in Kansas; Elizabeth, the wife of Joseph H. Eshleman, the cashier of the Exchange Bank at Elizabethtown.

Abraham R. Forney remained with his parents until he reached the age of twenty years, at which time he was married and rented a farm of 140 acres in West Donegal township, on which he spent thirty-nine years as a renter. About fifteen years ago he retired from active labor, and purchased the farm from the estate to which it belonged. When he gave up active farming he moved to his present location.

Mr. Forney was school director in West Donegal township, one of the organizers of the Exchange Bank, and its vice-president since the organization, in 1887. Mr. Forney is a member of the Mennonite Church.

MICHAEL HERTZLER MOORE, now living a retired life at No. 134 North Prince street, Lancaster, is one of the most conspicuous figures in that city. He is the third Michael Moore in the family, his father and grandfather having borne that name, and his (Michael H. Moore's) grandson is also named Michael, thus making four generations of Michael Moores. The great-grandfather, Adam Moore, lived and died on the farm near Junction, in Penn township, which still remains in the possession of the family, as it is owned by Michael H. Moore, who says he bought it because the remains of his great-grandfather, grandfather and father are buried in the private cemetery on the place, and because he was born and reared there.

Michael Moore, the grandfather, was born in November, 1766, in Penn township, Lancaster county, where the early years of his life were spent. He married Margaretta Gross, who was born in Penn township March 22, 1766. They had five children, three of whom lived to maturity, Magdalena (Mrs. Hoffman), Michael and Rebecca (Mrs. Stehman). Mr. Moore died in August, 1843, aged seventy-six, and his wife died Oct 25, 1857, in her ninety-second year.

Michael Moore, father of Michael H., was born March 18, 1794, in Penn township, and married Elizabeth Hertzler, of Rapho township. Their children were George, Michael H., Rebecca, Elizabeth, Susan, John H., Martin, Harriet, and three who died in infancy. Five survive, three sons and two daughters. Mr. Moore was an Old-line Whig in politics, and later in life became a Republican. He devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, and passed away Feb. 14, 1866, aged seventy-one years.

Michael Hertzler Moore was born on the old homestead, in Penn township, "Jan. 19, 1819, at 7 o'clock in the morning," to use his own language. He distinctly remembers hearing his father say that he (the father) used to visit Lancaster when there were only four stores in the city. He helped along on his father's farm until he had reached manhood, "picking up" his education, as he puts it, and remained at home until the age of twenty-two, when he bought the splendid mill property on the Marietta turnpike, known as "The Brick Mill," which he owned and operated for over fifty years. He has sold it, however, as he desires to withdraw as far as possible from business cares. Mr. Moore was one of the organizers of the First National Bank, of Lancaster, of which he is still a director. He is also a manager of the Columbia & Chestnut Hill Turnpike Company, and a stockholder in the Old Columbia Bank, the Wrightsville National Bank, and in several other banks of the county. Besides these interests, Mr. Moore is—in addition to the family home at Junction—owner of two farms on Chestnut Hill and of many houses and lands in Kansas, but he is anxious to dispose of these properties and to rid himself of all the business cares that he can lay down. It is for this reason that he came to Lancaster over two years ago, and took up his residence here, with his wife, the estimable partner who has been his great help these many years.

Mr. Moore was married, Nov. 15, 1860, to Barbara S., daughter of Joseph Stoner, of York county, and to this union three children were born. Of these, Ella is the wife of Dr. J. F. Trexler, whose sketch will be found elsewhere in these annals. Phares, the son, is living near Hambrights, and his eldest son is Michael, this making the fourth Michael Moore in descent from Adam Moore, who settled in Lancaster county before the Revolution.

Mr. Moore is a delightful conversationalist, full of interesting reminiscences. He is an Old Mennonite in religion, and a Republican in politics, although he takes no active part in partisan affairs. Quiet and unassuming, with a heart filled with kindness for his fellowmen, Mr. Moore is enjoying the fruits of an industrious and well-spent life.

JOHN E. GOOD. In the death of John E. Good, Feb. 16, 1901, Lancaster county lost one of her most estimable and exemplary citizens. He was born Jan. 13, 1827, son of John B. Good, a farmer of this locality, of German origin; during a long and useful life he not only accumulated ample means for the comfort of his family, but built up a reputation for integrity and uprightness which will ever be connected with his name.

John B. Good was born Aug. 5, 1787, and his wife, Margaret Good, on June 23, 1795. They had twelve children, who all lived to a good age, though six have now passed away. The dates of birth were as follows: Christian, May 1, 1819; Cady, Dec. 20, 1820; Valentine, Aug. 29, 1822; Elizabeth, Aug. 1, 1824; John E., Jan. 13, 1827; Margaret, Nov. 5, 1828; Leah, Jan. 10, 1830; Adam, Nov. 27, 1831; Mary, Feb. 2, 1834; Fannie, March 2, 1836; Susan, June 18, 1838; Jacob, Jan. 26, 1842. They all resided in Lancaster county except Fannie, who married a Mr. Warfel and lived in Indiana.

In 1854 John E. Good was united in marriage to Annie Eshleman, daughter of David Eshleman, who was born Sept. 23, 1836, and died Nov. 29, 1897; they became the parents of twelve children, as follows: Susan, born in 1854; Barbara, 1856; Aaron, 1858; David, 1861; John E., 1862; Emma L., 1865; Mary, 1867; Hattie, 1870; Abraham, 1872; Christian, 1874; Valentine, 1877; and Leah, 1880.

John E. Good followed a farming life all his days with great success. His farm comprised 150 well cultivated acres, which was especially valuable on account of its excellent and substantial improvements. He was a life-long member of the Republican party. Mr. Good came from a family long known as worthy members of the Old Mennonite Church, and he was likewise devoted to its doctrines and interests. In every relation of life John E. Good deserved the esteem in which his memory is preserved, for he was a good, law-abiding citizen, a charitable giver to those who deserved his bounty, a kind husband and a most careful and affectionate father. He was sincerely mourned both by his family and the community.

CHARLES BUCKIUS, the venerable superintendent of the shoe department of the Lancaster county prison, is a remarkable man, both physically and mentally. Although in his eightieth year, he is as erect and quick as most men of fifty. He comes from a long-lived race, his maternal grandfather, George Wise, having lived to a great age, and his mother, Augusta Wise, having lived to be over ninety years old, and an uncle, Valentine Buckius, died at the age of ninety-six.

The paternal grandfather of Charles Buckius was one of the founders of Germantown. William Buckius, the father of Charles, was born in Frederick City, Md., and came to Lancaster over a hundred years ago, being then a lad of nineteen years of age. Here he married Augusta Wise, and to their union were born nine children, only three of whom are now living: Kate, who is the widow of the late George Auxer; Eliza, the widow of the late John F. Huber, at one time one of the owners and publishers of The Examiner; and Charles, whose name appears at the opening of this article.

Charles Buckius was born in Lancaster Jan. 15, 1824, and was educated at a subscription school, the common schools not being in existence at that time. He became an apprentice at the trade of a tinsmith, with the late Jacob Gable, and worked as a journeyman tinsmith for John and Daniel Gemperling, both well remembered citizens of Lancaster. At eighteen years of age he turned to shoemaking, and this has been his life business. Mr. Buckius kept a shoe store for many years, having long been located in a building on the site of John Baer's Sons' bookstore, on North Queen street. During the greater part of the last twenty-five years he has been superintendent of the shoe department at the Lancaster county prison, being repeatedly called back to that position by different factions of the Republican party, on account of his rare efficiency and integrity. For two terms Mr. Buckius was street commissioner of the city of Lancaster, and in that position his work was just as thorough. He has served several terms in the common branch of the city council. It is said that there has been no work ever committed to his hands which was not done with the very highest degree of fidelity and thoroughness.

In April, 1846, Mr. Buckius was married to Miss Margaret Beatty, daughter of the late Alexander Beatty, and to this union were born seven children, those who survive being: William, who is engaged in a wholesale shoe store in Pittsburg; Kate, a prominent teacher in Lancaster; Augusta, the wife of Ferdinand Demuth, of the widely known Demuth tobacco and snuff house, on East King street, said to be the oldest house of the kind in the United States; and Elizabeth, at home. Mr. Buckius is next to the oldest Odd Fellow in this city, having joined that order in 1847. He belongs to the Trinity Lutheran Church. Wherever he is found, in church, lodge, business or in society, he is recognized as a true man.

JOSEPH E. BRUBAKER, an industrious and upright citizen of Rapho township, has followed farming for many years, carrying on carpenter work in connection with his tillage of the soil. His integrity and public spirit have been recognized by his election to the board of supervisors, and he holds in a high degree the confidence and respect of his own community, being often called upon to settle estates.

Mr. Brubaker was born in Washington township, York county, Pa., Dec. 10, 1842, a son of the Rev. David F. and Elizabeth (Erb) Brubaker, of Lebanon, Lancaster county. They were married near Erb's Meeting House, in Cumberland county, Pa., and, coming into Lancaster county, settled on the Hershey farm in East Donegal township in 1851, where they spent their lives. The father was a farmer, and was for many years an active, much respected and able Mennonite clergyman. His death occurred Oct. 13, 1893, at the age of seventy-nine years, three months and twenty-one days. His wife died May 23, 1860, at the age of forty-two years, seven months and twenty-one days, and was buried in the cemetery connected with the Kraybill Church. Mr. Brubaker was a preacher from 1848 until the time of his death.

Rev. David F. and Elizabeth (Erb) Brubaker were the parents of the following family of children: Joseph E.; Daniel, who was killed by the running away of a horse when he was thirteen years old; Frances, who married Jacob E. Shank, a farmer in East Donegal township; David, who lives in Rheems, Pa.; John, who died in 1900; Catherine, deceased wife of William Hoffheins, of East Donegal township. Mr. and Mrs. Brubaker were married Oct. 7, 1841. After her death he was again married, to Mrs. Anna (Hostetter) Nissley, who died in 1893, without issue.

The paternal grandparents, Daniel and Anna Brubaker, who was a Forrey, were married on horseback, and after their romantic wedding settled in York county. Later in life they returned to Lancaster county, and engaged in farming in Landis valley. The maternal grandparents, Rev. John and Fanny (Berger) Erb, lived in Lancaster county. They came of Swiss stock. He was a minister in the Mennonite Church. He died in Cumberland county, leaving a family of two sons and five daughters. The youngest son, John, is still living, a Mennonite preacher located at present in Dauphin county, Pa. One sister also survives, Mrs. Susan Garber, of Bossler's Corner, in Donegal township, Lancaster county.

Joseph E. Brubaker was married, in Lancaster, Pa., in 1868, to Susan E. Stauffer, by whom he had the following children: Ammond S., engaged in business as a maker of wire fences, who married Hettie Metzler and resides at East Petersburg, Pa.; Clayton S., a farmer with his father, married to Maria Witmeyer, by whom he has had one daughter, May; Ella, who married Ephraim Longenecker, a farmer in Mt. Joy township, and has three children, Ada, Eva and Victor; J. Henry S., a farmer, married to Anna B. Groff, of Whitmer, Nov. 4, 1901; and Susie, at home.

Mrs. Susan E. (Stauffer) Brubaker was born in Rapho township, in 1845, a daughter of Henry and Susan (Eby) Stauffer, both of Lancaster county. Mr. Stauffer spent his last eight years in the home of his daughter, Mrs. Brubaker. His life was devoted to farming. During the last two years he lived he was deprived of his sight. A man of fine character and marked ability, he was well thought of by all who knew him, being called to fill various township offices and to settle several estates. When he died, in 1890, he was eighty-eight years old. His wife died in 1882, at the age of seventy-five years. They were members of the Mennonite Church, and their remains rest in a private cemetery on part of their old homestead. These were their children: Joseph, deceased; Samuel, a retired farmer in Rapho township; Henry, a machinist, and living on the old homestead; Jacob, justice of the peace in Rapho township; Catherine, late wife of Jacob G. Nissley; Christian, a carpenter in Warwick, and twin to Susan, who married Mr. Brubaker. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Brubaker were Joseph and Catherine (Ocker) Stauffer, farming people of Lancaster county, as were her maternal grandparents, Christian and Frances (Hershey) Eby.

Joseph E. Brubaker remained at home with his parents until he was twenty-one years old, and then, going West, spent three years at the carpenter trade in Monmouth, Ill. At the expiration of this period he returned to Lancaster county, and resumed his residence in Rapho township, where he did carpenter work for two years before beginning the cultivation of his father-in-law's farm. For nineteen years he was engaged in this labor, and in 1889 removed to his present place of seventy acres. Success has crowned his thrift and industry, and he owns a beautiful farm, which is now managed by a son. In the community his standing is good, and he is regarded as one of the leading Republicans of this part of the county. In religion he and his whole family are connected with the Mennonite Church, and their integrity and character are unquestioned.

SIM EBY (deceased) was a miller, and followed his trade in the northern part of Lancaster county for many years. Born at Hammer Creek, he was reared on the farm, and was a son of Christian Eby. Learning the milling trade early in life, after his marriage he bought what was known as the Cedar Run Mill, now termed the Martin Mill, located in Earl township. Five years after his marriage he sold this property and bought a farm in Leacock township, consisting of 132 acres, located near Gordonville. This was his home for thirteen years, when he sold out and removed to the old Frantz farm in Leacock township, comprising 132 acres, and there he lived until his death, in 1881, at the age of seventy-two years. He owned four farms and bore a reputation as a progressive and successful farmer. In the Mennonite Church, to which he belonged, he served as a deacon.

Sim Eby and Anna Frantz, a daughter of Jacob Frantz, of Leacock township, were married early in life, and lived together many years. She died at the age of eighty, the mother of eleven children: Jacob F., of Intercourse; Elias, a resident of Strasburg; Benjamin, a miller of Paradise; Christian and Samuel, who are dead; Amos, a resident of Paradise; Ezra, Henry and Joseph, who are all dead; John H., living on the old homestead in Leacock township; Lizzie, unmarried.

Amos Eby was born Aug. 29, 1843, and was reared on the old homestead. His education was secured in the public schools, and he remained at home working for his father until he was twenty-nine years of age. On Oct. 31, 1872, he married Miss Anna McKillips, a daughter of Daniel and Christiann (Denlinger) McKillips. Mrs. Eby was born in Upper Leacock township March 24, 1848, and is the mother of one daughter, Laura M., born Sept. 2, 1880. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church.

After Amos Eby was married he located on the north end of the old homestead in Leacock township, where he remained engaged in farming twenty-four years. He gave considerable attention to dairying, and long had a milk route in Paradise. During these years he handled farm implements and fertilizers quite extensively. Some years ago he purchased a lot in Paradise, where he built a fine residence and made his home. Mr. Eby is extensively engaged in the manufacture of farm fertilizers, some of his make being widely known, such as the Pequea "Phosphate," "Economy," the "Ammoniated," and the "Farmers' Mixture." His goods are sold in Lancaster county, and the business is a very prosperous one.

Mrs. Eby has been an invalid for twenty years, and has suffered greatly, though her suffering has not proved sufficient to break down the sweetness of her disposition and the unselfishness of her heart.

AMAZIAH B. EBY is a practical machinist, ranking among the foremost of the trade in the State, and a man of high character. He is alert and keen-eyed, intelligent and awake to all the demands his calling makes upon him.

Benjamin Eby, his father, was the third son of Sim Eby, and was born May 7, 1838. He was reared as a farm boy, and his education was such as was afforded by the local day and public schools. He began operations for himself when he was twenty-four years of age, renting property and engaging in farming for twenty years on the land of others. At the end of that period he bought a farm of fifty-four acres in Leacock township, near Ellsworth post-office, where he has been engaged in general farming for many years. In 1897 he purchased the George Beiler property at Paradise, and made it his home. The place consists of eleven acres of land, with a chopping mill and machine shop, where general machine repairing is done. The milling department is under the management of Mr. Eby, while his son, Amaziah, has charge of the machine work.

Mr. Eby was married in November, 1862, to Miss Hattie Buckwalter, a daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Rohrer) Buckwalter. Mrs. Eby died in 1867, at the age of twenty-six years, leaving two children, Amaziah B. and Ada E. In 1869 Mr. Eby was married to Miss Elizabeth Hoover, a daughter of Benjamin and Barbara (Brockbill) Hoover. To this marriage were born the following children: Annie, Lena, Amanda, Amos, Naomi and Silas. Annie is the wife of John R. Frantz, a miller at Millersville; Lena is the wife of C. H. Hersh, a farmer of Byers-town. Mr. and Mrs. Eby belong to the Old Mennonite Church, and stand high in the community.

Amaziah B. Eby, who has charge of the machine shop connected with his father's property at Paradise, has made himself quite a reputation as a master at his calling, and has worked in some of the leading shops of the section, notably at Hagerstown. He is regarded as a young man of far more than the ordinary promise, and much is expected of him.

PETER STYER, of Caernarvon township, Lancaster county, is the grandson of John Adam Styer, a native of Germany.

The grandfather came to this country when he was only nineteen years of age, locating in Lancaster county, where he was married to a Miss Miller. A miller by trade, he followed that occupation some years, and was engaged in the milling business during the war of the Revolution. He was also a farmer, and was a man of magnificent physique. It is a matter of tradition that on one occasion, single and alone, at one time, he carried twelve bushels of wheat up two flights of stairs. Lacking only two months of eighty-seven years when he died, he had lived a long and earnest life. In the northeast part of Caernarvon township he owned a farm of 210 acres, and the stone residence and other buildings which were erected by him on this place are still standing, and are now occupied by Peter Styer. A large walnut tree stands in the yard at the old homestead, which was planted by Peter Styer's grandmother. It measures over sixteen feet in circumference, and for this tree alone the owner was offered $75.00 several years since. A numerous family was born to him, of which we have the following record: Barbara, wife of Abraham Kern; Russina, who married Joseph Weiler; Catherine, who married Peter Yohn; Magdalina, wife of Peter Widensaul; Elizabeth, who married Peter Foreman; Frederick; John Jacob; John Adam.

John Adam Styer, the father of Peter, was born in 1772 and lived to be eighty-two years old. His life was spent in Caernarvon township, where he engaged in farming all his days. In his religion he was a regular attendant at the Robeson Lutheran Church, and took much interest in it, being deeply versed in the Scriptures, which he had regularly and systematically read through seven times. For years he was an elder in the church. Susan Yohn, his wife, was a daughter of Frederick Yohn, and was born in Caernarvon township; when she died, in 1870, she was eighty-one years old. To this worthy couple were born ten children, as follows: Jacob, Frederick and Catherine, who married Samuel Rigg, all deceased; Sarah, the widow of Levi Weyler; Adam, who lives in Reading; Peter, deceased; Peter (2), whose name appears above; John, deceased, as is Mary, who married George Spotts; Elizabeth, the wife of Isaac Foreman, who has her home in Chester county.

Peter Styer was born March 1, 1827, was reared on the farm and educated in the common schools. For the greater portion of his life he has had his home in Caernarvon township. The old homestead is owned by him, and his attention is given to its cultivation. He is a man of character and standing in the community in which he lives, and is ever ready to lend a helping hand to any one of its important enterprises.

Mr. Styer has been twice married, Elbina Sweitzer being his first wife. She was a daughter of Peter Sweitzer, and was born at the "Plow Tavern," in Berks county. She died in 1888, at the age of fifty-two years, and was the mother of ten children, of whom Sarah Ellen is the wife of Levi B. Moore, of Martindale, Lancaster county; Wilson is a lime burner of Berks county; John Adam is a farmer of Caernarvon township; Clara married Henry Miller, of Reading; Bentley and Heber were twins; Heber is dead and Bentley is a farmer in Caernarvon township; Daniel W. is a physician in Churchtown; George is pastor of the Lutheran Church at Millersburg, Ohio; James is in the agency business in Caernarvon township; Charles is at home.

Mr. Styer was married March 10, 1892, to his present wife, Harriet Ann, a daughter of John Foreman; they are members of the Lutheran Church, and are among the most respected citizens of the community.

During the Civil war Mr. Styer served as recruiting officer for Caernarvon township, and did some very good work in that position. For some ten years or more he had a butcher business in Reading, and has handled much stock, cattle and horses, in his time. At the closing of the war he bought up many government horses and, bringing them to Lancaster county, disposed of them at very good profits. Mr. Styer is a skilled veterinarian, though not a graduate, and has practiced the science with much success.

DAVID H. MELLINGER, one of the enterprising young farmers of Manor township, was born Sept. 9, 1865, in the old Mellinger homestead at Creswell, where he still resides. He comes from one of the old families of this region, and is of German origin, being a descendant of Ludwig Mellinger, the first of the name to locate in this section.

John Mellinger, great-grandfather of David H., was born in Manor township, and there passed his entire life, engaged in farming and distilling. His judgment in business matters brought him prosperity, and he was a man of considerable influence in his community. In politics he was an Old-line Whig, and he took an active part in the affairs of his day and locality, holding various positions, among them that of school director of his township. He died in Creswell.

David Mellinger, grandfather of David H., was born in February, 1795, in Manor township, and had a long career, surviving until April 9, 1878. His early literary training was received in the public schools of the home neighborhood, and he took up the study of medicine with Dr. Musser, of Manor township. His professional studies completed, he opened an office in Creswell, and practiced continuously for the long period of sixty years, meeting with success from the start. He owned 100 acres of land, which under his management was in an excellent state of cultivation, and, having inherited his father's business ability, his affairs prospered. He was twice married, his first wife being Susan Shopf, also of Manor township, who was born March 21, 1794, and died Sept. 23, 1856. Five sons were born to this union, namely: (1) John S., father of David H.; (2) Henry S., M. D., the last survivor, who died Feb. 6, 1901; (3) Jacob, who was a business man of Columbia; (4) David; and (5) Benjamin S., who died at the age of twelve years. The father was an active member of the M. E. Church, in which he held office. Politically he was a Republican. John S. Mellinger married Miss Elizabeth Wissler, who survives him. His death occurred in October, 1897.

F. S. Mellinger

David H. Mellinger attended the common schools and the State Normal at Millersville, acquiring a good practical education, thus fitting him to assist his father in his agricultural work and other business affairs until the latter's retirement, when he assumed full charge. The home farm, which contains over eighty acres, is devoted to general crops, and in addition to the cultivation of that place Mr. Mellinger looks after several other farm properties of his own, and attends to the business interests of his uncle, Dr. Henry S. Mellinger. Naturally he is kept constantly busy, but his disposition is an energetic one, and he attends personally to all the details of his work, taking justifiable satisfaction in the results which have attended his affairs. Mr. Mellinger is as much interested in the fine appearance of his place as in its more material welfare, and his home and surroundings testify strongly to his love for the beautiful. The house, a modern brick structure of pleasing design, was built after his own plans in 1893-94. Like the public-spirited citizen he is, Mr. Mellinger is always ready to give his influence and substantial encouragement to every measure involving the welfare of his town and county. He is a Republican politically, but not an office seeker.

On May 25, 1892, Mr. Mellinger was united in marriage with Miss Agnes C. Mann, daughter of Levi H. Mann, who resides near Creswell.

B. D. ECKMAN, a retired farmer of East Drumore township, Lancaster county, was born Sept. 4, 1821, a son of John and Elizabeth (Draucker) Eckman, both natives of this county. John Eckman was born in 1781; and his wife in October, 1786.

John Eckman was the son of Henry Eckman, who was born in Germany and came to this country in colonial times, settling near Puseyville, in East Drumore township. In time he became quite prosperous, owning six or more good farms, leaving one to each of his children at the time of his death. These children were: Daniel; Henry, Jacob; John; Martin; Betsy, who became the wife of Mr. Kirkwood; and Jane, who married and lived near the Juniata river.

John Eckman after his marriage settled on one of his father's farms, where he devoted his life to farming, and died at the home near Puseyville Nov. 20, 1859. His wife died March 2, 1827, having been the mother of two sons and three daughters. (1) Sarah A., born June 26, 1812, married James Bryson and settled on her father's old homestead, where they lived many years, and then moved to Oxford, where Mr. Bryson died; she is still living, at the venerable age of ninety years; her only child living, Jeanette, is Mrs. William Smith, of Philadelphia. Mary, the wife of John Gregg, is dead. (2) Catherine Eckman, born in May, 1814, died in the bloom of her young womanhood. (3) Elizabeth, born April 4, 1816, married John Donnelly, of Lancaster county. She died in Adams county, Ill., where they had moved. Mr. Donnelly is also dead. To this marriage were born Hugh, James, Henry and Sallie, who is the wife of the Rev. W. Eckman, now of Decatur, Ill. (4) John A. Eckman, born in 1819, died young.

(5) B. D. Eckman, who was the youngest member of his father's family, lost his mother when he was only five years old, and was reared in the household of his uncle, Henry Eckman.

B. D. Eckman was married Nov. 4, 1841, to Susanna E. Westcott, a daughter of William and Mary Westcott, an old family of Lancaster county. Mrs. Eckman was born in East Drumore township Jan. 4, 1826. Of the family of William and Mary Westcott four are living: George W., of Oxford, Chester county; James, of Wilmington, Del.; Margaret, the deceased wife of Benjamin Winters, of Oxford, Pa.; Susanna, the wife of Mr. Eckman.

B. D. Eckman began his married life as a farm hand, earning the munificent salary of forty cents a day. Industrious and economical, he was able to buy a farm in 1855, which is the present residence of the family. It was then only partly cleared, and had but a shell of a house for a home; since that time he has erected large and handsome farm buildings, and now has one of the best appointed farms in the county. In his politics Mr. Eckman is a Democrat. His wife is a member of the Baptist Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Eckman have been born thirteen children, ten of whom are living. (1) John, born in March, 1842, married Miss Sallie Donnelly, and is now a resident of Decatur, Ill., where they have the following family: Edward, William, Mamie, Anna, Mearl, John, Walter and Beulah. (2) William W., born in March, 1844, married Miss Lina Simcock, of Paxton, Ill., and lives in Memphis, Mo., where he owns a lumber yard. They have one daughter, Lillie. (3) Sarah E., born in July, 1846, married George Witencamp, of Payson, Ill., and is the mother of two children, Mary E. and Nettie. (4) Mary, born Aug. 4, 1848, died in childhood. (5) James B., born in June, 1850, married Miss Lida Keenan, of Lancaster county, who died in Illinois, leaving a family,—Harry, Josie, Johnnie and Lida. (6) George W., born in July, 1852, married Mary Starr, and lives in Greene county, Ill.; he is the father of seven children, Aldis, Baltzer, Francis, Mary, Mable, Enos and Della. (7) Jeanette M., born in June, 1854, is unmarried, at home. (8) Adam, born in May, 1856, married in Illinois and now resides in Adams county; his children are Daniel, George, Henry, Bernice and May. (9) Anna, born in September, 1858, married Frank Keen, of Quarryville, and is dead, leaving one daughter, Jeanette. (10) Sander M., born in June, 1861, married Miss Jennie Reineer, of Drumore township, and is a farmer on his place in East Drumore township. They have the following children, Bertha, Ira, Leah, Mary, Perry, Anna and George. (11) B. D., Jr., born May 6, 1864. (12) Ellen R., born in January, 1866, married Richard Kearner, of Payson, Ill., and is the mother of one child, George. (13) Susanna, died in childhood.

B. D. Eckman, Jr., married Miss Emma M. Myers, a daughter of Anthony and Martina Myers. Her mother is dead, but her father is still living in Lancaster. Mrs. Eckman was born Feb. 24, 1868. They are residing with his father on the old home-stand, and have one son, Harry A.

JOHN SPRECHER, a retired farmer whose home is in New Holland, Pa., was born in Earl township Nov. 25, 1835, a son of Isaac and Mary (Dieffenderffer) Sprecher, long residents of Earl township.

Isaac Sprecher came to the farm where his son is now living in 1864, and there he spent his remaining days. He passed away in 1866, at the age of sixty-six years; his widow survived many years, entering into rest in 1892. The ashes of both rest in the Lutheran Church cemetery at New Holland. The husband and father was a farmer all his life. Isaac Sprecher and his wife had the following children: Benjamin, a farmer in Earl township; Anna, wife of Samuel Brubaker, a retired farmer in New Holland; Susannah, who died at the age of sixteen years; John; Isaac, a farmer in New Holland; Mary, who married Jacob Shaeffer, a retired farmer in West Earl township; Rachel, unmarried and living in New Holland.

George Sprecher, the paternal grandfather of John Sprecher, who married a Miss Shaffer, was a farmer of much more than the usual prominence in Lancaster county. His maternal grandfather, Benjamin Dieffenderffer, and his wife, a Miss Hull, were both natives of Lancaster county.

John Sprecher was married in Lancaster, Pa., in December, 1863, to Catherine Grabill, by whom he has had the following children: Ida, who married John Shreiner, of Manheim township, and is the mother of three children; Grabill, a farmer of Salisbury township, who married Mattie Bair, and is the father of two children; Leamon, a farmer of Strasburg, who married Cora Hartman, and is the father of one child; John, a teacher for some years, a graduate of the Millersville State Normal, class of 1899 and now a member of the junior class at Franklin and Marshall College, residing meanwhile at home, only twelve miles from the college; Bertha, at home, unmarried; Mary, who married Samuel Holt, a farmer at Merrill, Pa., and is the mother of one child.

Mrs. Catherine (Grabill) Sprecher was born in West Earl township Aug. 9, 1840, a daughter of Henry and Catherine (Rupp) Grabill, both of West Earl township. Her father was a farmer, and died in West Earl township in 1876, at the age of sixty-eight. Her mother entered into rest in 1873, at the age of sixty-one. Their remains are resting in Carpenter's Church cemetery in West Earl township. Their children are as follows: Sarah, deceased wife of John Myers; Elizabeth, late wife of John Lafevre; Abraham, deceased; Catherine, Mrs. Sprecher; Henry, deceased; Susannah, the widow of Martin Gahman, and living in Lancaster; Samuel, a grocery merchant of Lancaster; Isaac and John, who both died young.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Catherine Sprecher were John and Catherine (Weidler) Grabill, farming people of Lancaster county; her maternal grandparents Abraham and Elizabeth (Kurtz) Rupp, also Lancaster county farmers.

John Sprecher remained at home with his parents until his marriage, when he began farming for himself, an occupation he continued until 1895, when he retired and removed to his present home. He and his family are members of the German Baptist Church, and are counted among the most honorable and upright people of the community. In his politics he is a Republican.

JACOB WITMER. The continent of Europe has contributed many good and substantial citizens to America, and no country has been represented by a more excellent class than has Switzerland, many natives of that beautiful land finding a new home in the United States, a great portion of them locating in the rich farming lands of Pennsylvania. Prominent among these was a representative of the Witmer family, although but a lad of fourteen at the time; it is easy to believe that both courage and independence were his, to enable him to leave kindred and friends for a strange land. That he possessed attributes of merit is certain, for he became the honored founder of one of the largest and most esteemed families in Lancaster county. His habits were frugal and he was of an industrious bent, resulting in the accumulation of means, and at his death he left a fine farm which is still in the possession of his descendants. In the Mennonite Church he was prominent, and that religious denomination has absorbed almost all of the succeeding family.

John Witmer, the grandfather of Jacob Witmer, inherited the farm of ninety broad acres, located one-half mile south of Lampeter, and there he filled out his days, engaged in agricultural pursuits, marrying Esther Bowman, the estimable daughter of a neighboring farmer, and dying at the age of seventy-six. The children of this union were: Jacob, the father of Jacob (2); Anna, who married Christian Shaub, of West Lampeter; and Barbara, who married Jacob Barge, of Strasburg.

Jacob Witmer (1) was born Sept. 7, 1791, and died June 21, 1864. His home was on the old home-stand, as he purchased it from his father's estate and lived a quiet, pastoral life among his fields and herds, one of the most estimable of men, who performed his full duty in every relation of life. His marriage was to Sarah Lefever, a daughter of George and Susan (Hartman) Lefever, of Strasburg, her birth being on Feb. 15, 1799, her death on Sept. 9, 1890. A family of ten children were born to this union: Esther, born in February, 1818, residing in Lancaster City, the widow of Jacob Fritz; George, born in January, 1820, a retired farmer of Providence township; Susan, born Dec. 4, 1823, the deceased wife of Jacob F. Herr; Sarah, born in December, 1825, twice widowed, having first married Abraham Graft, and second, Rev. Amos Herr, and now living with her brother, Jacob; Anna, born in November, 1827, died in 1829; John, born in August, 1830, died in 1833; Aaron, born in April, 1832, a retired farmer of West Lampeter; Jacob, born Nov. 11, 1834; Martin, born in July, 1836, a farmer of Strasburg township; and Naomi, born in October, 1838, died in 1842.

Jacob Witmer (2) was born and reared on the farm he now occupies, received his education in the public schools, and upon the death of his father, in 1864, purchased forty-five acres of the homestead land; this was the west half, upon which the most improvements had been made, and where the father had died. This land is especially well placed for general farming, and such Mr. Witmer carried on until 1895, when he retired from active life. His standing in the county is second to none in integrity, and he is a consistent member of the Mennonite Church, where he takes a deservedly prominent place.

C. M. RESSLER, one of the successful farmers and prominent citizens of Lancaster county, was born in Providence township May 10, 1841; he was a son of Daniel and Mary (Metzler) Ressler, the former a man of wonderful longevity, dying in his one hundredth year, on Dec. 18, 1901. Daniel was born March 24, 1802, and was of sturdy German stock, his father having been a native of Germany who was one of the first settlers of this county.

Daniel Ressler was the father of ten children: Hettie, deceased; Amos, deceased; Barbara; Harry, a retired farmer; C. M., of this sketch; Maria, at home; Martin, deceased; Susan, a resident of Lancaster; John, on the old home farm; and Emma, deceased.

C. M. Ressler was reared as a farmer boy and received his education in the public schools of Providence township. Although he started out in life with very limited means, by his activity and energy he has accumulated a large and well-improved estate, consisting of two valuable farms, with excellent dwellings, barns and all the necessities of advanced agricultural work. For a number of years Mr. Ressler has been a very successful dealer in cattle and stock. He has now retired from his well improved farm, near Chestnut Level, and has bought a home in Strasburg borough, where he now resides. His son, Aaron D., has possession of the farm.

The first marriage of Mr. Ressler was to Miss Elizabeth Miller, of Martic township, their union taking place on Sept. 26, 1869; she was a daughter of David and Maria Miller. The children born to this marriage numbered eight. Mrs. Ressler died Jan. 31, 1888, and Mr. Ressler was married a second time, on July 23, 1891, to Sarah J. Parker, who died April 30, 1900, one daughter being of this second marriage.

Mr. Ressler is a leading member of the Mennonite Church, is a Republican in his political views, is a fine farmer and one of the most valued citizens of the township. In his home he is respected and beloved, and among his neighbors he is regarded as a friend worthy of high esteem.

DAVID G. ESHLEMAN (deceased) was at one time ranked as a leading member of the Lancaster bar. He was born near Strasburg, Lancaster county, July 3, 1816, son of Benjamin Eshleman, a native of Lancaster county. He was educated in Philadelphia first, and afterward at Dickinson College, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1840. He then read law in the office of the late John R. Montgomery, of Lancaster, and was admitted to practice in 1842. He followed his profession successfully to the time of his death. He married Caroline Carpenter, daughter of Dr. Abraham Carpenter, and to this union were born the following children: Anna, who married John H. McMurdy (both deceased), leaving one son, John H., Jr.; Eliza, wife of Frank M. Taylor, residing at Denver, Colo., who has one living son, David Paul; Harriet, wife of E. C. Stimson, residing at Colorado Springs, Colo.; Mary, who died in childhood; and George Ross. In politics David G. Eshleman was formerly a Whig, but later became an active worker in the Democratic party. He served in the Legislature and was also county solicitor. He died April 30, 1895. Mrs. David G. Eshleman was, through her mother, a granddaughter of George Ross, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. She died April 11, 1900.

GEORGE ROSS ESHLEMAN was born in Lancaster Sept. 30, 1864, descended on both sides from families of German origin and among the early settlers of Lancaster county. He received his primary education in the Yeates Institute of Lancaster. He then went to Princeton College, where he was graduated in 1884. He read law in his father's office and was admitted to practice in 1886, and since that time has successfully followed his chosen profession in his native town. He was in politics a Democrat until 1896, when he joined the Republican party. He was married to Elizabeth Spencer June 1, 1892, and they have no children. He is editor of the Law Review; a member of Herschel Lodge, I. O. O. F., Lancaster Lodge, No. 134, B. P. O. E., the Young Republican Club, the Hamilton Club, the Lancaster Country Club and the Y. M. C. A.; he belongs to the Lancaster County Bar Association, and is a member of St. James Protestant Episcopal Church.

The earliest record of the Eshleman family in America is that of the great-great-grandfather, John Jacob Eshleman, who was born in Germany in 1707 and came to this country in 1729. He settled in Strasburg, where he bought a tract of land. He was a millwright. John Jacob married Barbara Barr, of Lancaster, and they had but one son, Jacob, born in 1742. The father, John Jacob, was a Mennonite, and died in Strasburg. His son, Jacob, married Barbara Groff, and they had children as follows: Jacob; John, who resided at Strasburg and married first, Mary Weaver, and second, Alice Groff; Susan, Mrs. Henry Breckbill; Fannie, Mrs. Joseph Patts, who died at Strasburg; Benjamin, who married Fannie Herr, both dying at Greenland, Pa.; David, married to Mary Groff, and Barbara, married to Jacob Bachman, all of whom died at Strasburg; Mary, who married David Miller, of Carlisle, Pa. The eldest son of this family, Jacob Eshleman, born in 1768, had a milling business at Leaman Place, Lancaster county. He married Mary Breckbill, and resided in Paradise township, Lancaster county. Their children were as follows: Susan, Mrs. Michael Barr, of Quincy, Ill.; Benjamin, married to Eliza Stauffer; Maria, Mrs. John Worfel, of Lancaster; Barbara, Mrs. Jacob Frantz, of Leaman Place; Jacob; Ann, Mrs. George Groff, of Strasburg; Fannie, who died unmarried; Dr. John, of Downingtown, unmarried; Martha, Mrs. Christian L. Lefever, of Lancaster.

Jacob Eshleman, Jr., fifth child of the above family, was born in 1802. He went to work in his father's mill when a boy, learned the business thoroughly and after marriage took charge of it. He continued to run it until 1866, when his youngest son, Silas, assumed charge of it. Jacob Eshleman (3) married Juliette Witmer. Their children are: Milton B.; Farris, who married Clara Musselman; Amos L., of Paradise, married to Esther Hoover; Elam W., of Leaman Place, who married Bell Light; Eliza, now deceased; Silas K., of Leaman Place, married to Emma Haymaker.

ROBERT KOCH BUEHRLE, born at Ueberlingen, a small village in the Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, Sept. 24, 1840, was the second son of Joseph Buehrle and his wife, Joanna (Koch), of Kappel am Rhein, which was the native village of the father. The mother's birthplace was Rust, a neighboring market village.

In obedience to the law, Joseph Buehrle served for six years as a soldier in the army of the Grand Duke, at the expiration of which time he was appointed a guardsman on the frontier, an office in the Customs department. In this service he so distinguished himself in his encounters with smugglers (from the conflicts with whom he carried scars to his grave), and for his zeal and honesty in the discharge of his responsible duties, that after six years, he was promoted for meritorious conduct to the position of Internal Revenue assessor and collector in his native village. Being a man of universally admitted probity of character, a free-thinker, though a great admirer of Martin Luther, and an intense hater of slavery and despotism, how could he do otherwise than co-operate with the earliest of those patriots (joined later by Carl Schurz, Frederick Hecker and Franz Sigel), who unsuccessfully attempted to bring about the freedom and unity of Germany through the Revolution of 1848 (he lived to see the unity, though not the freedom, brought about as a result of the Franco-Prussian war, in 1870), and as a consequence was deprived of his government office in 1844, and came to America, "The Land of the Free." Not finding his trade of linen-weaver congenial nor remunerative, he, in 1848, became a boatman on the Lehigh canal (running from Mauch Chunk and points above to Philadelphia and New York), and thenceforth resided in Tinicum township, Bucks county, Pa. He owned his boat, of which he was captain, and was assisted by his two sons, the subject of this sketch and his elder brother. He retired in 1858 to a little homestead, and died in 1877, followed nine years later by his widow, in her eightieth year.

In politics Joseph Buehrle voted with the Democratic party, because the Whig seemed to him to favor wealth, nativism and prohibition, but when the Democratic party became distinctly pro-slavery he left it, as he had always been anti-slavery, and thenceforth continued to be a consistent Republican, in which respect his descendants and relatives followed him.

As shown above, Supt. Buehrle had his boyhood home in Bucks county, and at the age of seven started on the tow-path of the Lehigh canal, which he followed every season until the fall of 1858, when he literally stepped from the canal boat to the teacher's platform, although he averaged but two months a year at school up to that time. He now zealously devoted himself to study at the Bucks County Normal and Classical School, at Quakertown, where he was a classmate of Dr. J. S. Stahr, president of Franklin and Marshall College, and of Dr. George U. Wenner, a prominent Lutheran divine of New York. He was soon appointed as assistant, but after two years he again took charge of a country school, this time near Allentown, Pa. There he married Anna M. Lazarus, a daughter of Jacob Lazarus, a prosperous farmer. In the spring of 1863 he assumed charge of Weaversville Academy, in Northampton county, but soon resigned to enter the motive power department of the Pennsylvania Railroad as clerk, at Pittsburg, then under the superintendency of Andrew Carnegie.

At the expiration of two years Dr. Buehrle returned to the profession of teaching, as principal of the Allentown boys' high school, and three years later he was unanimously appointed first city superintendent of Allentown, and also ex-officio principal of the high school, to which position he was successively re-elected until 1878, when he declined to accept the office. Under his supervision the schools became widely known for their complete and effective organization and the excellence of the buildings erected. His advice was sought by boards of directors in distant parts of the state, and even after his departure from this field officers of the board were eager to consult him; so successful had been his administration there that the chief direction given his successor by the board was to follow in his footsteps and to attempt no reforms. In 1878, when Reading was casting about for a suitable person to serve that city as superintendent of schools, State Superintendent Wickersham wrote to them recommending Supt. Buehrle, of Allentown, and he was accordingly elected, and accepted the position, but remained only two years, when he resigned to become the first city superintendent of Lancaster. While at Reading, Franklin and Marshall College conferred on him the honorary degree of M. A. Though remaining there but a short time, he exerted so marked an influence that when he departed, to enter upon his work at Lancaster, his journey thither resembled an ovation, accompanied as he was by the mayor and other public officials of the city, besides a large number of school controllers, especially the officers and chairmen of the chief committees. He was probably the first school officer in the country to whom a complimentary dinner was given by the school authorities in token of their high esteem.

As superintendent at Lancaster Dr. Buehrle has labored diligently in the cause of public education; his thorough organization of the schools, and his judicious, well-directed and progressive administration of them, are universally recognized. A zealous champion of what he believes to be their best interests, he nevertheless inclines to the conservative rather than to the destructive. Striving for the establishment of what is fundamental, he has devoted himself most earnestly to the education—the instruction—of teachers—of those who are the chief factors in the work under his supervision. In doing this he has been continuously engaged in instructing classes of teachers, and it was largely to promote this end that he had become the author of "Grammatical Praxis" and "Arithmetical Exercises." In recognition of his devotion to the study of literature—especially the languages—he being acquainted with Latin, Greek, German and French, besides being a contributor to Egle's History of Pennsylvania, to Webster's and to Murray's English dictionaries—Franklin and Marshall College, in 1886, conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Dr. Buehrle is also a close student of the literature of his profession, a contributor to educational journals, and is noted for wide and thorough scholarship, as well as for his advocacy of the classics and collegiate training.

In the Pennsylvania State Teachers' Association he has taken an active and influential part, and he is also an active member of the National Educational Association. He has been especially prominent in the formation of the City and Borough Superintendents' Association of Pennsylvania, which originated in a preliminary meeting, of which he was president, held at Lancaster in 1888. In 1893 he was elected its president a second time. He is a charter member of the Penn-German Society, in the organization of which he was very active; a Royal Arch Mason, being a past master of Barger Lodge, No. 333, at Allentown; and a member of Chapter No. 13, R. A. M., of Lancaster. He has widely identified himself with whatever makes for the improvement of his adopted city; is a member of the Mechanics Library Society, of the Lancaster County Historical Society, an associate member of the Linnean Society, a director of the Lancaster General Hospital, and of the West End Building Association. In religion he is a Lutheran, a prominent member of Christ Church, and has been identified with Sunday-school work since 1859, the greater part of the time as superintendent. It was on his motion, at the meeting of the General Council held at Chicago in 1886, that a committee on a Sunday-school Course of Instruction was appointed, of which he is still a member, and which has created the council's excellent graded course. Politically a Republican, he believes in civil service reform, in the initiative, the referendum, the municipalization of monopolistic public utilities, postal savings banks and the parcels post. The home of Supt. Buehrle and his estimable wife is at No. 408 Manor street, in a double-front house owned and built by himself, besides which he has built ten others in the city.

JAMES MONTGOMERY. A leading agriculturist of Lancaster county for many years, as well as one of its most highly esteemed citizens, James Montgomery is one of the truly representative men of this section. His birth was in Colerain township, Nov. 16, 1823, and his parents were James and Betsy (Tweed) Montgomery, the former of whom was born in County Derry, Ireland, coming to Colerain township, in this county, while still a young man. His wife was born in that township, where they lived after marriage until 1836, when they removed to Eden township, settling on the farm now occupied by his son James. This land he cleared and placed under cultivation, erecting in 1857 the commodious brick residence which is still the comfortable family home. Later in life he purchased different tracts of land surrounding him, which he divided into three large farms, giving one to each son. James received the farm containing the residence, while Isaac and Robert were given large adjoining tracts.

In this comfortable home, which Mr. Montgomery provided for his children by his own energy and industry, both he and his wife passed out of life, he in 1862, and his widow in 1874. Their children were three sons and two daughters: Elizabeth and Sarah, born in Colerain township, died in Lancaster City, where they moved after the death of their parents. Neither ever married. James is the eldest son. Robert, born in Colerain, was given a common school education and for a time taught school in his district and in later years was one of the county commissioners of Lancaster county. He married Margaret Kerr, of Butler county, a very estimable lady, and they reside in great comfort on one of the farms adjoining the old homestead; their two children were: Ollie, the deceased wife of William Harrar, of Atglen, Chester county, who left one daughter, Dorothy; and Robert Montgomery, Jr., who is a resident of the far West, being mayor of Sumner City, Washington. Isaac Montgomery, brother to James, was the youngest son and was born in 1828 and married Miss Sarah Moore, of Lancaster county, their residence being on one of the farms adjoining the homestead. Their seven children are: Emma, who is the wife of Thomas Williams, of Sadsbury, in this county; Bessie, who is the wife of William Chamberlain, of Philadelphia; Ruth, who is the wife of Alfred Connor, of Kirkwood, in Lancaster county; Hettie, who became the wife of Jesse Weiler, now deceased, of this county; Marion, who is the wife of Albert Fritz, of Quarryville; Isaac, who married Miss Sadie Baughman, of Georgetown, and resides on a farm adjoining that of his father; and James, single, living at home.

James Montgomery was the eldest of his parents' family and received his education in the district schools. Reared on the farm, from choice he became an agriculturist and like his ancestors, soon gained the reputation of being one of the best farmers in the county. Mr. Montgomery also raised much stock, making this branch very profitable, although he was obliged to drive his cattle as far as Philadelphia, to find a market. Until the death of his parents he remained in charge of the home farm, after which the above named division was made, according to the wish of the father, James retaining the homestead as his, by order of birth.

James Montgomery married in March, 1877, to Miss Margaret J. Phillips, who belonged to one of the old and prominent families. Her parents were William and Mary (Lovett) Phillips, of Drumore township, both of whom were born in Lancaster county, Pa. William Phillips was a son of William Phillips, whose native land was Ireland, and who became well known through Drumore township, as a genial hotel keeper, one who looked well after the wants of the traveling public in the days of stage coaches. His son William settled later in Colerain township, where he farmed until his death in 1886. His widow still survives and finds a comfortable home and loving attention in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Montgomery. Three daughters and one son of the Phillips' family still survive, three having passed away.

Mrs. Montgomery was the eldest child of her parents, was born in Colerain in 1841 and was liberally educated, passing through the Union High School, and becoming a valued teacher both in Lancaster and Chester counties. For several years she taught in the schools of these counties, winning affection and esteem. The others of her family were: Anna, born in Colerain, the wife of W. L. Bunting; Elizabeth, the wife of Hugh J. Penny, a merchant of Russellville, Chester county; Joseph C., born in Colerain, a resident of Deloit, Ia., where he married Miss Della Ainsworth, and resides on a large farm; and John W., Wendell C. and Alfred C., who all grew to maturity, and then passed out of life.

Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery have lived in the old home surrounded by peace and prosperity and there four children have been born and nurtured: Mary M., James Clyde, Elizabeth and Oscar I. Mary received an education at the Millersville State Normal School; Clyde at the Lancaster Business College; and Oscar at the Norristown Business College.

Politically Mr. Montgomery has always been in sympathy with the principles advanced by the founders of the old Democratic party, and he has faithfully upheld the men and measures of that political organization. He was reared in the Presbyterian church, while his wife is an attached member of the Methodist church, and has been connected with the Wesleyan branch for forty-three years, her beloved mother having been a member for sixty years. Mr. Montgomery has long been a school director, his interest in the progress of educational matters being continued.

This family bears an honorable record in Lancaster county for both public and domestic virtues. Like their honored father, the sons grew to maturity displaying the same honest traits of character which made him the respected and esteemed citizen he was. In all progressive measures for the public good, in charitable and benevolent enterprises through this section, this family bears a leading part.

JOHN H. KAUFFMAN, one of the oldest and most respected farmers of Manor township, was born in Conestoga township, Lancaster county, Pa., Dec. 13, 1828, and is next to the eldest of a family of twelve children.

Isaac Kauffman, deceased father of John H. Kauffman, was born April 25, 1802, in Lancaster county, and died Nov. 15, 1888. He began farming in Conestoga township, but early came to Manor township, and rented a farm at Creswell from Jacob Buckwalter, on which he lived sixteen years; then he removed to East Hempfield township, lived there three years, next returned to Manor township, where he rented a farm from Mrs. Hershey, and shortly afterward purchased 109 acres south of Creswell. He farmed there for fifteen years and then bought a tract of four acres nearer Creswell, where he passed the remainder of his life in retirement, emphatically a self-made man. He died in the faith of the Mennonite church.

The marriage of Isaac Kauffman to Miss Annie Hess took place in Conestoga township. She was born Sept. 9, 1808, daughter of John and Catherine (Keagy) Hess, and died Nov. 12, 1889, the mother of twelve children, viz: Elizabeth, deceased wife of David Eshleman, of Creswell; John H.; Abraham, a deceased hotel-keeper; Rudolph, of Manor township; Isaac, a former dealer in tobacco at Mountville, but now deceased; Catherine, wife of Benjamin Witmer, of Millersville; Edward, of East Hempfield township; Michael, of Lancaster City; Amos, a farmer in Lancaster county; Jacob, a deceased farmer; Annie, widow of Abraham Taylor, of Millersville; and David, deceased.

John H. Kauffman was reared on the home farm and educated in the public schools of Creswell, then at the age of twenty years took to himself a wife, and for four years worked out as a day laborer at farming, next purchasing a farm of four acres, which has since been his home and to which he has added until the farm now comprises twenty acres.

Although known most generally as a farmer, John H. Kauffman had much experience on the Susquehanna river, running rafts from Marietta, Lancaster county, to Peach Bottom. He was but seventeen years of age when he entered on this line of work, beginning simply as one of the hands. His first trip almost proved to be his last, as the raft was dashed to pieces and he saved his life only by luckily catching hold of a floating piece of timber. He commenced piloting at the time of the Rebellion and continued it for fifteen years, his experiences being many and varied. After relinquishing his river life, which had been intermingled with general farming, Mr. Kauffman gave his attention chiefly to the raising of tobacco until his retirement in 1896.

In November, 1848, John H. Kauffman married Miss Susannah Moyer, born in Manheim, West Hempfield township, Dec. 1, 1830, a daughter of Christ H. Moyer, a school teacher. This lady bore her husband six children and died March 3, 1890, leaving Mr. Kauffman and his children to mourn their sad loss. These children were born and named in the following order: Adaline, the wife of Leonard S. Fleckenstine, of Easton, Md., and the mother of six children; Elizabeth, married to T. C. Kackel, a merchant of Creswell, Pa., and mother of two sons; Isaiah, a tobacco dealer of Rawlinsville, Pa., who married Clara Hiller, and is the father of two children; Aaron, an employee of a tobacco merchant in Lancaster City and married to Ida Jones; Edward, a farmer of Manor township, who married Rhoda Seachrist and has ten children; and Delilah, who is the wife of Jacob Strickler, also of Manor township, and has two children.

John H. Kauffman has reared his children in the faith of the United Evangelical church, of which he is a trustee, steward, and class-leader at Creswell; he has been a member of the society for fifty-two years, and for most of this time has been honored with official positions, so great is the confidence of his fellow-members in his trustworthiness. In politics Mr. Kauffman is a Republican. He has lived these many years a useful life, and has won for himself the sincere esteem of a host of warm-hearted friends.

HENRY KENDIG, who passed away in 1878, will be remembered by the older residents of East Lampeter township as one of the prosperous and industrious farmers of his day in that section of Lancaster county.

Mr. Kendig was born Aug. 28, 1813, in Strasburg township, this county, son of Henry Kendig, who lived and died in Lancaster county. The latter was a farmer and followed that occupation all his life. He married Miss Mary Groff, and they became the parents of twelve children: Emanuel; Martin; Joseph; Isaac; Benjamin; Simon (or Reuben); Samuel; Abraham; John; Henry; Mary, Mrs. Andrew; and Leah, wife of John Groff.

Henry Kendig followed farming all his life. In 1833 he married Miss Annie Eby, daughter of Abram and Esther Eby, and to this union were born two children: Isaac, who is in the life insurance business in Philadelphia; and Fannie, who was born in East Lampeter, Oct. 7, 1834, and remained at home with her parents as long as they lived. In September, 1884, six years after the death of her husband, Mrs. Annie (Eby) Kendig sold the farm to B. K. Landis, receiving $200.25 an acre. On March 26, 1885, she moved to Smoketown, where her death occurred Dec. 19, of the same year. The daughter, Fannie, still resides there.

CHRISTIAN KREIDER, one of the successful and progressive farmers of West Lampeter township, was born on the old family homestead, three miles south of Lancaster City, May 4, 1830, a son of a pious father and estimable mother whose wise counsels have remained with him to the present time.

While a lad, he assisted his father, John Kreider, in the fulling mill which was on the farm. He received his education in the common schools of the district. He chose farming for his occupation, and in the spring of 1853 he began the operation of one of his father's farms, the old homestead. This he operated for eleven years.

In 1863 he lost his wife and after this bereavement he returned to his father's house, where he remained for several years; in 1866, he located on his present farm, where he engaged in farming until 1878, at which time he removed to Strasburg and lived there until 1899, then returning to the old home, where he now resides with his son and daughter.

Christian Kreider was thrice married and has been thrice bereaved. His first marriage was to Esther Bowman, a daughter of Rev. Henry Bowman, her death occurring in Oct., 1863, at the age of thirty-four. In 1866 he married Mary Huber, a daughter of Daniel Huber, of Willowstreet, her death occurring in 1873, at the age of thirty-nine. To this union were born four children: Susan H., of West Lampeter; Annie, the wife of Frank Cope, of East Petersburg, who has one child, Lizzie; Francis H., who died in 1893, at the age of twenty-two; and John H., a farmer, who operates his father's farm. In 1884 Mr. Kreider married Esther Eckman, a daughter of Jacob Eckman, of Colerain township, later of Lancaster City; her death occurring May 20, 1899, when she was aged sixty-eight.

Christian Kreider has been one of the leading men of his township; early in life, when but seventeen, he became a member of the Reformed Mennonite Church, being received into the church by its devout and saintly founder, Rev. Bishop John Herr. He has ever been an upright man, and a worthy citizen in every relation of life.

ELIAS EBY. The Eby family has given to Lancaster county some of its most worthy and respected citizens. During life the late Sem Eby was one of the leading men of the county, in the northwestern part of which he was born, in 1808, and he passed out of life in 1881. The major part of his life was employed in agriculture in Leacock township, where he accumulated much property and was regarded as not only an excellent man of business and a fine farmer, but also as an upright and liberal citizen, and worthy member of the Old Mennonite church. His interest was displayed in many ways in county and township affairs, and for a long period he served on the school board. Sem Eby married Annie Frantz, the daughter of a neighbor, Jacob Frantz; she was two years his junior, and survived him nine years, dying in 1890. In all good works in the Old Mennonite church, she was a leader, and a fit help-mate for her husband, who for many years was one of the elders.

A family of eleven children were born to Sem and Annie Eby: Jacob F., a resident of Intercourse; Lizzie, a resident of Leaman Place; Elias, of this biography; Benjamin, a resident of Paradise township; Christian, who died in childhood; Samuel, a former resident of Leaman Place, who died in 1900, at the age of fifty-nine, and left two children; Amos, a resident of Paradise township; Ezra, who died at the age of thirteen; Joseph and Henry, who both died in infancy; and John, who resides in Leacock township, on the old homestead.

Elias Eby was born Oct. 5, 1836, was reared to farm life and grew up a self-reliant, well-informed young man, who at the age of twenty-seven was thoroughly prepared to take charge of large farming operations for himself. Renting a farm in Strasburg township he paid close attention to it and was rewarded by large harvests, and as the years passed by, his means increased, so that in the spring of 1896 he was able to retire from activity. Purchasing a pleasant home in Strasburg, he removed thither and now enjoys life in that pleasant borough.

On Dec. 1, 1863, he married Mary Ann Buckwalter, a daughter of Benjamin and Susan (Jontz) Buckwalter, who was born in Leacock township, Nov. 7, 1841. Four children have come to bless this union: Enos B., a farmer and implement dealer, whose sad death occurred May 19, 1900, at the age of thirty-five years, six months and twelve days, leaving his widow, Lettie (Herr) Eby, with five children: Morris, Ruth, Ralph, Elias and Emma; Anna V., born Aug. 23, 1866, who married Ambrose Erbenshode, resides in Philadelphia and has one daughter, Marion; B. Milton, born Sept. 15, 1867, a resident of Lancaster, who married Bertha Ingram, and has one daughter, Arline; and Harry S., born March 21, 1874, who is in the employ of the Strasburg Railroad Company.

For many years both Mr. and Mrs. Eby have been devout, generous, efficient and valued members of the Old Mennonite Church and are among the most respected citizens of the township and borough of Strasburg.

PETER G. AMMON, the genial and popular proprietor of the "Franklin House," on North Queen street, Lancaster, one of the finest hotels in the city, comes of good old sturdy Holland-Dutch ancestry.

Johannes Ammon, the first of the family in this country, came from Holland in 1730, settling in Geigertown, Berks Co., Pa., close to Valley Forge. He "sold himself" to the Colony for $96 to take up a section of land. One of the early Ammons was the groom at the first marriage consummated in the old Swedish Church at Philadelphia, May 21, 1798. Another party of Ammons settled in the Pequea Valley, in Lancaster county, and the Ammons, the Styers, the Swishers and the Yohns have all intermarried, making a numerically strong and very influential relationship. On his grandmother's side Peter G. Ammon's ancestry came from Wittenberg, Germany, while the ancestry of his mother came from England.

George Ammon, father of Peter G., was a son of John Ammon, and was a farmer, miller and stock dealer. He died March 2, 1865. He married Mary Elizabeth Gable, daughter of Peter Gable, a farmer of Pequea Valley, Lancaster county, and fifteen children were born to them, seven of whom are yet living: William, a farmer of York county, Pa.; Sarah, wife of Samuel Styer, of Lancaster; Peter G., who comes next in the order of birth; Catherine, wife of Levi Beck, of Ephrata, Lancaster county; Ellen, wife of Samuel Rigg, general manager of the traction lines of Reading; Cyrus, a traveling salesman for and dealer in Ephrata spring water and in lumber; and George Martin, of the "American Hotel," Reading, Pa.; Susan was the wife of Robert E. Eberher, a farmer of Chester county. The mother of these died April 18, 1857.

Peter G. Ammon was born Feb. 13, 1847, in Caernarvon township, Lancaster Co., Pa., and received his education in the public schools of his district, laying aside his books at the age of sixteen years. He then learned the milling business, and continued at same three years, after which he went to Illinois, where he operated a farm and also handled agricultural machinery, enjoying the distinction of being one of the first to run a self-feeding corn sheller on the prairies of Illinois. In that State he remained three and a half years, then, returning East, he superintended the "Grand Central Hotel" in Reading, Pa., but after a time left the hostelry to take the management of the old "Plow and Harrow Hotel," in the same city, the name of the house being changed to the "Merchants Hotel" while under his management. From Reading he removed a few years later to Lititz, this county, where he successfully conducted the "Springs Hotel" five years, from there coming to the city of Lancaster. Here he became proprietor of the "Keystone House," on North Queen street, remaining there thirteen years, during which period he built up a prosperous business. In 1893 he bought the old "Franklin House" property and proceeded to build a new hotel, and the magnificent building, which is one of the finest in Lancaster, was completed and fully equipped within four months and ten days—a record breaker in the line of building in Lancaster.

On Oct. 26, 1876, Peter G. Ammon was married to Frances Louisa Breneman, daughter of John M. Breneman, a contracting mason of Lititz, and of this union two children were born, one dying in infancy. The other, John M., is at this writing attending the Law Department of the University of Pennsylvania, having first graduated from the Lancaster high school, and, later, passed a very creditable preliminary examination at the hands of the Examining committee of the Lancaster Bar.

A Democrat in politics Mr. Ammon has represented the First ward in the common branch of the city council, being sent there by his party, but at the same time receiving many Republican votes. Socially he is a member of Lamberton Lodge, No. 476, F. & A. M., Goodwin Council, No. 19, Royal Arch Chapter, No. 43, and Lancaster Commandery, No. 13; also of the I. O. O. F., the American Mechanics, the Knights of Pythias and Conestoga Assembly, No. 23, Artisans Order of Mutual Protection; he has been cashier of the latter for nearly fifteen years. He was for twelve years a director of the Northern Market House; was one of the promoters of the Northern National Bank; a director of the Peoples Building & Loan Association; a director of the Conestoga Fire Insurance Company, of Lancaster; and one of the promoters and a director of the Union Trust Company. The integrity of no man is rated higher in the city or council than that of Peter G. Ammon, and he is held in the same regard in business, social, and all other relations.

CHRISTIAN L. SHENK, one of the oldtime and highly respected farmers of Millersville, Manor township, Lancaster Co., Pa., was born Feb. 13, 1830, on the old Shenk homestead at Central Manor, where he passed his boyhood and young manhood until he was twenty-seven years old, aiding in the cultivation of the place and preparing himself for future usefulness in the line of agricultural industry on his own account.

In 1860 Christian L. Shenk settled on his present homestead of twenty-five acres, which now forms a part of the village of Millersville, carries on general farming and has become one of the leading citizens of the township.

The marriage of Christian L. Shenk took place in 1857, to Miss Elizabeth Frey, daughter of Adam Frey of Manor township, and to this marriage have been born two children: Annie, wife of Haldy Harnish, who resides on the farm with Mr. Shenk and has a family of four children: Minnie, Lizzie, Barbara and Ella; and Elizabeth, wife of Jacob M. Hostetter, who resides in Millersville, near the old homestead. The family attend the Dunkard church and are among the most worthy and respected residents of Manor township.

WILLIAM WALKER. One of the hardy pioneers of West Hempfield township, of that sterling sturdy character which is at once the strength and honor of any community, is William Walker, who has passed his four score years and now dwells in a well-earned retirement amidst the scenes of his earlier life.

William Walker was born in West Hempfield township, Dec. 2, 1816, the son of Isaac and Rosannah (Conklin) Walker. The father was a blacksmith and William, the only child, worked in his boyhood days at the anvil and forge beside his father. The latter was a native of Chester county and died comparatively early in life. Rosannah, wife of Isaac Walker, was a native of Lancaster county. For her second husband she married John Lockard, by whom she had five children, namely: John, a retired engineer of West Hempfield township; Hiram, of West Hempfield township; Washington, of York, Pa.; Margaret, who was twice married and is now deceased; and Mary, deceased wife of Aaron Dwyer.

William remained at home with his parents until he was sixteen years of age. He then began life for himself by engaging in work on neighboring farms and by following the blacksmith trade. He married in 1838 Miss Martha Fridy, daughter of Jacob and Ellen (Clemmons) Fridy, of Lancaster county. Martha was one of five children, as follows: Jacob; Christian; Ellen, who married Henry Albright; Catherine, who married Jacob Shirk; and Martha. To William and Martha (Fridy) Walker were born the following children: Cyrus, who died at the age of nineteen years; Washington, a contractor and builder, who married Susan Hart and resides near Columbia, Pa.; Christian, a contractor and builder who was killed in the collapse of a church scaffolding; Elizabeth, widow of John C. Niskey; Sarah, wife of John Farmer, a farmer of East Donegal township; Levina, who married Warren Farmer, a farmer, and now resides on the old homestead in West Hempfield township; Anna, late wife of George Storms; Kate, at home; and Martha, wife of Isaac F. Rohrer, a farmer of Manor township. Martha Walker, the mother of these children and the wife of William Walker, died in 1887, aged seventy years. She is buried at Ironsville, Pennsylvania.

After his marriage William Walker engaged for a time in railroading. He was fireman for about eighteen months on the Pennsylvania railroad. He then became a tenant on the farm of his father-in-law, where he remained actively and successfully engaged in farming until 1893. In that year he erected his present neat and commodious brick residence which he has since made his home. In politics he has been a stanch Democrat. Though well advanced in years he retains the vigor and brightness of mind of a man many years his junior. He has wielded a potent and beneficent influence in the community in which he has lived for so many years, and holds the esteem and respect of all his numerous friends and acquaintances.

HENRY SHNAVELY. Joseph Shnavely (deceased) was a farmer of Lancaster county for many years, though he was born, reared and married before his settlement there.

His marriage occurred in Lebanon county, where he married a Lancaster county woman. Some years after their marriage they came into Lancaster county, and settling near Intercourse, they passed their lives there. When he died he was seventy-one, and his wife was fifty-four at the time of her death. She was Mattie Hershey, of Leacock township. Mr. Shnavely owned a 100-acre farm, and devoted his life to agriculture. Both husband and wife belonged to the Old Mennonite church. To them were born eleven children who reached maturity: Elizabeth, unmarried, at Intercourse; John, deceased, a farmer in Leacock township; Mattie, late wife of Solomon Warner; Joseph, who is living a retired life in Wayne county, Ohio; Samuel, a farmer in Wayne county, Ohio, now dead; Henry; Annie, the wife of Israel Eberly, of Stevens, Lancaster county; Benjamin, retired, and living in Intercourse; Moses, a retired miller in Intercourse; Jacob, a resident of Wayne county, Ohio, retired; Amos, a resident of Wayne county, Ohio, where he is engaged in farming.

Henry Shnavely was born on the farm at Intercourse in 1834, and received his education in the public schools. In 1859 he located on his own farm, a place of eighty-seven acres, in Leacock township. He passed eleven years on this place, and then bought a farm of fifty-seven acres in Earl township, adjoining the property where he is now found, one mile east of New Holland. This farm he cultivated until 1877, when he erected the buildings on the place where he has since lived. This latter farm comprises twenty-nine acres, and he has sold the other place. His home is well kept, and the broad acres show the care of a master hand.

Mr. Shnavely was married in 1859 to Miss Elizabeth Hershey, a daughter of Jacob and Maria (Black) Hershey. She was born Dec. 8, 1835, and died Oct. 6, 1863, leaving behind her two children: Anna Mary, who is the wife of Jonas Grover, a resident of Ephrata township; and Lizzie, the wife of Joseph Wenger, of Earl township. In 1864 Mr. Shnavely was married a second time, Miss Fannie Martin becoming his wife. She was a native of East Earl township, born in 1832, and died in 1889, leaving one child, Henry, a resident of Ephrata borough, where he holds the position of cashier of the Farmers' Bank.

Mr. Shnavely has long been a member of the Mennonite church, and has won many friends by his fidelity to the better life and his many upright and manly qualities.

GOTTLEIB GRILBORTZER, who was born in Wittenberg, Germany, died on the farm where his family is still established, Dec. 7, 1893, at the advanced age of eighty years, and was laid to rest in the Resh cemetery in Leacock township. With his wife he belonged to the New Mennonite church, and was a man of fine character and honest heart.

Mr. Grilbortzer was a son of Jacob Grilbortzer, and lived in his native land until he was twenty-five years of age. When he came to the United States he made his home on a farm in Leacock township, Lancaster county, and was actively engaged in its cultivation until about ten years before his death, when he gave up the management and care of the farm to live retired the rest of his life. His was an honorable and industrious career, and, beginning with his labors in a vineyard in Germany, was always concerned with the cultivation of the soil. In his earlier life he was in very poor circumstances but by industry and economy became quite well-to-do, and left a considerable property in his estate.

Mr. Grilbortzer was married in Lancaster to Miss Rachel Miller, Oct. 12, 1842, and there were born to this union the following children: Esther A.; E. A.; Margaret M., who married Jacob Resch and is now dead, as are her three daughters; Elizabeth R.; Rebecca S.; Frances S., who died unmarried. The three sisters who are still living, have their home on the old place where they were born. Their mother died in 1846, at the age of forty-six years.

Mr. Grilbortzer was a staunch Democrat, and a good citizen. Of a quiet and modest disposition, he had many friends and his manly character was generally known and appreciated.

DAVID W. RANCK, one of the leading and substantial agriculturists of his section of Lancaster county, lives upon his well improved farm in West Earl township, located about two miles south-east of Farmersville.

The first ancestor of the Ranck family in America was Philip Ranck, who was of German and Swiss parentage, and who came to the United States in 1740; he was naturalized in 1760, taking the oath of allegiance to King George III of England. The family records tell of many distinguished members of this family, in all the walks of life, and they are scattered over almost every State, as they are very numerous, and noted for longevity.

The great-grandfather of David W. Ranck, was Andrew Ranck, a direct descendant of the founder of the family, Philip Ranck, and his son, John Ranck, was well known in his time as one of the leading farmers of the township. The children of John Ranck were: Jacob; Nancy, who married John Rhoades; Barbara, who married Michael Ranck; Margaretta, who married Joseph Ranck; Samuel, who married Susan Ranck; Catherine, who married Charles Swiebert; Elizabeth, who died single; and John.

John Ranck was born in 1811, and became a prosperous farmer. In 1840 he married Elizabeth Weidman, and they reared the following named children: David W.; Margaret, who married John G. Reser, and resides near Honey Brook, in Chester county; Lucetta, who married John M. Hoover, a farmer of Earl township; Ezra, a farmer of Earl township; Mary, wife of I. M. Groff, of New Holland; Susanna, who married Obed Wenger, of Los Angeles, Cal; and John M., also a farmer of Earl. John Ranck was a Republican in politics. He was a consistent member of the U. B. church, and he and his brother-in-law, Joseph, were the founders of the Ranck's U. B. church, located two miles south-east of New Holland, which is the "mother church" in that part of the county, six other churches having sprung from it. Mr. Ranck passed away in 1886.

David W. Ranck was born June 26, 1842, was reared on the farm and attended the district schools of Earl township with the other lads of his age. When the time came for him to choose an occupation he selected farming, and as he has succeeded so well, from a poor boy attaining a position among the most substantial residents of his township, there is no doubt that his choice was a wise one. The fine farm owned by Mr. Ranck consists of ninety well improved acres, which he has under a fine state of cultivation. For the past fifteen years Mr. Ranck has served the town as school director, and his interest in educational matters has never failed.

In 1864 Mr. Ranck married Elizabeth Groff, of Paradise township, daughter of Jacob and Mary Groff, and to this marriage came four children: Mary, born in 1867, who died in childhood; Howard A., born in 1869, residing in Los Angeles, Cal.; Emma E., born in 1871, who became the wife of Henry Ressler, of East Lampeter township, and died in 1898; Bertha, born in 1873, the wife of Howard Johns, of Leacock township. Mrs. Ranck died in 1873, and in 1875 Mr. Ranck married Julianna Groff, a great-great-great-granddaughter of Hans Graf, the first of the Groffs to settle in this country. He came from Switzerland in 1696, located in the vicinity of Germantown, where Philadelphia now stands, and died in 1746. Three sons have been born of this union: Levi G., born June 4, 1877, remaining at home upon the farm, unmarried; John H., born Sept. 4, 1878, at home on the farm, unmarried; and David Garfield, born Jan. 10, 1881, a teacher in the public schools of his home township, a very bright young man, educated in the common schools and at the Millersville State Normal.

In politics Mr. Ranck upholds the principles of the Republican party. In religious connection he is a most consistent member of the U. B. church, at New Holland. As an excellent citizen, kind neighbor, helpful friend, and devoted husband and father, Mr. Ranck stands well in the community, and fitly represents the fine old family from which he springs.

CHRISTIAN H. OBERHOLTZER. Lancaster county is justly noted for its fine farms and its excellent class of citizens, many of the latter representing old and honored names which appear in all of the records of progress and improvement in this locality for almost a century. Such is the case with the family to which belongs Christian H. Oberholtzer, one of the prominent and wealthy residents of West Earl township.

Christian H. Oberholtzer is a son of Christian and Annie (Hess) Oberholtzer, of that township, and was born May 11, 1837. Grandfather Samuel Oberholtzer had four children: Christian, Samuel, Jacob and Hettie; was a prominent farmer, and a leading member of the Mennonite church. His son, Christian married Annie Hess and they reared these children: Samuel and John, twins, born about 1821; Henry, born in 1825, and residing in Iowa; Hettie, born in 1827, living in Farmersville; Martin, born in 1831, deceased; Annie, born in 1834, the wife of Henry Myers, of West Earl township; and Christian H.

Christian H. Oberholtzer was reared on the farm, and after completing his education in the common schools of the township of West Earl, and in the Millersville Normal School, he decided to make a life business of farming and raising fine stock. At one time he was the owner of three of the fine farms of this county, consisting of seventy-five acres apiece; later he gave to each one of his sons one of these valuable properties, residing himself upon a well cultivated and most desirable estate near Farmersville. Mr. Oberholtzer also owns a valuable three-story brick residence in Akron, Pa., and for a number of years has been one of the directors in the Ephrata National Bank, at Ephrata. His political affiliations have always been with the Republican party, and he has faithfully served the township as assessor.

In 1863, Mr. Oberholtzer was married to Miss Elizabeth Brubaker, and to this union were born: Jacob, born in 1864, a thrifty farmer located about one-half mile from his father; Christian, born in 1869, a farmer near Millport. The mother of these sons died in 1871. In 1872 Mr. Oberholtzer married the widow of Benjamin Hoover, and two children were born of this marriage: Henry, born in 1873, a merchant at Akron; and Anna, born in 1876, married to John Landis, of Manheim township.

In every relation of life, Christian H. Oberholtzer wins the esteem of the community, for he is generous to those in need, kind and helpful in the neighborhood, interested in public progress and a most exemplary and devoted member of the domestic circle. Both he and his estimable wife are members of the Mennonite church.

ABRAHAM B. HERR, a prominent general farmer of Upper Leacock township, was born in Leacock township July 10, 1850, son of Henry and Anna (Herr) Herr. The father was born in Manor township July 25, 1812, and died on his farm in Leacock township June 7, 1868. He was a leading and most worthy member of the Mennonite Church; and was buried in Stumptown Church cemetery. Henry Herr was a son of John and Barbara (Good) Herr, of Manor township, where they were substantial farming people. Their children, all now deceased, were: Mary, who married John Funk; Elizabeth, who (first) married Henry Musser, and (second) Daniel Benner; Barbara; Catherine, who married Solomon Herr; and Henry.

Henry Herr was engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life, principally in Manor township, to which he came in 1839, and was regarded as one of the most substantial farmers of his locality. In politics he always voted with the Republican party. He married Nov. 17, 1835, in Lancaster, Anna Herr, and the children born to this union were: Barbara (deceased), who married Henry S. Eby; Elizabeth, who married Simon Ressler, of Providence township; Mary, who married Charles Foreman, of Providence township; Anna, unmarried who resides in Upper Leacock township; Susannah, who married Elias Sanders, of Salisbury township; Henry, deceased; Hettie, unmarried, residing in Upper Leacock township; Abraham B., subject proper of this sketch; Lydia, who married Henry Good, of Upper Leacock township; Amos, deceased; Ezra, who married and resides in Chicago; and Magdelina, who resides with her sister Hettie.

The mother of Abraham B. Herr was born in East Lampeter township Nov. 22, 1817, and died Dec. 3, 1886. She was a daughter of Abraham and Barbara (Breneman) Herr, of East Lampeter and Manor townships, respectively, to whom were born: Christian, Peter, Solomon, Abraham and Anna, all now deceased.

On Sept. 24, 1872, in Lancaster, Abraham B. Herr was married to Susannah Rohrer, and to this union have been born the following family: Henry R., of Lancaster, Pa.; Jacob, deceased; and Norah, deceased. Mrs. Herr was born in East Lampeter township June 11, 1851, daughter of Jacob and Mariah (Shaffer) Rohrer, of Lancaster county. Mr. Rohrer is a retired farmer of East Lampeter township, and has attained an advanced age. His wife died at the age of sixty-eight. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Rohrer were as follows: Adam H., deceased; Abraham, of East Lampeter township, a farmer; Jacob, of Salisbury township; Aaron, of East Lampeter township; Milton, of East Lampeter township; Anna (deceased) who married Benjamin Kreider; Elizabeth, of East Lampeter township, widow of John L. Kreider; Susannah, wife of Mr. Herr; Amanda, who married Jacob Burkert, of Upper Leacock township; and Emma, who married John Buckwalder, of Upper Leacock township.

Mr. Herr has had a long experience in farming, having worked upon his father's farm until he commenced business for himself in Leacock township, where he remained until 1876, at which time he removed to his present farm, which he conducts upon the latest scientific principles. Two of his unmarried sisters reside upon the farm adjoining, in the conduct of which his advice and help have often greatly aided them. Mr. and Mrs. Herr are earnest members of the Mennonite Church, and in politics he is a staunch Republican. Throughout the community in which he resides Mr. Herr has firmly established himself in the esteem of his neighbors, and he is one of the representative citizens of this county.

JOHN HORNING. Representing as traveling salesman in a rich and extensive territory, one of the two largest implement makers in the world, and moreover conducting for many years a successful mercantile establishment, John Horning is one of the enterprising and prominent business men of Lancaster county. He is a dealer in hardware at Kinzers, Paradise township, and in addition travels through twelve counties in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia for the McCormick Harvesting Machine Company.

The paternal great-grandfather was Paul Horning, an emigrant from Germany, who settled in Berks county, Pa., where he purchased a farm, made extensive improvements and lived for the remainder of his life, passing away at the advanced age of nearly eighty years. He was a wheelwright by trade and a member of the Mennonite church. There is record of four children: Samuel, Joseph, Wendel and Katie.

Of these, Joseph was the grandfather of John Horning. He too was a wheelwright, and followed that trade through life in Berks county. He was a member of the Mennonite church. He married Miss Fannie Musser, by whom he had five children, namely: Benjamin, the father of John; Esther, who married Joseph Shirk, of Conestoga valley, near Spring Grove, Lancaster county; Nancy, widow of Peter Lichtey, residing near Spring Grove; Moses, a resident of Bowmansville, Lancaster county; and Fannie, wife of Henry Gehman, of Adamstown, Lancaster county. The father of these children lived to the age of about seventy-six, and the mother to the age of eighty years.

Rev. Benjamin Horning, the father of John, was born in Berks county, Feb. 22, 1824. He was reared in the community where he has spent almost his entire life. Acquiring from his father the trade of wheelwright, he followed it continuously until 1890, when he gave up the business to devote his time to ministerial work, having been ordained in the ministry of the Mennonite church in 1862. His labors have been confined largely to the churches of Alleghenyville, Berks county; Adamstown, or Gehman's church; and Bowmansville, the latter two being in Lancaster county. In his younger years he was often called to other churches, especially for officiating at funeral and other services. He married Miss Lucretia Zeamer, a native of Berks county, and to them was born a family of thirteen children, namely: Augustus, a farmer near Bowmansville; John; Joseph, who was a farmer near Bowmansville and is now deceased; Jeremiah, merchant, postmaster and farmer at Alleghenyville and the founder of that village; Susannah, wife of Martin Newsuinger, of Goodville, Lancaster county; Mary, who died unmarried; Benjamin, who died in infancy; Fannie, who died in childhood; Sarah, wife of John Shirk, of Philadelphia; Isaac, a butcher, of Alleghenyville, Pa.; Katie, wife of Isaac Martin; Lizzie, wife of Monroe Good, of Bowmansville; and Aaron, a farmer of Alleghenyville. The mother of these children died in 1900, aged seventy-three years.

John Horning was born in Allegheny, Berks county, Nov. 3, 1849. He was reared at his father's home, receiving his education in the public schools. At the age of twenty he started out upon his own career. Coming to Lancaster county he worked for two years on a farm. After his marriage in 1872, he worked for a time as a day laborer, then became a farmer. For nine years he occupied and tilled a rented place and at the expiration of that period he purchased a farm of forty acres in Paradise township which he operated during the next six years.

Mr. Horning then began his business career by engaging in the hardware and implement trade at Kinzers, in partnership with H. E. Musser, under the firm name of Musser & Horning. This firm continued in business successfully for eleven years, when the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Horning taking complete control. A year later he sold the implement branch of the business to his old partner, retaining the hardware department. This he has fully stocked up and he now has a thriving trade, not only because of his good judgment in selecting goods but because of his courteous and affable manners to his patrons. While associated in business with Mr. Musser he did most of the traveling, covering a wide territory. For the past three years he has been employed as traveling salesman by the McCormick Harvesting Machine Company, his territory including twelve counties in Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Maryland. Mr. Horning is a thorough practical and successful business man and through his own efforts laid the foundations of a commercial success which has grown rapidly in the succeeding years.

He married, Jan. 30, 1872, Miss Hettie A. Good, who was born in Leacock township, Nov. 24, 1848, daughter of Isaac H., and Hettie (Hurst) Good. Mr. and Mrs. Horning are active members of the Mennonite church and are among the highly esteemed families of Lancaster county.

N. N. HENSEL. There is no more honorable or highly esteemed old settler-citizen of Drumore township, Lancaster county, than N. N. Hensel, whose ancestry has been connected with the military as well as the agricultural history of this country. Great-grandfather Frederick Hensel came to America from his German home and was one of the earliest settlers in Northampton county.

William Hensel, the son of Frederick, was a carpenter by trade, in Lancaster, was a brave and gallant soldier through the Revolutionary war, taking part in the battles of the Brandywine, Monmouth and Princeton and was also at Valley Forge with Gen. Washington through the terrible winter of 1777. His seven children were George, John, Jacob, William, Catherine, Elizabeth and Maria, and his death occurred at the age of ninety years.

William Hensel, the father of N. N. Hensel, was born in 1791 and died in 1856. He also was prominent in loyal service to his country, being a brave soldier of the war of 1812. About 1818 he married Mary Norton, of English origin, born in the State of Maryland, and eleven children were born unto them, eight of whom grew to maturity: George W., Maria C., N. N., Eliza A., W. W., John H., Edwin F., and Mary, all of whom have since passed out of life except our subject and one brother, W. W. Hensel.

N. N. Hensel was born in Harford county, Md., Oct. 14, 1826, a son of William and Mary (Norton) Hensel. Early in life he learned the trade of wheelwright, near Quarryville, and in 1849, he moved to Fairfield, Drumore township, and started a wheelwright shop; there he has remained all these years, one of the worthy and industrious citizens of the village. Mr. Hensel followed his trade continuously from 1844 to 1890, since which time he has been engaged in the coal and grain business. His fellow-citizens have asked many services of him of a public character, and he has efficiently filled the office of county auditor, and has been justice of the peace for the past fifteen years.

Mr. Hensel was married in 1847, to Miss Susan Hawk, of this township, a daughter of Jacob and Mary Hawk, natives of Lancaster county; she was born Dec. 12, 1826, and she died in 1894. Their marriage was blessed with the following children: Anna M., who married A. M. Watson; Adda M., who married Joseph Watson; Sarah E., who married Maurice Pyle; Amanda J., who married Charles Chambers; George W., cashier of the Strasburg Bank, who married Ella Waidley; Fred H., who married Elizabeth Stanford, is a wheelwright by trade in Lancaster; Herbert; Alice V.; Edwin F.; Lewis; Elmer; Susan; and Horace. Of these six died young, Horace, Susan, Alice, Lewis, Herbert and Edwin.

In politics, Mr. Hensel has always supported the Republican party. Although not connected with any particular religious body, he has been a liberal contributor and supporter of the Methodist church and has ever upheld laws relating to good enterprises and movements promising to be of benefit to his community. Although he began life with limited means, his thrift and industry have enabled him to accumulate property so that he is now considered not only one of the most respected but also one of the substantial citizens of the locality.

HENRY K. LEFEVER. Among the records of Lancaster county, Pa., the name of Lefever will be found as one representing for many years the best interests of the county, publicly, privately, educationally and religiously. It is one of the oldest and most honorable. Grandfather Henry Lefever married into another old family, his wife being Elizabeth Hess, and they reared two sons, Christ and Adam, the father of Henry K.

Adam Lefever was born in West Lampeter township, May 11, 1825, and was one of the solid and substantial men of that locality, operating his farm of 154 acres with ability, accumulating large means and becoming prominent in public affairs. As director of the county almshouse, he was wise and careful; as a member of the board of education, he served the county's best interests, and his name added strength to the board of directors of the Lancaster County Bank. Adam Lefever married Catherine F. Kendig, a daughter of Martin and Mary (Feree) Kendig, who was born in West Lampeter township, as was her mother, also, the Feree family being one of the old established ones of that township. A family of thirteen children was born to Adam Lefever and his wife, the greater number of whom grew to maturity and made homes of their own, becoming respected members of their communities. This family bore the names: Henry K.; Martin, who is a farmer of West Lampeter township; Frank K., also a farmer of West Lampeter; Mary Ann, who died at the age of eleven; Elizabeth, who married Christian Huber, and resides in West Lampeter; Katie, the widow of Frank Millinger, of Lancaster; Aaron, who died at the age of thirty-three; Enos K., a graduate from the University of Pennsylvania, class of 1894, and a well known physician at Boiling Springs, Cumberland Co., Pa., who married Frances Brenneman, of Rawlinsville, and has three children: Gladys, Kathleen and La Verne; Adam K., who is a resident of West Lampeter and owns a farm there; Emma, who married John Houser, also a farmer of West Lampeter; Daniel, Alpheus and Amos, who all died in childhood.

Henry K. Lefever was born in West Lampeter township, in the vicinity of Big Springs, Feb. 17, 1852, the eldest son of Adam and Catherine (Kendig) Lefever, and was reared on his father's farm, receiving his education in the public schools. Until he had reached his thirtieth year, he remained at home, but after his marriage moved to the farm which he still occupies, situated one mile east of Strasburg, where he owns and cultivates 140 acres of fertile land, devoting it to general farming, the prosperous condition of his surroundings proving that he has been a very successful farmer and a good manager.

Henry K. Lefever was united in marriage Nov. 3, 1881, with Elizabeth Hess, a daughter of John B. and Elizabeth (McCrabb) Hess, the parents being natives of Little Britain and Drumore townships. John B. Hess died in 1892, at the age of seventy-three years; he was born in Little Britain township where he was reared and spent the greater portion of his life, although for ten years he was a resident of Conestoga township. His occupation was that of a farmer and he owned a valuable estate comprising some seventy-five acres. His family consisted of eight children: Mary Margaret, who died unmarried; Frank A., who made a home for himself in Philadelphia; Philip, who remains a farmer on the old homestead; Ella B., who died unmarried; Abbie, who married Harry S. Herr, of West Willow; Elizabeth, who married Henry K. Lefever; Harry, who died at the age of twenty-one; and Walter, who resides in Philadelphia, where he is a publisher and conducts an advertising business. The aged mother is still surviving. Both she and her husband were connected for many years with the Presbyterian church, in which she is still a valued member. For a number of years Mr. Hess was the chorister and treasurer for the church at Little Britain.

In politics, Mr. Lefever is a Republican. The family is one which stands high in the community and possesses the esteem of all, well representing the citizens of Strasburg township.

MATTHIAS S. HURST, an old and venerable character in Leacock township, where he won an enviable standing both as a farmer and a citizen, and where he is now leading a retired life, was born Dec. 4, 1823, and is a son of Christ. and Elizabeth (Shaner) Hurst. The father was born on the present Hurst farm, and the mother in Chester county.

Christ. Hurst was married in Lancaster county, and settled on his farm in Leacock township, where he died in 1831, at the age of forty-four years. His widow passed to her reward in November, 1888, at the age of eighty-nine years. She belonged to the Lutheran church, and was buried in the New Holland Lutheran cemetery, while he was buried on the homestead. To them were born: Matthias S.; John, who died in Churchtown, Pa., in 1881; Christian, who died in Chester county in 1893. Mrs. Hurst, after losing Mr. Hurst, was married a second time, becoming the wife of Amos S. Kenzer, a farmer and hotel man well known in Lancaster county. He died in 1880. To this union were born the following: William Henry Harrison, at one time president of the Fair Association at Lancaster; Anna, who married Albert P. McIlvaine, a grocer in Philadelphia.

The paternal grandfather of Matthias S. Hurst was John Hurst, of Lancaster county, who married a Miss Strickler; they were farming people and owned at one time 450 acres, including the present farm, bought from a Mr. Huston, and divided between four of the sons. His maternal grandparents were Matthias and Christie Ann (Vomback) Shaner, both of Chester county, where they were engaged in farming.

Mr. Hurst was twice married, his first wife being Lucetta A. Kinzer. They were married Oct. 26, 1848, at the home of the bride in Earl township. To this union were born: William K., of Caernarvon township, who married Ella De Haven; Isaac N., a farmer of Salisbury township, who married Kate Mentzer, and had eight children, of whom two sons and the only daughter are dead; M. Milton, of Intercourse, Pa., a traveling salesman, and married to Kate Diller; Lillie E., wife of William J. Caldwell, a farmer and school director of Leacock township, whose sketch appears elsewhere. Mrs. Lucetta A. Hurst was born Nov. 20, 1827, and died June 14, 1867. Her remains were interred in the Lutheran cemetery at New Holland. She was the daughter of William and Catherine (Weidler) Kinzer. Her father, who was a farmer in Lancaster county, was born Dec. 7, 1794, and died in 1861. His children were as follows: Franklin, who lives retired in New Holland; Louisa, the widow of Amos Leaman, of Reading, Pa.; W. Weidler, deceased; Maggie, the widow of John Wallace, of East Earl township; Lucetta; Caroline; Lydia and Maria, wife of Abraham Smoker, are dead; Lizzie, living unmarried in New Holland.

The second wedding of Matthias S. Hurst occurred in the Oxford Presbyterian church, in Chester county, June 6, 1873, when Mrs. Mary (Smith) Leach became his bride. Mrs. Hurst died Nov. 16, 1900, at the age of seventy-one. She was buried in the New Holland Lutheran cemetery.

Mr. Hurst was born on his present farm, and at the age of twelve years, he moved to Earl township, with his mother and step-father, and there he remained until he was twenty. At that age he came back to his present farm, which he operated two years. When the estate was settled Mr. Hurst secured the farm, and was actively engaged in its cultivation until 1891, that year retiring to take life henceforth on an easier plane. The home in which he is found to-day was built by him on the Hurst homestead, and is one of the cozy and pleasant homes of this part of the county.

Mr. Hurst has met with a generous success in all his business undertakings, and owns three farms, one in Churchtown, another which is his home, and a third adjoining it. He belongs to the Lutheran Church, and is highly regarded in the community where his quiet but industrious life is passing. In his politics he affiliates with the Republican party.

SAMUEL WIGGINS, one of the retired farmers of Martic township, who is now an esteemed resident of Martic township, was born April 11, 1835, son of Stephen and Elizabeth (Bowman) Wiggins, of Providence township, now deceased.

Stephen Wiggins, the father, was a son of Robert Wiggins, who came to America from England about 100 years ago, and had these children: Stephen, David, Sarah, Mercy, Mary and Eliza, all deceased. Stephen Wiggins was born in 1812 and died in 1895. He married Elizabeth Bowman in 1832, and they had a family of thirteen children, twelve of whom grew to maturity: David, a resident of Indiana; Benjamin, of Providence township; Clayton, of Providence township; Elias and Harry, of Providence township; Hattie, the wife of Martin Shawb, of Lancaster; Hannah, the wife of John Keener, of Atlantic City; Mary, the wife of Henry Rouden, of York county; Ellen, the wife of Rudolph Shaub, of Providence township; Martha, the wife of George Miller, of Providence township; Anna, deceased; and Samuel.

Samuel Wiggins was reared on a farm and received a good, common-school education in the public schools of his locality and then became a farmer, following agricultural pursuits all his life with great success. In connection with farming he learned the blacksmith business and followed it for fourteen years, beginning life as a poor boy. He never lacked either industry or energy and each year found him better off than the previous one. Mr. Wiggins now owns a fine, well improved farm, with attractive surroundings and he is able to take life easily. In politics he is a staunch Republican and has filled many of the local offices with credit and efficiency. He is the present township auditor, has faithfully served as school director and is one of the trustees of the Methodist church in Rawlinsville.

On Oct. 13, 1859, Mr. Wiggins was united in matrimony with Miss Elizabeth Brubaker, of Providence township, daughter of Tobias and Esther (Miller) Brubaker, of Lancaster county, and to this marriage eight children were born, namely: Tobias; Elizabeth, wife of Samuel Hart of Providence township; Martha, wife of W. S. Null, of Martic township; Ezra, of Martic township; Ida, wife of John Konkle, of Martic township; Emma, deceased; Lottie, wife of Benjamin Corrigan, of Pequea township; and Franklin, of Drumore township. Mrs. Wiggins died in 1876.

Mr. Wiggins is highly esteemed in his community and is regarded as a reliable and upright citizen, and a valuable member of society.

HENRY L. GROFF. Among the progressive farmer-citizens of Lancaster county, is Henry L. Groff, a worthy representative of one of the old and prominent families of this part of Pennsylvania, and the owner and operator of one of the best properties in Strasburg township.

Henry L. Groff was born on the old homestead, in Strasburg township, Jan. 31, 1843, a son of Emanuel and Mary Groff, and was reared to manhood in this place. His education was pursued in the public schools, where he displayed perseverance and aptness. He remained under the parental roof until the age of twenty-three, when he began farming operations for himself, locating on the desirable farm he still occupies, which is situated one mile south-west of Strasburg borough, and consists of eighty-six acres of as fine land as can be found in Lancaster county.

Mr. Groff has engaged in a general line of farming, and thoroughly understanding his business, he has been very successful. Soon after settling here, he began improving the house and barn, and in 1892, he erected a fine, modern brick residence, close to the old homestead, the latter being occupied by his tenant. Intelligent and progressive, he has adopted those methods which have been found beneficial for the land, and has the satisfaction of knowing that few farms in the locality can surpass his in productiveness or appearance. Always interested in all enterprises for the good of the public, Mr. Groff eight years ago was placed by his fellow-citizens upon the board of education and his duties there have been most satisfactorily performed, showing that he is the right man in the right place.

Henry L. Groff was married on Dec. 12, 1866, to Anna Landis, born in 1847, a daughter of David Landis, locally known to his friends as "Miller Dave Landis," of West Lampeter township. To Mr. and Mrs. Groff were born: Luzetta, who married Noah Nault, a farmer of West Earl township; Minnie, who married Harry B. Herr, a farmer of West Lampeter; Cora, who married Jefferson Herr, a farmer of Strasburg township; and Landis D., who remains at home. Their religious connections are with the Old Mennonite church, and the family is one which possesses the esteem and respect of Strasburg township in the highest degree.

LANDIS FAMILY of Lancaster county. In the latter part of the sixteenth century the Landises, among others in Switzerland, were noted for their piety, and were appropriately called Pietists. The first historical mention of individual members of the Landis family is made of Hans Landis, a "pious witness of the Divine truth," who lived at that time, and who was a Pietus or Mennonite preacher. He moved to the Rhine, in Switzerland, and labored there to feed and refresh others who were seeking after righteousness. The Council of Zurich, who, be it known, were not Catholics, but of the Reformed¹ Church, ordered Hans' arrest, thus thinking to stop his teachings. But that good man could not be turned from his sincere convictions, and "he was taken prisoner by his enemies and sent in irons from Zurich to the papists at Zolothurn." In Sept., 1614, he was beheaded² with a sword, as a true fol-

1 After the fearful persecutions of Protestants by Catholics during the sixteenth century some of the "Reformed" placed themselves on record at Zurich and Berne as continuators of the cruel practices known to the martyrs' era. Various edicts were issued from 1601 to 1660 by the Reformed against the Anabaptists (derisive of Baptists or Mennonites), creating fines, confiscation of property and other stringent penalties, including banishment. Others, however, of the Reformed belief, especially the regents of the United Netherlands, exerted their influence for the protection of the innocent Mennonites.

2 The following extract of a letter dated July 19-29, 1659, written by a preacher at Zurich, gives an accurate description of the execution: "Hans Landis was tall of stature, had a long black beard, a little gray, and a masculine voice. Being led out cheerfully with a rope to Wolfsstaatt, the place of decollation, the executioner, Mr. Paul Volmar, let the rope fall [not, however, before Hans' wife and child came to him with tears in their eyes to bid him a last farewell, after which he entreated them to depart so as not to shake his resolution to meet his fate], raised both hands to heaven and said, 'O God of mercy, to thee be it complained, that you, Hans, have fallen into my hands; for God's sake forgive me for what I must do to you.' Hans consoled the executioner, saying, 'I have already forgiven you; may God forgive you also; I am aware that you must execute the sentence of the magistracy; be undismayed, and see that nothing hinders you in this matter,' whereupon he was beheaded."

lower of Christ. Thus he suffered death for religion's sake. He was the last person to be beheaded for religious convictions in that locality, but persecution did not cease with his death. About 1660, and afterward, the Landises were driven to the Palatinate country, to Zweiburg and Alsace, in the neighborhood of Strasburg and Manheim, on the Rhine. Their properties were generally confiscated, and they became farmers for the German nobility. All the Mennonites received fair usage from the Hollanders and people of the United Netherlands.

MIGRATING TO AMERICA. For about two generations history fails to reveal individual members of the Landis family, i. e., from 1643 to 1717. Believers of the Mennonite faith early took advantage of William Penn's liberal policy to settle in America. About 1683, and later in 1709 and 1712, numbers of them emigrated to Chester county (including what is now the county of Lancaster). In 1717 three brothers, Rev. Benjamin, Felix and John Landis, all Swiss Mennonites, came to America from the vicinity of Manheim, on the Rhine, where they had been driven from Zurich, Switzerland, and purchased land from Penn and the Conestogoe Indians. Like most of the pioneer settlers in the American wilds, these good people were comparatively poor in worldly possessions, and had their hands so full of work that they failed, it seems, to keep their family records. They became, however, instinctively American in their progress, and proceeded at once to skillfully till the soil, which has since made Lancaster county known the world over as a "garden spot." Here, also, these pioneer members of the family worshiped their God according to their desire, and in perfect peace.

(I) Benjamin Landis, of Lancaster county (the first Rev. Benjamin Landis), one of the three brothers who emigrated to America, in company with his only son, Benjamin, Jr. (aged eighteen), took up a tract of 240 acres of land from the London Company, for which he received a patent in 1718. This land was in the possession of the Conestogoe Indians, from whom it was obtained by purchase. Benjamin, was a Mennonite preacher. With his son he began farming on his tract, situated in what is now East Lampeter township, near Mellinger's meeting-house, about four miles east of Lancaster city, at the intersection of the Horseshoe and old Philadelphia roads. No records tell to whom this pious man was married, and, unfortunately, for several succeeding generations such information is very meagre.

(II) Benjamin Landis (2), Jr., the younger emigrant, had four sons, whose names, in the order of their births and respective ages, were: Benjamin, Abraham, Jacob and Henry. From these four sons, the first born upon this soil, have sprung the numerous descendants of Benjamin (1). Little mention is made in any records obtainable of daughters, although such were born, without doubt, to some of the first generations. Benjamin, Jr., tilled the soil of his father's farm and lived there.

(III) Benjamin Landis (3), eldest son of the younger emigrant, moved to Manheim township, in 1751-53, after buying out his wife's only brother, which left him 800 or 1,000 acres of land about three miles from Lancaster, near the Reading road, and close to where the Landis Valley meeting-house now stands. Benjamin was married, in 1749, to Anna Snaveley, only daughter of John Snaveley, and they had three sons: Hansle (John), born March 15, 1755; Bernie (Benjamin), born in the winter of 1756; and Henry (blind) born Dec. 5, 1760. The place of Benjamin Landis (3) "was the refuge of many Swiss emigrants, who enjoyed his hospitality until they were able to secure homes for themselves," amongst whom were the Bombergers of Warwick township.

Descendants of (IV) "Blind" Henry, son of Benjamin Landis (3):

(V) Henry Landis, a son of "Blind" Henry (born Dec. 5, 1760), was born and raised in Manheim township. He married Anna Long, also of that township, and they lived on the Reading road (now Oregon turnpike). They had ten children who grew to maturity, and all of whom married except Mary, the youngest, who died single, viz.: Benjamin, John, Henry, Isaac, Jacob, Susan, Elizabeth, Nancy, Barbara and Mary. Henry Landis, the father, was a farmer, and also carried on distilling; and he had a team on the road constantly, hauling his own whiskey and flour to Philadelphia.

(VI) "Rich" Benjamin Landis, as he was called the eldest son of Henry Landis and Anna Long, was married to Nancy Long, of Manheim township, and lived near Oregon. They had eleven children (the seventh generation) as follows: Fianna, Elizabeth, Isaac L., Henry L., Benjamin L., Israel L., Fanny, Maria, Nancy, Amelia and Daniel L. All were married and had children except Israel L., who is a bachelor.

(VII) Henry L. Landis, second son of "Rich" Benjamin, was born Jan. 13, 1826, and died Jan. 17, 1896, aged seventy years, four days. On Jan. 19, 1847, he was married to Catharine S. Reist, second daughter of the late Jacob Reist, of Warwick township, and sister to Levi S. and Peter S. Reist. She was born May 5, 1828. They resided on the Long farm, which originally comprised 500 acres, the place where the United Brethren Church, commonly called the U. B. Church, was organized, and where they held their first services. The house was once burnt down by a Roman Catholic because of his faith, and undoubtedly with the idea of destroying the church. The east side of the house is still covered with old style earthen tiles instead of shingles, and every rafter, joist and beam was a tree cut on the farm and hewn by hand, no sawed timber or lumber being used. In 1866 a storm blew down the straw roof from the barn, which was the last of its kind in Manheim township, and was built in 1754. The farm is now owned by (VIII) Jacob, the sixth son of Henry L. Landis. The union of Henry L. and Catharine S. (Reist) Landis was blessed with fifteen children, of whom Mary, Emma and Alice died in infancy or childhood. The names of the others, with the dates of their births, were as follows, these being of the eighth generation: Andrew R., May 1, 1848; Benjamin R., May 1, 1850; Henry R., June 14, 1851; Peter R., Oct. 24, 1852; Annie R., Sept. 3, 1854; Lizzie R., Sept. 14, 1855; Isaac R., Sept. 13, 1857; Jacob R., Aug. 14, 1859; Katie R., Jan. 3, 1861; Ella R., Aug. 21, 1864; Clara R., Dec. 20, 1866; Israel R., July 30, 1868. Of these (VIII) Andrew R. Landis (single) is now living with his aged and widowed mother at home, near Landis Valley post office and Mennonite meeting-house, as a retired country gentleman.

(VIII) Benjamin R. Landis was married to Lizzie Wolf Rupp, second daughter of the late Jacob Rupp, of Earl township. Their union was blessed with four children, two of whom are still living, viz.: (IX) Clayton, who was twenty-one years old July 20, 1902, and (IX) Mazie, eight years old, both at home with their widowed mother at Oregon, Lancaster Co., Pa. Mr. Landis was killed on the "cut-off" on the Pennsylvania railroad, at the Novelty Works, near Lancaster, June 6, 1900. The accident happened while he was on his way homeward after delivering a four-horse load of wheat at Levan's mill, south of Lancaster; "also two of his horses" were killed. The railroad company never showed any sympathy or respect to the family, not even paying for the loss of the horses to the bereft family. Mr. Landis owned and lived on the farm of his grandfather, "Rich" Benjamin Landis, near Oregon, when he was so suddenly stricken down and called from time to eternity. This farm was part of the original Long farm.

(VIII) HENRY R. LANDIS, or H. Reist Landis, as he calls himself, the third son of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis, was married Nov. 17, 1874, to Maria Hess Bamberger, second daughter of the late Jacob Bamberger, of Warwick township. This family of the Bambergers harbored with the Landises at Landis Valley on the old Landis homestead at the Stone Bridge during the winter when they first came into this country, and afterward settled in Warwick township, on a farm still owned by a descendant, Jacob H. Bamberger, of Lititz, a brother-in-law of H. Reist Landis. The union of H. Reist and Maria H. Landis was blessed with seven children, viz.: (IX) Mary, born Oct. 14, 1881, died on the 17th of the same month, when only three days old. (IX) Barbara B. and Kathryn B., twins, were born Nov. 23, 1882. Barbara took pneumonia when but a year old, and later a complication of diseases set in, dropsy, scrofula and consumption. She lingered on until July 5, 1898, when she died, aged fifteen years; seven months, and twelve days. She was buried at Erb's Mennonite meeting-house, Bishop Jacob R.

Brubaker, and Rev. Jonas H. Hess officiating at the funeral services. Text: Matt. xxiv, 44. It may truly be said, none knew her but to love her. Katie (Kathryn) graduated from the Lititz high school with her brother Jacob in the spring of 1901. (IX) Jacob B. was born Dec. 20, 1885. After graduating at the Lititz high school he entered the Millersville State Normal School, taking the highest position on entering; he took the examination for teacher under County Supt. M. J. Brecht in 1902, his certificate adding thirteen, and was appointed to teach the Sunhill school by the board of directors of Penn township, to open Sept. 1, 1902. (IX) Emma B. was born Feb. 14, 1887. (IX) Ella B. was born Sept. 9, 1890, and (IX) Lizzie B. was born Feb. 1, 1895. All are at home.

H. Reist Landis, whose name opens this sketch, was raised on his father's farm till sixteen years old, when he entered the State Normal School at Millersville. He afterward taught school in his native township of Manheim for a period of four successive years. After marriage he returned to farming, in Penn township, about two miles northwest of Lititz, on the Warwick and Manheim road, near Erb's Mennonite meeting-house, on Henry Bamberger's farm, formerly a Martin farm. He subsequently bought this place, and has lived thereon ever since and up to the present time. He carried on farming very successfully, raising some fine crops in the line of general agriculture, and also raised large crops of tobacco. While thus engaged in farming he was also a leaf tobacco packer and dealer, and continued thus until 1901, when he retired from farming in order to give the latter more of his attention. He has proved himself a business man of much accumen, and has won success by the exercise of native ability. Mr. Landis served as a member of the Penn township school board for a number of years; was one of the instigators of the Northern National Bank at Lancaster, and of the Lititz National Bank, at Lititz, and has served as a member of the board of directors of the latter institution since 1892; served as a grand juror in the United States courts at Philadelphia for one term; was one of the originators of the Independent Telephone Company of Lancaster county, and was secretary of the board in said company until the board sold out to the Keystone Telegraph & Telephone Company of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Landis and his wife Maria are faithful members of the Old Mennonite Church, to which their parents belonged.

(VIII) Peter R. Landis, fourth son of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis, is now living on a Christian Landis farm adjoining the Landis Valley Mennonite meeting-house, where he built a large, commodious dwelling, and retired from farming in the spring of 1902.

In 1874 he married Priscilla Royer Brubaker, only daughter of the late Martin M. Brubaker, of Elizabeth township, who of late, however, had made his home with his daughter, at Landis Valley where he died, his widow remaining with the same daughter. The union of Peter R. and Priscilla R. Landis was blessed with five children (ninth generation), viz.: Walter B., Emeline B., Pierce B., and Bessie B., all at home, and one that died. Peter R. Landis was a successful farmer. He is a director on the board of the Manheim Township Mutual Fire Insurance Company and a director in the Union Trust Company of Lancaster, which was opened for business in the spring of 1902.

(VIII) Isaac R. Landis, fifth son of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis, is now living on the farm where the Landises first settled in Manheim township, on the Reading road, near the Stone Bridge and the Landis Valley Old Mennonite meeting-house. This farm was first settled by a Snively and afterward bought by Benjamin Landis, his brother-in-law, and is now in the possession of the Landises for the sixth generation, since 1751. Revolutionary soldiers used to camp in the meadows of this farm. Isaac R. Landis married Mary Landis Brubaker, eldest daughter of the late Peter Brubaker, of Leacock township, and their union was blessed with three children (ninth generation), viz.: Charley B., Lillie B. and Elmer B., all at home. Mr. Landis has repeatedly been offered the office of school director, which he declined. He has been one of the auditors of Manheim township for quite a while, and is a director in the Lancaster & Ephrata Turnpike Company. In general, he has been a very successful farmer.

(VIII) Jacob R. Landis, sixth son of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis is now living on and owns the farm where Henry L., his father, resided and reared his family. He married Annie Buckwalter Hess, only daughter of Henry Hess of Manheim township, near Lancaster, and they have been blessed with children as follows (ninth generation): Henry H., John H., Warren H., Katie H., and Simon H., all at home, attending school.

(VIII) Israel R. Landis, seventh son of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis, is now residing on the Andrew Hauck farm, near Landis Valley. He is married to Susan Rohrer Sechrist, eldest daughter of Michael Sechrist, of Columbia, Pa., and to their union have come two children: Irvin, who met an accidental death, by burning; and Mamie, at home.

(VIII) Annie R. Landis, eldest daughter of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis, was married to Benjamin Hershey Brubaker, eldest son of the late Jacob Brubaker, of Elizabeth township, and lived near Petersburg, in East Hempfield township. They were blessed with seven children: Emma, the eldest child, married Roy Kendig, of West Willow; Elenora married John Meyers of York county, and has two children; Landis L., Frances L., Benjamin L., Annie L., and Clara L. are all at home and attending school.

(VIII) Lizzie R. Landis, second daughter of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis, is married to Henry Stoner Miller, elder son of Elias Miller.

They live near Lititz, on a very fine farm in Warwick township, and have four sons: Benjamin L. married Bertha Erb Brackbill, eldest daughter of Daniel Brackbill, of Brownstown, and lives on the old Miller homestead; Harvey L. is a clerk in a grocery store in Philadelphia; Charley L. is clerk in a Philadelphia drug store; and Monroe L. is living at home near Lititz.

(VII) Katie R. Landis, third daughter of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis, is married to Jonas Harnish Shenk, only son of Andrew Shenk, of near Levan's Mill, in Lancaster township. They reside on the old Shenk homestead, and have three children: Landis L., Emma L. and Walter L., all at home.

(VIII) Ella R. Landis, fourth daughter of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis, is married to Eli Brubaker Mumma, eldest son of Jonas Mumma, of Landisville, where they reside. They have three children: Harry, Eli and Ella, all at home.

(VIII) Clara R. Landis, youngest daughter of Henry L. and Catharine S. Landis, is married to William Weidman, of Elizabeth township, son of Eli Weidman. They live near Lexington, Lancaster county, and have one child, Catharine, who is at home.

All the farms originally owned by a Landis in Lancaster county, are still in the possession of that family—a very singular thing for so large a family to hold their own and acquire more—except one now in the possession of Lemon Shirk, near Oregon, Lancaster county. Among them there were six ordained ministers of the Gospel of the Old Mennonite faith; one associate judge; lawyers, doctors, statesmen; men of wealth and high standing in business and social life. Most of them still adhere to their mother Church, the Old Mennonite faith. Lancaster county owes much to this family in the matter of agricultural progress, as nearly all, with few exceptions, were farmers.

SAMUEL TENNIS. Among the prosperous and enterprising old settlers of Drumore township is Samuel Tennis, a farmer who resides one mile north of Furniss, Pa. He was born May 7, 1835, a son of Israel and Elizabeth (Lukins) Tennis, of Montgomery, Pennsylvania.

In 1830 the parents came to Lancaster county and settled on the farm now owned by Samuel Tennis. The following children were born to the parents: Emiline; Sarah; Enos, who died young; Mary Jane; Lukins; Samuel; Hannah M.; Anna M.; William; Benjamin F., of Drumore township; and Enos (2), of Kansas.

Israel Tennis was a son of Samuel Tennis and the grandfather had a family as follows: Israel, Samuel, Rachel, Mary, Lavina, Jane and Eliza, all of whom are deceased except Jane. The maternal grandfather, Enos Lukins, was a native of Montgomery county and the father of the following children: William, Abraham, Enos, Elizabeth, Mariah, Sarah, Hannah and Margaret, all deceased. Israel Tennis, the father of Samuel, was born in 1800 and died about 1882, while his wife was born in 1805 and died in 1896, aged ninety-one.

Samuel Tennis, of whom we write, was married in 1859 to Miss Mary Rutter of Bucks county, Pa., daughter of John Rutter. Six children were born of this marriage: James, deceased; Charles, who married Mary Alice Ritchie, of York county; William, deceased; Bromley, who died young; Benjamin, of New York State; and Clinton E., of York, Pa., a machinist by trade. After the death of his first wife Mr. Tennis married Susan Gumpf, of Lancaster City, and she died in 1898, leaving no issue.

The early life of Mr. Tennis was spent upon the farm, attending the district school. Starting out in life a poor man, by hard work he has earned an excellent farm of 200 acres, which is well improved and in a good state of cultivation. In religious matters he is a Quaker, and in politics a Republican, serving as supervisor and township auditor. After a long life of industry, he is now living retired and is cared for by his sister, Anna M. Tennis, a maiden lady. No one is more highly respected in the community than this good man and his estimable sister and they are recognized as kind neighbors and plain, honest people.

SAMUEL BACHMAN, in his lifetime an honored and industrious farmer of Bart township, Lancaster county, was born near Georgetown, Aug. 19, 1791, his parents being Jacob and Ann (Heidelberg) Bachman.

Jacob Bachman, who was born in 1762, was the son of Felix Bachman. Felix Bachman came from Switzerland when a young man and settled in Bart township, where he owned 800 acres of land, which was divided among his children. Jacob and George were his two sons; Margaret Ann, the oldest daughter, married Simeon Geise, and died in Bart township; Barbara and Ann Margaret married two brothers by the name of Pickle, and spent their lives in Bart township.

Jacob Bachman was the father of a family of five children: George, the oldest; Elizabeth Bachman, the wife of Solomon Hamer, of Bart township; Mary Bachman, married to Adam Fogle, of Bart township; Jacob Bachman, who lived and died on the old homestead; Samuel.

Samuel Bachman was reared in Bart township, where he married for his first wife Rebecca Baird, born in Bart township in 1794. They settled at the Green Tree for a time and then moved to White Hall, where the wife died in 1830, leaving four children, two of whom are now living: John Baird Bachman, a resident of Columbia; Hiram F. Bachman, killed by lightning in 1850; Samuel H. Bachman, who died when a young man; Ann Amanda Bachman, unmarried and an invalid, living on the old homestead.

Mr. Bachman married for his second wife, in September, 1834, Miss Isabella Bower, born in Virginia in 1798. She died in Bart township in October, 1841, leaving two daughters and one son: Harriet E., born and reared in Bart township, living at the old home from which she buried her parents, and much respected and loved for her many kindly qualities; Rebecca, who was educated in the home schools and in the State Normal at Millersville, taught private school in Lancaster county for several years, and lives at the old home; William B., who died in childhood.

Mr. Bachman married for his third wife, in 1844, Miss Hannah Pickle, a lady born and reared in Bart township, by whom he had one daughter, Hannah M., born in 1846, and for a number of years a very successful teacher in Lancaster county. She is now the wife of James Irwin and has three children, H. Mabel, Sarah B. and Mary G.

In 1849 Mr. Bachman bought the farm where his daughters are now living. It adjoins Georgetown, and there he erected good buildings and made many permanent and valuable improvements. He also owned a valuable farm near White Hall. He died in 1882.

Religiously Mr. Bachman was connected with the Presbyterian Church, as were all his daughters excepting Rebecca, who is a Methodist. In politics he was a Whig, and later a Republican. He was one of the first school directors in the town. His four daughters, noted above, are all that is left of this historic family. They are ladies whose deeds of kindness and thoughtfulness have endeared them to the community.

JOHN KEAGY STONER, for twenty-nine years the head of the well-known hardware and house furnishing firm of Stoner, Shreiner & Co., of Lancaster, and now living retired in his home at No. 543 North Duke street, is one of the most conspicuous and well known figures in Lancaster. No man in the city is better known or more highly respected.

Jacob Stoner, the grandfather of John K., was born in this country, and engaged in farming on Long lane, below New Danville.

Christian Stoner, son of Jacob, was born on the old Stoner homestead, and became a miller and farmer. He married Miss Anna Resh, daughter of Henry Resh, who was a justice of the peace, and one of the most prominent citizens of Pequea township. Thirteen children were born to them, of whom four are living: Christian, a retired merchant of Freeport, Ill.; Eli, a veterinary surgeon of Salunga; Amos, a farmer of Dauphin county; and John K., of Lancaster.

John Keagy Stoner was born near Petersburg March 25, 1833, and was educated in the schools of West Hempfield township. Leaving school, he began work on his father's farm, and when he was quite a young man went to Freeport, Ill., to take a position as clerk in a grocery store. At the end of three years he threw up his position and returned to his native State. Settling on his father's farm near Salunga, in Lancaster county, he continued on the farm for three years after his marriage. After spending three years in the cultivation of the old homestead, and three years at Neffsville, Mr. Stoner came to Lancaster and engaged in business as a butcher for six years. At the end of that time he quit the shop and bought the building at the southwest corner of North Queen and Walnut streets, which soon became widely known throughout the county as Stoner, Shreiner & Co.'s Corner. There for twenty-nine years Mr. Stoner was steadily at his business, being absent only three weeks in all that period. The firm, which consisted of J. K. Stoner, Isaac I. Shreiner and J. Newton Stauffer, carried on a most successful business. In the spring of 1901 Mr. Stoner retired from active business, and the firm became Shreiner & Stauffer. Mr. Stoner was one of the chief promoters of the Northern Market House, of which he was also a director for some eighteen years. It was Mr. Stoner, associated with his partners, who started the movement that resulted in the building of the Northern National Bank, in which he was for many years a director. These two projects have had much to do with the development of the substantial business interests of that section of the city.

Mr. Stoner was united in marriage with Charlotte Evans, daughter of John Evans, and sister of David Evans, for many years superintendent of public schools for Lancaster county, and justly regarded as one of the foremost educators of the State. The Evans family is one of the oldest and most highly respected in this section of the county. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Stoner, of whom only two are living: (1) Elmer E., now connected with the establishment of Shreiner & Stauffer, married Sarah, daughter of the late Samuel Groff, a well-remembered citizen of Lancaster, and they have had four children, Kathryn and John K., Jr., living; Helen, who died at the age of four years; and one that died in infancy. (2) Harry E. is now in Europe in the interest of the Standard Oil Company, having been sent there by that corporation with a view to his establishing his permanent residence abroad to attend to the many and complicated interests of that great corporation; his selection for this delicate and responsible position by this great institution is an expression of remarkable confidence in so young a man.

It is impossible in so brief a sketch as this to fully portray the life of one who has been so prominent in business affairs as has Mr. Stoner. It gives but a glimpse at his career and those from whom he is descended, as well as his descendants. Religiously he is descended from that sturdy set known as the Dunkards. In politics he is a Republican. Keen in his observation of men and events, intelligent in his conversation, and social in his nature, Mr. Stoner seems as vigorous, mentally and physically, as though in the very prime of manhood, although he has long since passed the age at which men are thought to be turning to driftwood. By careful living and regular habits, he has so preserved himself that he gives promise of many years in the enjoyment of his well-earned retirement.

JACOB E. STAUFFER, a general farmer of very high reputation, and a justice of the peace at Sporting Hill, Rapho township, Lancaster county, was born two miles south of Sporting Hill, in that township, Feb. 20, 1837, a son of Henry and Susanna (Eby) Stauffer.

The father was born in White Oak, Lancaster county, and the mother in Warwick township. Both died in Rapho township. The father was a farmer, and served as one of the first school directors when the free school system was first established in Lancaster county. In 1855 he retired from active labors, and died in 1888. He was born in 1802. His wife, who was born March 4, 1805, died in 1885. Their remains now rest in the private burying ground in Rapho township which is owned by Eli B. Mumma. They held to the old Mennonite Church, and were among the good people of their day. In politics he was a Republican, being counted among the reliable men of the community. Born to them were the following children: Catherine E., who married Jacob G. Nissley, and is now dead; Benjamin and Veronica, who died young; Christian, a carpenter at Kissel Hill, a twin with Susan, who married Joseph E. Brubaker, of Rapho township, whose history appears on another page; Jacob E.

Joseph and Catherine (Acker) Stauffer, the grandparents of Jacob E., were born and reared in Lancaster county, where their lives were spent.

Jacob E. Stauffer was married May 5, 1867, in Warwick township, to Barbara Mohn, by whom he had the following children: Stella M., the wife of Aaron Hurst, of East Petersburg, Pa., where he engaged in business as a tobacco farmer; Bara M., married to Amos Sumpman, of Mt. Joy, Pa., where he is engaged in broom manufacturing; Henry C., at Reading, Pa., where he married Laura Hefelfinger; Wayne M., single, and at home.

Mrs. Barbara Stauffer was born in Warwick township, March 4, 1843, a daughter of Henry and Sarah (Herchelrode) Mohn. Her father was born in Lancaster, and her mother in Clay township. For years he operated a distillery at Pine Hill, near Lititz. He died in 1865, fifty-nine years of age; the mother died Dec. 9, 1877, at the age of fifty-nine years. Both were buried in the Middle Creek Dunkard Meeting House burying ground. They were members of the Lutheran Church. To them were born the following children: John, in the hotel business at Denver, Pa.; Christian, a cigar maker at Lititz; Barbara, whose name is given above; Henry, a horse dealer at Manheim; Susan, the wife of Christ. Stauffer; a carpenter at Warwick; Charles, operating a bakery at Akron, Pa.;

Edmond, a cigar maker at Akron, Pa.; Franklin, who died in infancy.

The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Stauffer was Lewis Mohn, of Lancaster county, a cigar maker in his younger days. Her maternal grandparents were Henry and Barbara (Young) Herchelrode, farmer folk of Lancaster county.

Jacob E. Stauffer remained with his parents until his marriage. When he was eighteen he began teaching school, and continued in the school room for nine years. After the expiration of his career as a teacher he worked on the farm a year and a half. He spent some time as a photographer in Mt. Joy, and then returned home and was married. In 1868 he began farming in Rapho township, in which he was engaged for ten years. In 1878 he moved to his present home place, a compact garden spot of eleven acres. In 1875 he was elected justice of the peace, a position he has continued to fill to the present time, with the exception of a year and a half when he resigned, but he was again elected. For twelve years he has been town clerk, and is now discharging the duties of his judicial office with marked ability. In politics he is a strong Republican, and is regarded as one of the leaders of the party in this section of Lancaster county.

JOHN HASTINGS (deceased) was born in Colerain township, Lancaster county, Dec. 4, 1804, a son of John and Mary (Mahoney) Hastings, of English and Irish ancestry, the Mahoneys belonging to the Scotch-Irish. Both families were represented in the war of the Revolution.

John Hastings, Sr., was the son of Peter and Rachel Hastings, who were born in England. John and Mary (Mahoney) Hastings were married in 1796, and settled on a place in the woods in Colerain township. This his axe converted into a farm, and there both he and his wife died. Their family consisted of the following members: (1) Stephen, born in 1799, married a Miss Potts, and settled in Lancaster township, where he and his wife died in 1832, leaving two daughters: Frances, the widow of Clement Dunlap, of Lancaster; Mary, late wife of Samuel Curtis, of Lancaster. (2) Rachel, born in Colerain township in 1800, married Hays Kuch, who settled in Little Britain, where she died in 1880. (3) Peter, born in 1802, died in 1812. (4) John is the subject of this biography. (5) Jeremiah, born in 1807, married a Miss Smith, of Chester county for his first wife, and settled on the Hastings homestead in Colerain township, where his wife died, leaving four children: Rachel, who married B. Whiteside, of Chester county; Marshall, a resident of Colerain township; Esther, who married W. H. Hogg, of Colerain township, and is dead; William S., of Drumore township. Mr. Hastings married for his second wife Hannah McVeigh, who bore him three children: Rebecca, of Philadelphia; Hannah, the wife of Nathaniel Ferguson, of Philadelphia; Jerry, of Philadelphia. (6) William Hastings, born in December, 1809, married Miss Fannie Miller, of Lebanon county, and settled in the Cumberland valley, where he died at Newville, leaving one son, William M., who also died, unmarried. (7) B. Frank, born in 1812, married Anna C. Baker, of Vicksburg, a native of England; a few years after his marriage he went to California, where he was among the first prospectors of that region in 1849; he remained in California, where he died in 1881, leaving a wife and two sons: B. F., of Idaho; and J. Uhler, of San Francisco. (8) Margaret, born in 1815, married John Cope, of Little Britain, and moved with him to Illinois, where they died, leaving a family. (9) Nancy M., born in 1818, married Thomas Haines, of Little Britain, settling for a time in Lancaster county, and then moving to Havre de Grace, where he died; his widow died at the residence of a daughter in Chester, leaving four children: John, of Maryland; Sidney, the wife of James Keener, of Wilmington, Del.; Joseph and Frank, both of Chester, the last being the wife of William Roop.

John Hastings was reared a farmer and educated in the public schools of Colerain township. As a young man he was associated in a tanning enterprise with John Whiteside, under the firm name of Whiteside & Hastings. In 1836, however, Mr. Hastings parted company with Mr. Whiteside and bought for himself the Dan Lefever farm and family property, which he cultivated in connection with his tannery, becoming a very successful man. He bought several farms adjoining his own, and gave his entire attention to farming during the later years of his life.

Mr. Hastings was married in June, 1833, to Rebecca, the daughter of Francis and Margaret (Whiteside) Russel, both of Lancaster county. Mrs. Hastings was born in Russellville, Chester county, March 31, 1812, but was reared to womanhood in Lancaster county. Francis Russel, the father of Mrs. Hastings, was born in Chester county, Pa., in 1783, and was the son of Alexander Russel, born in the same house in 1756, his father, Hugh Russel, being born in Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1726. The latter escaped from the battlefield of Culloden to make his way to America, and became a resident of Chester county, where he died. Francis Russel served in the war of 1812, and in his neighborhood was known as Col. Russel. George B., his son, is a retired physician of Detroit, where he settled many years ago.

After his marriage John Hastings settled in East Drumore township, where he built the present stone house in 1841, and the large barn at the home of his daughter, Emma, was built in 1840. Mr. Hastings died at his home in August, 1892. Always taking an active interest in local affairs, he was an intelligent citizen, and was connected with the Presbyterian Church. From his boyhood to his death he was one of its active workers, and is remembered as a strong and manly character. His widow died in 1900, eighty-nine years of age. For over sixty years she was his constant companion, a devoted wife, a loving mother and a true Christian woman. They were the parents of seven children. (1) Mary, born in June, 1834, died unmarried in November, 1889. (2) George Russel, born in 1836, was educated in the Academy at Chestnut Level, in Lancaster county, married Jane P. Dickey, of Colerain township, in 1864, and now resides on his farm in Colerain township. (3) Howard F., born in 1839, went, in 1858, with his uncle, B. Frank Hastings, to California, where he married Miss Emma Cunningham; he now holds a position in the Government custom house at Los Angeles, Cal.; they have two sons, John R. and Howard F. (4) William S., born in February, 1841, married Miss Ella Harrar, of Christiana, and now resides at Atglen, Chester county, where he is engaged in the lumber and warehouse business; his son, John D., married Miss Helen Phillips, and resides at Atglen, where he is a partner with his father; they have one daughter, Roberta. (5) Margaret died in childhood. (6) Emma R., born in 1846, was educated in the local school and in the State Normal at Millersville; during the sickness of her father, as she was the only one left at home, she became manager of his extensive interests; and after his death she superintended the farm, while devoting herself to the care of her aged mother. Her management has been very successful. In 1898 she remodeled the large barn built by her father, and has made many other changes and improvements. (7) L. Rutter Hastings, born in 1849, married Miss Sarah A. Ewing, and they now reside on their farm in East Drumore township. They have six children: Rebecca L., the wife of Harry Hamill, of Chester county; Jessie I.; Louisa L.; Harry E.; Isabelle R.; and George R.

George, William and Howard Hastings are all members of the Masonic fraternity.

John Hastings was a Democrat, and was often a delegate to the county conventions of his party. He was a school director many years. All the family were identified with the Presbyterian Church, of which he was a faithful and devoted member, as was his wife.

GEORGE W. EABY. One of the best-known figures in business, political and social circles in Lancaster, is George W. Eaby, who is engaged in the real-estate and insurance business, located at No. 51 East Grant street.

The ancestors of Mr. Eaby came to America from Switzerland, generations ago, and his grandfather, Jacob Eaby, was a well-known farmer in Leacock township, where he owned and farmed a very large tract of land, which, at his death was divided among his sons and daughters, forming a number of smaller farms. Daniel M. Eaby, the father of George W., owned and farmed a part of the original tract. Daniel M. married Miss Caroline Bair, a daughter of the late Joel Bair, a prosperous farmer of Leacock, and by a singular coincidence, there were five sons and daughters in each of these families.

The union of Daniel M. Eaby and Caroline Bair, resulted in the birth of seven children: Joel S., who is in the real estate and insurance business, in Lancaster; Harry B., who is in the service of the Government, in Wooster, O.; Daniel E., a grocer of Lancaster; Jacob M., a merchant at Paradise, in this county; Mary, the wife of William Rice, of Wooster, O.; and George W., but one of the family having passed out of life.

George W. Eaby was born on the old homestead, in Leacock township, Feb. 5, 1840, and was educated in the public schools of the district and at the Millersville Normal School, leaving the latter institution when twenty to become a school teacher. For the following eight years he taught in the public schools, with the exception of nine months of service as a member of the 122nd Regiment, P. V. I., during the Civil war, when he took part with his regiment in all its battles and skirmishes, which included Chancellorsville and Fredericksburg. Mr. Eaby also served with the "Emergency" men, when the Confederates invaded the State.

Soon after the close of the war, Mr. Eaby became clerk of the Lancaster county prison, serving two years, and then became a clerk in the Steinman hardware store, where he remained for four years. Later he engaged in the grocery business for a time, disposing of this to enter upon the duties of a position in the office of the clerk of the Quarter Sessions of Lancaster county, acting three years as deputy, under Dr. B. F. W. Urban, and three years as clerk in chief of the office, and the following three years as deputy under Capt. Abram Settley, who had been elected to the office at the expiration of Mr. Eaby's term. This completed nine years of service in one of the most important offices in the county, and his record was such, and his fidelity to the cause of the Republican party so well known and appreciated, that he was strongly urged by his friends for the office of alderman of the 2d ward, of Lancaster. In 1891, Mr. Eaby entered the real estate and insurance business and since that time has rendered signal service to the various companies he represents and has enjoyed a large patronage.

Mr. Eaby married Miss Rachel A. Reese, a daughter of the late James M. Reese, of Bethania, Salisbury township. Previous to marriage, Mrs. Eaby was a teacher and she and her husband possess what is unusual, in one family, namely, two permanent teachers' certificates. Mrs. Eaby, who was one of the brightest of Lancaster county's teachers, is descended from two very old families; her mother was a Bentley, and her grandfather was a Baker, and it was from the papers testifying to the fame of Aaron Baker, in the Revolutionary war, that Mrs. Eaby became a Daughter of the Revolution, in which exclusive and admirable society, she has taken an active interest. She is five generations removed from her Revolutionary ancestors.

From the union of George W. Eaby and his wife two children have been born: C. Reese Eaby, Esq., a prominent member of the Lancaster bar; and Flora, the wife of Harry Cessna, Esq., a member of the Bedford county bar, a son of the late Hon John Cessna, who was, for so many years, president of the board of trustees of Franklin and Marshall College.

Mr. Eaby is a member of the Blue Lodge of Masons, and is also fraternally connected with the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and the Elks. The religious connection of the family is with Trinity Lutheran Church, where Mr. Eaby is recognized as in other relations, as an earnest, intelligent, generous and conscientious citizen.

HENRY ALBERT SCHROYER, the florist at No. 151 North Queen street, Lancaster, is a son of George W. Schroyer, the veteran florist, whose many hothouses are located on the Harrisburg turnpike.

George W. Schroyer was born in Lewisburg, Union Co., this State, Sept. 9, 1818, and is still seemingly as active, mentally and physically, as most men of fifty years. He came of a family long established in this country, being a descendant of one of three brothers of the name who came to America in 1670, and settled in Pennsylvania—one in Lancaster county, one in Berks county, and one in a western county. Conrad Schroyer, his grandfather, was born Dec. 10, 1761, in Lancaster county.

Col. Christian Schroyer, father of George W., was born Aug. 5, 1793, in Cornwall, Lancaster (now Lebanon) county, and died in 1855. He was a noted and popular hotel-keeper in his day, his hotelry being located near Lewisburg, on the road between that place and Northumberland. In those days of primitive traveling facilities there was a hotel in about every twenty-five miles, where the stages put up and accommodations were afforded the public, and no host was better known in that section than Col. Schroyer. He gained his title by service in the militia, having been colonel of the 8th Regiment. Under Jackson's administration he was appointed postmaster at Chillisquaque. In addition to carrying on his hotel business he engaged in general farming. He first married Susan Spangler, by whom he had eight children, Elizabeth, Anna, Rachel, Sarah, Susan, William, George W., and one that died in infancy. The mother of these died in 1835, and the Colonel subsequently married a Mrs. Myer. Two children were born to that union, Michael and Lewis. William, Michael and Lewis served in the Civil war.

George W. Schroyer was given his primary training in the "corner" district school near his early home, when a little older attended an evening writing school, and rounded out his somewhat limited literary training with a short term at a grammar school. At the age of eighteen he left home, walking to Harrisburg, where he obtained a position which presented an opportunity for him to learn the printer's trade, in the office of a paper called The Keystone. He continued there until he had risen to the dignity of foreman. Mr. Schroyer was married, in 1845, to Anna E., daughter of J. B. Thompson, of Harrisburg, and in the fall of that year he bought the Columbia Spy, in Columbia, Lancaster county, which he sold, however, in about two years, returning to Harrisburg. There he remained until 1854, in which year he took charge of the Inland Daily, at Lancaster. In 1856 he took charge of the composing room of the Daily Express, a position he held until 1893, in which year his failing health drove him out of the printing business into the open air. He bought the place he now occupies that year, from Dr. H. E. Muhlenberg, and there he still lives, much beloved and respected by all who know him. Mr. Schroyer has not only the honor of having conducted the first daily paper of Lancaster, in 1854, but he is also the pioneer florist of that place. His home place consists of seven acres, one and a half acres under glass. He commenced with vegetables and small fruits, but soon changed to his present line. In politics Mr. Schroyer was originally a Democrat (like his father), supporting that party until 1856, when, as he says, "all good Democrats turned Republicans." He and his wife hold membership in the Lutheran Church.

Henry Albert Schroyer was born in Harrisburg Jan. 29, 1850, and spent his boyhood days in Lancaster, where, after attending St. James' Parish school, he became a student in the high school. At the age of seventeen years he began his work as a florist with his father, and in 1888 opened a store on North Queen street, a few doors from his present location. When a year had elapsed he moved into his present quarters, where his business has steadily grown, and he now enjoys one of the most flattering patronages in the city.

Henry A. Schroyer inherits his grandfather's interest in politics and is a staunch Republican. In 1878 he was elected to the common council from the Ninth ward, which was strongly Democratic, by a majority of three votes, a narrow margin, but enough. For the Young Republican Club he served as chief marshal in every campaign from the organization of that body to 1900, when he declined farther work in that line. He has twice been a delegate to the Republican State Convention. Since 1888 he has been a member of the board of school directors, and was re-elected for another term of three years in February, 1900. In November, 1900, he was elected treasurer of the Lancaster city school board, and was honored with re-election in 1901 and 1902. For eight years out of the nine in which he was a member of the committee on night schools, he served as its chairman. His work on this committee did much to make these night schools efficient and useful. His best achievement in school work was the building of the splendid eight-room structure on North Mary street and Harrisburg avenue, a result which required many years to effect; it is pronounced one of the finest eight-room school buildings in the State.

Mr. Schroyer is a member and past grand of Herschel Lodge, I. O. O. F., the Elks in Lancaster, the Hamilton Club, the Young Republicans, and the Lancaster Maennerchor; and is also very active in the Masonic fraternity, in which he has risen to the thirty-second degree, holding membership in Lamberton Lodge, No. 479, of which he was elected worshipful master for the year 1903; Chapter No. 43; Goodwin Council; Lancaster Commandery, No. 13, K. T.; Lancaster Lodge of Perfection, fourteenth degree, Harrisburg, of which he is a past officer; Council of the Princes of Jerusalem, sixteenth degree, Harrisburg; Rose Croix Chapter, eighteenth degree; and Harrisburg Consistory, thirty-second degree. In fraternity work, as in politics, he is earnest and enthusiastic, anything he undertakes being done with all his heart and soul.

Henry Albert Schroyer was married, Oct. 27, 1875, to Miss Anna V., a daughter of the late Samuel M. Myers, well known in planing-mill interests in Chambersburg. Both are members of St. John's Lutheran Church, in which they take a deep and substantial interest.

SAMUEL AMMON (deceased) was for many years a leading citizen of Salisbury township. He was born Oct. 6, 1818, in Caernarvon township, Lancaster county, and his death took place at Gap, Pa., Oct. 23, 1901. His parents were Henry and Mary (Signer) Ammon.

Henry Ammon, the father of Samuel, was a farmer in Lancaster county all his life. He died in 1836, at the age of forty-five years, his widow surviving until 1860, dying at the age of sixty-two. They were buried at Morgantown and Pequea, respectively. Both parents were members of the Presbyterian Church. The children born to this union were: Samuel; John, deceased, who married Maria Speece; Sarah, who died young; Mary, deceased wife of David Ranck; William and Henry, twins, the former a retired farmer in Chester county, the latter operating a bakery in Gap and married to Jane Patten, born in Salisbury township, Sept. 19, 1835; George and Davis, twins, the former of whom is a carpenter in Salisbury township and the latter died young.

On March 31, 1875, Samuel Ammon was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Arnold, born in East Earl township, daughter of Abraham and Lydia (Reel) Arnold, the former of whom was a blacksmith in East Earl township. He died in 1844, his widow surviving until 1877, when she died at the age of seventy-four years; both parents of Mrs. Ammon were buried in Cedar Grove Church cemetery, in East Earl township. The children born to

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold were: Sarah, the widow of George Ranck, of East Earl township; Isaac, of East Earl township; Mary, also of East Earl; Gabriel, who died young; and Elizabeth, who is the widow of Samuel Ammon.

For many years Mr. Ammon was employed by the great Pennsylvania Railroad as one of its contractors. He then resided in Lancaster, but in 1877 removed to Gap and for ten years operated the "Gap Hotel," which during his administration was one of the most comfortable hostleries in the place. In politics he was a staunch Republican. In his liberal way he contributed to the support of both Presbyterian and Methodist Churches, being a man of moral life, although not connected by membership with either religious body. Mrs. Ammon approved of his methods and is valued in both churches also. She is a very highly esteemed lady in this community and has a wide circle of warm friends.

J. COMLY MAULE (deceased) was born in Chester county, Pa., but spent his active life in Cole-rain township, Lancaster county. He was the third son in a family of seven children born to Ebenezer and Sarah (Lee) Maule, four of whom are now living in Chester county; Nathan, near Lenover; Benjamin, near Doe Run; and Ebenezer and Abigail, who are on the old homestead. Mary J., who married E. Phips, is now deceased; Zillah died in young womanhood.

J. Comly Maule was reared in Chester county, where he attended the district school and boarding school for boys. In December, 1857, he was married to Miss S. Emma Clark, a daughter of George and Anna (Taylor) Clark. Mr. Clark lived for a number of years on his farm in Doe Run, Chester county, and then moved into Westchester, where he lived retired until his death in 1860. His first wife died a few years after their marriage, while Mrs. Maule was still a child, leaving one son and one daughter. The son, William, went to Denver, Colo., when a young man, and won for himself a good standing in the business circles of that city, where he died in 1900, leaving a widow and two children, Howard Taylor and Myrtle, both of Denver. George Clark married for his second wife, Hannah Bailey, who bore him two children: Edward, who is in Leadville, Colo.; and Mary, who married William Glenn, of Chester county, and is now dead. Mrs. Maule was born in September, 1835, at the old Clark homestead in Chester county, and received her education in the Kennett Square schools.

Throughout his active life, Mr. Maule was engaged in farming, dairying and stock-raising. After marriage, he and his wife settled near Avondale, Chester county, where he was engaged in farming for four years. For two years they lived in Little Britain, and then in 1864 he bought the property where his family are now living. He added to it some very substantial improvements, and it was at the time of his death one of the most desirable places in that region. The Society of Friends found a warm place in his heart, as it was his ancestral faith, and he rigidly adhered to its teachings in all his associations with the world, taking always a deep interest in the advancement of the community in general and those of his own faith in particular. For many years his pacific principles and sense of justice made him an arbitrator for the combative in his neighborhood.

To Mr. Maule and his wife were born the following children: (1) George C., born in 1858, was reared at the home, and educated in the Union Academy, of Lancaster county. He married Clara Brinton, and resides on a farm in Chester county, where he is known as a prosperous and successful farmer. They have four children, Willard Norman, Mary Anna, Walter W. and Charles E. (2) Anna H., born in 1859, married Allison Baker, of Smyrna, where Mr. Baker is engaged in farming. Mrs. Baker was a student in the State Normal at Millersville. (3) Walter born in 1861, married Miss Lizzie R. Lamborn, of Lancaster county, and for some years was engaged in the milling business at Puseyville. Later in life, he purchased a mill in Colerain township, which he carried on until his death in 1892, leaving a widow and no family. (4) Emma Z., born in Lancaster county, in 1864 (the first three members of this family having been born in Chester county) married John Chamberlain. They reside near the Chester county line. (5) Charles E., born in 1866, married Miss Hannah Jackson, of Christiana, and has his home in Sadsbury township, where they have four children, James W., Comly, William L. and Alice. (6) Norman Comly, born in 1873, was educated at Octoraro Academy and in the Westchester State Normal. Since the death of his father, he has taken the management of his mother's affairs upon himself and stands very high in the estimation of the people of the neighborhood. (7) William M., born in 1876, was a student at the Westchester Normal where he prepared for college, and then entered Swarthmore College. The following year he took a special course in biology in the Pennsylvania University. He is a graduate of Cornell University class of 1902, and has made a reputation for himself as a scholar and a thinker wherever he has attended, being at the front in all the branches at the college. After graduating from Cornell he was appointed by the U. S. Government to study the forests of the North West, and later was appointed Forestry Inspector of the Philippine Islands, a position which he is eminently fitted to fill.

Mr. Maule for a long time was closely identified with the Republican party, but in his later life was a strong Prohibitionist. For many years he held the position of school director.

Mrs. Maule and her family belong to the Society of Friends. Her children are a source of comfort to her, as they were to her departed husband in his declining years. He passed away May 28, 1901, at the age of almost seventy years.

ADAM REESE STAMY, principal of the Lemon street school, Lancaster, is related to two of Pennsylvania's oldest and best known families, both remarkable for their longevity.

Henry Stamy, grandfather of Adam R., was a farmer in Franklin county, Pa., and having removed to Leesburg, Cumberland county, died there at the age of eighty-six years. His son, John F., in early life was a teacher in Franklin county, but moving to Cumberland county, Pa., he became a minister in the Baptist Church, and is now elder of that district. He married Emily Reese, daughter of Adam Reese, one of the early farmer settlers of Cumberland county, and who passed from earth at the patriarchal age of ninety-four years. To Rev. John F. and Emily (Reese) Stamy were born eight children, of whom we have record of seven: Catherine, at one time a teacher, now wife of Frank McCleery, a farmer of Altenwald, Franklin county; Adam R., of whom full mention will be made farther on; Harry C., a farmer near Chambersburg, Franklin county; Miss Alice C., living at the old Grandfather Reese home at Leesburg, Cumberland county; John F., Jr., who died March 5, 1900; D. K., principal of a public school in New York City; and Emma, a teacher at Ridley Park, Delaware Co., Pa. Of these, D. K., after graduating in the scientific course at the State Normal School at Millersville, and from Neff's School of Oratory, Philadelphia, became a lecturer at teachers' institutes, lecturing before he was twenty-two years old; he is now only thirty-three. Emily (Reese) Stamy, mother of the above named children, died May 5, 1901.

Adam Reese Stamy was born Aug. 24, 1856, at Leesburg, Cumberland county, and after receiving a partial education in the public schools of his district attended the State Normal School at Millersville for a time, and then took a course at the Cumberland Valley State Normal, finishing his course in the graduating class of 1874, although leaving the institute before graduation to accept a very desirable position in the Mt. Holly Spring schools. There he remained until 1878, coming thence to Lancaster, and after teaching the Rohrerstown graded school for three years he was elected principal of the Lemon street school, a position he has ever since held with honor to himself and profit to his pupils. Hundreds of boys have been prepared by him for the high school of Lancaster, and the building, which was originally two-storied, with eight rooms, when he took charge of it, has now three stories, with twelve rooms.

In 1878 Mr. Stamy was married to Miss Florence C. Munson, daughter of Ralph Munson, a farmer of Litchfield county, Conn., and granddaughter of Capt. Norman Munson, whose ancestors came over in the "Mayflower." To this union were born children as follows: Maude M., a graduate of the Girls' High School, Lancaster, now Mrs. Walter Edward Fraim; J. Ralph, a graduate of the Boys' High School, Lancaster, also of the Pennsylvania Business College, and now occupying a position in the Lancaster County National Bank; and Mary, attending school.

In religious faith Mr. Stamy is a Moravian, for three years serving as trustee of the Moravian Church at Lancaster, and as superintendent of the Sunday school four years. For fourteen years he was secretary of the Lancaster County Teachers' Institute, and when the City Teachers' Institute was organized, several years ago, he was elected secretary of that body, a position he yet holds. As a member of the County Institute he served on the committee on Permanent Certificates. In addition to his principalship of the Lemon street school he has been a teacher in the Boys' Chestnut Street Night school for sixteen years, during some twelve years of which he was principal. He was one of the organizers of the now famous Pennsylvania Chautauqua, and was a member of its board of managers, and for three years was statistical secretary of same. In politics Mr. Stamy is an ardent Republican, and while teaching in Rohrerstown was president of the Republican Club there, which same club took an active part in the Garfield campaign.

ELIAS BEAR, who is now living retired, is one of the leading citizens of Manheim township, and his pleasant and hospitable home at Oregon is one of the most inviting and hospitable residences in that country of open doors and generous welcome.

Mr. Bear was born in Warwick township, Jan. 3, 1839, a son of Samuel and Fredricka (Sheidley) Bear, and a grandson of Samuel Bear, who was born in England, Feb. 5, 1762, and died Oct. 23, 1823. The grandfather located at what is now Oregon, and became one of the leading citizens of that part of the county. The village of Oregon was founded by him, where he erected the hotel which later passed into the management of his son, John. The original Samuel Bear was three times married, and by his first wife he had one son, Jacob, who became a gun smith. By his second marriage he was the father of three children: Peter, a gunsmith; John a hotel keeper at Oregon; Elizabeth, who never married, and who lived at Frederick City, Md. By his third marriage he became the father of five children: Samuel, the father of Elias Bear; Isaac, a gunsmith, who died at Reading, Pa.; Anthony, a shoe maker, who spent his later years in Maryland and in Virginia, where he died; Rial, who married Samuel Buchen, of West Earl township; Barbara, wife of William Kahr.

Samuel Bear, the father of Elias, was born Jan. 15, 1804, at Oregon, and died April 4, 1875. When young he learned the trade of a gunsmith, at which he worked until he was some fifty years of age, when he turned to farming, and passed his last years in Manheim and Warwick. His religious associations were with the Lutheran Church. His wife was born in Germany, Jan. 19, 1810, and came to this country when a child. Her death occurred Jan. 1, 1885. To

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bear came Adam, born Nov. 17, 1828, deceased; Sarah, born Sept. 1, 1832, the wife of John Grube, of Bloomfield, Pa., Frank, who lives at Canal Fulton, Ohio, a carpenter by trade; Frederick, born Oct. 22, 1835, a carpenter in Oregon; Samuel, born Oct. 19, 1837, living in Stark county, Ohio; Elias, born Jan. 3, 1839; Salinda, born in 1841, the widow of Martin Kellingberger, and living at the corner of James and Lewis streets, Lancaster; Henrietta, born Dec. 10, 1844, late wife of Edward Cannon, of Canal Fulton, Ohio; Eliza, born Oct. 7, 1846, who died in childhood; Fannie, born Feb. 11, 1848, unmarried and living in Manheim township; Isaac, born Aug. 9, 1850, residing in Lancaster, where he is a carpenter; Catherine Amelia, born Jan. 7, 1852, the widow of Jeremiah S. Reed, who makes her home with her brother, Elias. Mr. Reed died June 16, 1890, in the fortieth year of his age; he was a carpenter by trade, but in his later years was a bridge inspector for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Mrs. Reed has the following children: Phoebe Ann, of Lancaster; Samuel N., a cigar maker in Oregon, who married Miss Bertha Buchen, and is the father of one child, Olive; Oliver, who resides in Lancaster City; Clayton, a farmer in Manheim township; Amelia, of Lancaster.

Elias Bear was reared on the farm and educated in the common schools. When a lad fifteen years of age, he began caring for himself, working on a farm for wages. When the Civil war broke out, he was twenty-one, and in August, 1862, he enlisted in Co. C, 122d P. V. I., being mustered out in 1863, after the expiration of his term of nine months' enlistment; he was at the front all the time, participating in the battles of Fairfax Court House, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, escaping without a scratch, though he was a gallant fighter and never shunned danger. After his return from the war, he rented a farm of seventy acres in Manheim township. For twenty-three years he rented this place of one man, Mr. Rudy, and when that gentleman died, he purchased it. Until 1897 he was continuously engaged in its cultivation. That year he retired to Oregon to a pleasant home he had already bought, and where he is now taking a well earned rest.

Mr. Bear was married Dec. 26, 1869, to Lucy, a daughter of Isaac Sowers, born in West Earl township, at Groffdale, June 28, 1842, and died Dec. 9, 1899. She was a member of the Lutheran Church, as is also her husband.

Mr. Bear has taken his place among the leading men of the township, and his long and useful life shows the quality of genuine manhood.

CHRISTIAN H. KAUFFMAN (deceased) was born Aug. 26, 1839, a son of Christian and Elizabeth (Hoffman) Kauffman, of West Hempfield township, where he was reared and educated in the common schools. When he was twenty-seven he began operations for himself, locating about a mile east of Landisville, on the farm where his life was spent, and where his widow still lives. This at first was a farm of 104 acres; it now contains only eighty acres, but is regarded as one of the pleasantest places in that part of the county.

Mr. and Mrs. Kauffman made many valuable improvements on this farm, putting up a fine residence and other farm buildings, and the farm received the close attention of Mr. Kauffman. He was a man who was very domestic in his habits, and preferred the comforts of home to all the pleasures of the outside world. In his religious associations he was a member of the River Brethren in Christ.

Mr. Kauffman was married Oct. 23, 1866, to Barbara, a daughter of John and Maria (Kauffman) Kendig, who was born in East Hempfield township, near the "Black Horse Hotel," July 20, 1846. His death occurred Jan. 2, 1893, and during the period of their married life they were more than usually faithful and devoted to each other. To this union came the following children: Morris, now living on the homestead, married to Miss Emma Baker, and the father of the following, D. Baker, May B., C. Raymond and J. Harold; Mary K., the wife of Amos H. Herr, of Neffsville, and the mother of C. Kauffman, Paul and Grace; Lizzie, the wife of Enos Heissey, making their home with Mrs. Kauffman; Emma, who died at the age of eight years.

Mrs. Kauffman and her daughters are members of the River Brethren in Christ, and are very highly esteemed in the community in which they live.

JOHN ABRAHAM SPRENGER, one of the prominent retired citizens of Lancaster, was born Jan. 26, 1829, in an old log cabin which still stands, on Fourth street, near Penn street, in Reading, Pa.

John A. Sprenger, his father, was born in the Rheinpfalz, Bavaria, Germany, July 5, 1770, and emigrated to America in May, 1821, locating in Reading, Pa., where he carried on a butchering business until March, 1829, when he embarked in the brewing business, in Maytown, this county. Two years later he removed to Elizabethtown, where he remained until 1836, going then to Lancaster, in which city he rented a brewery from his brother-in-law, John Borell, and continued in the brewing business until obliged by the infirmities of old age to cease work. His very capable wife managed the business from 1843 to 1867. Mr. Sprenger died Aug. 28, 1854. He married Elizabeth Lauer, who was born in Gleisweiler, Rheinpfalz, March 22, 1800, and died in Oct. 1875. Both were buried in the Lancaster cemetery, and both were members of the Reformed Church. The children born to them were as follows: Susan (deceased) married Henry Weber; Elizabeth married Jacob Yeisley, of Baltimore; Jacob, who resided in Atlanta, Ga., was born in Reading in 1825, and died Dec. 2, 1902; Christiana married Edward Wiley, of Lancaster; John A. is mentioned below; Catherine married (first) Charles Whidmayer, and is now the widow of Lawrence Knapp; Barbara married Ernst Krause, a retired brewer of Carlisle; Martha is the widow of Charles Connell, of Philadelphia; Anna married F. R. Dieffenderfer, of Lancaster; Louise died unmarried, at the age of sixty-two years; George F. Sprenger, born Jan. 6, 1842, died April 17, 1888 (he married Emma Zigor, of Carlisle); Amelia married William Roehm, of Lancaster.

From the age of ten years until his retirement John Abraham Sprenger was associated with the brewing business. Fifty consecutive years is a long period to devote to one business, but for a half century Mr. Sprenger gave his time, attention and energy to his large brewing interests. To improve the quality of his products, to decrease the cost of their production, to extend the territory of their distribution, required a man of great physical strength and mental activity.

Although he assisted his father in the business in his youth, it was in 1852 that he entered upon the business with his brother, Hon. Jacob J. Sprenger, this partnership lasting for eighteen months. John A. then started out on his individual career. He began by leasing a brewery, and two and one-half years later built a similar establishment for himself, on East King street (on the site of the present Excelsior Hall building), which he carried on from 1857 to 1873. Then he leased a brewery from Philip Frank, of Mt. Joy, making an agreement to purchase the same if desirable. This he did in 1883, and expended in refitting and building the sum of $100,000. This brewery plant was operated by Mr. Sprenger with increasing prosperity until November, 1896, when he retired from active work, selling out to a stock company, which now carries on the business under the name of the Sprenger Brewing Company.

Although Mr. Sprenger was immersed in the cares of private business, when the call of his country for defenders was heard, in April, 1861, he was one of the first to volunteer in the Lancaster Fencibles, the first regiment of State defenders, mustered in at Camp Curtin. Although he entered the service as a private, he was commissioned sergeant on the field, and served as such in Company F, under Capt. Emlin Franklin, until he was discharged at Harrisburg. He was with the regiment at Winchester, Va. While Mr. Sprenger was away from home the business was carried on by Tobias Miller. At the age of fifty-two Mr. Sprenger found himself, through endeavoring to assist a friend, $17,000 worse off than nothing, but instead of sitting down to bemoan his loss he put his shoulder to the wheel, and now has a comfortable competence for his old age. In 1867, with his wife and mother, he visited the family home in the old country, and also made a tour through France and Switzerland, in all spending three months abroad.

On Oct. 28, 1852, Mr. Sprenger was married (first) to Miss Adeline Erisman, born in Lancaster county, daughter of John and Maria Erisman, of Lancaster, where the former was a carpenter. She died without children, June 5, 1892, and was interred in the cemetery at Lancaster. Mr. Sprenger was married (second), Feb. 12, 1896, to Mrs. Catherine (Ritner) Lamborn (widow of Israel Lamborn, of Chester county), who was born in Cumberland county, a grandniece of ex-Governor Ritner, of Pennsylvania, who is remembered as the introducer of the free-school system in the State. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sprenger. They occupy one of the handsomest and best equipped residences in the city.

In political sentiment Mr. Sprenger is a staunch Republican. Since 1843 he has been a member of the Reformed Church. Fraternally he is connected with a number of organizations, notably the Masonic, in which he is a Knight Templar; the Order of Red Men; the G. A. R.; and the I. O. O. F. His business interests in this part of the State have been very important, and as an honorable and upright man he won the approval and confidence of the public in commercial operations, while in private life he holds the esteem of a large circle of warm friends.

HIRAM L. ERB (deceased), for many years a leading merchant of Clay township, Lancaster county, and one of the public-spirited and progressive citizens of the town, was a member of a family long prominent in the annals of Lancaster county.

Jacob Erb, the great-great-grandfather of Hiram L., was brought from Switzerland to America by his parents in 1728. He was but four years of age at that time, so that practically his entire life was passed in the New World. They located near Hammer Creek, in Warwick township. About 1782 Jacob removed to Clay township, where he purchased several hundred acres of land, with mill privileges, and he made his home there for the remainder of his life. Besides a mill at Clay village, he operated another farther up Middle Creek, and he also cleared and improved large portions of his extensive estate. Until the outbreak of the war of the Revolution he was a believer in the Mennonite faith, but the principle of non-resistance taught by that society was in too great opposition to his patriotic spirit, and he withdrew his membership to support the provisional government. He became a man of prominence in public affairs, and represented his district in the State Legislature. He died in 1810, when he was past eighty years of age. His wife was a Miss Johns, and their family consisted of two sons and several daughters. Of the sons, John is mentioned below; and Christian lived on the old homestead in Warwick, where some of his descendants are still to be found.

John Erb, son of Jacob, was for three years in the service of his country during the Revolution, acting as teamster. He was but sixteen at the time he entered the service, and after the close of the war he resided at Clay, where he operated both the mills belonging to his father, and also looked after the cultivation of the home farm. He was prominent in all public affairs, was the founder of the school at Clay, and took an active interest in religious affairs. John Erb married Judith Hull, and their children were: Jacob; John; David; Isaac; Samuel; Joseph; Molly, who married Abraham Erb and moved to Canada; Elizabeth, who married Michael Shepler; Nancy, who married Abraham Bear; and Catharine, who married Joseph Weidman.

John Erb, son of John, was born Nov. 3, 1786, and passed his life in Clay, engaged in farming and milling, and in keeping a public house. He belonged to the Old Line Whig party, and at one time served as county commissioner. He married Barbara Bergelbach, and his children were: Hiram; John B.; Henry B.; and Priscilla Cecilia, who married George W. Steinmetz. John Erb died in 1862, in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

Hiram Erb, son of John and father of Hiram L., was born at the upper mill in Clay township April 11, 1810. The common schools afforded him his educational advantages, and at the age of nineteen he succeeded to the milling business established by his great-grandfather, for forty years successfully following that line. Some 150 acres of the old home tract belonged to him, and he met with abundant success in farming it. In 1869, in partnership with his son, Hiram L., he established a general store at Richland, Lebanon county, but in 1875 the business was removed to Clay, where prosperity awaited the enterprising proprietors. President Taylor appointed Mr. Erb postmaster, and he efficiently discharged the duties of that office for four years. He was originally a Republican, and an intimate acquaintance of Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, one of the party's founders, but in 1872 his admiration for Horace Greeley carried him into the Democratic ranks, after which he voted independent of party affiliations. Mr. Erb served as school director for three years, and always supported educational and religious movements. On May 16, 1839, he married Catharine Lane, widow of John S. Bear. One child, Hiram L., blessed this union. Catharine Lane Erb died in 1886, at the age of seventy-six years. Hiram Erb died in 1892, aged eighty-two years.

Hiram L. Erb was born Nov. 24, 1840, and he entered into rest Jan. 27, 1900. Like his father before him, he was trained to farming and milling, but on account of ill health entered the mercantile world, in partnership with his father, in 1869, under the firm name of Hiram Erb & Son. His political faith was like that of his father, and he served the Democratic party as a member of the county committee. He also served on the school board. In his religious connection he was a member of the United Brethren Church. Kind hearted and liberal, his charity was often the means of helping a weary fellow traveler to rest and comfort. He was a man of many friends, and his genial social nature made his home a favorite meeting place.

On Nov. 24, 1863, Hiram L. Erb was married to Celinda Becker, a daughter of William and Lucy (Spayd) Becker, of Mill Creek township. Three children blessed this union, two of whom reached maturity: Laura, widow of Rev. C. J. F. Miller, a prominent minister of the United Brethren Church, who was born in 1860, and who died Nov. 7, 1899, leaving eight children, Edgar L., Clio D., Lois E., Victor H., Earl Raymond, Guy Ralph, Erickson Colon and Vivian E.; Linnie, widow of Rev. A. L. Shannon, a well known minister of the United Brethren Church, who was born in 1864, died Dec. 13, 1900, leaving six children, Helen E., Florence L., Carl E., Paul E., Mary A. and Minerva E.

The Becker and Spayd families, from which Mrs. Hiram L. Erb is descended, were among the early settlers of Lebanon county. John Becker came from Germany to Lebanon county, Pa., about 1735 or 1740, and his son, George, was one of the pioneers of Kleinfeltersville, Lebanon county. William Becker, son of George and father of Mrs. Hiram L. Erb, was born in 1816, became one of the leading farmers of his township and died Oct. 29, 1879. William Becker married Lucy Spayd, and of the three children born of their union Mrs. Erb alone lived to mature years.

Mrs. Hiram L. Erb is now making her home in Richland, Lebanon county. She is a kind and Christian woman, whose gentle spirit has endeared her to all who come within the circle of her acquaintance.

JOHN H. KAYLOR, a retired farmer, and an old and much respected resident of Mt. Joy township, was born in West Donegal township Jan. 19, 1836, a son of Joseph and Mary Annie (Hoffer) Kaylor, both native to Lancaster county.

The father was a carpenter, and in his later days a farmer, though he lived retired for some years. He was born April 9, 1803, and died in 1878. The mother, who was born March 10, 1807, died in 1863. They were married in 1823, and were devoted members of the Lutheran Church. The following children were born to them: Tobias, born in East Donegal township March 28, 1826, a retired farmer in Elizabethtown; Jacob, born Nov. 6, 1827, a retired farmer in Mt. Joy township; Henry B., born Feb. 26, 1829, deceased; Mary Ann, born Sept. 4, 1830, the widow of George Hess, and living in Illinois; Isaac, born Feb. 11, 1832, a farmer in Dauphin county; Joseph, born Sept. 21, 1833, a retired farmer in Illinois; John H., born Jan. 19, 1836; Elizabeth, born Feb. 26, 1839, wife of Samuel Caley, now a retired soldier in Dauphin county; Benjamin, born Jan. 10, 1838, a carpenter in West Donegal township; Anna, born Nov. 2, 1840, married to Isaac Winters, a farmer in Dauphin county; Sarah, born Aug. 18, 1842, the wife of Aaron Manning, and living in Illinois; Samuel, born April 3, 1843, who died young; Magdalena, born June 25, 1845, deceased; Catherine, born Sept. 1, 1846, married to George Rutherford, the proprietor of a bakery in Bainbridge; Lovina, born July 5, 1848, wife of Simon Steffy, of East Donegal township; Abraham, born Oct. 18, 1850, a farmer of Dauphin county. The paternal grandfather Kaylor kept a tavern in West Donegal township; Joseph Hoffer, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Kaylor, was a farmer in Dauphin county, where he died.

John H. Kaylor and Mary Wolgemuth were married in Mt. Joy township Sept. 12, 1861, and their first four children died young. Their names were Anna, Lizzie, Christian and Amanda. The next child, Katie, married Martin Heistand, an engineer at Mt. Joy. John and Mamie are unmarried and at home.

Mrs. Mary Kaylor was born in Mt. Joy township Oct. 6, 1843, and is a daughter of Christian and Anna (Metzler) Wolgemuth, of Lancaster county, both of whom died in Mt. Joy township; he in 1888, at the age of eighty-nine years, lacking one day, and she in November, 1896, at the age of ninety years. Their remains were laid to rest in what is known as the Cross Roads cemetery, in East Donegal township. They were the parents of the following children: Elizabeth, the widow of John Hoffman, of Elizabethtown; Jane, the widow of Henry Nissley, of Rapho township; John, a retired farmer in Mt. Joy township; David, a retired farmer in Mt. Joy township; Christian, who is dead; Anna, deceased; Abraham, deceased; Mary. Christian Wolgemuth, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Kaylor, was a farmer in Lancaster county.

John H. Kaylor spent the first twenty-one years of his life at home with his parents, and then carried on a farm on shares in Mt. Joy township, an arrangement which continued until the spring of 1899. That spring he removed to his present comfortable and attractive home, about a hundred yards from the borough line of Elizabethtown. He has done well in life, and his present comfortable circumstances are entirely the result of his economy, careful management and unwearied industry. Mr. Kaylor and his wife are members of the River Brethren Church, while his good standing in his neighbors' opinions is attested by his election three times as school director. Mr. Kaylor has made a small fortune off a rented farm, and well deserves a prominent place among the leading men of Lancaster county.

REV. CHARLES NAGEL is pastor of the Moravian Church in Lancaster, Pa. He was born in Cannstadt, Wurtemberg, Germany, Oct. 28, 1844, and was but a year old when his father, a clergyman of the Lutheran Church, entered into rest. His early education was obtained in the schools of his native land, and in his ninth year the widowed mother brought him and his sister to the New World. They located in Brooklyn, N. Y., where they continued to reside for some time. When young Charles was fifteen years old he went to Bethlehem, Pa., and there entered the Moravian College and Theological Seminary, having determined upon the ministry as his life work. His devotion to his work, his careful study and his consistent practice of the principles he professed won for him the high esteem of his instructors, and when he was graduated, in his twentieth year, he was called upon to fill the position of teacher in the Moravian Boarding School for Boys at Nazareth, Pa., which position he held for three years. In pursuance of the next call, this time into the ministry of the congregation at Newfoundland, Wayne Co., Pa., he was, in 1868, ordained a deacon of the Moravian Church by the Right Rev. John C. Jacobson. His labors in the Newfoundland field were crowned with success, and he continued in charge there until January, 1874. In 1870, at York, Pa., he had been ordained a presbyter by the Rt. Rev. Henry Shultz. When he resigned his pastorate at Newfoundland it was to accept a call to the Church at Elizabeth, N. J., where he continued until 1876, when he returned to Pennsylvania, and took charge of the parish at Lititz, Lancaster county, where he remained until 1885. During all these years he had not confined his attention to the duties of his own charge, but had taken a keen intelligent interest in all that pertained to the welfare of the church. By close study and a wide contemplation of the problems that confront the clergy of whatever denomination, he became keenly alive to the needs and the dangers assailing the higher morality of the people. In 1876 he was delegated, with others, to represent the Northern Province of the Moravian Church in America at the General Synod, which convened in Hornbuit, Saxony, from May to July, of that year. From 1885 to 1901 Rev. Nagel was the incumbent of the First Moravian Church in Philadelphia, and on Sept. 19, 1901, he entered the Gospel ministry of the Moravian Church at Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

In 1868 Rev. Nagel was united in marriage with Miss Ellen M. Luchenbach, daughter of William Luchenbach, of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania.

JOSEPH S. RISSER, one of the old and successful farmers of Mt. Joy township, Lancaster county, was born in Londonderry, Lebanon Co., Pa., Dec. 28, 1836, a son of John and Mary (Shenk) Risser, both natives of Lebanon county, where they died full of years and honor. The father, a farmer, who died in 1869, at the age of sixty years, ten months and twelve days, had lived retired many years. His widow passed away in 1892, at the age of seventy-six years, seven months and twenty-eight days. They were interred in the Risser Church burying ground in Lancaster county. They were members of the Mennonite Church, and had the following family: Fannie, born Aug. 5, 1835, now an invalid and the widow of John H. Risser, of Mt. Joy township, who was born Feb. 21, 1834, and died Nov. 5, 1901; Joseph S.; Abraham, who died aged thirty-eight years; John, a prominent man in Lebanon county, and a director of a National bank in Elizabethtown; Samuel, a farmer in Lebanon county.

Several of the Risser family came to America during the eighteenth century. Ulrich and Jacob Risser came from Rotterdam in the ship "Adventurer." John Davis, master, qualified Oct. 2, 1727. John Risser came at the age of twenty-three, in the ship "Queen Elizabeth," Alexander Hope, master, from Rotterdam, qualified Sept. 16, 1738. Philip Risser came in the "Loyal Judith," Edward Painter, commander, from Rotterdam, qualified Sept. 3, 1739. Peter Risser and his wife, Anna Snyder, sailed from Rotterdam in the "Robert and Alice," Walter Goodman, commander, qualified Sept. 3, 1739. The last couple were the great-grandparents of Joseph S. Risser.

The paternal grandparents of Joseph S. Risser were Peter and Fanny (Witmer) Risser, farming people of Lebanon county, where their lives were spent. The grandfather died in 1856, at the age of seventy-six. The Risseres are of Swiss descent, and have always been sturdy and industrious people of good character and fine standing. The same thing may justly be said of Mr. Risser's maternal grandparents, Joseph and Fanny (Ober) Shenk, of Lebanon county, where their peaceful and upright lives were passed. The Shenks also came originally from Switzerland.

Joseph S. Risser was married Nov. 8, 1864, in Lancaster county, to Miss Annie L. Gerber, who was born in Rapho township and died Sept. 24, 1888, at the age of forty-two years. Her remains were laid to rest in the Kraybill cemetery. She was a sister of David L. Gerber, of East Donegal township.

Mr. Risser remained with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-eight years, when he rented a farm in East Donegal township. There he remained until 1873, when he came to the farm on which he is found to-day, and where he has made a signal success in its cultivation. In his religion he has united himself with the Mennonite Church, and his clean and wholesome life has cast no discredit upon his profession of faith. In politics he is a Republican, and is known as an upright and conscientious citizen. He has worked hard, been prudent and careful, and has amassed a very comfortable competence.

EMANUEL NEFF. Among the old and respected citizens of Strasburg township is Emanuel Neff, who conducts a mill and operates a farm two miles west of the borough of Strasburg, in Lancaster county, and well represents the two prominent families from which he came.

Emanuel Neff was born in Lancaster county Oct. 25, 1840, a son of Henry and Anna (Gross) Neff, both of whom have passed away. Henry Neff was a native of East Lampeter township, a son of Christian and Annie Neff, and was born March 19, 1819, dying Feb. 16, 1881. His first marriage was to Anna Gross, who died in 1851, leaving three children: Emanuel; Amos, a farmer of Cass county, Mo.; and Susan, deceased, who married Amos Hershey, of Gordonville. The second marriage of Henry Neff was to Elizabeth Groff, and his third to Barbara Wade, both of whom died without issue.

Henry Neff was a farmer and also a miller, spending his whole life in East Lampeter and Strasburg townships, owning at one time two fine farms in Strasburg township, selling one prior to the purchase of the mill property now owned and operated by his son, Emanuel. In connection with the mill, he purchased forty-three acres of land, and there passed his last years, spending a useful, busy life, and dying as he lived, a conscientious and worthy member of the Old Mennonite Church.

Emanuel Neff was reared on the farm and early learned habits of thrift and economy which have assisted him in becoming the substantial member of the community he now is. His education was gained in the public schools and when he had reached the age of twenty-one he began farming operations for himself, locating on a farm of ninety-five acres, in East Strasburg township, where he remained twenty years. In March, 1882, he succeeded to his present property, and since that time he has carried on the mill and farmed the estate surrounding it. Emanuel Neff is well and favorably known through the locality and is ever interested in all improvements that promise good to the community, in the way of temperance, religion or education.

Emanuel Neff was married in 1861 to Catherine Eby, a daughter of Christian and Rebecca (Warner) Eby, who was born in this county, near Gap, Oct. 3, 1841, and seven children have been born of this union: Rebecca, who married John B. Lefever, of East Lampeter township; Enos, deceased; Harry, a farmer of West Lampeter, who married Fannie Myers; Christian, a farmer of Paradise township, who married Lavina Shaub; Mary, married to George W. Rohrer, of East Lampeter; John, a farmer of Strasburg, who married Barbara Keener; and Katie, who remains in the home.

Both Emanuel Neff and his wife are valued members of the Old Mennonite Church, where their kindness and generosity are well known, and they are among the most respected residents of this part of Lancaster county.

PAUL HEINE, of the Sprenger Brewing Company, is well known in Lancaster, where with his father-in-law, Ferdinand Grebe, he owns the Sprenger brewery—one of the widest known and oldest institutions of its kind in the city. He was born in Wolfshagen, Brunswick, Germany, Nov. 25, 1864, a son of Heinrich and Elizabeth (Necker) Heine.

Heinrich Heine, who died in Berlin in 1879, was a noted author, poet and playwright, and a number of published works testify to his ability. His wife, Elizabeth Necker, daughter of a distinguished physician of Laage, Mecklenburg, is still living in Berlin, hale and hardy at the age of eighty-two years. Three children were born to them: Richard, a leather goods manufacturer of New York;

Emma, wife of Ferdinand Krause, an Imperial Opera singer of Berlin; and Paul.

After receiving an excellent education at various German schools Mr. Heine connected himself with a leading Berlin exporting house, remaining with same four years, after which he went to the celebrated Franz Spielhagen Chemical Works, the largest of their kind in Berlin. He was then twenty-one years old, and in three years he had ascended the commercial ladder to the position of manager and cashier in the concern. Holding this place three years, in 1891 he became anxious to visit America with a view of establishing himself here. Two weeks after reaching New York he secured a position in the big linen goods importing house of Lamb & Griesbach, in order to make himself better acquainted with the business methods and the language of this country. He then bought out a stationery business in that city, and in two years and a half after landing in America he was part owner of a large brewery—the one at Lancaster. Mr. Heine is certainly a progressive and wide-awake business man, and his life affords a good lesson for young men to emulate. Continual additions, and improvements prompted by a constantly growing demand for its products, have brought the concern to fully three times its capacity over that when purchased, in 1894. Progressive in everything, the Sprenger Brewing Company built the fine "Hotel Lincoln," on South Queen street, besides rebuilding and remodeling several other of their hotels in the city, thus contributing materially to the development of Lancaster. Modern appliances in the brewery have made its product greatly sought, not only in Lancaster and the county, but from all over the State. Mr. Heine is a member of the Lancaster Board of Trade.

In April, 1894, Mr. Heine married Emma, only daughter and child of Ferdinand Grebe. One child has been born to them, Ferdinand, named in honor of his maternal grandfather. Mr. Heine is a member of Blue Lodge, Chapter, Knights Templar, Council, Lodge of Perfection and Mystic Shrine, in Masonry; of the Benevolent Order of Elks, Knights of Pythias, Red Men, Knights of Fidelity, Hamilton Club, Road Drivers Association, Lancaster Country Club, and the leading German societies of the place. He is a public-spirited citizen, always having the interest of the place he made his home at heart. He is well thought of by everybody, is liberal and kind-hearted to the less fortunate ones, and may well be congratulated on his popularity and business standing, for it is of the best.

GEORGE RUTT SENSENIG, of No. 11 North Duke street, is one of fifteen children born to parents who came from old and prominent families. Christian Sensenig, his great-grandfather, was a miller, and came from Switzerland to America early in the century to escape the religious persecution then fiercely raging against the Mennonite Church in his native land. He settled in Earl township, and his descendants have been land owners there for generations.

John Sensenig, the grandfather of George R., was a lifelong miller, and was born in Lancaster county. His son, Christian, was also a miller, was born near Terre Hill, in East Earl township, in 1773, and died in 1864. His wife was Susan, a daughter of Christian Rutt, a farmer in East Earl township, and to this union fifteen children were born, of whom four are living: Levi, a cattle dealer of Lancaster; Harry R., a farmer of Co-calico township; Mattie, the widow of Martin M. Sensenig, late of Goodville, Lancaster county, and head of the Sensenig hardware company, one of the most extensive concerns of its kind outside of the big cities; George Rutt.

George Rutt Sensenig was born in East Earl township in 1846, and was educated in the local district school, which he left when thirteen years old to go into his father's mill, where he remained until his eighteenth year, when his father died. At that time he left the mill and entered the butcher trade, which he fully learned, and then engaged in the cattle business, soon being recognized as a most reliable dealer. On Aug. 21, 1900, Mr. Sensenig purchased the extensive business of George J. Rutt, on North Duke street. Here he is engaged in a most successful meat business, with his abattoirs at No. 465 Holland avenue, and his patrons include many of the best families of the city.

Mr. Sensenig married Sarah, daughter of David Fry, a noted tanner of Ephrata. Mr. Sensenig is a member of the Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, and is a Master Mason. In his politics he is an ardent Republican, and has attended as a delegate the county and other conventions, and had the honor of being a delegate to the national convention that nominated General Harrison for a second term. Mr. Sensenig is an honorable and upright man of lofty impulses, and has a host of friends.

SAMUEL L. KAUFFMAN, a resident of Kinzers, Lancaster county, was born near Allensville, Mifflin Co., Pa., in 1830, and there he lived until he was nine years of age, receiving the most of his education in that period of his life.

Jacob Kauffman, the great-grandfather of Samuel L., was born in 1737, the exact date and location not being known. His son, Christian Kauffman, was born June 25, 1764, at what is known as Chester Valley, Chester Co., Pa. The father of Samuel L. was born Sept. 15, 1797. The grandfather lived at this point during the Revolutionary war, and on one occasion the opposing armies drew very close to this place. The Kauffmans were notified by Gen. Washington that a battle was likely to take place on that very farm. This kind act was repeated by the great American, and other families in the neighborhood were notified to remain in the cellar during the battle, as they were between the contending armies. The next morning the valley was swept by a severe storm, and the expected battle did not take place. Christian Kauffman moved to Mifflin county, Pa., in 1802, where he made his home. The father of Samuel L. Kauffman was married in 1819 or 1820 to Sarah Lapp, and to this union were born six boys and three girls: John Kauffman, born Sept. 19, 1821; Gideon, March 28, 1824; Jonathan, Dec. 10, 1826; Samuel L., Jan. 24, 1830; Elizabeth, Sept. 11, 1832, married to Jonathan F. Stoltzfus; Michael L., Dec. 7, 1834; Christian L., Feb. 5, 1838; Nancy, Nov. 29, 1840, who married Jacob Stoltzfus and was killed by a train at a railway street-crossing near Bird-in-Hand; Sarah, Dec. 24, 1843, wife of Amos Mast.

From Mifflin county the family moved to Union county, Pa., in 1839, and nine years later made their home near Paradise, Lancaster Co., Pa., where the father died Sept. 15, 1879; he was eighty-two years old; his wife, who was born Jan. 15, 1801, died Nov. 22, 1879.

Samuel L. Kauffman grew to manhood under the parental roof, was married Feb. 3, 1857, near Gap P. O., Lancaster county, to Barbara Stoltzfus, and at first was engaged in farming. In 1864 he went into a business of selling agricultural implements, and was later engaged in the hardware business under the name of Kauffman & Livingston. This partner was Benjamin B. Livingston, a brother of Judge John B. Livingston.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel L. Kauffman had no children, and in the fall of 1857 they took into their home two orphan children, a brother and sister, William D. and Mary Jane Skiles. The boy died when ten years old, and the sister married John Kessler, a coach maker at Kinzers. The Kauffman home next became an asylum for Harry McNelley, a boy of nine years of age, without education or moral training. He was of a roving disposition, but under the kindly atmosphere of this beautiful home and the motherly spirit of Mrs. Kauffman his better nature bloomed and became marked. He was sent to day and Sunday-school, became a student of the Bible, was ordained a clergyman and is in charge of the United Brethren Church at Pottstown, Pa. Mr. and Mrs. Kauffman also took charge of a nephew, who was a deaf mute. They enfolded him in an atmosphere of love and eventually sent him to the Mute School at Philadelphia, where he remained ten years. He has become a man of culture, has married a mute, a school-mate, and is engaged in the seed business near Lancaster City. Another child taken into this hospitable home was Hallie M. Campbell, who was taken from the county home in 1895, when she was ten years of age. She has become a bright and charming young girl, and is the great delight of her foster parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Kauffman are both members of the Amish Mennonite Church, and took an active part in the establishment of the Sunday-school at the Amish Millwood Church. The organization of the Sunday-school was opposed by many, but the persistence of Mr. Kauffman and others overcame the opposition, and brought the churches into line. Mr. Kauffman was one of the building committee at the construction of the church in 1882, of which he has been one of the Trustees to the present time.

Mr. Kauffman has been associated with the Penn Mutual Fire Association since its formation, being successively agent, director and president of the Association, being elected to this last position at the annual meeting in the fall of 1901.

JACOB ROHRER, a retired farmer of Rapho township, was born in East Hempfield township Nov. 8, 1829, son of Daniel and Mary (Kreider) Rohrer, of Leacock and East Lampeter townships.

Daniel Rohrer, the father, was also a farmer until thirteen years prior to his death, which occurred in January, 1897, at the advanced age of ninety-four years. His wife died in January, 1894, at the age of eighty-six years. The couple are buried in the East Petersburg cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Rohrer were members of the Mennonite Church; for years he was a member of the school directory of this district. He was a man of prominence and large means.

There were born to them the following children: John, a retired farmer residing at Landisville, Pa.; Jacob; Daniel, a farmer, living in Crawford county, Mo.; Benjamin, who died in youth; Abraham, deceased, a farmer; Anna, wife of Abraham B. Miller, a retired farmer of Rohrerstown, Pa.; Israel, who died in youth; Hettie, who died at the age of thirty-one years, unmarried; Isaac, a farmer of Marion county, Mo.; Henry, who died in youth; and Mary, wife of Isaac K. Stoner, a farmer of Petersburg, Pa. Jacob Rohrer's grandparents on his father's side were John and Hettie (Wenger) Rohrer, of Leacock township.

John Rohrer, a farmer and carpenter, was born in 1779 and died at the age of eighty-six years. His wife was born in 1779 and died at the age of sixty-eight years. Both are buried in Leacock township. There were born to them the following children: Benjamin; Maria, wife of John Musser; Daniel; Isaac; Hettie, wife of Joseph Moyer; Martin; Jacob; Michael; Betsey, wife of Samuel Buckwalter; Israel; and Nancy, wife of Christian Stauffer. On his mother's side Mr. Rohrer's grandparents were John and Anna (Hoover) Kreider, of Lampeter and Warwick townships. Mr. Kreider was a farmer and died in Lampeter township, and his wife died in East Hempfield township.

On Nov. 17, 1857, Jacob Rohrer was married to Miss Mary S. Kreider, of Lancaster, Pa. There have been born to this union the following children: Jacob K., a farmer of East Hempfield township, married to Amanda Stauffer, by whom he has had four children; Mary K., wife of Martin Nissley, a machinist of Landisville, Pa., with eight children;

Daniel K., who died in youth; John S., living on the old farm in Rapho township, and married to Miss Lizzie Nissley, by whom he has had three children; and Hettie K., who married Benjamin D. Peters, a farmer and machinist of Rapho township, and has had six children.

Mrs. Mary S. (Kreider) Rohrer was born in East Hempfield township, died Dec. 20, 1898, at the age of sixty-two years, and is buried in Erissman's cemetery; she was the daughter of Jacob and Mary (Sechrist) Kreider, of Lampeter township. Both her parents died in East Hempfield township.

Jacob Rohrer lived with his parents until the time of his marriage, receiving in the meantime a good education in the schools of the district. Soon after the wedding he moved to the farm now owned by John S. Rohrer and remained there until 1894, when he removed to his present farm, a very fine place. Mr. Rohrer is a prominent man in the township, for eight years was school director and was township auditor for a period of three years. He is a Republican in politics and is greatly interested in the welfare of that party. Mr. Rohrer and his family are members of the Mennonite Church. The whole neighborhood rightfully regards Mr. Rohrer as a splendid specimen of the old-time Pennsylvania gentleman, and finds it a pleasure to meet and visit with him.

ABRAHAM HERSHOUR, a resident of Fulton township, was born in Brecknock township, Lancaster county, April 6, 1825. He is a son of James and Hanna (Stoman) Hershaur, natives of Bucks county and of German origin.

James Hershaur, the father, was a farmer by occupation and came to Lancaster county while yet a young man. He was a Republican in politics, but never sought office. He was of the Lutheran religious belief and a devout member of that church. He was the father of nine children, all of whom are now dead, with the exception of Abraham and Susan, the wife of Joseph Camra. Their names were Isaac, John, Henry, Joseph, Abraham, Elizabeth, Lydia, Susan and Samuel.

Abraham Hershaur was married to Miss Leah Able Oct. 21, 1852. She was the daughter of George and Catherine Able, of York county, Pa. This family also was of German origin. Mr. and Mrs. Hershaur have been blessed with the following children: Jacob, born April 28, 1854, a farmer of Little Britain township; Henry, born July 8, 1856, who died in youth; Catherine, born Sept. 24, 1858, deceased; Matilda, born Dec. 8, 1859, the wife of Bar Caruth; Abraham, born May 13, 1863, residing in Lancaster; John, deceased; Franklin, born Jan. 24, 1864, residing in Chester county, Pa.; Christian, born Aug. 19, 1869, residing on the home farm; Leah E., born Dec. 28, 1871, the wife of Caleb McFann; and Mary A., born April 6, 1875, who married Charles Bradley and lives on the homestead with her parents. Mrs. Hershaur was born Sept. 24, 1833.

Mr. Hershour started in life a very poor boy, but by industry and frugality he is now the owner of a fine farm of 167 acres, well stocked and improved. He is a strong Republican in politics. He is a member of the Lutheran Church. Respected by all his friends and neighbors, Mr. Hershour stands in his community a citizen with whom it is both a pleasure and a benefit to be acquainted.

PETER E. HERSHEY, a retired farmer of Leacock township, Lancaster county, was born in Salisbury township Feb. 5, 1826, and is a son of Abraham and Anna (Eby) Hershey, both of Salisbury township.

Abraham Hershey was a farmer, and spent his entire life in Salisbury township, where he died in January, 1843, at the age of fifty-six years, eleven months and two days. His widow, who long survived him, went to her rest in February, 1896, at the age of ninety-five years, two months and fourteen days. Both were buried in Hershey's burying ground in Salisbury township. They were the parents of two children: Margaret, who is the widow of Daniel Denlinger, and lives in Leacock township; Peter E., whose name appears above. Abraham Hershey was twice married, his first wife being Nancy Sechrist, who was the mother of Jacob S., who died in August, 1889, at the age of seventy-six years.

Andrew Hershey, the pioneer representative of the family in this country, was born in Switzerland and came to America in 1719, with his two sons, Andrew and Benjamin, making their home near the present site of Lancaster. A third son, Christian, remained in Switzerland until 1739, when he also immigrated to Pennsylvania, where with his two brothers he became a preacher of the Mennonite Church. Andrew Hershey, who died in 1792, was the father of twelve children, Christian, John, Andrew, Benjamin, Jacob, Abraham, Isaac, Henry, Peter, Maria, Catherine and Adli.

The paternal grandparents of Peter E. Hershey were Jacob and Anna (Newcomer) Hershey. They were both natives of Dauphin county, but moved into Lancaster county and spent their lives in Salisbury township. They had the following family: John; Jacob; Christian; Elizabeth; Abraham and Andrew, twins; Joseph, a Mennonite bishop.

The maternal grandparents of Mr. Hershey were Peter and Maragret (Hess) Newcomer, both natives of Lancaster county.

Peter E. Hershey was married Dec. 5, 1848, in Lancaster, Pa., to Anna Landis. Born to this union were: Christian L., who died in his eighteenth year; Anna, who married Amos Leaman, of Leacock township, and died at the age of twenty-five; Henry; Mary, who married Esaias Denlinger, a farmer of Paradise township, and is the mother of four children; Landis, a farmer on the old homestead in Salisbury township, married, first, to Elizabeth Buckwalter, by whom he had one child, Harry, and, second, to Lizzie Leaman, by whom he had three children, Anna, Willis and Ruth.

Mrs. Anna (Landis) Hershey was born in East Lampeter township in 1829, a daughter of Christian S. and Mary (Landis) Landis, of East Lampeter township. Her father, who was a farmer, died in East Lampeter township at the age of sixty-seven years, six months and nine days. His wife died June 8, 1865, at the age of fifty-seven years, three months and twenty-five days. Both were buried in the cemetery connected with the Mellinger Church. They were members of the Mennonite Church. Mr. and Mrs. Christian S. Landis were the parents of the following family: Levi, who was a retired farmer, now deceased; Elizabeth, the widow of Peter B. Brubaker, living in Manheim township; Anna; Catherine, late wife of Christian S. Risser; Rev. John L., a clergyman of the Mennonite Church, of East Lampeter township; Hettie, the widow of Martin R. Herr, residing in Leacock township.

The maternal grandparents of Anna (Landis) Hershey were Henry and Mary (Rohrer) Landis, both natives of Lancaster county. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Hershey were John and Barbara (Snavely) Landis, both of Lancaster county. John Landis was twice married.

Peter E. Hershey lived with his mother until his marriage, when he moved to another farm, in Salisbury township, where he remained until 1855, that year coming to his present farm. In the spring of 1878 he retired. For five times he was appointed assistant assessor, and was school director seven years, when he refused to serve longer in that position. Both husband and wife are members of the Mennonite Church. In politics he is a Republican, and holds an enviable position in the community, where he has many friends, won by his industry and honesty, and retained by his kindly character.

SAMUEL WEAVER LANTZ, for many years a farmer in Lancaster county, was descended from a Swiss family of French extraction, one of whom settled in Connecticut. This latter day bearer of the name was born in Strasburg township, Lancaster county, Pa., Oct. 27, 1837, and died in Lancaster City April 1, 1899. His parents, Jacob and Hettie (Weaver) Lantz, were also natives of this county, and they were married, lived for sixty-three years and died in the same house, during the same year, and at the same age. Jacob Lantz died in September of 1883, his wife having passed away in July. They were eighty-three years old. They were members of the New Mennonite Church, and were the parents of seven children: Isaac, a farmer in Chester county, Pa.; Benjamin, deceased; John, deceased; Samuel Weaver; Hettie, the widow of Martin Meyers, of Landisville, Pa.; Anna, wife of John Trout, a farmer of Strasburg; and Leah, living in Landisville.

From earliest youth Samuel Weaver Lantz was reared to an appreciation of the dignity and usefulness of an agricultural life, and his inclinations never wandered from this peaceful means of livelihood. On Dec. 19, 1865, he married Maria Kleinhans, born in Strasburg, daughter of John Frederick and Amelia (Leistner) Kleinhans, natives, respectively, of Hanover and Brunswick, Germany. The father was born Oct. 3, 1808, and died at Lancaster in 1893; and the mother was born Jan. 13, 1825, and still lives in this city. John Fredrick Kleinhans was a blacksmith in his native land, but upon coming to Lancaster in 1840 worked for the Baldwin Locomotive Works for a few years, and then started in business for himself. Besides Maria, he had one son, Elias, a farmer in the York furnaces. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Lantz are: Amelia, the wife of Martin Shreiner, of Neffsville, Pa.; Harry, a molder at Mount Vernon; Anna, married to Henry Fritze, an electrician of Jersey City; Charles, married to Sadie Dubble and living in Philadelphia; Bertha, who married Dr. Benjamin F. Good, of Conestoga, Pa.; Bessie, unmarried and living at home; Mary, also at home; and Alice, deceased at the age of seventeen years.

During the Civil war Mr. Lantz served in Co. E, 79th Regiment, P. V., enlisting Sept. 21, 1861, and receiving his discharge Oct. 1, 1864. He participated in thirteen battles, and was wounded in the hand, besides contracting rheumatism, from which he suffered all his life, and for which he received a pension. He was a member of the New Mennonite Church. He belonged to the Republican party and served as supervisor of Strasburg for three years. Mr. Lantz bore an enviable reputation in his neighborhood, his honesty of purpose and public spirit being unquestioned.

AARON WEAVER, one of the most successful farmers of Lancaster county, is a son of the late Isaac Weaver, who was born in East Lampeter township, and died at the city of Lancaster.

Isaac Weaver was a son of Rev. Joseph Weaver, a Mennonite minister of Lampeter, and himself entered that communion early in life, remaining a devout and consistent member of the church until his death, which occurred in his sixty-ninth year. He was a man of intellect, good judgment and almost phenomenal energy. He was a large land owner, being the proprietor of three farms, all of which his progressive spirit and wide-awake ideas led him to keep well improved. That on which he resided, where his children were born, and which is spoken of in the family as "the homestead," comprised 128 acres located in East Lampeter. Another of 185 acres situated some six miles west of Lancaster, was known as the Sener farm. The third, known as the Beam farm, was at Willowstreet; there he erected a complete set of buildings. Besides making such extensive improvements on his own property he assisted two sisters in improving their property. When he had reached the age of sixty he retired to pass his declining years in rest. He erected a residence at No. 529 East King street, Lancaster, and there entered into rest Oct. 27, 1887. He married Catherine Barr, who survives him, and is now living, at an advanced age, with her daughter Mrs. John Girven, of Mechanicsburg. They were the parents of seven children: Mary, the eldest, is the wife of John Girven, of Mechanicsburg, this county; Joseph B. lives at the old homestead in East Lampeter; Aaron is the subject of the present biographical sketch; Benjamin F. is a farmer of Manor township; Milton L. is a miller and coal dealer in West Hempfield; Elizabeth is deceased; and Ephraim E., the youngest of the family, is a farmer in Manor.

Aaron Weaver was born in East Lampeter March 11, 1856. He grew up on the old home farm, and after his father's retirement and removal to Lancaster was employed for some two years by his brother-in-law, Mr. Girven. In 1882 he and his brother, Benjamin F., went to Manor township, and settled on the Sener farm, to which reference has been already made, renting the same from their father, who had purchased it from Jacob Landis. For three years the brothers occupied it jointly, and during this time they made some costly improvements, erecting a fine residence, with good, substantial barns and tobacco houses. It was conceded to be one of the finest, best improved and most efficiently managed farms in that part of the county. In 1885 their father divided the property equally between them, Aaron Weaver receiving the southern half. He has still further improved his portion, and everything about his place tells of thrift, good sense, industry and prosperity. While chiefly engaged in general farming, Mr. Weaver, since 1892, has engaged extensively in tobacco growing and packing, in which his quick perceptive power and excellent business judgment have insured his success.

Mr. Weaver was married, in November, 1889, to Miss Emma K. Landis, a daughter of Jacob S. Landis, of East Lampeter. She died in February, 1890. Mr. Weaver is a Republican in politics.

AMOS WALTON (deceased) occupied a leading position among the representative farmers of Fulton township, Lancaster county, not only on account of his financial success, but also, and more especially, because of his genial personality and excellence of judgment and character. His birth occurred Jan. 6, 1840, and he was a son of Amos and Martha (Young) Walton. His grandfather was born in England, and came to this country at an early date. His family consisted of Amos (1), father of Amos (2), John, Jesse, Okum, Isaac, Elijah, Eliza and Emily.

Amos Walton, Sr., was married Sept. 15, 1827, to Martha, daughter of John Young. To them came children as follows: Mahlon, born July 17, 1828, a farmer who resided in Martic township and died in 1897; Levi, born Dec. 7, 1830, who died young; Mary Ann, born Dec. 27, 1833, who married George Patten, of Martic township, and died in 1896; Isaac, born Aug. 19, 1835, a resident of Mount Nebo, Martic township; Amos, our subject.

MANOR FARM OF AARON WEAVER TOWNSHIP

Amos Walton was reared upon the farm, and received his education in the public schools of the district. Starting out in life without a dollar, he began working at a salary of forty cents per day, yet before his death owned a fine farm of 190 acres, all in a good state of cultivation. Upon the place is a pleasant, three-story brick residence, commodious barn, ample tobacco sheds and all necessary out-buildings, and Mr. Walton was justly regarded as one of the best farmers in his part of Lancaster county.

On Nov. 15, 1864, Mr. Walton married Miss Martha Alexander, who was born Dec. 2, 1841, daughter of John and Susan Alexander, of Martic township, of Scotch-Irish descent. Mrs. Walton was one of a family of eight children: Marris, who died while serving in the Civil war; Martha, the widow of Amos Walton; Mary Ann, married to Lewis Jenkins; Jason, deceased; Samuel, a merchant of Mount Nebo; Rebecca Jane, wife of Harry Marsh, a merchant of Lancaster City, Pa.; John, a farmer of Martic township; Calvin, deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Walton had two children: Isaac Jason, who was born March 4, 1866; and Lewis E., who was born April 15, 1868, and died May 24, 1870. Amos Walton was a Democrat in politics. Kind to his family, honorable in all his dealings, a good neighbor and a public-spirited citizen, he was a man who enjoyed the highest respect and esteem of his fellow townsmen, and was an excellent example to the rising generation, a typical representative of selfmade men. His death, which occurred Feb. 27, 1902, was deeply lamented.

Isaac Jason Walton married Anna Martha Wilson, of Fulton township, on Aug. 25, 1887. She was born Oct. 24, 1864, daughter of Hiram and Martha (Phillips) Wilson. Four children came to them: Edgar Earl, born March 19, 1888; Amos Lester, born March 8, 1889; Edna Martha, born Nov. 2, 1891; and Mary Elma, born Feb. 9, 1902. Isaac Jason Walton now owns the farm where he resides with his family.

JESSE HARNER, a highly esteemed retired farmer of Drumore township, now a resident of Liberty Square, in Lancaster county, was born in Montgomery county, Pa., Jan. 20, 1835, a son of Joseph and Mary (Slingluff) Harner, both of whom were natives of Montgomery county, he being of German, and she of Scotch-Irish ancestry.

Grandfather John Harner was an old settler of Montgomery county and there reared this family: Daniel, Joseph, Henry, John, Samuel, Sarah, Susan, Anna and Elizabeth. Of this family Joseph became the father of Jesse Harner and was born in 1783, and died in 1870. In 1822 he was united in marriage to Mary Slingluff, who was born in 1794 and died in 1849, the seven children of this union being: John S., whose sketch appears elsewhere; George, deceased; Samuel A., whose sketch is given in another place; Mary Ann, who married Thomas Cully (See sketch); Elizabeth, who married J. Harrison Long and has passed away; Joseph, whose sketch is given elsewhere; and Jesse, the youngest of the family.

Jesse Harner was reared on the farm and received his education in the public schools of his locality; he became more interested in agricultural pursuits than in any other line of activity, and this resulted in a life spent in operating his farm. One of the best farms in Martic township is owned by him, and he also possesses a nice farm and store property at Liberty Square, where he resides.

Jesse Harner was married Jan. 3, 1860, to Miss Mary E. Sides, of Martic township, whose death on Oct. 1, 1885, brought grief to a large circle of friends. Her life was one of Christian excellence. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Harner were: Joseph G., born Dec. 14, 1860, residing in Philadelphia; Benjamin F., who died in youth; Harry, deceased; Annie A., born April 25, 1867, the wife of Harry Rutter, of Philadelphia; and Clara E., born Oct. 1, 1870, the wife of H. C. Ambler, of Liberty Square.

In political circles Mr. Harner has always been a very active member of the Democratic party, and has efficiently served his township as school director. As one of the leading members of the Bethesda M. E. Church he has exerted a wide influence as trustee, steward, class leader and superintendent of the Sunday-school. Mr. Harner is a man who is well known in this locality, and his upright life and character are an excellent example. His voice and vote are always to be counted upon when questions arise concerning temperance, as he has been through life opposed to the use of either tobacco or strong drink. Mr. Harner enjoys the esteem of the township where his life has been passed.

JAMES SWISHER, SR., late a retired farmer of Colerain township, whose years and industry commanded the respect and esteem his character so well deserved, was born Feb. 22, 1820, his parents being Henry W. and Margaret (Meginness) Swisher.

Henry W. Swisher was born in Colerain township in 1794, and his wife, Margaret Meginness in 1788. She was an aunt of John F. Meginness, the originator of this work, and a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Fordham) Meginness. The Meginness family came from Ireland, and the Fordhams from England.

Henry W. Swisher was the son of John and Rachel (Woodrow) Swisher, both natives of Baltimore county, Md., their ancestors finding a home in this country as early as 1701. They were of German origin; John Swisher was the son of Henry, was born in Germany, and came to this country long previous to the Revolutionary war. He settled in Colerain township as early as 1732, the title to his property running from William Penn. It is still in the hands of the Swisher family. It belonged first to Henry, then to John, and later to his son, Henry (2), the father of James, Senior.

Henry W. Swisher was married in 1816 and made his home on part of the original purchase. He learned the trade of a weaver and followed it for many years. In his later life he bought a farm south of the home where James, Sr., afterwards resided, and lived there until his wife died, in 1862. He then made his home with his son, James, until his own death in 1873. Mr. Swisher was a Lutheran but his wife, Margaret, always adhered to her ancestral faith, that of the Friends Society. In politics he was what he loved to style himself, a Jacksonian Democrat, and was called to office in the town at different times during his life. To him and his good wife were born one son, and three daughters: (1) Elizabeth, born in 1817, married William Hollis, and settled in Bart township, where both died on his farm home; two of their children are living: William, of Bart township, and Margaret E., who is now Mrs. Nelson Boyd, of Little Britain township. (2) Rachel, born in 1824, married Washington Swisher, and located in Colerain township, where she died in 1864, her husband surviving until 1899; they had four children: James; Mrs. Elizabeth McCauley, of Quarryville; Henry, of Colerain township; and George W., also of Colerain township. (3) Anna Ellen, born in May, 1830, married John Groff, and settled on one of the old homesteads, where she died in 1885 leaving eight children. (4) James.

James Swisher was reared on the farm, where he received the benefits of a country school education, and remained on the home farm until thirty years of age. In 1842 he married Miss Margaret Everly, of Colerain township, who was born in Bart township, July 20, 1815. Her parents both died when she was a child, and she was reared in the home of Martha and Hannah McFarland. Mr. Swisher bought the home of Benjamin McGinnis, where he lived some eight years, and then sold it. In 1860 he purchased what was then known as the Samuel Smith home. It was a small place with a small frame house. He erected a large bank barn at once and a few years later built the present house. By purchasing adjoining tracts of land he secured a large farm, where he had a fine set of buildings. During his life time Mr. Swisher built three large barns on property owned by him.

James Swisher and his wife had no children of their own but they adopted and reared Margaret L., a daughter of Adam and Angeline (Lovett) Walker. She was born near Conowingo, in Lancaster county, in 1858. Her father died when she was a mere child, and she was taken to James Swisher's where she was reared and educated as a child of the family. In 1883 she married James Swisher, Jr., a nephew of her foster parents. They resided in the home of Mr.

Swisher, where the younger man had charge of the farm, and took on his own sturdy shoulders much of the burden of the operation of the farm. To them have come two children, Rachel A., born in 1883, and Viella L., born in 1886.

Mr. Swisher was always a Democrat. Mrs. Swisher is a Baptist and he was reared in the Lutheran faith. Mr. Swisher was a man of more than ordinary ability, and, though given but a limited education, he read much, and expanded his mind with a knowledge of practical business affairs. While past eighty when he died, on May 27, 1902, his mind remained as bright and clear as ever.

ISAAC H. KAUFMAN (deceased) was born in Petersburg, Lancaster county, Feb. 23, 1834, and died in Mountville Dec. 27, 1893, in the faith of the Mennonite Church.

His parents, Isaac and Anna (Hess) Kaufman, of Lancaster county, were agricultural people, and both died on Turkey Hill, in Manor township—the father in 1886, at the age of eighty-four years, and the mother in 1889, when eighty-two years old. Both were members of the Mennonite Church, and their remains were buried in Masonville, Lancaster county. To Isaac and Anna (Hess) Kaufman was born a family of ten children, viz.: John, a farmer of Manor township; Elizabeth, deceased wife of David Eshleman; Rudolph, of Manor township; Isaac H., whose name heads this sketch; Edward, of Lancaster township; Catherine, wife of Benjamin Witmer, of Millersville; Amos, a farmer of Marticville; Jacob and Daniel, deceased; and Anna, widow of Abraham Taylor, late of Millersville.

Isaac H. Kaufman lived on the home farm until 1870, when he moved to Mountville and engaged in tobacco trade. He was the owner of three large farms, which he had cultivated by hired help, and he built, in 1868, the first tobacco warehouse in his neighborhood. On locating in Mountville he erected the brick mansion now occupied by his family. He was one of the leading business men of the county, was progressive in all things and retrograde in nothing; was a director in the Columbia National Bank for many years, or until the Mountville Bank was organized, when he became president of the latter, and held that position until within a few years of his death, when he resigned to become a director.

Isaac H. Kaufman was joined in matrimony in 1858, in Lancaster City, with Fanny Herr, and to this union was born the following family: Uriah H., a merchant of Mountville; Anna M., wife of Christ Garber, a farmer of Mountville; Adeline, wife of Joseph Charles, farmer of Manor township; Catherine, who died young; Henry, a railroad conductor in Philadelphia; and Frances, wife of John Musser, a retired farmer of Mountville.

Mrs. Fanny (Herr) Kaufman is a native of Manor township and a daughter of Henry and Catherine (Herr) Herr, of Manor township, where the father was a farmer and died in 1885, at eighty-four years of age, and where the mother died in 1868; when fifty-nine years old. Both belonged to the German Baptist Brethren. To Henry and Catherine Herr was born the following family: Tobias, a retired farmer of Manor township, and a minister of the German Baptist Brethren; Mary, widow of Martin Bair, of Illinois; Henry, a farmer of Manor township, Lancaster county, Pa.; Martha, wife of Nicholas Baker, of Sterling, Ill.; Amos, of Neffsville, Pa., and a farmer; Fanny, now Mrs. Kaufman; Abraham E., a farmer of Petersburg; Catherine, who died young; and Elizabeth, wife of Jacob Good, a retired farmer of Lancaster, and Christian, a tobacco merchant of the same city. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Kaufman were Christian and Mary Herr, and her maternal grandparents were Abraham and Catherine (Brandt) Herr—both families farming people of Manor township, and none better known or more highly respected in the county.

FRANK W. HELM, a merchant of New Providence, is one of the leading citizens of Providence township and one of its most successful business men. He was born in Strasburg township Dec. 9, 1842, son of Daniel and Anna (Hoak) Helm, of New Providence, where the latter died in 1848.

Daniel Helm, the father of Frank W., is a retired farmer of Providence, and a son of John Helm, also a farmer, who was a son of John; this great-grandfather came of German parentage and followed the trade of shoemaker in this locality for many years. Daniel Helm married (first), in 1838, Anna Hoak, and the children of this union were as follows: John H., a resident of Iowa; Frank W.; Amos H., a physician of New Providence; and Mary, who resides with her aged father. After the death of his first wife, in 1848, Daniel Helm married Miss Susan Eckman, of Strasburg township, and to this union were born the following children: Daniel E., a merchant of East Drumore township; Enos M., of New Cumberland, Pa.; J. Calvin, of Steelton, Pa.; Charles E., a physician of Bart township; Elmer E., in Lancaster; Thaddeus G., A. M., principal in Franklin-Marshall Academy, in Lancaster; and Rufus D., of Seattle, Washington.

Frank W. Helm was reared on the farm and attended the public schools. At the age of seventeen, in 1860, he became a clerk in the employ of J. Hilderbrand, in New Providence, and later he was connected in the same capacity with John Tweed and Dr. Raub, entering into a partnership with the latter. Upon the death of Dr. Raub the firm name became Helm & Peoples, continuing thus for a period of five years, changing then to Helm & Raub, and again, five years after, to Helm & Bro., this partnership lasting until Frank W. Helm bought his brother's interest and took his son into the business. The firm now stands F. W. Helm & Son, and is a leader in its line in this locality, trusted in the trade and enjoying the patronage of the general public. The foundation stone of the success of this firm has been business integrity, and the same methods regulate its conduct now that have been in operation ever since Mr. Helm assumed charge. In 1863 Mr. Helm was made postmaster of New Providence, and has been the incumbent ever since, with the exception of the years of the administration of President Cleveland. He has always enjoyed the confidence of his fellow citizens and has for twenty-six years served his township as auditor, a post he is at present filling. Under the organization of the Quarryville National Bank, in 1883, Mr. Helm was one of the directors; after the death of President Hensel he was elected to that responsible position, and since that time the financial condition of this institution has commanded commendation and its position as a safe repository is well known.

In politics Mr. Helm is a staunch Republican, and wields considerable influence in his part of the county. He belongs to the Reformed Church, is its efficient Sunday-school superintendent and one of its honored elders.

On Sept. 18, 1867, Mr. Helm was married to Miss Emma Lefever, of Quarryville, daughter of Christian and Susan Lefever, and to this union four children were born, namely: Justus C., who married Miss Minnie Peters, of Quarryville, and is associated with his father in the mercantile business in New Providence; Susan Catherine, the wife of Dr. B. F. Wentz, of Philadelphia; E. Blanche, the wife of William Fisher, of Quarryville, a saddler; and Pauline, a young lady at home. Although Mr. Helm is now one of the substantial men of his township, he began his business career with limited means, but having always closely applied himself to his business, saved his money and won his friends by honesty, industry and courtesy, he is now reaping the reward and enjoying the esteem of his fellow citizens and the comforts assured by ample means. His charities have been large and his kind treatment of others well-known, while his example has been of value, showing the power of an exemplary life.

HENRY S. BRUBAKER, a retired farmer of Rapho township, was born there July 2, 1836, son of Peter and Mary (Strickler) Brubaker, of the same township.

Peter Brubaker, the father, died Feb. 9, 1851, aged fifty years, and the mother died in 1874 at the age of sixty-six years. They are buried in the Erissmans Church cemetery, to which place their remains were removed from the old Brubaker homestead in Rapho township. The mother was a member of the Mennonite Church. There were born to this union: Abraham, who married Susan Miller of Rapho township and died in 1889; and Henry S. Mr. Brubaker's grandparents were Abraham and Maria (Erissman) Brubaker, of Rapho, Lancaster county, both of whom died on the old homestead. Abraham Brubaker, son of Jacob, was of Swiss stock. On his mother's side Mr. Brubaker's grandparents were Abraham and Maria (Hostetter) Strickler, of Lancaster county, the family being of Swiss origin. Abraham Strickler was the son of Ulrich Strickler.

On May 6, 1860, Henry S. Brubaker married Anna Brubaker of Lancaster. There were born to this marriage: Benjamin F., who resides with his father, is married to Miss Macie Noll and has four children; Peter S., a farmer of Rapho township, married to Miss Katie Keener, and a preacher in the Zion's Children (Brinser) denomination; Elmer E., of Petersburg, Pa., married to Miss Louisa Breneman; Henry A., farmer of Rapho township, who married Miss Fanny Ginder and has three children; and Abraham G., single, at home. Mrs. Brubaker was born in Rapho township and died in 1895 at the age of fifty-five years. She is buried in Erissman Meeting House cemetery. She was the daughter of Benjamin and Maria Brubaker of Rapho township. The family are members of the Mennonite church.

Mr. Brubaker owns three farms, all of which are valuable and highly improved. He is a shrewd, wide-awake man, thoroughly up with the times and a close student of events. He is highly respected as a citizen and is always ready to lend a helping hand to any improvement for the advancement of the community in which he resides.

REV. EMIL MEISTER, the honored and beloved pastor of St. Stephen's Lutheran Church, Lancaster, is one of the foremost clergymen of the city, and is as prominent in social and educational work as he is in the church.

Mr. Meister was born in Freiburg, Baden, Germany, May 18, 1850, a son of Samuel E. and Barbara Meister, natives of the same grand duchy, where the father was a silk merchant in Freiburg until 1854, when he emigrated to Switzerland. Both Samuel E. Meister and his wife entered into rest years ago, faithful to the faith of Luther. Rev. Emil Meister spent his boyhood days in Switzerland, and his literary and classical education was pursued in the Polytechnical College of Zurich, and the University of Heidelberg, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1868. For some two years after graduating he was engaged in business with his father, and came to this country to settle at Reading, where for a time he was connected with the Pilger Publishing House, and was engaged as editor of the Kutztown Journal. In 1872 Mr. Meister removed to Baltimore, as one of the publishers of the Baltimore Daily Wecker, the only Republican daily paper in the State of Maryland. In 1875 he again took up the study of theology, gratifying a long cherished ambition to devote himself to the ministry. He was ordained by the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Maryland in May, 1880, and his first pastoral charge was the First Evangelical Church of Baltimore. In August, 1880, he received a call to St. Stephen's Church, in Lancaster, which he accepted, and at once began a work which has been creditable and successful.

St. Stephen's Church was organized in 1874, and the erection of a building was begun, which, however, was not completed for some time, the services being held in the lecture room. This was the condition of affairs that greeted the young pastor on his arrival in 1880. His inspiring services put heart into the congregation, and the church was pushed to completion and dedicated the following spring. Later on a fine pipe organ was placed in the church. The building is 49x75 feet in dimensions, and 172 feet to the top of the steeple. From a mere handful of people that received Mr. Meister, the congregation has grown to four hundred members, and is to-day one of the most influential in the city, the Sunday-school also being correspondingly increased. The parsonage of St. Stephen's Lutheran Church, at No. 445 West Orange street, which is used as family residence only, is one of the finest in the city.

In January of this year (1903) Rev. Mr. Meister gave out a contract for a new church and parsonage at the corner of Ross and Ann streets, a new section of the growing city of Lancaster. This new church will be St. Matthew's Lutheran Church, and when finished will be a mission of St. Stephen's Church, and also under the auspices of Rev. Mr. Meister.

In 1871 Rev. Emil Meister was married in Reading to Miss Amelia Kleinschmidt, a native of Prussia. Of this union four children were born: (1) Wilhelmina died in Lancaster in 1886, at the age of eleven years, and was buried in the family burying-ground in Reading. (2) Catherine is second in the order of birth. (3) Samuel E., after graduating in pharmacy, purchased goods and opened a drug store on West King and Mulberry streets, Lancaster, in 1888, and two years later bought a second drug store at the corner of West Chestnut and Mary streets, conducting both with marked success. He was married July 15, 1900, to Miss Gertrude Witmer, who belongs to a prominent family in Paradise township. (4) Mary, who graduated from the Lancaster high school in 1895, and later from the State Normal at Millersville, is a popular teacher of one of the Lancaster city schools.

In 1894 Rev. Mr. Meister was elected a member of the board of school directors of Lancaster, and soon made his influence felt as he did in the church, having served on the Visiting, Night School and School Laws committees. Rev. Meister is a prominent Mason, and is a member of the Linnean Society, of Lancaster.

With all his labors of debt raising and church expansion in his parish Rev. Mr. Meister has found time to do a large amount of literary work. He is the publisher of St. Stephen's Church Messenger, and of a monthly magazine called the Family Friend. Clear and concise in his utterances, graceful in diction, and endowed with fine powers of oratory, Mr. Meister is exceedingly popular as a minister, lecturer and pulpit orator. His illustrated lectures on "Ben Hur" and on "The Great National Tragedy and Death of President William McKinley" won popular favor to a marked degree. No church in Lancaster holds more closely the affections of the community. Mr. Meister is an indefatigable worker, and his work is far-reaching. Great indeed have been his labors in the city, and hosts of friends and admirers express ardent hope that he may long be spared to enjoy the fruits of his efforts.

D. Master

GEORGE LEFEVER. Prominently identified with the farming and dairy interests of Lancaster county, and more particularly with those of Eden township, is George Lefever.

Mr. Lefever was born in this county, in West Lampeter township, Sept. 15, 1839, and his parents were George and Christianna (Forry) Lefever, both of whom were born in this county, the former in January, 1803, and the latter in 1805. George Lefever, the father, was a son of Jacob and Catherine (Meck) Lefever, both of whom were born in Lancaster county, although their ancestry was French Huguenot. Grandfather Jacob Lefever was a son of Isaac Lefever, the founder of the American branch of the family and a Revolutionary hero. A family of seven children was left by Jacob Lefever, and George was the eldest of the children; the others were as follows: (2) Jacob, who moved in his youth to Wayne county, Ohio, and there reared a family; (3) Elizabeth, married to Daniel Lefever, who settled in Quarryville and died there, leaving a family of four children; Catherine, who married Daniel D. Hess, of Quarryville; Lydia, deceased wife of Benjamin Witmer; Samuel, deceased; and Anna, wife of Henry Lefever, of West Drumore; (4) Philip, who was born in Lampeter township, married, and at death left these children,—Adam, who is a resident of Sterling, Ill.; Emma, the widow of Jacob Mowrer, deceased; John, who lives in West Lampeter township; Edmund, also a resident of West Lampeter; and Elizabeth, who married Samuel Shultz, of Nebraska; (5) Katie, who died unmarried; (6) Samuel, who is one of the esteemed residents of this county, having reached the age of eighty-four years; (7) Lydia, deceased, who married John Houser, of West Lampeter township.

George Lefever (1) after his father's death settled on the original family homestead, this property being left him by his father. His life was a quiet, uneventful one, engaged in agricultural pursuits, and he lived there until his death, in 1886, his wife having died two years previously. Both were worthy and consistent members of the Old Mennonite Church, were upright, Christian people, and practiced in their daily walk and conversation the principles they professed.

Mr. Lefever in his early days was a pronounced Whig, but later embraced the principles of the Republican party, and was always interested in its success. Nine of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Lefever grew to maturity, of whom George was the fifth. Jacob, who was the eldest, was born in the old home in Lampeter in 1825, is unmarried, and resides in the old homestead. Katie, born in 1828, was the wife of Martin Cassel, of Lampeter; she left no family at her death. Susan, born at the old home, in 1830, was the wife of Henry Hess, of St. Louis, Missouri, and left at her decease three daughters: Susanna, who is now Mrs. Smith, of St. Louis; Mary; and Christiana. Mary A., born in 1833, is unmarried and resides on the old homestead. Lydia, born in 1840, is the widow of George Fralick, of Strasburg, and she now resides at the old homestead, her one son, Jacob, being a resident of Dixon, Ill. Samuel, born in 1843, married Miss Sarah Rhinehart for his first wife, who left at her death these children: Mary, who is the wife of Jacob Dagen; Emma, who resides at home; and Lydia, who is the wife of Mr. Goss, of Conestoga township. The second marriage of Samuel Lefever was to Emma Lefever; their home is in Pequea township, and the two children born of this union are Jacob and Samuel. The eighth survivor was Christian, who was born in 1847 and who married Miss Mattie Rhinehart; they reside on his farm near Strasburg, and their children are: John; Jacob; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Mr. Stauffer, of this county; and Christian, Jr. Henry, who was born in 1850, married Miss Salinda Charles and they settled near the old homestead, in Lampeter township; their four children are George, Katie, Harry and Lottie.

George Lefever, of this biography, was the fifth in order of birth in his parents' family; he was reared on the old farm and obtained his education in the district schools of the township. While still a youth he demonstrated his loyalty to his country by offering his life in her defense, enlisting in Co. G, 122nd P. V. I., under Capt. Neff, of Lancaster county, and being sent to the Army of the Potomac. Mr. Lefever participated in many of the hardest fought battles of the war, took part in the struggle at Fredericksburg, was with Gen. Burnside when misfortune overtook that division of the army, later was at Chancellorsville, and was one of the escort which accompanied the brave Major-General Whipple to his last resting place after his soldier's death at Chancellorsville.

After the close of the war Mr. Lefever returned to his home, engaged in farming, literally turning his sword into a pruning hook, and became just as good a farmer as he had been soldier. In 1863 he was united in marriage to Miss Susanna Weaver, the estimable and amiable daughter of Isaac and Mary Weaver, this family being one of the old and leading ones of the county. Mrs. Lefever was born in Strasburg township, in 1840, and was educated in the common schools in her district.

After marriage Mr. Lefever purchased the David Eckman farm, near Quarryville, and on this valuable property he has continued ever since. His improvements are all modern and substantial, consisting of a fine residence, commodious barns and out-buildings, the whole presenting a most attractive and inviting appearance, and in this pleasant home hospitality reigns supreme. To Mr. Lefever and his wife eleven children have been born, and all of these testify to fine constitutions given them by their parents, together with gifts of mind and character. Phares Sherman, born in 1864, moved to Sterling, Ill., when a young man and there married Miss Lizzie Fry, formerly of this county; they reside on a farm near that city, their children being Noah and Ruth. Elmer E., born in July, 1865, also located in Sterling, where he married Miss Ida Andrews, and is there conducting a grocery and bakery business; their three daughters are Anna, May and Hazel. Leander L., born in 1868, married Miss Fannie Ebersole, of Franklin county, Pa., and they reside in Prairieville, Ill., on his fine farm, with their five children, Minnie, George, Mary E., Leroy and a baby. Thaddeus S., born in November, 1870, married Miss Maggie Detweiler, of Bucks county, and they reside on his farm near Sterling, Ill., their two children being Ella and a baby. Mary E., born in August, 1869, is the wife of Howard S. Knox, and they now reside in Paradise township; their five children are Minnie F., Elizabeth, Herbert, George and Reba. Minnie L., born in January, 1872, married Harry Bair, a merchant of New Providence township, and their one son is John M. George M., born in May, 1873, married Miss Barbara Groff, of Quarryville, and they reside in Sterling, Ill., they have three children,—Bertha, Martha and a baby. Jacob G., born in January, 1875, during his early manhood spent four years in the State of Illinois and the Dakotas, but in 1899 returned to Lancaster county and assists his father in the management of the home farm. Annie L., born in August, 1876, married Frank Beane, of Lancaster county, a telegraph operator on the Pennsylvania Railroad, and has had two children,—George and Paul. Harry M., born in January, 1878, is single and resides in Sterling, Ill.; and Samuel B., born in September, 1879, is also a resident of Illinois.

Politically Mr. Lefever, of this sketch, has always been identified with the Republican party, but has refused every official position except that connected with the board of Education, for five years being a very efficient member. The religious connection of the family is with the Baptist Church, in which he and his wife are held in the highest esteem, attending and supporting the church in Cole-rain township.

Mr. Lefever is a very prominent member of the Bireley Post, No. 511, G. A. R., of Quarryville, and he was a delegate to the Gettysburg Encampment of June, 1901. It is most interesting and edifying to trace the successful career of such a man, and to note the sure rewards that come to repay honesty, industry and close and unremitting attention to duty. Mr. Lefever started out in life with limited means and left his early opportunities in order to serve his country, but he has reared a large family in comfort, educating them so that they in turn have become worthy and respected citizens; and he still stands before his old friends of a life-time as one of the straightforward, honest and upright members of the community, whose life has been estimable in every particular. His charities have been many, and there are few of his neighbors who have not received some mark of kindness at his hands. Duty has been with him a watchword, whether on the field of battle or in the quieter walks of life.

CHARLES HAYS, one of the leading and influential citizens of White Rock, Little Britain township, Lancaster Co., Pa., was born Jan. 16, 1830, a son of John and Margaret (Clendenin) Hays, of Little Britain township.

John Hays was born in Ireland, and was brought to America when six years of age, by his parents, John and Catherine Hays, and the family settled in Little Britain township one hundred years ago. John Hays, Jr., father of Charles Hays, had two brothers, William and Charles. The marriage of John Hays Jr., occurred in 1814, and nine children were the result of this union Catherine, born June 10 1815; Mary, Sept. 21, 1817; William, Jan. 2, 1820; John, Feb. 28, 1822; Wallace, June 2, 1824; Jemima, June 12, 1827; Charles, Jan. 16, 1830; James, July 27, 1832; Margaret, Feb. 22, 1836, all of whom are now deceased, except Charles, and Margaret, now of Britain township. John Hays Jr., the father of this family, was one of the leaders in the Democratic party, and an earnest member of the Presbyterian Church.

The early life of Mr. Hays was spent upon his father's farm and he received his education in the district schools, with one year at Lebanon Academy. Starting out as a poor boy, he gradually worked his way up the ladder of fortune and is now the owner of a fine farm of 135 acres, upon which is a comfortable frame residence and all necessary buildings. After an active life, Mr. Hays is now retired and is enjoying a well earned rest.

On Dec. 3, 1874, Mr. Hays married Miss Lavinia Pennell, of Britain township, a daughter of John and Rebecca (Brown) Pennell, of Britain township, who are numbered among the leading settlers of this locality (see sketch of John J. Pennell elsewhere). Mrs. Hays was one in a family of nine children: Elizabeth, now the widow of John P. Hays, of Oxford, Pa.; Mary Ann, widow of James Patterson, of Illinois; William, a retired farmer of Little Britain township; Rebecca, deceased; Margaret, deceased; Lavinia; John J., a thrifty farmer of Little Britain township (see his sketch elsewhere); Amanda and James, deceased. The grandparents of Mrs. Hays, William and Elizabeth Pennell, came from Delaware county, Pa., to this township about 1775.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs.

Hays; Katharine Elizabeth, Mary C. and John C. Katharine Elizabeth and Mary C. were graduated from the Westchester Normal and are successful teachers in Lancaster county. John C., the youngest in the family, in charge of the home farm, received his education in the West Nottingham Academy of Maryland.

In politics, Mr. Hays is a staunch Democrat, and faithfully served his constituents as school director for many years. Socially, he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, being connected with Lodge No. 353 of Oxford, Pa., and he and his family are members of the Union Presbyterian Church of Colerain township. The unqualified success which has attended his efforts is due to his ability, thrift and untiring industry, for he never neglected an opportunity to advance his own interests, when such an opportunity was an honorable one; while his upright manner of doing business, has gained for him the respect of his neighbors, as well as of all with whom he had dealings.

JOSEPH WACKER, a retired citizen of Lancaster, has been a resident of that city for half a century, and no man stands higher in the estimation of his fellow men, either for personal character or for business integrity. He is a native of Germany, born Dec. 23, 1830, in Wurtemberg, where his parents, Michael and Mary Wacker, were also born, and where they passed their entire lives. The father and mother both died in 1874. Michael Wacker was a farmer, and followed that occupation throughout life. Besides Joseph but one of the family survives, Joanna, Mrs. Ountrup, of Philadelphia.

Joseph Wacker received a good education in his native land, attending the public schools until he was fourteen years old, after which he served an apprenticeship to the baker's trade, which he learned thoroughly. He followed his trade as a journeyman in Germany until 1849, on Aug. 14th of that year embarking for the United States. On the day after his arrival in New York he obtained work at his trade, but about six months afterward he was taken sick, and was advised by his physician to give up the baking business. He proceeded to Philadelphia, but not finding suitable employment, determined to journey to Lancaster, and he walked all the way, covering the entire distance, sixty-eight miles, in one day. Though a perfect stranger in the city, he immediately commenced the search for employment, and was fortunate enough to find work within a few days, engaging with Jacob Bossler, who conducted a farm about four miles from town. After two years in this employ he changed to the Flinn farm, where he remained one year, and the next summer he worked in a brickyard. In the winter of 1852 he was employed in Whitlinger's brewery, in Lancaster, where he remained two years, and the following year he was in the Springer bottling works. He and a Mr. Kiehl then purchased this business, which they conducted in partnership for ten years, under the firm name of Kiehl & Wacker. At the expiration of this period Mr. Wacker disposed of his interest to his partner and bought the Whitlinger brewery, situated on West King street, which he sold, however, a year later. After living retired for a year, Mr. Wacker began the brewery business on West King street again, and continued there for two years, when he exchanged his house and brewery on West King street for the "County Hotel," which he conducted two years. He then purchased the Eagle brewery from Jacob Sprenger, and carried on the business until 1880, in which year he turned it over to his sons Charles and Joseph, who are still running it. Mr. Wacker has since lived retired, enjoying the rest he so well deserves and the competence he won by persistent and well-directed energy during his active years.

On April 22, 1855, in Lancaster, Mr. Wacker was married to Mary Dettlinger, also a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, and six children have blessed their union, viz.: Charles V., Joseph, Frank, Anthony, William and Mary. The family are Catholics, and Mr. Wacker and his wife attend St. Joseph's Church.

DAVID E. MAYER. The Mayer family in Lancaster county, Pa., to which David E. Mayer belonged, was established many years ago, by grandfather Christian Mayer, an honest, industrious blacksmith, who followed his trade through life, and amassed a competency for old age. He married one of the modest young maidens of the Reformed Mennonite faith, Mary Miller, by name, belonging to a family of substance in the neighborhood, and they reared a family of seven children: Isaac, the father of David E.; Jacob; John; David; Nathaniel; Leah, who married Abraham Herr; Hettie, who married John Hildebrand.

Isaac Mayer was born in West Lampeter township and learned the tanning business, but this vocation seemed injurious to his health and he later began farming, becoming a prominent man in the neighborhood, and serving many years on the school board. He married Mary Hoover, a daughter of David Hoover, of Strasburg township, and three children were born to them: David E.; Isaac H., a physician of Willowstreet; and Christian, the eldest, who died in infancy. Both parents were worthy members of the Old Mennonite Church.

David E. Mayer was born in West Lampeter township, Aug. 4, 1838, a son of Isaac and Mary (Hoover) Mayer, was reared on the farm and received his education in the public schools, in which he ever after took a deep interest. David remained at home with his parents until the death of his father, in 1871, when it became more than ever necessary for him to stay and he took charge at this time of the homestead and his mother's affairs, engaging extensively in farming, and also in trucking, the proximity to large cities making this a very remunerative line of agriculture.

Intelligent from his youth, and fond of reading and of mingling with his fellow-citizens, David E. Mayer early became recognized as somewhat of a leader in the public affairs of his locality. A pronounced Republican, he also became the representative of the party in many ways. After serving efficiently on the election board, he was made supervisor and faithfully performed the duties of that office for seven years and was then made a member of the school board, which he conscientiously served for the long term of eighteen years. In March, 1894, he was appointed to fill a vacancy on the board of county commissioners, this honor coming to him unsolicited; at the expiration of the term he was elected to the position, being subsequently re-elected, and in this position he continued to manage the affairs of Lancaster county with economy and good judgment until his death.

David E. Mayer married April 29, 1897, Mary A. Shaub, a daughter of Benjamin and Susan (Wade) Shaub, a most estimable lady, and a member of the M. E. Church. In 1900 their comfortable residence was refitted and is one of the most desirable modern homes in Strasburg. David E. Mayer was one of the representative citizens and possessed in a marked degree the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens. He died Sept. 12, 1901, and was laid to rest with his people in the Old Mennonite cemetery at the church west of Strasburg.

ELI B. POWL, one of the prosperous citizens of Lancaster, where he is engaged in the livery business, was born near Neffsville, April 2, 1854, a son of Isaac and Barbara (Buckwalter) Powl, both natives of Lancaster county.

Isaac Powl was a farmer by occupation in early life, but in 1864 he moved to Lancaster, and there at first operated a hotel. While he was successful in his new work, it did not prove congenial to his tastes and he sold out, and engaged in the livery business, beginning on a small scale and gradually increasing until he was the proprietor of one of the best stables in the county. In 1866 he built the stable and located where his son is now engaged. He continued to take an active part in business until October, 1884, when he sold out to his son, and retired. His death occurred in April, 1885. In politics he was a Republican, and in religion a Mennonite. His wife, Barbara (Buckwalter) was the daughter of a farmer, and previous to her marriage with Mr. Powl, had been married to Mr. Leman. By her last marriage she became the mother of two children, of whom Eli B. is the elder.

Eli B. Powl was reared and educated in Lancaster. Always a companion and associate of his father, he gradually grew into the business, and when his father began to step aside he assumed full control, practically being manager for the last ten years of the latter's life. His livery stable is 60x96 feet in size and three stories high, and is provided with an electric elevator. It is located at No. 14 East Walnut street, and his residence is next door. Everything about his establishment is first-class, and he is able to supply at least thirty handsome rigs, fifteen hacks and three hearses—a most creditable showing.

In August, 1878, Mr. Powl was united in marriage with Miss Alice C. Henry, who was born in Lancaster, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Henry. Two children have come to brighten their home, Isaac Benjamin and Theodore Franklin. Socially Mr. Powl belongs to the I. O. O. F., being a charter member of Herschel Lodge, and he also belongs to the Knights of Malta. He and his family belong to the M. E. church. In his political views he follows in the footsteps of his father, and is an earnest worker in the ranks of the Republican party.

JOHN N. EBY, a retired farmer of Leacock township, was born Oct. 7, 1841, on the old Eby homestead, which was acquired from Jeremiah Job in 1767.

The Eby family has a history in Lancaster county that begins with the coming of Theodorus Eby from Switzerland, in 1715, and his settlement in Earl township, Lancaster county, where he built a mill on Mill Creek, and engaged in the milling and farming business the rest of his life. Theodorus Eby was the great-great-great-grandfather of John N., whose name appears above. Jacob Eby was his son, and Abraham Eby, his son, was the great-grandfather of John N. Eby. Abraham Eby was born in 1735 and died Jan. 8, 1815. John Eby, the grandfather of John N., was born Sept. 7, 1758, and died Nov. 2, 1842. He married Fannie Bare, who was born in Upper Leacock township, and died in April, 1842, at the age of eighty years, lacking nine days. They were the parents of Abraham, Catherine, Barbara, Elizabeth, Mary and John, the father of John N. All the progenitors of John N. were buried in the private cemetery on the Eby homestead, with the exception of Theodorus and Jacob. John N. Eby is planning to erect a monument in the Eby cemetery, a memorial stone weighing about eight tons, and having cut on it the Eby descent from Theodorus down to the present day.

John Eby, the father of John N., was born Dec. 20, 1800, in Upper Leacock township; he married Elizabeth Neff, who was born in East Lampeter township, Dec. 24, 1815, and died Feb. 15, 1894. His death occurred Jan. 27, 1864. Born to this union were the following: Reuben N., who married Louisa Wenger, had a family of six children and died in 1881; John N.; Aaron N., a retired farmer of Bareville, now residing in Lancaster, and married to Elmina Graybill, by whom he has had three children.

The maternal grandparents of John N. Eby were Martin and Leah (Eby) Neff, farming people of Soudersburg, Pennsylvania.

Eli B. Powl

John N. Eby was married in Leacock township, June 2, 1898, to Miss Clara F. Sanders, and one child, Jay Victor, has come to bless their union.

Mrs. Clara F. (Sanders) Eby was born in Slackwater, Lancaster county, and is a daughter of Julius and Catherine (Smith) Sanders. Her father was born in Saxony, Germany, and her mother in Lancaster county. He came to this country at the age of eighteen years, and served three years in the Union Army during the war of the Rebellion. His trade was that of a cabinet maker, and he became very expert in the making of organs and in other labors requiring mechanical skill of a high order. When he died, May 1, 1897, he was sixty-two years old. His widow, who is living in Lancaster, Pa., has had the following children: William, who is a resident of Lancaster, Pa.; Morris, who lives in Cochranville, Pa.; Elizabeth, who lives at Kissel Hill, Pa., married to Samuel Dubbs; Clara, Mrs. Eby; Lula, living in Philadelphia; Bertha, living at Kissel Hill; Walter, deceased.

John N. Eby remained with his parents as long as they lived, and then moved to the farm which he occupied until recently. In March, 1902, he removed to the city of Lancaster, where he now resides. In political matters he is a Republican, and is known as a very intelligent and widely informed citizen.

BORDLEY S. PATTERSON. Among the honorable and well-esteemed citizens of Little Britain township is Bordley S. Patterson, who was born on the farm he now occupies, near White Rock, in Lancaster county, Sept. 24, 1834.

The Patterson family is one of the oldest and most respected of Lancaster county. The founder of the family in this State was James Patterson, who was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in 1708, and immigrated to America in 1728. Coming to the State of Pennsylvania, he bought large tracts of land from the Government, and settled down in Little Britain township; later he went to New York to meet his affianced bride from Ireland, Mary Montgomery, whom he brought back with him to Pennsylvania. He reared a family of ten children, William, John, Hannah, Mary, Samuel, Jane, Isabella, James, Elizabeth and Thomas.

James Patterson (2), son of James, and the grandfather of Bordley S. Patterson, was born in Little Britain township, Nov. 4, 1745. He married Letitia Gardner, and they had these children, Isabella, Francina, Robert, Mary, Elizabeth, Jane, James, Letitia and Rachel, all of whom have passed to another life.

Robert Patterson, son of James (2), and the father of Bordley S., was born March 21, 1787, and died March 31, 1861. He was first married to a Miss Ewing, and the four children born to this marriage were James, Gardner, Mary and Eliza. The second wife of Robert Patterson was Sarah Shippen, and three children were born to this union:

Bordley S.; Francis, deceased; and Edward B., a prosperous merchant in Oxford, Pa., lately removed to Philadelphia. During life Robert Patterson was not only a large landowner and prosperous farmer but he was also a prominent citizen and a leader in the Democratic party. Since early days the family has been connected with the Presbyterian Church.

Bordley S. Patterson was born on the farm he now occupies, Sept. 24, 1834, a son of the late Robert and Sarah (Shippen) Patterson. This old farm has been his home through life, and he still occupies the old stone mansion which was erected by his grandfather in 1806. So few of these old homes remain, in these days of change and mutation, that the old Patterson homestead has become an object of historic interest, and it is highly valued by its owners and occupants.

In the public schools of his locality Mr. Patterson obtained his early education, going later to the Lititz and Mt. Joy academies. He began an agricultural life, which he has carried on with success. His farm of 135 acres in Little Britain township, near White Rock, is one of the best cultivated and improved in this locality, his elegant and commodious residence, great barns and attractive surroundings making it an ideal country home. Mr. Patterson is also the owner of a one-half interest in a fine estate, comprising 140 acres in Colerain township, which is as well managed and as productive as the home farm.

On Oct. 9, 1862, was celebrated the marriage of Bordley S. Patterson and Miss Emma M. Worth, of Chester county, Pa. She was born in 1841, a daughter of Samuel A. and Hester (Hoops) Worth, both of whom were of English origin. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Patterson: Robert L., who was born in 1864, married Elizabeth Colter, and is in business in Oxford, Pa.; Fred W., born in 1867, who married Miss Cora Welch, of St. Paul, Minn., and is engaged in the tea and coffee business in the above named city; and Eliza Shippen, born in 1874, the wife of Hugh A. Foresman, a publisher in Chicago, Illinois. In public, religious and social life Mr. Patterson is a leading citizen of Little Britain township. His devotion to the Jeffersonian principles of the Democratic party has been life-long and he has been active in its councils. For seven years Mr. Patterson was the efficient township auditor, and he has served with satisfaction to all as judge and inspector of elections, and has not only been selected to serve several times on the grand jury of Lancaster county, of which he has been foreman, but also on the United States jury, his reputation as a most honorable and high-minded man making him desirable in responsible positions. In 1884 Mr. Patterson was elected a director of the Northern Mutual Insurance Company, and since 1893 has been treasurer of the company.

Mr. Patterson is a member of the Presbyterian Church in Colerain township, serving faithfully as trustee of that institution. A man with the highest standards of integrity, charitable, generous and public-spirited, Bordley S. Patterson is a representative man of this part of Lancaster county.

DANIEL DENLINGER was born in Strasburg township, Lancaster county, May 21, 1817, and died July 19, 1886. His remains are resting in the cemetery connected with Hershey's Meeting House in Salisbury township. He was a son of Elder Jacob and Mary (Kreider) Denlinger. The father was a miller, and was an elder in the Strasburg Mennonite Church.

To Elder and Mrs. Denlinger were born the following children: John; Jacob; Barbara, who was twice married, first to Michael Sensenig, and then to David Eshleman; Henry K.; Daniel; Abram,—all of the foregoing being dead; Isaac, a retired farmer of East Lampeter township.

Daniel Denlinger was married Nov. 5, 1840, in Lancaster, Pa., to Margaret Hershey, by whom he had the following family: Abram H., who married Mary C. Keneagy and is a retired farmer in Paradise township, with a family of eight children; Anna, the widow of John Ranck, having her home in Paradise township, where she has one son; Jacob, who died in infancy; Mary, married to Jonas Eby, in the creamery and tobacco business at Gap, Pa., and the mother of eleven children; Esther, married to John Eshleman, a retired farmer of Salisbury township, and the mother of ten children; Elizabeth, of Paradise township, wife of Amaziah Brackbill, and mother of seven children; Daniel, married first to Anna Mary Kreider, by whom he had two children, and second to Fannie Landis, by whom he had five; Margaret, wife of Adam Kreider, a farmer of Leacock township, to whom she bore eleven children, six of whom are now living.

Mrs. Margaret Denlinger was born in Salisbury township, Jan. 17, 1824, and was a daughter of Abraham and Anna (Eby) Hershey. Her father, who was a farmer, died Jan. 9, 1844, lacking but fifteen days of being fifty-seven years old; his widow survived many years, passing away Feb. 29, 1896, at the age of ninety-five years, two months and fourteen days. They were both buried in Hershey's burying ground in Salisbury township. They were members of the Mennonite Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Hershey were the parents of Margaret and Peter, a retired farmer of Leacock township. By a previous marriage with Maria Secrist, Mr. Hershey had the following children: Jacob S., deceased; Fronica, who died young. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Denlinger were Jacob and Anna Hershey. Jacob Hershey, who was the son of Andrew Hershey, was born in Lancaster county. Andrew Hershey was the son of Andrew Hershey, who came from Switzerland in 1709.

Daniel Denlinger remained at home with his brother Henry until his marriage, when he began farming in Salisbury township, where he was engaged in the cultivation of the soil until 1869, when he removed to the farm on which the remaining years of his active life were passed. Four years before his death he removed to the home in which his family are living at the present time.

Mr. Denlinger was a man of character and standing in the community in which he spent his honorable and useful life. His widow, who is still living, bears up wonderfully well under the pressure of years, and is still alert and active.

SAMUEL HARNER. There are few residents of Martic township more highly esteemed throughout its extent than Samuel Harner, a member of one of the old and well-known families of Lancaster county. Samuel Harner is now a citizen of Bethesda, Pa., but he was born in Montgomery county, Sept. 7, 1826. His parents were Joseph and Mary (Slingluff) Harner, his grandfather being John Harner, who for many years conducted a blacksmith business in Montgomery county, and was the father of nine children, all of these having passed out of life, John, Joseph, Jacob, Daniel, Henry, Samuel, Elizabeth, Ann and Susan.

Joseph Harner, the son of John and the father of Samuel, was born in 1790 in Montgomery county, and in early life he was a merchant there. After removing to Lancaster county he was engaged in farming and lime burning. His death was at the age of eighty-eight years. In 1820 he was united in marriage to Mary Slingluff, and their seven children were: John S., of Martic township; George, deceased; Samuel; Mary, the wife of Thomas Cully, of Martic township; Elizabeth, deceased, wife of J. Harrison Long, of Drumore township; Joseph, of Martic township; and Jesse, a retired farmer of Drumore, more extended mention of these prominent citizens of Lancaster county being found elsewhere.

Like many another young man, Samuel Harner began life with limited means, but the application of energy and industry has brought a sure result. In advanced years he finds himself surrounded by all of the comforts of life, and capable of enjoying the same, surrounded by affectionate relatives and sincere friends. He was married on Jan. 7, 1868, to Miss Amanda McLaughlin, who was born Dec. 30, 1849, a daughter of Joseph and Martha (Marron) McLaughlin; to this union, on Jan. 17, 1869, was born one son,—George E., who on Oct. 1, 1895, married Miss Emma Harner, the adopted daughter of Joseph Harner, of Martic township. Three children have been born to this marriage, Florence, Virgil and Samuel J. Harner, Jr. Mrs. Amanda Harner died April 5, 1902.

The valuable farm in this township owned by Mr. Harner comprises 112 acres of well cultivated land, upon which he has placed most excellent improvements. In his political belief Mr. Harner has been a life-long Democrat, actively supporting the candidates and measures of Democracy. Although not a member of any religious denomination, Mr. Harner is reverent in his feelings and liberally contributes to the Presbyterian Church, to which his wife belonged. The family is one which is held in high regard in this township as representing the best class of honest and honorable citizens.

SAMUEL J. BEARD, one of the prominent farmers of Penn township, belongs to a family which has been settled in Pennsylvania for several generations. Grandfather Robert Beard came to America from Ireland, and resided for a short time in Chester county, in this State, moving then into Lancaster county, where he resided until his death. By trade he was a charcoal burner and this was his occupation during life. Five children were born to him and his wife: Joseph, who moved to York county and died there; Robert, who became a farmer in Dauphin county; James, the father of Samuel J.; John, who is a farmer in Lebanon county; and Margaret, who married John Crawford.

James Beard, the father of Samuel J., was born in Lancaster county, about 1795. In early life he followed the business of charcoal burning, but later purchased the farm where Samuel J. now resides, and turned his attention to agriculture until his death, in 1847. James Beard married Miss Ellen Jones, and they had nine children born to them: Martha, deceased wife of Henry Meixell; Mary, the widow of Jacob Krall; Robert, a farmer of Penn township; James, deceased, who lived in Reading; Margaret, unmarried; Catherine, the wife of David Brosey; Eliza, the widow of Isaac Weachter; Ellen, the widow of Abram Kauffman; Samuel J., the youngest of the family.

Samuel J. Beard was born in Penn township April 11, 1835, and was left fatherless at the age of twelve years. Until he was twenty-seven years of age he remained with his mother, a kind and dutiful son. Mr. Beard received an excellent public school education, which was supplemented by one term in the Normal school, in Millersville. Possessing a quick intelligence and a love of study, he soon was qualified for teaching, and took charge of his first school before he was twenty-one years old. For twelve years he acceptably followed this profession. In 1866, at the death of his beloved mother, to whom he had shown every care, he purchased the old homestead and since that time has given his attention to farming, demonstrating that he is as good a farmer as teacher.

In politics Mr. Beard is a stanch Democrat, and has taken a very active interest in the party councils in this locality. For fifteen years he served as justice of the peace, for five years he was assessor, for the same time tax collector, and he served one term as school director.

The marriage of Mr. Beard was to Miss Margaret Keath, and to this union was born a family of seven children: Mary, the widow of Harry Diehm; Lizzie, the wife of Jacob Moyer; Maggie, the wife of Horace Biemesderfer; Frank, a farmer of Mechanicsville; John, a farmer at Erbsdale; Charles, a miller, near Mount Hope; and Howard, a teacher of West Park, in Penn township.

Mr. Beard has spent a long and useful life in this locality, is well known and most highly esteemed. He is a leading member of the Lutheran Church, one of the elders and one of its most liberal supporters. Mr. Beard may be justly called a representative man of Penn township.

JACOB CHARLES, one of the more prominent farmers of Conoy township, Lancaster county, was born in Manor township, in the same county, Dec. 15, 1841, and is a son of Christ. and Nancy (Funk) Charles, both natives of Manor township, where the father, who was born June 2, 1812, is still living. The mother, who died in June, 1860, and was laid to rest in the Charles family burying ground in Manor township, was, with her husband, a member of the Mennonite Church. The following children were born to them: Nancy, deceased wife of Abraham Bankholder; Jacob; John, a farmer and one of the directors of the Mountville National Bank; Joseph, a farmer in East Donegal township; Christian, a farmer in Rapho township; Abraham, at home with his parents; Hettie, married to Martin Breneman, a farmer of Manor township; Anna, unmarried and living at home; Mary, who married Christ. Frank, and is dead. After the death of Mrs. Nancy Charles, at Forrey, in 1860, Mr. Charles was married a second time, Miss Elizabeth Witmer becoming his wife. She died in 1893. John Charles, the paternal grandfather of Jacob, married a Miss Habacker and spent his entire life in his native township, Manor.

Jacob Charles has been twice married, the first time Sept. 8, 1867, in Lancaster, when Miss Elvina S. Harnish became his wife. She was the mother of two children: Fanny H., who died young; and Christ. H., who married Mary Lip, and is a farmer in Conoy township. Mrs. Elvina S. Charles was born in Manor township in 1849, and died Jan. 21, 1872. She was a daughter of Michael and Anna (Schenck) Harnish, both natives of Lancaster county.

Mr. Charles was married, for the second time, on Nov. 11, 1875, in Lancaster, to Miss Lizzie F. Mease, by whom he has had the following children, all of whom are at home: Amos M., Jacob M. and Lizzie E. Mrs. Lizzie F. Charles was born in Manheim township Aug. 16, 1842, and is a daughter of John and Mary (Frankford) Mease, farmer people of Lancaster county, where they died, and were buried in Neff's Church cemetery.

Mr. Charles remained with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-seven years, when he engaged in the tillage of a small farm in Manor township. In March, 1878, he located on his present home, a fine farm of one hundred and nineteen acres, a magnificent property, with fine river frontage. He also owns an island farm across from his home, where he has forty acres of rich tillable land, and a farm of sixty-one acres in another part of Conoy township.

Mr. Charles is an honorable and upright man, whose long and useful life is a story of unwearied industry and straightforward and manly dealings. In politics he is a Democrat, and in his religion a member of the Mennonite Church. His peaceful and industrious life, his kindly heart and generous spirit have in no way put to shame his religious faith and profession.

GEORGE DILLER SPRECHER, whose commodious dwelling at No. 213 East King street is one of the finest and most substantial in all Lancaster, is a lineal descendant of two of the oldest families in Lancaster county.

On his mother's side—the Dillers—the family is traced to Casper Diller (Deelor, as he wrote it), who fled from Alsace to Holland, going from there to England, where he married a lady of English birth and then came to America, landing in this country in the early days of the Penns, from whom he secured a grant for 500 acres of land. He lived to be 100 years old. Isaac Diller, descended from Casper Diller, was the grandfather of George D. Sprecher, and the latter's grandmother, Susanna Roland, was a daughter of Jonathan Roland, who served in the Revolutionary war. Through the Diller connection Mr. Sprecher was related to George Washington, and the family tree is as distinguished as it is large.

On the paternal side Mr. Sprecher can claim a lineage as ancient as that of the Dillers. On Oct. 17, 1732, Christopher Sprecher and Hans George Sprecher (brothers, and the latter the great-great-grandfather of our subject) came to America on board the ship "Pink." On Oct. 17, 1751, Jacob Sprecher, of Rotterdam, came to America on the ship "Jeanette," with him came another Hans George Sprecher. On Oct. 11, 1752, Johann Peter Sprecher came to America, and on Oct. 18, 1752, Jacob Adam Sprecher arrived in the United States on the ship "Peggy." The Hans Sprecher who came to this country in 1751 settled in New York, and the first two Sprechers who came to America settled in Lehigh county. Hans George Sprecher, the first to come, had a son Philip, who settled in East Earl township, and was the ancestor of George D. Sprecher. One of Philip's sons went to Virginia, where he settled and reared a family, one of his sons being Prof. Sprecher, of California, who has three sons who are clergymen. George D. Sprecher's father was an extensive cattle dealer and hotel-keeper, and for a time was a farmer. Mr. Sprecher's (George D.'s) mother was a great-granddaughter of Col. John Huber, a veteran of the Revolution, her father having been Isaac Diller, a prominent farmer of eastern Lancaster county. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sprecher, only three of whom are living: George D., William D. and Catherine, the latter the widow of the late John Reigart, all of Lancaster.

George D. Sprecher was born Feb. 12, 1821, in Earl township, where his father was engaged at farming. Receiving a partial education in the public schools, young Sprecher came to Lancaster at the age of eleven years, and entered the hardware store of Gen. Diller, a relative of Mr. Sprecher's mother, and who was the founder of Dillerville, this county. This was in 1832. From Gen. Diller's store young Sprecher entered the employ of Henry W. Gundaker, and eight years later went to the late A. W. Russel. In 1844 he became part owner, and later sole owner, of a store. In 1854 Mr. Sprecher tore down the old A. W. Russel hardware building, on North Queen street, and erected the large and elegant building now occupied by Reilly Brothers & Raub. He was continuously in the hardware trade from 1832 to 1860, engaged in the slating business in 1854, keeping it up—with the hardware business—until 1860, and from the latter date continuing exclusively at slating until 1888, when he retired from active business.

Mr. Sprecher has been the builder and owner of scores of houses in Lancaster, having built the handsome home he now lives in, in 1847, and building an addition to it in 1850. He is the owner of four large tobacco warehouses, two extensive mercantile properties on East King street, and other properties. Great, indeed, have been the material improvements he has made to Lancaster, and these, with the record of his long life of integrity, will prove enduring monuments.

Mr. Sprecher married Miss Caroline Beates, daughter of the now sainted Rev. William Beates, who was for so many years pastor of Zion's Lutheran Church, this city, and who, emulating the Divine Master, refused to accept the slightest compensation for his labors. He had a nominal salary of $300 per annum, and, after receiving it, annually, from his parishioners, turned it over for the payment of the church debt. This remarkable man died May 16, 1867, at the age of ninety-one years, while administering the Holy Communion to his family.

Eight children were born of the union of George D. Sprecher and Caroline Beates, and all save three of these children, as well as the mother, have entered into rest. The survivors are Laura, wife of Henry S. Franklin, of the Steinman Hardware Company; and Misses Emily B. and Anna M., at home. Mr. Sprecher is wonderfully preserved, mentally and physically, for one of his years, and he is as active as most men of fifty, although within a few days of eighty-one years at the time this sketch was written, January, 1902. He is a trustee of Trinity Lutheran Church, and has been for fifty-two years; and he is president of the board of trustees of the Home for Friendless Children, and president of the board of trustees of the Woodward Hill Cemetery Board; and no man gives these positions of honor and trust more intelligent or more painstaking attention than does Mr. Sprecher. His has indeed been a remarkable career, and his life is one that may well be emulated by the rising generation.

JACOB MUSSELMAN. A prominent and highly esteemed farmer of Lancaster county is found in Jacob Musselman, now living somewhat retired on a farm which has been his home since 1898. The birth of Mr. Musselman was in Earl township July 5, 1831, and he was a son of Samuel and Magdalina (Nolt) Musselman, a leading farming family of Earl township. Samuel Musselman was engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life and died on his old homestead, after five years of retirement, in 1862, at the age of sixty-six years. He was a son of Christian Musselman, who was also a farmer of Earl township, and the family in its sixth generation now occupies the old farm, it being the property of Jacob Musselman and operated by his two capable sons. The old family home was erected in 1792 and has been the scene of the births, marriages and deaths of the family for over a century, still remaining in a good state of preservation, while those who fashioned it have long since crumbled into dust.

Magdalina (Nolt) Musselman, the beloved mother of our subject, passed out of life in 1842, at the early age of thirty-eight years. She was a daughter of Jonas Nolt, of West Earl township. She was buried in Groffdale cemetery, both she and her husband having been most worthy members of the Mennonite Church. The children born to them were: Anna, who died young; Christian, who was killed on the railroad in 1898, at the age of seventy-two years; Jonas, who died in 1863; Jacob; Henry, who died in 1888; and Mattie, of West Earl township, who married Michael E. Wenger.

The education of Jacob Musselman was acquired in the district schools of his neighborhood and he grew up on his father's farm, remaining at home until the death of both parents, when he took charge of the old place and continued to cultivate and improve it until 1898, when he retired from activity, in favor of his two sons, whom he had taught to be excellent farmers and good managers, like himself.

Mr. Musselman was united in marriage on Jan. 12, 1858, in West Earl township, to Miss Mary Stoner. This estimable lady was born in West Earl township Sept. 15, 1831, and she was a daughter of Henry and Catherine (Huber) Stoner, the former of whom was a native of Colerain and the latter of Warwick township. The father died in West Earl in 1869, at the age of seventy-three years, the mother having preceded him, in 1853, at the age of sixty years. They were buried in Metzler's meeting house cemetery, in West Earl township, and both were consistent members of the Mennonite Church. The grandparents of Mrs. Musselman were among the leading citizens of the county, Henry and Margaret Stoner and Abraham Huber. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Musselman were: Elizabeth, deceased, who married John Musselman; Jacob, who died young; Catherine, deceased, who first married Joseph Nolt, and second, Martin Rohrer; Henry, deceased; Samuel, a farmer of Ephrata township; Barbara, deceased, who married Elias Miller; Susannah, deceased, who married Daniel Burkholder; Abraham, a retired farmer of Ephrata township; and Isaac, also a retired farmer of the same township.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Musselman made up a family of nine, as follows: Magdelina, who married Samuel O. Martin, a farmer of Earl township, and has ten children; Anna, who married John C. Nolt, a farmer of Earl township, and has a family of nine children; Jacob, of Lancaster, an invalid; Mary and Henry, who died young; Amanda, who is a talented lady and a teacher in the Mennonite Mission school, in Philadelphia; Eli, who resides on the old homestead, married Anna Berghart and has three children; Amos, who married Laura Good, resides on a part of the old homestead and has two children; and Katie, who married Elmer E. Meyers, of Earl township, and is the mother of three children.

For many years Mr. Musselman has been a resident of West Earl township and is well known to almost every citizen; among these old acquaintances he is ranked as a man of strict integrity, a man whose word is as good as his bond, and as one who well represents the good citizen. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and is one of the leading members of the Mennonite Church.

SAMUEL WARFEL was born in Conestoga township, Lancaster county, Pa., Feb. 7, 1822. He was educated in the common schools of the county, and remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age. He then branched out in life for himself and followed the canal between Lancaster and Philadelphia for a number of years. Since leaving the canal he has been engaged in various lines of occupation.

Adam Warfel, father of Samuel, born in Conestoga township in 1800, was drowned there in 1869. He married Miss Sarah Graver, of Ephrata. This couple were the parents of ten children, one of whom died in infancy: Elizabeth, wife of Samuel Crossman; Samuel; Polly, wife of Reuben Brady, of Conestoga; Delila, wife of John Fry, of Manor township; Levi, of Conestoga township; Eurias, of Conestoga township; Catherine, never married; Annie, who died in childhood; and Annie, deceased. The father of Adam Warfel was also named Adam and was born and reared in Conestoga township.

Samuel Warfel married Barbara, daughter of Martin Good, of Conestoga township. They have had seven children, as follows: Sarah, who died in infancy; Lizzie, who died in childhood; Delila, wife of Fred. Shoff, of Colemanville; Lidia A., wife of Aaron Elmire; Leah, wife of Christian Shooft; Annie, who is the widow of John Stauffer; and William, who died in childhood. Mr. Warfel is a member of the Old Mennonite Church and takes a great interest in church work. He is still active and vigorous and doubtless has many days yet to live. He is universally respected by his friends and neighbors.

JEREMIAH SELDOMRIDGE, a retired farmer of Leacock township, Lancaster county, where he is spending the closing years of a long and useful life, was born in Salisbury township, this county, Jan. 4, 1827, son of Isaac and Rachel (Glauser) Seldomridge. His parents were born in Leacock and East Earl townships, respectively, and both died in Earl township.

Isaac Seldomridge was a farmer and an industrious man, but for fifteen years prior to his death he lived retired. He passed away in 1884, at the age of eighty-four, and his wife died in 1878, when seventy-six years old. Both were buried in Roland's cemetery, in Earl township. They were members of the Lutheran Church. The following named children were born to them: George, who died when about sixty-six years old; Jeremiah, mentioned below; Elizabeth, the widow of Amos Skiles, of Springville, Lancaster county; Isaac, who died at the age of fifty-eight; Catherine, the wife of Peter Dague, of Earl township; Jacob, a farmer of Earl township; Benjamin, a saddler living in Upper Leacock township; Rachel, deceased wife of Isaac Brubaker; Mary Ann, the wife of Jonathan Hilderbrand, of Manheim township; Andrew, deceased; Amos, a retired farmer of Earl township.

George Seldomridge, the grandfather of Jeremiah, was born in Lancaster county, married there and there reared his family. His father was also George. He was a son of George and a grandson of Andrew, who, with his wife, came from Switzerland. The name was originally spelled Zeltenreich. This Andrew owned the tract of one and a quarter acres in Earl township now known as Rolands cemetery, which he gave to the church for the nominal sum of five shillings. He was also one of the founders of the church there.

Jeremiah Seldomridge was married in Lancaster Sept. 2, 1852, to Susanna C. Eckert, by whom he has had the following children: Jemimah, deceased wife of John Fenninger, a farmer of Leacock township, by whom she had six children; Eckert G., deceased; Mary Ann, who married George Knobb, of Leacock township, and who has two children.

Mrs. Susanna C. (Eckert) Seldomridge was born in Leacock township Feb. 14, 1828, daughter of Jacob K. and Hannah (Varnes) Eckert, farming people of Leacock township, who are now numbered with the "great majority," he having died in 1864, at the age of sixty-four years, and Mrs. Eckert in 1871, at the age of sixty-eight years. Their ashes rest in Roland's cemetery. During his last years Mr. Eckert lived retired. To them were born the following children: Evaline, late wife of Josiah Zook; John V., deceased; George, a retired farmer in Lancaster; Susanna C., Mrs. Seldomridge; Mary Ann, deceased wife of Robert Hoar; Rebecca, married to Moses Hess, and now living retired in Perry county, Pa.; Elizabeth, married to Henry Rutter, and now living retired in Intercourse; Henry, deceased; C. Ludwig, in Philadelphia; Jemima, the widow of Henry Horst, living in Lancaster. George and Susan Eckert, the paternal grandparents of Mrs. Seldomridge, were farming people of Lancaster county.

Jeremiah Seldomridge remained with his parents on the farm until about the time of his marriage, when he set up for himself on a neighboring farm, in 1851 commencing farming in Upper Leacock township. There he remained until 1864, when he established himself and family on a place in Leacock township, in the cultivation of which he was engaged until 1893. That year he removed to his present home, and he has since lived retired. For nine years he has been school director, and he takes the side of the Republican party in all political questions. For the past thirty-nine years Mr. Seldomridge has been an elder in the Reformed Church, and still holds the office, and his clean and wholesome life, his industrious habits and his kindly disposition have given much strength and force to his religious labors. The family of seven sons, of which he is one, has the remarkable distinction that all are absolutely temperate in all things, not one of them having ever used tobacco, in any form, and all abstaining from intoxicants.

JOHN S. HARNER, one of the leading and successful farmer-citizens of Martic township, is a native of Montgomery county, and was born in December, 1823. His parents were Joseph and Mary (Slingluff) Harner, of Montgomery county, Pa., who came to Martic township in 1838, when their son, John, was about fifteen years of age. Joseph Harner had a family of seven children, five sons and two daughters: John S.; George, deceased; Samuel, of Martic township; Joseph, of Martic township; Mary Ann, the wife of Thomas Cully; Elizabeth, deceased wife of J. Harrison Long, of Drumore; Jesse, a retired farmer of Drumore, all of these having extended mention made in another place.

John S. Harner grew through childhood and until he was fifteen years of age, in the old home in Montgomery county, accompanying his parents to Lancaster county when they removed to this part of the state, in 1838. His education was obtained in the public schools and he early began the agricultural life he has successfully followed ever since. His beginnings were small and he has worked hard, but he has now one of the finest and most valuable farms in this part of the county, well improved and most desirable. It contains 200 acres and shows that Mr. Harner has thoroughly understood his business.

Not only has John S. Harner been a good farmer, but he has faithfully served his township in various official positions, and is widely known as an honest and upright citizen. His political views make him a Democrat, and for many years he has been a leader in the ranks of the Democratic party. In the Chestnut Level Presbyterian Church Mr. Harner has for many years been not only a constant attendant, but a liberal supporter and active and useful member, serving a number of years as trustee.

The marriage of John S. Harner was on Feb. 3, 1859, to Miss Lucinda L. Long, of Drumore township, a daughter of James B. and Catherine (Jefferson) Long, one of the old and honorable families of southern Lancaster county. Mrs. Harner was born Jan. 26, 1839, and she was one in a family of nine children, five of these growing to maturity: Margaret, who married Robert Rutter, of Ohio; J. Harrison, a retired farmer of Drumore township; Lucinda; George, deceased; and Robert L., a prominent citizen of Phoenix, Arizona.

A family of three children was born to Mr. and Mrs. Harner: Mary C., born in 1860, wife of James Kilgore, of York county, Pa.; J. Wilmer, born in 1865 and married to Belle Wivel, of Drumore township; Charles L., born on April 20, 1872, married to Elizabeth Bayd, of Drumore township, and serving as the competent manager of his father's farm, in Martic township. The family is one well known and most highly esteemed in this locality, being especially noted for those sterling qualities which belong to a community's best citizens.

JOHN GEIST. Among the retired farmers of Lancaster county John Geist takes a leading position, being a man of large means and much public spirit. Mr. Geist was born in West Lampeter township Sept. 4, 1829, and he was a son of John and Eliza (Powell) Geist, natives, respectively, of Strasburg and East Lampeter townships. By trade the elder John Geist was a wagon maker, which business he carried on in connection with his farming operations. Some time prior to his death he gave up active work. Father Geist was born July 29, 1804, and died May 21, 1866. His first wife was born March 19, 1809, and died March 9, 1844, both being buried in Mellinger's cemetery. These worthy people had been devoted members of the Reformed Mennonite Church.

The children of these parents were: Anna, who died young; Daniel, who died in Ohio and was twice married, the first time to Mary Kreider; John; Marv J., Amos, Barbara, Elizabeth and Emma, who all died young; and Susanna R., who married Henry Rudy. The second marriage of Mr. Geist was to Susanna Burkholder, and to this union one daughter was born, Martha, who married Rev. Abraham Kurtz and died in 1898. The paternal grandparents of John Geist were Philip and Barbara Geist, natives of Baden, Germany, the former of whom came to America at the age of eighteen in order to avoid service in the German army. Philip Geist was a son of George Geist, a native of Wittenberg, Germany, who came to America in 1763, locating in Strasburg, Lancaster county, where his two brothers, Simon and Leonard, already resided.

John Geist received a good common school education and made his home with his parents until he was about twenty-five years old, although at the age of seventeen he began to learn the carpenter trade, which kept him from home a part of the time. Later he engaged in farming in East Lampeter township, moving to his present farm in Upper Leacock township, six miles east of Lancaster, in 1875, where he remained actively engaged in general farming until July 14, 1896; then he removed to his present residence on the same farm, while his son took the old home and relieved his father of the work. This is one of the fine farms in this part of Lancaster county, comprising 100 acres of well improved, finely cultivated and productive land.

John Geist was married Nov. 9, 1854, in Lancaster, to Miss Charlotte Harnish, and the children born to this union were: Martin, who died at the age of fourteen years; Lizzie Ann, who married Kinder Bender, of Leacock township, and has a family of eight children; Mary J., who married O. S. Eckert, a farmer of West Earl township, and has four children; Ida A., a young lady, at home; Willis, the farmer on the old homestead, who married Laura Stoner, has two children, and is one of the school directors; Lotta, a young girl at home; Morten, Emma and John, who died in infancy.

Mrs. Charlotte Harnish Geist was born in East Lampeter township Oct. 4, 1832, and was a daughter of Martin and Anna (Weidler) Harnish, the former a farmer of West Lampeter township, where he died in 1840, at the age of thirty-eight years, and the latter a native of Leacock township. The mother survived until she was eighty-two years old, dying in 1876, and she was buried in the private burying grounds on the old farm. Both parents of Mrs. Geist were worthy Christian people, devout members of the Reformed Mennonite Church. Their children were: Benjamin W., who operated a foundry and died in 1890; Elizabeth, who was the wife of Edwin Betzer and died in 1860; Charlotte, the wife of Mr. Geist; and Samuel, a moulder of Lancaster. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Geist was Martin Harnish, a farmer and distiller who became a resident of Ohio, but died while visiting in Lancaster county.

Mr. Geist has been identified with a number of leading business interests of Lancaster county and for ten years has been a director in the Farmer's National Bank of Lancaster. In politics he is a Republican, and socially he is respected and esteemed by all who know him.

CHRIST S. HOFFMAN, of Elizabethtown, Lancaster county, was born April 22, 1824, in Caernarvon township, that county, son of Christ and Magdalina (Schneider) Hoffman, both natives of Lancaster county. The father was a general merchant, and died at Vogansville, Lancaster county, in 1868, when seventy-two years old. His widow passed away the following year, at the age of seventy-five. In his earlier years he was a tailor, then became a farmer, and later followed a mercantile career for many years. Both parents were members of the Reformed Church. They had the following family: Amos, who died in infancy; Christ S.; Sarah, who married Daniel Bushong and (second) Cyrus McQuaid, and is now deceased; Magdalena A., late wife of Ezra Burkholder; Catherine, living in Erie county, Pa., the widow of Graybill Myers; and Herman, an auctioneer at Vogansville.

Christ S. Hoffman was married in Vogansville, in 1852, to Frances Groff, and they became the parents of two children, Mary and Emma. Mary is the wife of A. E. Jacoby, a school teacher, and is living in Elizabethtown; they have two children, Christ H. and Ella F. Emma is unmarried, and is at home. Mrs. Frances (Groff) Hoffman was born in Earl township Feb. 6, 1833, daughter of Mark S. and Nancy (Good) Groff, both natives of Lancaster county. Her father began life as a farmer, but spent the latter part of his active years in the lumber business in Vogansville.

Mr. Hoffman worked on the tailor's bench until he was thirteen years old, under his father. When he was thirteen he began working on a farm, where he remained until seventeen years of age, and then entered a mercantile establishment where he spent ten years. From 1852 to 1872 he followed surveying and conveyancing, at Vogansville, and then moved to Lancaster, continuing the same business. Eleven years later he removed to Elizabethtown, where he continues as conveyancer at this writing. At Vogansville he was justice of the peace for five years. He is a Democrat in his political views. Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman are members of the Reformed Church and are prominent and much respected members of the community.

JACOB H. BOMBERGER, who has been in the leaf tobacco business in Warwick for a number of years, comes of an old and always respected family of Lancaster county, his ancestors having settled here early in the eighteenth century.

Mr. Bomberger is a grandson of John Bomberger, who is mentioned elsewhere, and a son of Jacob Bomberger, who was born on the old homestead farm, near Lititz, Oct. 1, 1824. He was a farmer, and followed farming on an extensive scale until his death, which occurred May 14, 1885. He was a member of the Old Mennonite Church. Jacob Bomberger married Miss Barbara, daughter of Christian Hess, and they became the parents of three children, viz.: Anna, wife of Henry G. Snyder; Maria, wife of H. Reist Landis; and Jacob H.

Jacob H. Bomberger was born on the old homestead Oct. 10, 1860, and lived at home with his father until he was twenty-three years of age. He was educated in the common schools of the county and attended through one term at the Lititz Academy, after which he began life for himself, farming on the old homestead for five years. He then moved to Warwick, where he has been engaged in the leaf tobacco business. In politics Mr. Bomberger has always affiliated with the Republican party, but he never sought office.

On Oct. 16, 1883, Mr. Bomberger wedded Miss Anna B. Bollinger, daughter of Hiram Bollinger, of Lincoln, Pa., and to this union have been born four children, namely: Hiram B., Barbara B., Jacob B. and Clayton B., all of whom are at home.

Mr. Bomberger is one of the best-known residents of this section of Lancaster county, and he has attained high standing among the substantial citizens as an honorable, public spirited and reliable business man. He is fully alive to the best interests of his section, and is a worthy representative of Warwick township.

SAMUEL HARTMAN belongs to a family which has taken a prominent and honorable part in the history of East Lampeter township and Lancaster county for two centuries. He is a great-grandson of Jacob Hartman, a Mennonite preacher, who was born in East Lampeter township in 1714 and followed farming all his life. In 1755 he built the house yet standing on the family farm still in good repair. He was the father of three sons and three daughters. The daughters were: Ester, who married David Huber; Fannie, wife of Henry Hess; and Annie, who died at home, unmarried.

Henry Hartman, the grandfather of our subject, was born on the same old farm and spent his entire life there, engaged at farming. In religion he was one of the Old Mennonites. He married Miss Catherine Hildebrand, and they were the parents of six children: Henry, the father of Samuel; Catherine, wife of Daniel Stauffer; Nancy, wife of Jacob Buckwalter; Elizabeth, wife of John Stauffer; Fannie, wife of Joseph Hershey; and Hettie, wife of Jacob Rife.

Henry Hartman was also born on the old farm, Nov. 27, 1808, inherited the place from his father and continued to farm until his death, which occurred Feb. 28, 1879. Mr. Hartman was a member of the Old Mennonite Church. On Nov. 5, 1833, he married Miss Elizabeth Eby, daughter of Samuel Eby, and they had a family of six children: Samuel; Anna, born March 21, 1836, the widow of Samuel Landis; Elizabeth, born March 12, 1837, deceased wife of John Esbenshade; Catherine, born June 14, 1849; Henry, born Feb. 6, 1853, who married Nettie Hostetter and lives at Ephrata; Aaron, born Oct. 20, 1856, who married Frances Diefenbaugh and is a resident of East Lampeter.

Samuel Hartman was born Aug. 22, 1834, on the old Hartman farm, being of the fourth or fifth generation who have been born and lived all their lives there. Samuel Hartman, however, moved to Chester county for twelve years, after which he returned to the old place, and there he has remained ever since. He was educated in the common schools of the county. The farm which Mr. Hartman so successfully cultivates, comprising about eighty-three acres, is one of the oldest in Lancaster county and is the original farm owned by his ancestors several generations back, and which has always remained in the family. He is deeply interested in the moral and material welfare of Lancaster county, and is ranked among its substantial, highly respected citizens. Politically he is a Republican. Like his ancestors, he is a member of the Old Mennonite Church.

On Nov. 1, 1860, Mr. Hartman wedded Miss Catherine Price, daughter of Andrew Price, of West Lampeter township, and this union has been blessed with eight children: Andrew P., born Aug. 3, 1861, now of Philadelphia; Elizabeth, born Sept. 5, 1862, wife of John Huber; Henry, born Nov. 13, 1863, still at home; Ellanora, born Sept. 12, 1866, who died in childhood; Milton, born Sept. 1, 1868, who died in infancy; Susan, born Jan. 30, 1871, wife of John Shurtz, of Lancaster; Amanda, born Aug. 27, 1873, still at home; and Samuel, born July 3, 1878, who died in infancy. Mrs. Hartman died Feb. 23, 1898, aged sixty-four years, nine months and thirteen days.

ISAAC MECKLEY. Among the prominent, substantial and representative citizens of Mt. Joy township who have done much for the advancement and perfection of agriculture in Lancaster county is Isaac Meckley, a retired farmer, residing near Elizabethtown.

Mr. Meckley was born in Mt. Joy township on a farm adjoining his present property March 21, 1819, a son of Melchor and Elizabeth (Hoffer) Meckley, both of whom were natives of Germany. They came to America in their young married life, settling first in Dauphin, but later removing to Lancaster county and locating in Mt. Joy township. The first marriage of Melchor Meckley was to a Miss Grubb, and their children, John, Christian, Jacob and Elizabeth, are all dead. He then married a Miss Newcomer, the children of this union being: Joseph and Susan. Then he married the mother of our subject, who died Dec. 1, 1875, at the age of eighty-three years, and their children were: Samuel, deceased, who married Mary Bristol; Benjamin, deceased, who married Barbara Halderman; Henry, deceased, who married Eliza Henry; and Isaac.

Although Mr. Meckley of this record began life as a poor boy, dependent entirely upon his own resources from an early age, through energy and perseverance he in time became possessed of more means than were the farmers for whom he so faithfully worked in his boyhood. He learned the carpenter trade and was kept busy and made money for a number of years, but in 1861 he decided to engage in farming. At first this was no very easy matter, for at that time much of the labor-saving machinery now in use was not even invented, all that the horses could not do being necessarily performed by hand, the few machines then on the market being far beyond his reach. However, Mr. Meckley was regarded as an excellent farmer and by hard work obtained good crops and accumulated money. In 1880 he retired from active labor, owning two fine farms, one in Dauphin county and another in Lancaster county. In politics he is a Republican.

In January, 1859, Mr. Meckley was married, in Lancaster, to Miss Barbara Coble, and the family born to this union consisted of two children, David C. and Anna. David C., who is a farmer in Mt. Joy township, married, in 1883, Miss Emma Garber, born in Dauphin county, daughter of John and Sarah (Peck) Garber, of that county. Mr. and Mrs. David Meckley have three children, Walter, Ralph E. and John. Anna, deceased, married Solomon Espenshade and had two children, Harvey and Estella. Mrs. Meckley was born in Dauphin county Sept. 7, 1825, and died Dec. 1, 1869, aged forty-four years. She was buried in Dauphin county. Her parents were Christian and Elizabeth (Hoffer) Coble, of Dauphin county.

Both Isaac Meckley and his son are held in high esteem in Mt. Joy township as reliable, upright and honorable men. In every public matter that comes up in the community they give an influence in the direction that will prove of benefit to the township, while in private life they are known as excellent neighbors and kind and helpful friends, men of character and standing.

SIDWELL T. WILSON. For many years the late Sidwell T. Wilson was a prominent and successful farmer, as well as a highly esteemed citizen of Little Britain township, identified with its best agricultural and religious progress. He was born in this township on Oct. 25, 1828, on the same farm where his useful and valued life ended on April 16, 1892. His parents were Needham and Jane (Patterson) Wilson, the ancestors of the family having originated in Scotland and Ireland.

The Wilson family settled in early days in Lancaster county and were members of the Society of Friends. Grandfather Benjamin Wilson married Anna Sidwell, the former being English and the latter bringing in the Scotch-Irish strain. Needham Wilson, the son of Benjamin, and the father of the late Sidwell, was born May 15, 1797, and died Sept. 22, 1872. His widow survived until Sept. 7, 1890, dying at the age of ninety-four years. Their children were: Dorestus, a coal dealer in Chester county; Sidwell T.; Silvia A., who married George Bockius, deceased; Dr. Needham, a physician in Philadelphia; and J. M., of Fairmount.

Through a long and industrious life Sidwell Wilson so lived that when he was called from earth he left the world better for his having lived in it, and was sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends. He was a liberal contributor to the Presbyterian Church, generously forwarding all of its enterprises in the direction of missions and charity. His political adherence was given to the Democratic party, and he consistently voted to support its measures and to elect its candidates.

The marriage of Sidwell T. Wilson was to Miss Margaret A. Hill, who was born in Britain township Jan. 13, 1834, a daughter of Thomas and Eleanor (Killough) Hill; the father was born in the State of New York, about 1803, and died June 12, 1866, in Britain township, in this county. The mother of Mrs. Wilson was born in 1804 and died in 1875, having borne two children: Sarah, of Little Britain township, and Margaret A., who is the widow of the late Sidwell T. Wilson.

Mrs. Wilson still resides on the old home farm, esteemed and beloved by relatives and friends. She has long been a valued member of the Little Britain Presbyterian Church, and is widely known for her neighborly kindness and Christian virtues. Her family is one of the old and highly respected ones of Lancaster county.

WALTER F. BICKNELL, a retired farmer of Fulton township, Lancaster county, is a substantial citizen of the community. He comes from an English family, but was born in this country, having first seen the light of day on Dec. 24, 1832, in Fulton township. John Bicknell, his father, was born in England in 1785 and came to this country in early manhood. In 1810 he married Miss May Porritt, and they reared a family of eleven children, eight of whom grew to mature years, Samuel, Mary, John, Sarah, Isaac, Anna, William and Walter F., the youngest of the family.

Walter F. Bicknell married Rebecca, daughter of Caleb Thomas, of Fulton township, Oct. 18, 1866. Mrs. Bicknell's family is also of English origin. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Bicknell has been blessed with three children: Howard W., born in 1868, is on a part of the original home farm; Frederick C. manages the home place; and George H. is in Little Britain township. Mrs. Bicknell was born in 1837 and still enjoys most excellent health. Mr. Bicknell recently sold his farm of 180 acres to his sons, Howard and Frederick, who are operating it.

Mr. Bicknell was a volunteer of Co. B, 99th P. V., during the Civil war, enlisting in July, 1861. He served in the army of the Potomac under Gen. George B. McClellan, and took part in all of the Virginia, Potomac and James River campaigns, during which occurred some of the hardest fought battles of the Civil war. He was at the battle of the Wilderness, Gettysburg, Petersburg and the siege of Richmond, and was a faithful, hard-fighting soldier through it all, till July 31, 1864, when his term of service expired. Mr. Bicknell is a professor of the Quaker religious faith and is a strong Republican in politics. He still enjoys excellent health, notwithstanding his arduous experience in the army. He is well known and respected by all his neighbors for his many fine traits of character.

JOHN KREIDER, in his life-time one of the leading men of Lancaster county, was born in Leacock township April 27, 1838, a son of Jacob and Anna (Buckwalter) Kreider, and died March 1, 1897. His youth was passed in Leacock township, and after his marriage he removed to Leaman Place, in Paradise township.

Mr. Kreider was married Jan. 10, 1865, to Catherine Ann, a daughter of Jacob and Lydia Ann (Buckwalter) Leaman, who was born in East Lampeter township Dec. 16, 1842. After their marriage they located on the farm where Mrs. Kreider is still living. This farm originally contained 104 acres, but several lots have been sold from it; and it now contains ninety-five acres. It is highly improved, and is classed among the best of the county. Here Mr. Kreider spent his active life in farming. He never sought or held public station, and was closely devoted to his domestic interests, preferring the comforts and delights of home to any possible pleasure found elsewhere. Both husband and wife belonged to the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Kreider were the parents of five children, only two of whom survive. An infant daughter, born Aug. 6, 1866, died the same day; Charles B., born April 2, 1871, died Feb. 15, 1873; Jacob H., born Dec. 16, 1874, died May 4, 1875. Elam L., a music teacher of Leaman Place, was born Oct. 2, 1868; he married Miss Alice Mylin, and is the father of two children, Katherine Barbara and Marian Mylin; Lydia Ann, born Aug. 16, 1877, is at home. All the family are musical, and as noted above the son is a professional teacher, and has achieved a substantial success in his calling. He, with his wife and sister, belongs, to the Presbyterian Church. The home bears the name of "Willow Burn Farm."

Jacob K. and Lydia Ann Leaman were among the honored people of the county. He was born in Lancaster township Nov. 28, 1819, and died May 28, 1889. He was the son of Benjamin and Catherine (Kreider) Leaman. Mr. Leaman was reared and spent the most of his life in East Lampeter and Leacock townships, and became one of the leading farmers of his time. His homestead he divided into four farm for his sons. For nine years he was school director. He was married Nov. 26, 1840, to Lydia Ann Buckwalter, a daughter of Abraham and Ann (Witmer) Buckwalter. She was born July 11, 1823, and is still living in the full enjoyment of health and mind. A lady of culture and refinement, her age only serves to accent her grace and dignity. Reared in East Lampeter township, the most of her life was spent in her native community. Since the death of her husband she has made her home with her daughter, Mrs. John Kreider. The father and mother were both members of the Mennonite Church. To this worthy couple were born: Catherine Ann, the widow of John Kreider; Susan E., the wife of Ephraim Hershey, of Salisbury township; Elam W., of Leacock township; Anna Mary, who married Simon Denlinger, of Paradise township, and is dead; Jacob B., a farmer of Leacock township; Lydia E., the wife of Aaron H. Duffenbach, of Greenland; Franklin K., a retired farmer of Gordonville; Ezra H., a manufacturer of cigar boxes in Paradise township.

JOSEPH PENNY, a farmer of Colerain township, Lancaster county, was born in Drumore township Nov. 23, 1840, and is a son of Hugh and Sarah (Wentz) Penny, both natives of Drumore township. Hugh Penny was born June 12, 1812, and his wife Sept. 25, 1817.

Hugh Penny was a son of Joseph and Mary (Long) Penny, both of whom were born in this county, and were descended from Scotch-Irish parentage. Joseph Penny, the grandfather, first settled near the Buck, where he established the present family. He had a family of two sons and four daughters: James; Hugh; Sarah A., widow of John Wentz, who had five sons and four daughters; Mary J., wife of Thomas Wentz, of Martic township; Hannah M., who married William Wentz, of Martic township, both of whom are dead; Harriet, married to John S. Morrison, both deceased.

James Penny married Mariah Wentz, and made a home near the old family estate, near Buck. His widow and one son are still living on the old homestead in Drumore township.

Hugh Penny was reared to manhood under the parental roof, and given a common school education. He and his wife lived and died on the family homestead. His death occurred in 1881, and his widow passed away in 1885. In early life they were associated with the Friends, but in their later years united with the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Penny was a staunch Democrat, and held local offices in Drumore township. He was the father of seven children. (1) Mary M., born in August, 1836, married Henry Pegan, of Martic township. They settled in Drumore township, where she died in October, 1876; leaving three daughters: Ida married Samuel Grove; Eva married Wilkie Grove, and is now dead; Lena married Robert Wickersham, of Chester county. (2) Joseph Penny. (3) Sarah A., born in Drumore township in January, 1843, married Thomas Wilson, of Stewartstown, York county, where they live retired. (4) Mariah J., born Oct. 16, 1844, married Aldus Aument, of East Drumore township, whose sketch may be seen elsewhere. (5) William C., born Jan. 29, 1848, married Mary Buckius, of Lancaster county, and has his home on the old place in Drumore township. (6) Hugh J., born in June, 1852, married Miss Lizzie Phillips, of Colerain township, and is engaged as a merchant in Russellville, Chester county. They have one daughter, Etta. (7) Laura, born March 8, 1856, was educated in the Academy at Chestnut Level, and married Prof. William Overholt, of Little Britain township. He is now a retired druggist in Baltimore. They have a son and a daughter living, Mirton and Hallie, both of whom live in Baltimore, the daughter being at home.

Joseph Penny was reared on the home farm and given a common school education in Drumore township. He was married Jan. 5, 1871, to Hannah M., a daughter of Mahlon and Anna M. (Dare) Pusey. Mrs. Penny was born April 18, 1848, and was reared to womanhood in the old home at Puseyville, where she attended the Union High School. Mahlon Pusey was twice married, Mrs. Penny being a daughter of the second marriage, to which were born seven children: George, of Oxford; Rebecca, the wife of Hugh Long, of East Drumore township; Emma; Sarah, the wife of Lindly Hutton, of Belmar, N. J.; Ada; Rose, the wife of Frank Herr, of Little Britain township; and Hannah M.

Mr. and Mrs. Penny settled on a farm in West Drumore township, where they lived about four years, when they moved to Puseyville, where Mr. Penny was engaged in the milling business for some ten years. In 1885 he bought the farm where he is found to-day. It was then known as the Bunting farm and was two miles south of the Union. Since coming there they have rebuilt the dwelling house and made many substantial and elegant improvements. To them have come a daughter and a son. Anna M., born in Drumore township, received her education in the Union High School of Colerain, and is an accomplished young lady. Cheyney was a student of the Union High School. In November, 1900, he was married to Belle, a daughter of Abram and Matilda McConnell, and now lives on his farm in Little Britain township.

The Penny family are all associated with the Union Presbyterian Church. Mr. Penny has always been a Democrat, has been school director in Colerain township, and since 1888 has been a director of the Union High School, being also school treasurer.

Mrs. Penny's grandfather, Rev. Elkanah Dare, was the first Presbyterian minister who preached in the Union Presbyterian Church in Colerain township.

SILAS E. GROFF, one of the leading and progressive farmers of Paradise township, Lancaster county, owner of a well improved farm, located three miles northeast of Strasburg borough, is the representative of one of the old and honored families of the county.

John Groff, his paternal grandfather, familiarly known as "Swamp John," was one of the substantial citizens of Paradise township, and there reared a large family of children. Of the latter, Sarah married a Mr. Dripps; Louisa married Henry Girvin, and they resided first in Paradise township and later in Bart township; Alice married a school teacher,

Mr. Clark, and removed from Lancaster county; Lizzie died unmarried; Isaac emigrated to Columbiana county, Ohio, and there married and engaged in farming; John removed to Maryland, where he became a farmer; George, the father of Silas E., was a farmer of Paradise township; Jacob studied medicine and became one of the prominent practitioners of Strasburg, acquiring considerable wealth.

George Groff, the father of Silas E., was reared in Paradise township and educated in the public schools. He married Miss Ann Eshleman, who was born May 22, 1804, the daughter of Jacob and Mary (Brackbill) Eshleman. George Groff was a lifelong farmer, operating a property of 140 acres and becoming one of the influential, substantial citizens of Lancaster county. He and his wife were members of the Old Mennonite Church. To George and Ann (Eshleman) Groff were born five children, as follows: Aldus John, born June 13, 1837, a retired farmer of Lancaster City; Mary V., born Oct. 23, 1839, a resident of Strasburg borough; Silas E.; Emma E., born June 10, 1844, who married Martin B. Rohrer, formerly of Paradise, now of Strasburg, and died in July, 1891; and an infant son, deceased. George, the father, died March 20, 1880, and his wife passed away Jan. 31, 1875.

Silas E. Groff was born March 6, 1842, on a farm in Paradise township adjoining that where he now lives. He was reared in his native township. He received a fair education in the common schools and supplemented the instruction there obtained by an attendance at Paradise Academy and at the Millersville State Normal School. At this time he joined a militia regiment under Col. Franklin, and served the Union about ten weeks. Soon after completing his education he entered upon his life work as a farmer, locating in 1867 upon the farm which he still occupies. Improvements upon the property were then very poor, but with his father he has since erected good substantial buildings, and the place is now one of the well improved and highly cultivated farms in this part of Lancaster county. In connection with his own farm of seventy-nine acres, Mr. Groff operates another of 100 acres, and is also engaged in handling stock. He is recognized as one of the progressive and foremost agriculturists of Paradise township, and he aims to keep constantly in touch with the best interests of the community, being ever ready to assist in any enterprise for the public good. In politics he affiliates with the Republican party, but he has never sought nor accepted public office.

On Feb. 27, 1878, Mr. Groff married Miss S. Elizabeth Keneagy, daughter of Henry and Sarah Ann (Rowe) Keneagy, a granddaughter of Henry and Sarah (Sherts) Keneagy. The grandfather was in his day a distiller in Paradise township, conducting a large and extensive business. He died comparatively early in life, leaving six children, namely: Susan, who remained single; John S., a farmer and distiller of Paradise township; Jacob, who removed to Chicago, Ill.; Henry, the father of Mrs. Groff; Christian, a farmer and distiller; and Samuel, a physician of Strasburg. Henry Keneagy was born Dec. 26, 1817, and for two years of his life was the successful keeper of a hotel in Strasburg and East Lampeter township, but he devoted most of his life to the pursuit of farming. He died Aug. 27, 1872, and his wife, who was born Oct. 6, 1827, died April 21, 1864. Three children were born to Henry and Sarah Ann Keneagy, namely: Charles R., a resident of Strasburg; S. Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Groff; and William A., a resident of Strasburg.

The family of Silas E. and S. Elizabeth Groff consists of two children: Mary R., born Sept. 26, 1888; and John E., born May 22, 1890. Mrs. Groff is a member of the Presbyterian Church. The family are held in high esteem throughout the community.

WILLIAM B. GIVEN. The Given family is of Scotch-Irish descent. James Given, the grandfather of William B., was born in Ireland, and emigrated to America in early life, settling in Chester county, Pa. Later he moved to Columbia, Lancaster county, where he engaged in lumbering when the lumber was brought down the river in rafts. He became quite prosperous, and at the time of his death was the possessor of considerable wealth. Politically he was a Democrat, and he was a man of prominence in the community wherein he dwelt. A very active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, he bore a high reputation for personal integrity and worth. He married a Miss Mercer, and they had eight children, among whom was William F., the father of William B.

William F. Given was born near Downingtown, in Chester county, Jan. 20, 1813, and in 1816 came to Columbia, where he grew to man's estate, and succeeded to the business of his father, from which he retired quite early in life, with a competency. He was a director in the Columbia National Bank and in the Columbia Bridge Company. In religion he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Columbia, and in politics he was a Democrat. On his retirement from active business, in 1859, he purchased a farm near the city of Baltimore, Md., and settled thereon, and there his death occurred in 1862. Mr. Given was, Oct. 26, 1853, married to Miss Susan A., daughter of Rev. William Barns, of Philadelphia, and they had children: Laura, William B., Mercer, Frank S. and Martha W.

William B. Given was born Sept. 25, 1855, in Columbia, though Maryland, to which he early removed, was the scene of his boyhood experiences. He pursued his studies when a lad at the public schools of Maryland, later at the Saunders Institute, Philadelphia, and then at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, from which he graduated in his twentieth year. Having chosen the law as his profession, he began his studies in the office of Hon. Vincent L. Bradford and E. Ray, Esq., Philadelphia, and completed them under the direction of H. M. North, Esq., in Columbia. Upon his admission to the Bar, in 1876, he became established as a practitioner in Columbia, where he has since resided, and has an office. Mr. Given has, by his thorough knowledge of law, his studious habits, and the zeal and ability exhibited in the interest of his clients, won an enviable position at the Lancaster Bar. He has also been admitted to practice in the Supreme court of the State of Pennsylvania, and in the Supreme court of the United States. He has always manifested a deep interest in public affairs, especially in measures tending to the advancement of education, and for nine years was an active member of the school board and president of the same for two years.

William B. Given

Until 1896 Mr. Given was a Democrat, and was an active and prominent member of that party. He was a member of the State Committee several years, and his services on the stump in every campaign were eagerly sought. In 1877 he was the candidate of his party for the office of district attorney, and was nominated for Congressional honors in 1882, but was defeated for both offices, as his party was largely in the minority. In 1892 he was sent as a delegate to the National Convention which nominated Grover Cleveland for the Presidency. Again, in 1896, he was chairman of the Democratic State Convention, which convened in Allentown, Pa., and on taking the chair sounded the keynote in Pennsylvania for sound money. His position on the financial question made Mr. Given a delegate to the National Democratic Convention of 1896, where he was an ardent advocate of sound money. Upon the nomination of William J. Bryan, Mr. Given left the convention, denouncing the platform and its candidate. He returned to Pennsylvania and assisted in reorganizing the sound Democratic movement, and was a delegate-at-large to the convention of sound Democrats held at Indianapolis, and was subsequently elected and served as State chairman of that party in Pennsylvania. Since 1896 he has taken no active part in politics, but in 1900 he cast his vote for William McKinley.

Mr. Given is prominently identified with many business enterprises in Lancaster county and elsewhere. He is president of the Columbia Trust Company, the Conestoga Traction Company (owning all the electric railway lines in Lancaster county), the Lancaster County Railway & Light Company, the Wilson Laundry Machinery Company, the Gas Light & Fuel Company, of Lancaster, and the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, of Lancaster, and is a director in no less than twenty-two different corporations and railway companies in Lancaster county. Recently the laundry machinery companies of the United States were formed into a trust, having a capitalization of $16,000,000, and Mr. Given has been elected a director in this giant corporation.

In 1878 Mr. Given was married to Mary E., the only daughter of Abraham Bruner, and this union has been blessed with four children: Erna B., Jane Bruner, William Barns and Susan Emily.

FRANK SCOTT GIVEN. That ability aided by perseverance and industry leads to a success in whatever line of business a man may adopt, is shown in the career of Frank Scott Given, of Columbia, who was born there Aug. 4, 1859, son of William F. and Susan A. (Barns) Given. Failing health led his father to remove to a farm in Worthington Valley, Baltimore Co., Md., when Frank S. was but six weeks old. Change of residence did not bring the hoped for relief, and the father passed away a few months after settling on the farm. Being anxious to provide additional advantages for her children, Mr. Given's mother, after her husband's death, removed to Westminster, Md. Learning that the farm was not receiving proper attention, and believing that better schools might be found in Reisterstown, she took up her residence there, and remained five years, when she removed to Columbia, where she now resides. Her father, William Barns, was a noted Methodist Episcopal preacher, known throughout the Eastern States for his eloquence. He was born in Cookstown, County Tyrone, Ireland, and died in Philadelphia in November, 1865. Mr. and Mrs. William F. Given had five children: Laura, who died in infancy; William B.; Mercer, who died in infancy; Frank S.; and Martha Washington, wife of Howard B. Rhodes, of Columbia.

At the age of fourteen Frank Scott Given entered the employ of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, as a messenger boy in the office of the general agent, at Philadelphia. He remained with that corporation fourteen years, demonstrating, by his mental capacity, integrity and rare executive ability, his right to rapid promotion. For three years he occupied the desk of a way bill clerk, and was then made general foreman of all the Willow-street wharfs, which responsible position he filled for five years. Under the first administration of President Cleveland, Mr. Given was appointed assistant superintendent of the stamp division in the Philadelphia post office, which office he held three years, when he was promoted to the position of night superintendent of mails, from which he resigned in 1891. Feeling the need of rest, he returned to his native town, but was not long idle, as he received the dual office of secretary and superintendent of the Columbia & Ironville Passenger Railway Co., whose line was then in the process of construction. After its completion he was made superintendent of construction between Columbia and Marietta, and was later made superintendent of both branches. In 1894 all the trolley lines in Lancaster county were consolidated under the name of the Pennsylvania Traction Company, and Mr. Given was made superintendent of the Columbia division.

The Company became financially involved and passed into the hands of a receiver, William B. Given, a brother of Frank S., being placed in control. The company's affairs were successfully adjusted and a reorganization was effected under the style of the Conestoga Traction Company, with Frank S. Given as general manager. The company at this time (December, 1901) operates a trackage of 104 miles, giving to the people of Lancaster county rapid transit to nearly all of the towns, villages and boroughs in the county, as well as handsome dividends to the stockholders. Mr. Given is also connected with other important and prosperous business enterprises, the building up of which have materially added to the prosperity of Lancaster county. He is president, treasurer and director of the Triumph Embroidery Company; also a director in the following enterprises: The Columbia Brewing Company, the Wilson Laundry Machinery Company, and the Conestoga Traction Company, and the underlying companies leased and operated by it. As above stated, he is general manager of the Conestoga Traction Company, and in addition thereto is general manager of the Lancaster Gas Light & Fuel Company, the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, Columbia Electric Light & Power Company, and of the seventy miles of pikes controlled and leased by the Conestoga Traction Company. When the Columbia Real Estate Exchange was organized, in 1895, he was chosen its president, and is still in its directory. He has never cared for public office, but in 1896 consented to assume the duties of chief of the Columbia Fire Department, and was chairman of the committee that raised $3,250 for the entertaining of the visiting firemen on the occasion of the Centennial of Fire Company No. 1, of Columbia. Of this celebrated company of firemen Mr. Given has been marshal for six years, and during that time, until 1901, it took first prize for parading the largest number and appearing as the finest body of men at the annual gathering of Pennsylvania firemen.

Mr. Given is a Democrat in politics, but too much absorbed in business to seek political office or to take a working interest in political matters. He attends the services of the Episcopal Church, in which his wife is a communicant. As a manager of men Mr. Given is a complete success. While liberal and kind of heart, he is strict with his employes where the welfare and safety of the patrons of the road he manages are concerned, and demands of every employe a strict attention to duty. While his men know that neglect of duty will be followed by reprimand or worse, they also know that they will have justice, and because of this he is respected by every man in his employ.

On May 25, 1897, at Columbia, Mr. Given was married to Mrs. Mary Gordon Schram, widow of the late William M. Schram, a well known jeweler of Lebanon, Lebanon Co., Pa. Mrs. Given is one of thirteen children born to William and Margaret (Blaykes) Gordon, twelve of whom died in childhood. Her parents originally lived near Dublin, Ireland, whence they emigrated to America. Her father was a man of large means, and prominently identified with various transportation interests. Mr. Gordon died Aug. 20, 1881, aged sixty-two, and his widow passed away Aug. 4, 1884, in her fifty-ninth year, both in the religious faith of the Established Church. Mrs. Given's first husband, Mr. Schram, died in September, 1889, within five months after their marriage, at the early age of twenty-two years. A posthumous child was born, a daughter, Hilpa S., who lives with her mother and stepfather. Mr. and Mrs. Given are endowed with native refinement and culture, are unassuming in manner, affable and courteous to all, in every station of life. Their home is one of the handsomest in Columbia, and in it they delight to dispense a generous hospitality. Mr. Given's genial disposition has won and kept hosts of friends, while his sagacity and probity command universal respect.

PETER E. WITMER, a very well known and successful farmer of Rapho township, Lancaster county, was born in East Donegal township Aug. 26, 1838, a son of Peter F. and Elizabeth (Eshleman) Witmer.

Peter E. Witmer was married Dec. 28, 1865, in Lancaster, Pa., to Elizabeth M. Strickler, by whom he had the following children: Noah S., a farmer in Penn township, married to Anna B. Snively, by whom he has had one son, Jacob, now deceased; Sarah S., unmarried, and living in Landisville, Pa.; Anna S., living with her brother, Jacob; Jacob S., a farmer of East Donegal township, who was married Sept. 6, 1900, to Mary Brubaker; Elizabeth S., Ellen S., Peter S. and Fanny S. are all at home.

Mrs. Elizabeth M. (Strickler) Witmer was born on the farm where they are now living Sept. 26, 1841, a daughter of Ulric and Sarah (Miller) Strickler, natives of Rapho and Strasburg townships, respectively. Her father died on what is now the Witmer home farm Nov. 17, 1864, at the age of sixty-three years; her mother survived until March 31, 1890, when she passed away at the age of seventy-nine years. Her father was buried in a private cemetery on an adjoining farm. This was the old Strickler farm, and is closely associated with the early history of the Strickler family. The mother was buried in Salunga, Pa. These were their children: Mary, the wife of Benjamin Herr, who has a home near Quarryville; Elizabeth, who is Mrs. Witmer; Peter, who died young; Fanny, who died young; David, a farmer in Rapho township; Anna, who married a Mr. Horst, and is dead; John, a farmer in Manheim township; Sarah, unmarried, and residing in Salunga, Pa., as does her brother, Henry M., who married, in 1902, Martha Hover, from Lancaster City.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Peter E. Witmer were John and Anna (Lehman) Strickler, both of Lancaster county, as were her maternal grandparents, John and Elizabeth (Kramer) Miller.

Peter E. Witmer remained with his parents until three years after his marriage, when he rented a farm in Rapho township, on which he lived a year, and then for eleven years cultivated rented farms. At the end of that time he bought his present homestead, and has made himself a very creditable standing among the farming citizens of this end of the county. He and his wife belong to the Old Mennonite Church, and exert a wholesome moral and religious influence on those with whom they come in contact. In politics he is a Republican, and his opinions command respect because they are based on observation, and are the result of sound reflection.

CHRISTIAN ROHRER, deceased. There passed away from the scenes of life on June 18, 1897, in his seventy-ninth year, a citizen of Lancaster county whose life had been most usefully spent in his native county, and whose career was more than ordinarily successful. Christian Rohrer possessed those sterling traits of earnestness, industry and integrity which lie at the base of all true success, and in addition was a man of unusual intelligence and business sagacity, which contributed not a little in establishing his status as one of the influential citizens of Paradise township, where he spent most of his active adult life.

Christian Rohrer was born in Strasburg township Aug. 3, 1818, the son of Henry and Elizabeth (Stoner) Rohrer, among the old and prominent residents of that section. He was reared in his native township, and soon after his marriage, when twenty-six years of age, he settled on a farm of 111 acres, located in Paradise township, three miles east of Strasburg borough, and there began a career which was continued most happily and successfully through a long course of years. Upon the farm was located an old saw and grist mill which had been operated by water power. Mr. Rohrer soon tore down this old mill and erected on its site the substantial milling plant which is still operated by his son, Henry S. This mill Christian Rohrer conducted in connection with farming, until he retired in favor of his son, Henry S., in 1877. He was eminently qualified for that industrial occupation, for he was one of those men, valuable products of American civilization, who possess mechanical genius of a high order. He took deep interest in public matters and for twenty years or longer was a member of the local school board. He was one of the early stockholders of the Strasburg National Bank and for years was one of its directors. His interest in the general welfare of the community and county was keen and his active aid contributed to the advancement of many worthy enterprises. About 1885 he took a trip to Missouri and there made large investments, which resulted satisfactorily. His keen insight into business affairs and his business judgment continued bright and unerring in his after years.

Christian Rohrer married, Dec. 28, 1843, Miss Maria Buckwalter, born Nov. 18, 1820, daughter of Martin Buckwalter, and to them were born the following children: Elizabeth, widow of John Bachman, of Strasburg township; Martin B., a resident of Strasburg borough; Henry S., whose sketch appears below; Emma, wife of William Homan, a resident of Chariton Co., Mo.; Elmira, at home; Ezra, who died at the age of twenty-three years; Mary, who died in September, 1899, the wife of John Stoner, of Chariton county, Mo.; Ada Susan, who died aged two and a half years; Ella, who resides at the old homestead; Ida, wife of Elias Mellinger, of Strasburg township. The parents of these children have been devoted and consistent members of the Mennonite Church. Christian Rohrer died June 18, 1897. His widow still survives.

HENRY S. ROHRER, son of Christian and Maria (Buckwalter) Rohrer, was born Jan. 12, 1848, in Paradise township, on the farm which he now occupies. He was educated in the public schools and also attended the academy at Strasburg for two summers. In 1877 he took charge of the home farm and mill, which his father had managed so successfully for many years, and he has since carried the business to greater proportions. The mills are fitted with the most approved machinery. They are equipped with both steam and water power, and the products include flour and grist, lumber, shingles, lath, etc. A large amount of work is turned out each year. In 1895 Mr. Rohrer built a large reservoir adjacent to the mill, which supplies it with power and is also used for ice making. He recognizes the importance of possessing the best and latest industrial appliances and his plant is a model in that respect.

Mr. Rohrer married, Jan. 8, 1877, Miss Annie M. Haverstick, who was born in Lancaster township in 1853, daughter of John N. Haverstick. A family of seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rohrer, namely, Ross H., Mary Alice, John C., Frank H., Ezra (deceased), Anna M. and Henry G. Mr. Rohrer is one of the prosperous and successful business men of the county. His political convictions are deep and his courage and fidelity in their advocacy have won him influence and wide respect. He believes in the Prohibition principles and affiliates with the party advocating the same. Mr. and Mrs. Rohrer are members of the Old Mennonite Church.

ABRAHAM R. DENLINGER (deceased) was born Nov. 13, 1846, on the farm adjoining that on which the most of his active life was passed. His death occurred Feb. 22, 1898, in the home where his family still resides. His ashes were interred in the Resh burying ground, a well-known cemetery in Leacock township.

Mr. Denlinger was a son of Henry and Lydia (Resh) Denlinger, both natives of Lancaster county, and farming people. They were parents of the following family: John and Henry, both of whom are dead; Mary, the widow of George Funderburg, of Dayton, Ohio; Anna is the widow of Isaac Bright, also living in Dayton; Abraham R. The paternal grandparents of Abraham R. Denlinger were John and Elizabeth Denlinger, farming people, who were born in Lancaster county.

Mr. Denlinger was married in New Holland, Pa., Sept. 12, 1872, by the Rev. M. J. Mumma, to Susanna Groff, by whom he had one child, Fannie F. E., who is now a school teacher.

Mrs. Susanna Denlinger was born in Leacock township in 1850, and was a daughter of David and Fannie (Miles) Groff, of East Lampeter township, who lived at the time of her birth near Providence township. Her father was a justice of the peace for many years, and was a school teacher for a long period. Among his many useful labors was surveying for the community. He died in 1857, at the age of fifty-four years; his widow died in 1878, at the age of seventy-eight. Both were buried in Resh cemetery, in Leacock township. To them were born: Lydia, wife of Edwin Brenizer, a cigar manufacturer of Leacock township; Reuben, a resident of Leacock township; Isaiah, Amos and Solomon, all deceased; Susanna; Elias, a coach maker of Paradise township.

Abraham R. Denlinger followed farming until 1872, when he sold his place and gave up farming on an extensive scale. He located at Gordonville, Pa., where he had a small estate of six acres. He traveled for several years quite extensively. In 1890 he entered into business relations with the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, and became one of their agents.

In his politics he was a Republican, and held a creditable position in the community.

THOMAS BAKER, a retired farmer and surveyor of Colerain township, Lancaster county, was born at Chatham, Chester Co., Pa., July 13, 1822, son of Lewis and Diana (Jackson) Baker, both of whom were born in Chester county, he in 1790, she a few years later.

Mr. Baker traces his ancestry back definitely to Sir Richard Baker, who was born in the county of Kent, England, in 1568, and died in February, 1644. He was the author of the "Chronicles of the Kings of England." His son, John Baker, born in 1598, died about 1672. They are first found in the North of England, where they were property owners in the fifteenth century, and in the seventeenth century were strong supporters of George Fox, and suffered imprisonment under Cromwell. About 1650 representatives of the family were at or near Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire. The first of the family to come to this country was

(I) Joseph Baker, born in 1630, son of John, before mentioned. He was of Shropshire, England. With his wife, Mary, he settled in Edgemont township, Delaware Co., Pa., in 1685, upon a large tract of land. He was a representative from Chester county in the Provincial Assembly in the years, 1701, 1703, 1706, 1710, 1711 and 1713. He was a member of the Society of Friends. He died in 1716, and his will, dated Dec. 19, 1714, is in the register's office at Westchester, Pa. His children, all born in England, were: John, Sarah, wife of Thomas Smedley; Robert, and Joseph.

(II) Joseph Baker (2) son of Joseph, born in 1667, died in 1735. He married Martha Woodward, and they had children as follows: Richard, Aaron, Ann, Susanna, Jane, Jesse, Sarah, Joseph, Rachel, Nehemiah and John.

(III) Aaron Baker, son of Joseph (2), was born in 1701, and died in 1783. He married Mary Edwards, and they had six children: John married Hannah Pennock in 1747. Mary married Thomas Carrington in 1752. Martha married John Clayton in 1753. Esther married William Chalfant. Aaron is mentioned below. Samuel lived in West Marlboro township, Chester Co., Pa., where he founded a branch of the family.

(IV) Aaron Baker (2), the great-grandfather of Thomas, was born in 1729, in Chester county, where, in 1759, he married Sarah Hayes. They reared the following family: James (who settled near Coatesville, Chester county, where his descendants still live), Nathan, Elisha, Levi, Joshua, Aaron, John, Hannah, Mary, Rachel and Sarah.

(V) Aaron Baker (3), grandfather of Thomas, was born in Chester county in 1767, and died there in 1853. He married Hannah Harland, also a native of Chester county, and their children were as follows: Lewis, the father of Thomas; Reuben, who married Mary Davis; Susanna, wife of William M. Davis; George, who never married; Jacob, who married Lydia Lamborn; Thomas, who married Ann Rakestraw; Samuel, who married Mary Rakestraw; Aaron, who married M. Ottey; Harland, who married Hannah Eastburn; and Hannah, unmarried.

(VI) Lewis Baker, father of Thomas, was born in 1790, in Chester county, and in 1820 married Diana Jackson. They settled near Chatham, Chester county, and were farming people all their lives, becoming quite prosperous, and adhering strictly to the Quaker faith. Mr. Baker died in 1835, leaving his widow and three sons. The sons bought a tract of land in Colerain township, on which Thomas Baker was located, the mother remaining in Chester county, where she died in 1853. Thomas was the eldest child; Lewis, the second son, married Mary Greenfield, and located on a farm near the old homestead in Chester county, where he died in 1846, leaving a widow, who still lives on the old home; Robert A. died when a young man.

Thomas Baker was well educated in the public schools of Chester county, and for twenty years was a teacher in the public schools of Lancaster and Chester counties, pursuing that profession long after his marriage. In 1840 he commenced to study surveying, preparing for that work under Jonathan Goss, at Unionville Academy, Chester county, and it has been his main occupation during most of his active life. He has surveyed over 650 farms in Lancaster and Chester counties, as well as land in Virginia, and made his best survey in 1902, when almost eighty years of age.

Thomas Baker was married in June, 1855, to Miss Eliza, daughter of James and Abigail Jackson, prominent residents of Lancaster county. Mrs. Baker was born in Chester county, in May, 1834, and was for a number of years a teacher in Lancaster county. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Baker began married life on a farm in Colerain township, where he erected a brick house and a frame barn. There they remained until 1879, when the present handsome brick house on one quarter of the farm was built, in which they have since resided. He is leading a quiet and retired life, doing, however, some little tasks in surveying. His son Lewis has charge of the farm. Mrs. Baker, while on a visit to her son in Philadelphia, in 1893, took cold, and died in that city, her husband and four children, out of a family of seven born to them, surviving: (1) Abbie, born in 1856, married Howard Brinton, a farmer of Colerain township, and died leaving two sons, Thomas B. and Lewis B. (2) Allison, born in 1858, married Miss Anna Maule, of Colerain township, a daughter of J. Comly and S. Emma Maule, and is living on his farm in Sadsbury township. (3) James E., born in 1859, was graduated from the State Normal School at Millersville, and is now principal of the Friends Central School, Philadelphia; for some twelve years he has followed teaching very successfully. He married Miss Emma MacIntyre, of Philadelphia, and they have had six children: Walter, born in 1886; Ralph, 1888; Jeanetta, 1889 (deceased); Marian, 1891; Edna, 1895; and Eugene, Jr., 1897. (4) Xanthus, born in 1863, married Della Girvin, of Colerain township, and resides on his farm near Union, in that township; they have three children: Arthur, born in 1893; Eliza, 1894; and Victoria, 1896. (5) Lewis, born in 1864, died in childhood. (6) Lydia, born in 1872, died in childhood. (7) Lewis, born in 1870, was a student at the Millersville State Normal, married Miss Kate Girvin, of this county, and they reside at the family homestead, he being manager of his father's farm. He has one son, Richard Veryl, who was born in April, 1897.

Thomas Baker has always been a Republican. He has never aspired to political station, though he was once elected school director in Colerain township, when it was strongly Democratic. He and his family are devout adherents to the Quaker faith, to which their ancestors have been committed. Mr. Baker and his wife took a trip to Europe, visiting England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, France and all of the German states, spending much time in many places of interest. Thomas Baker is a man esteemed by his neighbors for his many good qualities and excellent character, and in disposition he is a man of warm heart and kindly feeling. He is a man of considerable learning, and is a Latin and French scholar. While in England he purchased a book published in 1548, a commentary on the wars of Europe (in Latin), which he prizes very highly.

HARRIS A. GLATFELTER, one of the prominent and leading agriculturists of East Donegal township, was born in Codoras township, n York county, Nov. 17, 1833, a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Aerman) Glatfelter, who came to Lancaster county in 1857, settling in East Donegal township; there the former died in 1875, at the age of seventy-six and the latter in 1878, at the same age, both of them having been consistent members of the Lutheran Church.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Glatfelter were: Margaret, wife of John Walters, deceased; Zacharias, deceased; Isabella, who married John Smyser, and lives in Marietta; Maria, residing in Harrisburg; Matilda, the widow of Michael Lehart, residing in Lancaster; Harris A.; Martin, a resident of Mt. Union, Pa.; Elizabeth E. married James L. Jacobs, of Abilene, Kan.; Malinda, married to Ed. Bowen, of Philadelphia; Kate, unmarried, in Philadelphia; and Samuel, who is a retired hotel manager of Columbia, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Glatfelter remained with his parents during childhood and young manhood, and from early youth showed a willing and ambitious spirit, endeavoring by work for the neighboring farmers to assist his poor parents. As early as 1851 he worked in the York mill factory, going from thence to the Strickler mill, also in York county, where he remained for a year; then he went back to the town of York and entered the steam mill, remaining four years, going next to a mill near Berlin, in York county, where he remained another year; for six months he worked at Highspire, Pa., going from there to Columbia, where his brother-in-law gave him employment in hauling for a few months; but finally he went into the Stauffer mills at East Donegal, where he remained for the following two years, and then operated the Summy & Heaston mill, in Rapho township for two years more.

By this time Mr. Glatfelter was tired of mill life, although a most efficient and capable workman, so he came to his present farm and for four years operated it on shares for his father-in-law, at the end of which period he returned to milling, taking charge of Musselman's mill, on Big Chickies, remaining for four years. In 1870 he returned to the farm and has since given his time to an agricultural life. For five years he was the township supervisor, filling the office most acceptably.

In Elizabethtown, in 1860, Mr. Glatfelter was married to Elizabeth Hollinger, and to this union was born Horace H., who married Emma Baustick, and is a farmer of this township, with one child, Irvin B. Mrs. Glatfelter was born on the farm where she died in 1886, at the age of fifty-two. Her parents were John and Elizabeth (Brandt) Hollinger. In 1889 Mr. Glatfelter was married, in Columbia, to Barbara Weaver, and one child was born of this marriage, Ella G. Mrs. Glatfelter was born in East Donegal township, a daughter of Godfrey Weaver, and died Dec. 4, 1897, at the age of thirty-seven.

Mr. Glatfelter is well and favorably known through the county, is a prominent Republican, socially is connected with the O. U. A. M. and the K. of P., and is considered a representative and substantial citizen.

JACOB DENLINGER was one of those men of quiet force and character who help to mold and elevate the communities in which they live. He was a life-long resident of Paradise township, Lancaster county, and for thirty-four years was a deacon in the Mennonite Church, of which from boyhood he had been an earnest and consistent member. He was a man of excellent business abilities and was one of the substantial and influential citizens of the township, respected and esteemed by all who knew him. He was, however, decidedly domestic in his tastes and through life cultivated his well-improved farm of 103 acres. He married Miss Annie Brubaker, and to them came a family of fourteen children. We have record of: Mary, who died in childhood; Annie, wife of John L. Kreider, of Chariton county, Mo.; John B., a farmer of Paradise township, whose sketch appears below; Abraham B., a retired farmer of Strasburg borough; Lizzie, wife of Tobias Leaman, of Leacock township; Tobias, a farmer of Drumore township; Benjamin, deceased, who was a farmer of Leacock township; Hattie, wife of Christ Mamery, of Paradise township; Mattie, wife of Esaias Kling, of Leacock township; Amos, a farmer of Paradise township; Henry, retired, of Lancaster; and Aaron, a farmer of Soudersburg. Jacob, the father, died in 1884, aged seventy-three years. His wife died at the age of sixty-two years.

JOHN B. DENLINGER was born in Paradise township, July 17, 1838. He was reared on the farm, receiving his education in the neighboring public schools. In the spring of 1861 he located on the farm which he still occupies, a well cultivated property of 141 acres, situated three miles east of Strasburg. Here he followed farming successfully until the spring of 1893, when he retired from active life, though since continuing to reside on the farm. He has made many improvements on the place and has been one of the most progressive farmers.

Mr. Denlinger was twice married. His first wife was Miss Lizzie Shaub, of West Lampeter township, daughter of Henry Shaub. By this marriage there were four children, Jacob, Henry, Mary and the latter's twin sister, who died in infancy. Jacob married Ella Eby, and they have one child, Elsie. He occupies and cultivates the home farm in Paradise township. Henry is also a farmer of Paradise township. He married Elizabeth Eby, and has three children, Lloyd, Annie and Lottie. Mary is unmarried and is now matron of the Philadelphia Mennonite Home Mission. She has spent four years as one of the workers of the Chicago Home Mission. The mother of these children died in 1875. For his second wife John B. Denlinger married Jan. 1, 1878, Susan Buckwalter, widow of Israel R. Buckwalter. She was born in East Lampeter township, Sept. 15, 1837. By this second marriage there were two children, Sue B., at home, and an infant, deceased. Mrs. Denlinger had two children by her former marriage: Luetta, wife of John K. Lefever, of East Lampeter township; and Phares Buckwalter, a resident of Leacock township, who married Miss Anna Leaman and has four children, Mary, Earl, and Leon and Lila, twins. Mr. and Mrs. Denlinger are worthy and consistent members of the Old Mennonite Church and the family are among the influential and highly respected residents of Lancaster county. Mr. Denlinger has served for many years as auditor of Paradise township and has also been supervisor. He has been prominent in the administration of local affairs, has kept in close touch and sympathy with the best interests of the community and been ever ready to assist any cause or enterprise for the general good.

JAMES K. DRENNEN, a substantial citizen of Fulton township, Lancaster county, is classed among the justly esteemed men of his neighborhood.

Mr. Drennen was born in Chester county, Pa., July 23, 1830, and is of Irish and Scottish origin. He is a son of William and Mary (Boyd) Drennen, who were married in 1820, and had children as follows: Mary Jane, born Nov. 20, 1821; Ebenezer, Aug. 30, 1823; John M., Oct. 20, 1825, residing in Wrightsville, York county, as a retired farmer; William C., Jan. 26, 1828, living in York county; James K., July 23, 1830; Helena, Sept. 23, 1835, residing in York county; David D., Jan. 1, 1838, deceased; Margarette E., July 25, 1839, deceased; and Walker, twin of Margarette, residing in York county. The father of this family was born in Chester county in 1796, and his wife was born in 1798.

James K. Drennen married Miss Martha Isabella Reed, of Fulton township, Jan. 5, 1858. She was a daughter of John and Elizabeth (McKillough) Reed. Mr. and Mrs. Drennen have had the following children: Elizabeth K., born Oct. 23, 1858, the wife of William J. Ankrum, of Drumore; Winfield Scott, born Sept. 23, 1861, who married Miss Belle Ankrum, and lives at home; William Lincoln, born Aug. 15, 1864, at home, unmarried; Clement R., born Aug. 29, 1868, deceased; Harry J., born April 10, 1873, a merchant in Fairmount, Lancaster county, who married Miss Winona Shoemaker, of Fulton township; Ada M., the youngest, born April 5, 1877, and died in 1890. Mrs. Drennen died April 14, 1890. She was a good Christian woman and a kind mother.

Mr. Drennen was reared on the farm and started out in life for himself when but fifteen years of age. In 1847 he came to Lancaster county with his parents, who settled on the place he now owns. Mr. Drennen owns two good farms, the home place, comprising 190 acres with good improvements, and a fifty acre place in Drumore township. Politically Mr. Drennen is a strong Abraham Lincoln Republican, and believes in the party as it was under the guidance of the martyred President; he is a leading citizen in his community, having served in almost all the local offices in Fulton township—judge of elections, school director, supervisor of roads and township auditor. Mr. Drennen is a member of the Presbyterian Church and was one of the pioneer organizers of Sabbath-schools in the township. In 1847 his brother, John M. Drennen, organized the first Sunday-school of the Little Britain Presbyterian Church, and James K. Drennen served as superintendent. He organized and superintended afternoon Sabbath-schools at Eldora Station, Fairview Shops, Cherry Hill School House and at his own home, and all these exerted a strong moral influence. Mr. Drennen's life is an illustration of the proverb, "A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children."

SAMUEL E. LANE, the genial landlord and proprietor of the "Millway Hotel," belongs to one of the old and respected families of Lancaster county. His grandfather, Abraham Lane, was commissioner of the county and lived and died there. He was a farmer and followed that occupation all his life. He married Miss Anna Long, by whom he had four children, viz.: Andrew L., a farmer of Oregon, Pa.; Abram L., of Lititz, a retired farmer; Matilda, the wife of John B. Earl, a retired citizen of Lititz; and Amelia, who married Samuel Bare, both being now deceased.

Andrew L. Lane, father of Samuel E., was born in Manheim township about 1840, and has followed farming all his life, with the exception of a short time when he lived retired. He has been very active in politics, and is a stanch Republican. He held the office of school director for some years. Mr. Lane married Miss Barbara B. Erb, of Warwick township, and they became the parents of nine children, three of whom died in infancy. The others are: Abram E., a merchant in Clay township; Samuel E.; Elmer E., a farmer of Millway; Cameron E., a dentist; Harry E. and Clyde E., at home.

Samuel E. Lane was born in Manheim township, Nov. 9, 1866, and remained at home until he was twenty-three years of age, receiving his education in the common schools, at the Millersville Normal, where he spent one term, and at Weidler's Business College, of Lancaster, from which latter he graduated. He then began life for himself, farming one year in Neffsville, whence he moved, and six years on his father's farm in Millway. After this he purchased the hotel at Millway, of which he is now the proprietor. He has won a substantial place among the men of Millway by his honorable methods and hearty spirit, and he has proved his loyalty to local interests on many occasions. In politics he is a Republican, and he has held the office of school director for nine years.

Mr. Lane wedded Miss Ann Mary Landis, daughter of Jacob R. and Susan Landis, and to this union have been born two children, Samuel L. and Anna B., both at home.

ROBERT GIRVIN. At the little settlement of Iva, located in Paradise township, Lancaster county, Robert Girvin has been for many years a merchant. He was reared in that vicinity and possessing decided business talents and tastes, he has there developed and exercised them, becoming one of the prominent citizens of the township and one of its benefactors.

Mr. Girvin is named from his grandfather, Robert Girvin, the emigrant, who founded the family in Lancaster county. Some time between the years 1776 and 1780 the latter left his native heath in County Derry, Ireland, and settled in Lancaster county, locating later in Paradise township, about one-half mile west of what is now Iva post-office. Here he purchased a tract of fifty acres, upon which he devoted himself to farming during the balance of his active career and where he lived to the ripe old age of ninety-three years. He married Miss Mary Smith, a native of Lancaster county, by whom he had a family of nine children, as follows: James, the father of Robert; William, a farmer of Lancaster county; John, a farmer of Lancaster county; Samuel, a farmer of Lancaster county; Daniel, a speculator of Lancaster county; Isaac, a farmer, merchant and justice of the peace; Annie, who married Samuel Rissler; Margaret, who married Peter Niedick; and Sarah, who married Samuel Bowers. Robert and Mary Girvin, the parents, were members of the Presbyterian Church, as were also their children.

James, the eldest, was born in Paradise township in 1797. He was there reared to manhood and there engaged for life in agricultural pursuits, owning and operating a farm of about 100 acres, and was one of the substantial citizens of the county. He married Miss Nancy Keene, of Eden township, and to them were born the following children: Mary, widow of Benjamin Winters, of Iva; Isaac, a farmer of Paradise township, now deceased; John, a resident of Paradise township; Henry, a farmer of Bart township, now deceased; Samuel, a resident of Paradise township, a lime burner near the Gap; Anna, a resident of Iva; Robert; and Elias, a resident of Lancaster. James, the father of Robert, lived to the age of seventy-one years, and his widow survived him six months only.

Robert Girvin was born on the farm in Paradise township, June 2, 1837. He was reared on his father's farm and received his education in the common schools. Deciding upon a mercantile career, he spent three years as a clerk and then at the age of twenty-five years he began business on his own account. He was engaged in a general store in Georgetown and later in Strasburg, and in 1868 he started in business as a general merchant at Iva, where he has ever since continued successfully, starting out in business with a general line of goods and so continuing ever since, building up a steady and an increasing trade and becoming one of the representative and public spirited men in that part of Lancaster county, ever ready to lend his aid and influence in the furtherance of enterprises for the public good. In 1884 he secured the location of the post-office, made the name of Iva, and has ever since remained the postmaster. In politics Mr. Girvin affiliates with the Democratic party, and he has served as justice of the peace in Paradise township.

He married, in 1865, Miss Abbie Hamsher, daughter of Anthony Hamsher and a native of Strasburg township. To Robert and Abbie Girvin have been born a family of nine children, namely: Sally; Charles, who married Miss Hattie Hart and is a merchant of Williamsport; Jesse, who married Helen Daly and is a clerk for H. K. Mulford & Co., of Philadelphia; Mary, wife of Albert Althouse, of Quarryville, and mother of one child, Joe; Joe, who is the assistant in his father's store; and four who died in infancy. Mr. Girvin is a member of the Reformed Church of New Providence, and Mrs. Girvin is a member of the Lutheran Church of Strasburg.

MILTON L. WEAVER, one of the enterprising and successful farmers and business men of West Hempfield township, was born in East Lampeter township, this county, Feb. 29, 1860, son of Isaac and Catherine (Barr) Weaver. The father, a prosperous farmer, retired from the old homestead in Lampeter township in 1883, and resided in Lancaster city until his death, Oct. 27, 1887, at the age of sixty-eight years. He is buried at Longenecker's meeting-house, in West Lampeter township. His widow, who was born in 1822, is now a resident of Leola. They were members of the Reformed Mennonite Church. To Isaac and Catherine Weaver were born the following children: Mary, wife of John F. Girvin, a farmer of Leola; Joseph, a farmer of East Lampeter township; Aaron, a farmer of Manor township; Benjamin, a farmer of Manor township; Milton L., of West Hempfield township, of whom we are particularly writing; Lillie, who died young and Ephraim E., a farmer of Manor township.

Milton L. Weaver was reared on his father's farm, receiving his education in the neighboring schools. At the age of seventeen years he engaged in farm work with his brother Joseph, with whom he remained ten years. He then began farming for himself in Pequea township, and there conducted the farm successfully until 1898, when he purchased his present place in West Hempfield township, the property known as Swarr's siding, where he conducts a general line of business in coal, flour, grain, feed, straw, salt, fertilizers, etc. The mill was erected by Harry Swarr in 1886. It is of fifty-horsepower capacity, and its product includes all kinds of feed. Mr. Weaver ranks among the leading young citizens of West Hempfield township.

Mr. Weaver was married, in 1889, at West Willow, Pequea township, to Miss Cecilia Christ, and to them have come four children, three sons and one daughter, namely: Isaac, Frank, John and Mary. In politics Mr. Weaver is a Republican. Though comparatively young in years he has prospered notably in a business way, combining ripe judgment with industry and progressiveness of action. He is awake to modern improvements in method, while he clings to the sterling principles of the past, and he has thus exemplified in his career the best type of success. He is highly esteemed by his wide circle of acquaintances for his many most estimable qualities.

HENRY STAUFFER MUSSER, late of the firm of Musser & Miller, lumbermen and manufacturers in East Donegal township, Lancaster county, Pa., was born in his present home July 16, 1820, a son of Jacob and Martha (Stauffer) Musser, natives of the same township. Jacob Musser was a farmer by calling; he died in December, 1831, at thirty-two years of age, the father of six children, viz.: Henry S.; Anna, deceased wife of Rev. H. N. Graybill, a Dunkard preacher and a farmer; Elizabeth, who died young; Martha, widow of Lewis Lindermouth, of Marietta; Jacob, who also died young; and Abraham, who is living in retirement in Marietta.

Mrs. Martha Musser, who was born August 13, 1802, was next married to John Miller, a farmer, and to this union were born four children, viz.: John, of whom a biography is printed on another page; Joseph, the junior member of the firm of Musser & Miller, whose biography will also be found elsewhere; Isaiah, deceased; and Sarah, wife of John Conley, a retired banker of Lancaster. John Miller, the stepfather of Henry S. Musser, did quite an extensive business as a lumber manufacturer in addition to farming, and operated the mill, afterward owned by Musser & Miller, until his death in 1867, at the age of sixty-one years. Mrs. Martha (Musser) Miller survived until 1885.

Henry Stauffer Musser lived on the home farm until the death of his father, when he went to West Hempfield township and for five years lived on the farm of an uncle, Rev. Hostetter, a Dunkard minister; he then returned to his mother, who by this time had re-married, and lived in the old homestead again until he had reached his majority (1841), when he was awarded his share of his father's estate, which he invested in connection with his stepfather in the lumber business. In 1863 he was joined by Mr. Miller in the business which he conducted so successfully up to his death, which occurred Jan. 17, 1901, when he was aged eighty years, six months and one day.

Mr. Musser was married in July, 1847, in East Donegal township, to Miss Anna M. Greisinger, and six children crowned this union, viz.: Elizabeth, wife of Charles Johnson, of Philadelphia; Stephen, who married Mary Sellers, but is now deceased; Frank, who was killed in December, 1867, when he was thirteen years of age, by a pile of lumber falling upon him in his father's yard; Ada, married to Dr. John J. Steiner, of Jefferson county, Pa.; Stanton, of Columbia, married to May Grier; and Lincoln, member of the firm of Johnson & Musser Seed Co., who married Emma Pomeroy. Mrs. Anna M. (Greisinger) Musser was born Oct. 3, 1828, in Rapho township near Mt. Joy, Lancaster county, and is a daughter of Jacob and Anna M. (Lindersmith) Greisinger, of East Hempfield township and Mt. Joy respectively. Jacob Greisinger was a coachmaker by trade and also followed farming, but lived retired for several years prior to his death, in 1868, at the age of seventy-five years. His widow survived until 1873, when she died at the age of eighty. They were members of River Brethren Church and their remains were buried in the Florin cemetery. They were the parents of four children, viz.: Barbara, widow of Christopher Sherrick, of Mt. Joy; Stephen, a farmer of Rapho township; Anna M., Mrs. Musser; and Sarah M., deceased wife of Henry Gish. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Musser were Stephen and Mary (Brubaker) Greisinger, the former of whom was a farmer near Landisville.

Henry S. Musser, in addition to his lumber business, owns considerable land, which he laid out in town lots, besides other valuable property in close proximity to Marietta borough. He was a director in the First National Bank of Marietta, and also in the Marietta Turnpike Company. He was very well preserved for his years, and seldom had occasion to use spectacles. In politics he was a Republican, and for six years served as county prison inspector. In religion he was a Dunkard, and bore an unblemished reputation for integrity, both in private and business life.

DAVIS A. BROWN, of Fulton township, may be well classed among the prominent and substantial men of Lancaster county. He was born in East Earl township, this county, near Terre Hill, Aug. 28, 1830.

Nathan B. Brown, his father, was born in Susquehanna county, Pa., in 1796, and came to Lancaster county when a young man. He died in East Earl township in 1864. In 1818 he married Miss Susannah Gabel, of Berks county, Pa., and they had eight children: Mary A., who is the wife of Isaac Foltz, of Terre Hill, Pa.; W. W. (deceased), an attorney in Lancaster for many years; George W., a resident of Philadelphia; Isaiah (deceased), who was a doctor for many years; Davis A.; Levi B., a resident of Davenport, Iowa; Phianna, the wife of Oliver Stephens, of Michigan; and Samuel H., deceased.

Garrett Brown, the grandfather of Davis A., was a native of Susquehanna county. He had the following family: Nathan B., Thomas, John, Robert, Garrett, Margaret and Johnson, of whom the last named still lives in Davenport, Iowa. The old Garrett Brown family founded the town of Brownsville, in Canada, and some of its members became very wealthy. The family is of Irish stock.

Davis A. Brown married Miss Rachel Patton, of Fayette county, Pa., Nov. 24, 1857. She is a daughter of Thomas Patton, who was of English origin, and who married Emma Harris. They had eight children, namely: four boys—J. Harris, of New York City, an author and historian of note, numbering among his works a history of the United States; R. Johnson, deceased; J. Finley, who lives in the family homestead in Fayette county, Pa.; and Thomas, a real-estate man of Greensburg, Pa.; four daughters—Rebecca Finley, deceased; Sarah, wife of S. W. Boyd, ex-sheriff of Fayette county; Harriet, widow of E. F. Houseman, editor of the Greensburg Herald, living at Greensburg; and Rachel. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been born the following named children: W. T., the present able district attorney of Lancaster county; Anna R., wife of I. Haines Dickinson, a general merchant, of Quarryville, Pa.; Mary, wife of Ira H. Herr, a real estate dealer at Lancaster; Dr. B. L., a druggist and practicing physician at Philadelphia; Clara L., wife of Davis Gillespie, superintendent of mining in West Virginia; Ada, a teacher in the public schools; Elizabeth, wife of Henry Westerhoff, of Ephrata, proprietor of silk mills; and Hampton H., the youngest, a druggist in Philadelphia.

Davis A. Brown was educated in the public schools, for a time taught in the schools of the county, and has been director of schools for his township. In 1866 he received the appointment, under President Johnson, of revenue assessor for the 9th district, Lancaster county, Pa., which office he administered with ability and justice. He is a strong Republican in politics, and religiously is associated with the Presbyterian Church. He is the present justice of the peace of Fulton township, having been once appointed by the Governor and twice elected to that incumbency. Mr. Brown bought his present 200-acre farm in the above named township in 1862. The Brown family is one of the most prominent in the county. The Squire has a family of which he may well be proud, while he himself is one of the most popular and beloved men in his community.

JACOB B. WISSLER, now living retired in the village of Lititz, descends from one of the old and honored families of Lancaster county.

The first member of this branch of the Wissler family in America sailed with his wife from Germany to Philadelphia in 1720. On the voyage, together with other able-bodied men on the vessel, he was impressed into the naval service by a man-of-war. His wife continued the journey to Philadelphia, where he joined her on the expiration of his term of service. She was employed by a farmer of Germantown and he also took service with a farmer in the same locality, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Andrew Wissler, their son, removed to Lancaster county, Pa., where he entered the employ of Jacob Groff, an extensive farmer in what is now Clay township. In 1767 he married the only daughter of his employer, and in this way became the owner of the old Groff homestead, which was taken up in 1724 by John Jacob Groff, father of Jacob. It was divided into four farms by Jacob Wissler, son of Andrew, but has ever since remained in the Wissler family. Andrew had two sons, John and Jacob, the former of whom died unmarried.

Jacob Wissler, son of Andrew, was born in Clay township in 1778, and was one of the successful farmers of that section, giving his entire attention to agriculture until his death, which occurred in 1850. He had accumulated a fine property at the time of his death, owning four farms. He was one of the old Mennonites of the county. Jacob Wissler in 1800 married Miss Anna Ely, and they were the parents of ten children: Andrew, a farmer and merchant, who died in Michigan; Jacob, the father of Jacob B.; Christian, a miller and farmer; Ezra, a farmer of Clay township; Magdelina, wife of Jacob Landis of Ephrata township; Levi, a farmer and tanner; Samuel, a miller of Canada; Mary, wife of Levi Erb; Catherine, deceased; and John, a tanner, who died in Virginia.

Jacob Wissler was born in Clay township in 1803. He, too, followed farming extensively until one year before his death, when he retired. He was a member of the Old Mennonite Church. He married Miss Barbara Bomberger, and to them were born five children: Anna, wife of Christian Hess; Jacob B.; Martha, wife of Samuel R. Hess; Mary, wife of Peter B. Rohrer; and Levi, who died when eight years of age.

Jacob B. Wissler was born in Clay township, Sept. 4, 1828. He lived at home until he was twenty-six years of age, during his boyhood attending the common schools. He began life for himself at farming, in Clay township, on one of his father's farms, where he remained twenty-two years, after which he purchased the place where he now resides, and on which he has made extensive improvements; his home is in the village. Mr. Wissler is engaged to some extent in raising tobacco, though he is practically retired. In politics he is a Republican, and he held the office of school director for some years. Mr. Wissler was married Sept. 5, 1854, to Miss Anna R. Brubaker, daughter of Joseph and Susanna Brubaker, and to this union have been born five children, two of whom died in infancy, and one in childhood. Joseph is a farmer of Clay township. Lizzie is the wife of Christian B. Resser. Mr. and Mrs. Wissler are both members of the Old Mennonite Church. They enjoy the good-will and esteem of all who know them, and Mr. Wissler has always been regarded as one of the representative substantial citizens of the community.

EMANUEL F. HOSTETTER, one of Manheim's most active and enterprising business men, as well as one of its representative citizens, is a native of Lancaster county, born on the Hostetter homestead in Penn township, May 24, 1835, and a son of John and Elizabeth (Forney) Hostetter, now deceased, the former having died in 1865, the latter in 1867.

John Hostetter was a son of Jacob Hostetter, a Mennonite minister, was born and reared on a farm in Penn township and throughout life followed farming. He was also one of the heaviest cattle dealers of his day, and for twenty years was engaged in that business, buying his stock in the West and shipping it to Lancaster county for distribution. He was also one of the most progressive men of his time, was instrumental in securing the building of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad through this section, and became a heavy stockholder in it. For years he was a director in the Lancaster County National Bank, and was one of the organizers of the Manheim National Bank, of which he was also a director. During the '50s he divided his farm between his two sons, John and Ephraim, and purchased the Manheim mill from John Bosler, which he conducted for some ten years, at the same time owning and operating a mill and distillery near Liverpool, Perry Co., Pa. About 1860 he retired from active life and lived quietly in Manheim until his death. Politically he was at first a strong Whig and later a Republican. He was twice married, his first wife being a Miss Stauffer, by whom he had three children: Henry S., a resident of Penn township, Lancaster county; Elizabeth, deceased wife of J. L. Stehman, of Lititz; and Sarah, widow of Daniel Grosh, of the same place. The father's second wife was Miss Elizabeth Forney, a daughter of John Forney, who lived near Brownstown, and to them were born five children, namely: Emanuel F.; Benjamin, who died in childhood; John F., a farmer, now deceased; Ephraim, who has been proprietor of "Hotel Superior" in Chicago, Ill., since 1890; and Maria, deceased wife of John Kurtz.

Emanuel F. Hostetter was reared on the home farm until fourteen years of age, and attended the public schools of the neighborhood, completing his education, however, by one term at Lititz Academy. Coming to Manheim at the age of fifteen, he entered the store of John Schaeffer as clerk, and remained in his employ two years, at the end of which time he went to Lancaster and worked eighteen months for David Bear, a merchant of that place.

Having a desire to see something of the country, he then went west to Illinois, and located in Freeport, where he spent eight years, clerking in a dry goods store two years. For one year he was engaged in the grain business with Joseph S. Brubaker and John Slott, as a member of the firm of Slott, Hostetter & Brubaker; for two years he conducted a grocery establishment, and then engaged in the real estate business for the remainder of his stay in Freeport. In 1860 Mr. Hostetter returned to Manheim, Pa., but for one year operated his father's mill in Perry county, this State. Since then he has made his home permanently in Manheim and has been prominently identified with its business interests. He established the first coal yard here, but after conducting it one year he sold out to a Mr. Kline; the yard is now owned by B. H. Hershey. He was next engaged for two years in mercantile business at Lancaster, under the firm name of Hostetter & Bruner, selling out at the end of that time in order that he might settle up the estates left by his father and father-in-law. After two years devoted to that, he embarked in the manufacture of brick at Manheim, opening in 1865 the second yard established here, and he has since engaged in that business. From 1867 until 1899 he also conducted a store in Manheim, carrying a line of clothing, hats, caps and gents' furnishing goods, but in May of the latter year he disposed of his stock. Since 1885 he has been interested in the livery business in Manheim, and for the past quarter of a century has engaged in the cultivation of tobacco. He is a good type of the energetic, wide-awake and progressive man.

In 1858 Mr. Hostetter was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth A. Ensminger, a daughter of Samuel Ensminger, who at that time was treasurer of Lancaster county. Three children were born of this union, but two died in infancy. Venetta, the only one now living, is the wife of H. C. Stauffer, teller in the Manheim National Bank.

Religiously Mr. Hostetter is a member of the Reformed Church; socially he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while politically he is a stanch Republican. He keeps abreast of the times and is thoroughly up-to-date in all respects. As a citizen he ever stands ready to discharge any duty that devolves upon him, and gives his support to every enterprise for the public good.

JOSEPH K. NEWCOMER, a progressive farmer of Manor township, with his home on his neat farm of thirty-six acres three miles southeast of Columbia, Lancaster Co., Pa., was born on the homestead of which he now owns a part, Nov. 18, 1834, and until twenty-six years of age he devoted his services to his parents and then began operations on his own account on his present property.

On Nov. 18, 1860, Joseph K. Newcomer married Miss Elizabeth Rohrer, daughter of Rev. Ephraim Rohrer, of Manor township. This lady died in 1867, leaving two children, Ephraim, a miller, now in West Hempfield township, and Emma, wife of Amos Doerstler, of Manor township. Joseph K. Newcomer next married, in 1872, Miss Elizabeth Seitz, daughter of Rev. George Seitz, of Manor township, and this union has also been blessed with two children: D. Vernon, a prominent school teacher of Elizabethtown; and Harry S., married to Miss Ella M. Warfel, a school teacher of Conestoga township and a daughter of Aldus C. Warfel, of Millersville, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Newcomer is a devoted and consistent member of the Mennonite Church, to which he has always given freely and cheerfully of his means, and he has ever been one of the leading and progressive farmers of his township, his surroundings giving ample evidence of his thrift and excellent management. No man in the township is more highly respected, and no one is more justly entitled to the esteem derived from a long and useful life in the community.

JAMES WOOD. Among the representative families of Lancaster county none have stood in higher public estimation through generations than that of Wood. Far back in the time of William Penn the emigrant ancestor of the family started from his home, in Lancashire, England, with his wife and sons, William and Joseph, to find a home with other Quaker families in Pennsylvania. On the passage another son was born, who was named Richmond.

Joseph Wood was a son of Thomas and his children were Thomas, Joseph, Jesse, Lydia, Elizabeth, David, John and Day, and of this family, Jesse became the grandfather of James, of this sketch. By a first marriage Jesse Wood had two sons, John and Day; and by a second marriage, one son, James.

James Wood was born July 17, 1821, and died Aug. 9, 1894. In 1845 he was married to Mercy M. Carter, who was born Nov. 29, 1822, and who still resides in Little Britain township. This union resulted in the birth of eight children: Alfred, a farmer in Fulton township; Susan, the wife of Elwood H. Townsend, a sketch of whom is given elsewhere; Jesse, a farmer in Little Britain township; Mary, deceased wife of Davis E. Allen, a farmer of Avondale, Chester county; Lucretia, who is the wife of John W. Smedley of Chester county; Lewis, a farmer of Little Britain township; Ida, who died unmarried; and James, of this biography. Sketches are also given of Alfred, Jesse and Lewis. James Wood was one of the leading men in his part of Lancaster county, most highly esteemed both in public and private life. For many years he was the president of the Farmers National Bank of Oxford, was county commissioner, and one of the most public-spirited citizens of his part of the State. During a great part of his life he was the administrator of many estates and the trusted guardian of children. Every duty was performed with the integrity of character for which he was so well known. No more respected man ever lived in Little Britain township than the strict Quaker, James Wood. His descendants are many and worthily represent the stock from which they have sprung.

James Wood, the son, has been a farmer all his life. He is one of the present auditors of the township and an active Republican of the locality. His farm is one of the best and most valuable in the vicinity and displays evidences of the prosperity and good taste of its occupants.

The first marriage of James Wood was to Philena C. Boyd, on Jan. 11, 1887, a daughter of William C. Boyd, of Martic township, and her death occurred Sept. 28, 1892. His second marriage was to Elizabeth K. Fite on March 24, 1896; she was born Dec. 14, 1860, and was a daughter of Samuel and Rebecca Fite, of Little Britain township. Samuel Fite was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was born in 1825, and now resides with his daughter and her husband. The mother was born March 24, 1824, and died Jan. 27, 1892. Both James and Elizabeth K. Wood are consistent members of the Society of Friends and are among the most hospitable and highly esteemed residents of Little Britain.

SLATER F. BROWN, of Fulton township, Lancaster county, was born March 28, 1841, son of Elisha and Rachel W. (Bradway) Brown. The family is of English stock. The father was born Dec. 12, 1814, and died in 1859. The mother was born Dec. 21, 1818, in Chester county, Pa., and their marriage occurred in 1840; five children were born to them, as follows: Slater F.; Mary E., wife of William Pugh, of Chester county; Thomas B., a banker and real estate dealer in West Chester, Pa.; Charles H., deceased; Walter W., cashier of the West Grove National Bank, and a much esteemed citizen of West Grove, Chester county, who died Feb. 6, 1902.

Slater Brown, the grandfather of Slater F., was one of the leading citizens of his time. He was a brother to Hon. Jeremiah Brown, a district judge of Lancaster county, and a member of Congress from 1840 to 1844. Slater Brown was the father of four children: Elisha (the father of our subject), Rachel, Jeremiah and Mary, all of whom are deceased except Mary, who now resides in Lancaster City.

Slater F. Brown married Miss Charlotte M. Howell, daughter of John Howell, of Philadelphia, and this marriage has been blessed with the following children: Lawrence F., born July 30, 1872, unmarried and in business in Atlantic City; Thomas C., born Aug. 5, 1874, who died at the age of twenty-five years, unmarried; Rachel W., born June 7, 1877, residing at home; Charles H., born Sept. 14, 1881, unmarried and living in Philadelphia; Merton E., born May 16, 1885. The mother of this family was born Jan. 14, 1851.

Mr. Brown owns a fine farm of 115 acres, well improved and stocked, which is in a high state of cultivation, showing every evidence of care and good management. In political sentiment Mr. Brown is a Republican, but he has never desired or sought to hold office. He is a member of the Society of Friends, is an honored and highly esteemed citizen, and because of his many excellent qualities his friendship and acquaintance is sought by all the best men in the community.

SAMUEL MONTEBACH MYERS, for years head of the firm of Myers & Rathfon, the leading clothiers of Lancaster, now head of the firm of S. M. Myers & Co., because of the retirement of Mr. Rathfon, is descended from a very old Pennsylvania family, both paternally and maternally. His grandfather, Jacob Myers, was born in Lancaster county, and passed his entire life here.

Frederick Myers, the father of Samuel M., was a well-known tailor of Manheim. He married Elizabeth Montebach, a native of Warwick township, this county, and a representative of a pioneer family. Eleven children blessed this union, four of whom are living: Margaret, widow of William Thatcher, of Newtown, Rapho township; Elizabeth, wife of Solomon Scholl, of Lancaster; Andrew, a grain dealer of Turon, Kans.; and Samuel M., whose name introduces this sketch.

Samuel Montebach Myers was born in Newtown, Rapho township, Oct. 11, 1824. His education was received in the schools of the district. Leaving school at the age of fifteen years, young Myers became an apprentice to the dry-goods business in Columbia, and from there went to Mt. Joy, where for a time he was salesman in a store. He then entered trade on his own account, as a member of the firm of Arndt, Bechtold & Myers, continuing thus until he was elected by the Republicans of Lancaster county to the position of clerk of the Orphans' court, when, with his wife, whom he had married in Mt. Joy, he came to Lancaster, where he has since resided. After serving intelligently and faithfully in the office mentioned, Mr. Myers bought out a clothing store in Lancaster, and at the end of the first year associated with himself, as partner, Jacob Rathfon. This partnership existed for an ordinary lifetime, and was far more than ordinarily successful. For a time the firm carried on the clothing trade in Center Square, and then built the large and elegant establishment at No. 12 East King street, at that time one of the most notable business structures in Lancaster, and even in these days of fine industrial mercantile structures in the city equalled by few of the finest buildings.

Politically Mr. Myers has always been an earnest, stanch and devoted Republican, and in recognition of his devotion to party principles and party interests he was elected county commissioner for three terms (in addition to clerk of the Orphans' court), served a term as member of the common branch of the city councils from the old Northeast ward, and was strongly urged by thousands of Republicans for member of Congress from this district, and also for mayor of the city.

Samuel M. Myers

Mr. Myers has been twice married. His first wife was Anna Mary Dysart, daughter of the late Robert Dysart, ex-coroner of Lancaster county. By this union seven children were born, three of whom are living: Ella C., wife of A. W. Hime, who is in the clothing business in Reading; Margie, wife of Walter W. Hollinger, superintendent of the real estate department of Myers & Rathfon, and now a member of the firm of S. M. Myers & Co., and Anna Bertha, at home. The mother of these died in January, 1899, and in November, 1900, Mr. Myers married Miss Cornelia Christie, of Cecil county, Maryland.

Associated with Mr. Rathfon Mr. Myers has built fully one hundred dwelling-houses in Lancaster, including his own elegant home on North Duke street, and the substantial and commodious store building on East King street. Besides all this property, Mr. Myers owns a handsome cottage at Ocean Grove, where he has spent his summers for the past thirty years, and is a member of the board of control of the Ocean Grove Association. In religious circles he is an enthusiastic worker, and is a trustee and class-leader of the First M. E. Church of Lancaster. He was not only one of the promoters, but he contributed one-tenth of the entire cost, of the magnificent new church on North Duke street. He was at one time a member of the board of managers of the Landisville Camp Meeting Association; was twice delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist church, and served as a member of the board of stewards of the Philadelphia Conference for some years. Indeed, there is no more earnest, more liberal or more prominent Methodist in the state of Pennsylvania. In addition to his church work, which next to the devotion to his family is the mainspring of his life, Mr. Myers is a Knight Templar in Masonry, a member of the Knights of Pythias, and vice-president of the Lancaster Trust Co. In brief, there is no name in Lancaster more widely known or more greatly respected than that of Samuel M. Myers.

JOSEPH P. AMBLER. In every locality where agricultural life is at its best, may be found a number of most estimable citizens, who, after lives of unusual activity, have settled down to enjoy advancing years in ease amid the comforts which their early industry has provided. One of the fine farms near Goshen, Pa., in Fulton township, Lancaster county, is owned and occupied, although no longer operated, by such a man, Joseph P. Ambler.

The Ambler family is one of those which has materially assisted in the settlement and development of the State of Pennsylvania. Some time early in the last century three brothers of this name came from across the Atlantic, one of whom, Edward, became the founder of the family in Lancaster county, and from this ancestor came: Andrew, Edward, William, Elizabeth, the wife of John Rutter, and Ann, the wife of Israel Chills.

William Ambler, the father of Joseph P. Ambler, was born in 1789, and died in 1862, after a most exemplary life, filled with generous and benevolent deeds. In 1817 he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Penrose, who was born in Bucks county, Pa., and both she and her husband were through life consistent members of the Society of Friends. They reared a family of eight children: Adaline, who was born Nov. 26, 1818, and married James Smedley, of Fulton township, both deceased; Joseph P., mentioned below; Owen, born June 10, 1822, deceased; Thomas E., born in 1824, who died March 27, 1894; Louis and David, who died in childhood, in Montgomery county; Edward and Ann, twins, born in 1827, in Drumore township.

Joseph P. Ambler was born Jan. 18, 1820, a son of William and Elizabeth (Penrose) Ambler, the former of whom was a native of Montgomery county, and the latter of Bucks county, Pa., of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His education was received in the best schools afforded by the time and place, and he was brought up to the duties of farm life. In those days the greater part of the labor was done by hand, much of the machinery now in use having never been yet thought of, so that when young Joseph started out to make a career for himself, it was with but seventy-five cents in money, but with a large and complete knowledge, gained through experience, of the management of crops and the raising of cattle.

Spending his money to enable him to cross the Susquehanna river, Joseph Ambler sought farm work, soon found it, and so honest and industrious was he and so thorough was his knowledge, that he was soon able to command higher wages than were paid to less useful workers, and here he laid the foundations of a fortune, unusually large to have been acquired through industry alone. A consistent member of the Society of Friends, he has never engaged in speculative enterprises, and stands before his community specially honored and esteemed. His present possessions comprise two excellent farms in Fulton township and one in Martic township, aggregating 250 acres of valuable land, all of these being improved with commodious barns and comfortable dwellings; a fine mill property, which is of considerable value; while aside from these he has some $20,000 at interest. Joseph Ambler is also financially interested in the Quarryville National Bank, at Quarryville, Pa., being both a director and a stockholder, and he is one of the leading men in all of the important and progressive enterprises of his locality. As a proof of his substantial position, if proof were needed, Mr. Ambler is the largest tax payer in Fulton township.

In 1848 Joseph P. Ambler was married to Elizabeth Smedley, who was born in 1824, and died April 10, 1890; she was a daughter of Eli Smedley, a farmer of Fulton township. Seven children were born to this union: Leander, who died in childhood; Lydia, who also died in childhood; Laura, who married Alfred Jewell, of Chester county; Alva, born March 8, 1860, who died Sept. 7, 1881; Sarah, who married Walter P. Reynolds, of Oxford, Pa.; Eli, who died in infancy; and Charles, who married Lulu Scott, of Little Britain, and resides on the home farm.

In politics Mr. Ambler has been a consistent member of the Republican party, and throughout his life has exerted his influence in favor of law, order and good citizenship. A man of temperate habits, he has set an example to those who follow him. No citizens are more thoroughly representative of the best agriculturists of his county than himself and son, and none are more highly esteemed.

JOHN W. SHOWAKER, a prominent farmer of Bart township, Lancaster county, was born in Paradise township, Aug. 7, 1842, a son of John and Margaret (Ryland) Showaker, both of whom were natives of Montgomery county, where he was born in 1793, and his wife in 1798.

John Showaker was a son of Godfrey Showaker, who was born in Germany and settled in Montgomery county, where he and his wife died, leaving a family of three children, John, Henry and Catherine. Henry died unmarried in Montgomery county. Catherine married John Brooker and settled in Germantown, where she died, leaving a family of children.

John Showaker was married in Montgomery county in 1832. He came to Sadsbury township, where he was engaged some years as a farmer. Then he moved into Paradise township, and he lived there until 1848. That year he bought the present farm home of his family near Nickel Mines, in Bart township. There he made substantial improvements, put up a brick house, connecting with the house already built, and there he remained until his death in 1858. He left a widow who died in 1881. Both were members of the Lutheran Church, and led honorable and upright lives. In politics he was a Whig. They had three children. (1) Catherine was born in Montgomery county in 1820, and was reared in Lancaster county, where she married James Martin, of Bart township. He was a civil engineer, and had a home in Germantown, where both died, she in 1896 and he some years previously. (2) Laura, born in 1821, married James Brown, of Bart township; they are now living in Georgetown, Lancaster county, and have one son, J. W., who is married, and settled on a farm in the same county. (3) John W.

The mother of John W. Showaker before her marriage was Margaret Ryland, a native of Montgomery county. She was a daughter of Andrew and Phoebe (Burkett) Ryland, who came of English parentage, and were old settlers of Montgomery county, dating back to Revolutionary times.

John W. Showaker received his education in the home schools, and remained at home with his parents as long as they lived, succeeding to the possession of the farm. He has continued farming to the present time.

John W. Showaker was married in Jan., 1874, to Kate A., a daughter of James P. and Anna (Manahan) Russell. The Russell family has been long and favorably known in Lancaster county. James Russell, was born in Carlisle, Pa., in 1814; he was a saddler by trade, and carried on business in Georgetown, until his death, Jan. 1, 1888. His wife, who is still living in Georgetown, was born in Bart township in 1820. Her parents, James and Rebecca Manahan, were also natives of this county. James and Anna Russell had the following children: Phillip, a resident of Genesee, N. Y.; Kate A., wife of John W. Showaker; Rebecca, at home unmarried; James M., in Georgetown; Daniel H., at home; Henrietta D., at home.

Mr. and Mrs. John W. Showaker settled at the old home, and to them have come five children: Margaret Showaker, unmarried, at home; James R. Showaker, at home; John, who married Miss Martha Rice, a lady of Bart township, lives at the home of his father, and has one daughter, Elsie; Anna and William are unmarried and at home. Religiously this family has been very largely connected with the Presbyterian Church. In politics Mr. Showaker is a Republican.

John W. Showaker is a well-to-do and prosperous citizen, and is highly spoken of among the people of this township, where his industrious and useful life has been passed for so many years.

WILLIAM S. MARTIN, in his lifetime a prominent farmer of Colerain township, Lancaster county, was born there May 8, 1832, his parents being Samuel and Jane (Rankin) Martin. The Martin family has long been associated with the history of the county, and its various representatives have been people of character and worth.

Samuel Martin was born near the present home of the family in 1795, and his wife, Jane Rankin, in Chester county, the preceding year. Her parents were James and Susannah Rankin, and their home was in Highland township, Chester county, where they took a prominent place in the community. He was a sturdy advocate of temperance in an early day, and is remembered as among the first to banish liquor from the harvest field.

Samuel Martin was a son of Samuel and Elizabeth Martin, who came from Ireland, and settled in Colerain township, where they became the parents of four children; James, Samuel, Isabella, and Sarah who married William Mackey. The last-named had three sons, who became Presbyterian ministers, James, Elkana, and William. James Mackey was a missionary to Africa, and died in New London, Chester county.

James Martin married Eliza Morrison, and settled on the old home farm in Colerain township, where he died in 1857, leaving a family of children, all of whom have removed to other sections of the country. Samuel Martin settled on a part of his father's estate, where he died in April, 1865. His widow, Jane Rankin, died Nov. 17, 1876. They were stanch Presbyterians, and were active supporters of their faith. Mr. Martin was a strong anti-slavery man, and he and Abner Davis, at one time were the only ones in that section to vote the Anti-slavery ticket. In after years he was a strong Republican. Samuel Martin and wife left four children. (1) James R., who was born in 1829, died in 1850, unmarried. (2) William S. (3) Elijah, born in 1834, married Miss Lydia Thompson, and settled on the old homestead in Colerain township, where he died in 1893; his wife died in Aug., 1874. They left seven children: Samuel, living near Christiana, Lancaster county; Sarah, a resident of Philadelphia, and unmarried; Mary, married to Benjamin Carter, of Sadsbury township; Ella, a teacher of Lancaster county; Belle wife of Reese Evenson, of Smyrna, Lancaster county; Harriet, married to Callie Scott, of Christiana; and Susan, deceased. (4) Susanna, the only daughter of Samuel and Jane Martin, was born in March, 1836, and married John Coulter, a farmer of Bart township by whom were three children: the eldest Rankin Martin, married to Anna Long; Elizabeth, married to Robert Lesley Patterson; and Mabel, at home.

William Martin, whose name introduces this article, was a student at the select school of Thomas Baker, as well as in the public schools of Colerain township. He was married March 17, 1857, to Joanna, a daughter of Christopher and Mary Quigley Davis.

Christopher Davis was born in this county in 1805, and his wife Mary Quigley Davis was born in Chester county in 1807. They were married in May, 1829, and settled on a farm in Colerain township, where they spent their lives. Mrs. Davis died at this home in 1840, and he passed away in April, 1865, leaving four children. They were consistent members of the Presbyterian Church. He was a stanch Republican, and a strong temperance advocate.

Of the children of Christopher Davis and wife, (1) Joanna was born in April, 1831, and received her education at Kennett Square, in the Ladies Seminary, and at the State Normal in Millersville. She became a teacher and for eight years taught in the public schools of Lancaster and Chester counties. (2) Elizabeth, born in Aug., 1834, married John McGowan, of Lancaster county; they settled in Sadsbury township, where she died in 1867, leaving two children, Elva and Joanna, who married William Thompson, who is now dead. (3) John James born in 1837, was reared in Lancaster county, and when a young man he went to Ohio, where he married Miss Barbara Kirkwood. They live in Caldwell county, Mo., where he is a leading stock dealer. They have one son, William S. (4) William died in young manhood.

William Martin settled on the present home of the family, shortly after his marriage. In 1859 he put up a home, and later constructed enlarged barn and shed accommodations. Here he died in Aug., 1893, leaving a widow and seven living children, two dying in childhood: (1) R. Finney, born at the old family homestead in 1858, married Miss Effie Gibson, of Chester county, and lives on his farm in Chester county. His wife died, leaving him three children: Virginia, Chester and Roy. The second Mrs. Martin was born Rebecca Lewis, of Philadelphia, and is the mother of one child, Thomas. (2) Martha K., born in Colerain in 1860, married George Moffatt and now resides in Scranton, Pa., where he is engaged in business as an electrical engineer. (3) Elizabeth B. Martin, born in 1863, was educated in the Millersville State Normal with her sister Martha, and lives at home, unmarried. (4) Jane K. Martin was born at the present home of the family, and is still at home unmarried. (5) Arrabell R. and (6) May died with diphtheria, in childhood. (7) Thaddeus S. Martin, is unmarried, and is a clerk and bookkeeper in a business house in Philadelphia. (8) Joseph Davis, born at the family home, is single, and has charge of the home farm. (9) Maud Martin, born in 1877, attended the State Normal in Chester county, from which she was graduated in the class of 1897, and after teaching five years in the public schools of Delaware county, married Robert Treat Hogg, son of William H. and Esther (Hastings) Hogg, of Colerain, Lancaster county.

Mr. Martin and his wife were connected with the Presbyterian Church.

DAVID MYERS, one of the leading men of Strasburg township, is a worthy representative of one of the old settlers of Lancaster county. Grandfather John Myers, with his estimable wife, Polly (Creamer) Myers, came many years ago from his home in Germany and settled in this county, becoming one of the large landholders and successful farmers, and leaving behind them, at death, the record of worthy lives. Most especially was Grandmother Myers, who lived a beautiful life for eighty years, beloved by the community for her deeds of neighborly kindness, and her loving care over the children who ever found in her a sympathetic friend. She survived her husband thirty years, and was the devoted mother of these children: Sophia, who died unmarried; Sally, who married Henry Reminskey; Polly, who died unwedded; Fannie, who married John Graham; John, a farmer of Strasburg township; Frederick, a farmer of Bart township; David; and Benjamin, who died early.

David Myers, father of the subject of this biography, was always a farmer of Eden township, where he became a man of property and prominence, and faithfully served as township supervisor, being trusted and esteemed by his fellow-citizens. His marriage had been to Mary Homsher, who lived to the age of fifty-one, and became the mother of ten children: Abraham and Eliza, twins, the former now a resident of Lancaster City, the latter deceased at the age of twenty-one; Samuel, a farmer of Eden township; Jacob, a resident of Eden; Mary, deceased, the wife of John Johnson, also deceased; Fannie, the widow of Jacob Readman, a farmer of Bart township; Margaret, late wife of Robert Swisher, deceased; David; Henry, deceased, a farmer of Bart township; Julia, the youngest, the wife of Dr. Keeley, of Georgetown, in Bart township.

David Myers (2) was born in what now is Eden township, on April 11, 1828, a son of David and Mary (Homsher) Myers. He was brought up on his father's farm in early boyhood, and was educated in both subscription and public schools. At the age of sixteen, as his services were not needed at home, he engaged with neighboring farmers at work, by the month, his father receiving his wages until he was twenty-one. When David Myers started out for himself, he continued to engage in agricultural labor, finding plenty of employment, both by the day and by the month, and soon accumulated money which he wisely saved, using it at a later date in the purchase of land. When about twenty-five years old he married, and then purchased a small farm in Strasburg township, but he later disposed of it, first renting and then purchasing the farm upon which he has since resided. This farm became Mr. Myers' property in 1872; it contains sixty-five acres of very valuable land, and here he followed general farming, with such excellent results that in 1896 he was able to retire from active life and enjoy the rest earned by a long season of industry.

The marriage of David Myers took place Dec. 14, 1852, to Mary A. Wirth, a daughter of Powell Wirth. She was born in 1826, in Germany, where she lived until the age of nine; she died Jan. 22, 1899, the devoted and unselfish mother of a family of eleven children. (1) Henry, born in Sept., 1853, is a farmer of Chester county, Pa., married Clara Edwards, and has these children, David, Aaron, Mary, Mattie, Benjamin, Harry, Allan and Elias. (2) John, born in Sept., 1856, is a farmer of Paradise township, married Frances McCleary, and has these children, Harry, Annie, David, May, Lizzie, Ada and Frank. (3) Elam, born in March, 1858, is a carpenter, residing in Lancaster City, married May Keeley, and has these children, Estella, Paul, Iva, Helen and Jerome. (4) Annie, born in March, 1859, married Jacob Weaver, of Bart township, and has these children, Mary and Ross. (5) Mattie, born in August, 1863, married George Wirth, a farmer of Bart township, and has these children, Annie, Mary, Kate, John, Martha, Sadie, George, Gertrude and Clayton. (6) Katie, born in March, 1866, married John Burkholder, of Strasburg borough, and has two children, Jacob and Edna. (7)

Elias, born Oct. 13, 1867, lives on the farm where he and all his children were born. He married Mary Snyder, and has these children, Nettie, Aaron, Ross, Clarence, Maud and Anna Mary. (8) Sarah, born in Sept., 1870, married Henry Kreider, a farmer of Bart township, and has three children, Elva, Frank and Blanch. (9) Margaret was born Jan. 2, 1862, and died the following August. (10) David was born in May, 1860, and died May 13, 1864, just four years old to a day. (11) Louisa, born April 5, 1865, died Aug. 6, 1865.

Surrounded by his numerous descendants, Mr. Myers is almost like a patriarch of old, and it doubtless gives him much comfort and satisfaction to know that the greater number cling to the old religious faith in which he and his beloved wife so carefully reared them. For many years he has been a leading member of the Old Mennonite Church, and is most highly esteemed and respected, while the whole family is regarded as one which fairly can be said to represent the best class of citizens in their part of Lancaster county.

JACOB LINDEMUTH ZIEGLER, M. D., has been actively engaged in the practice of medicine in Mt. Joy for a period of fifty-eight years, though of late he has given over the more arduous work to his son, who has been in partnership with him for some time. There has been no more appreciative witness to the many changes which have taken place in Lancaster county during his long life than Dr. Ziegler, and he has given practical and substantial encouragement to many of the most important improvements.

The Doctor was born Nov. 17, 1822, in East Donegal township, this county, at the old family home on the banks of the Susquehanna river, a little west of Rowenna. He is of Swiss ancestry in the paternal line, his great-grandfather, who was one of the earliest white settlers in Manor township, having been a native of the "Mountain Republic." Conrad and Magdalena (Schock) Ziegler, grandparents of the Doctor, were born in Manor township, and after their marriage settled in East Donegal township, where they passed the remainder of their days. He was a farmer by occupation. Their children were Mrs. Henry Strickler; Jacob; Mrs. Lewis Lindemuth; Martha, Mrs. Joseph Strickler, of York county; and Conrad, who married Miss Schoch. Mr. Ziegler died in 1831, his wife in 1826, and their remains rest in Peck's cemetery, in East Donegal township.

Jacob Ziegler, the Doctor's father, was born in Manor township and passed the greater part of his life in East Donegal township, where he engaged in farming until he retired, some seven years before his death. He was a successful man, accumulated a comfortable competence, and was one of the directors of the Lancaster County Bank. He married Barbara Lindemuth, a native of East Donegal township, who survived him, passing away in 1873, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. His death occurred in Maytown in 1870, when he was aged eighty-six. Both are buried in the Lutheran cemetery in Maytown. Mrs. Ziegler was a member of the Lutheran Church. Of the children born to this worthy couple, David died when two years old. Martha, now residing in Maytown, is the widow of Dr. Shireman, of East Donegal township. Jacob L. is the subject proper of these lines. Barbara (deceased) was the wife of John S. Mann, who is a farmer of Manor township. Anna married M. M. Hoffman, of East Donegal township. Mrs. Barbara Ziegler was descended from German stock, her grandfather having been a native of Germany, whence he emigrated to this country in 1764, settling in East Donegal township, where he was one of the earliest pioneers. He engaged in farming. Peter Lindemuth, Mrs. Ziegler's father, was born in East Donegal township, as was also his wife, whose maiden name was Wolfe. Mr. Lindemuth followed farming there until he retired, shortly before his death, which occurred in 1830. He and his wife passed their last days in the home now occupied by Dr. Ziegler, and they are buried in Mt. Joy cemetery. Their family consisted of seven children, Jacob, Peter, Barbara (Mrs. Ziegler), Christiana (Mrs. Long), John, George and Lewis.

Jacob L. Ziegler lived on the farm until he was thirteen years old, and received his early instruction in the local public schools. Thereafter he pursued his literary studies in Rev. Mr. Simpson's Institute, at Marietta, John Beck's Academy, at Lititz, and the Mt. Joy Institute. He taught school one season, in 1839-40, and in 1840 took up the study of medicine, reading with Dr. Nathaniel Watson, of Donegal Springs, for the next four years. Meantime, in 1842-43-44, he also attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which institution he was graduated in 1844. He continued with his preceptor until Aug. 5, that year, when he came to Mt. Joy, where he has ever since remained. Dr. Ziegler has always enjoyed the confidence of his fellow citizens, in both professional and private life, and he has been the recipient of many honors, especially in medical circles. He is a valued member of the Lancaster County Medical Society, of which he was twice elected president; a member of the Pennsylvania State Medical Society, of which he was elected vice-president in 1879, and president in 1881; a member of the Society of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia, of which he has been president five terms, and is still serving, having been re-elected in November, 1901; a member of the Pathological Society, Philadelphia; and of the American Medical Association. Since 1886 the Doctor has been surgeon of the Pennsylvania Railway Company.

In 1862 Dr. Ziegler was sworn in as a private in Co. E, 10th P. V. I., and sent to Hagerstown, Md., where he was detailed in his professional capacity. He returned home after a few weeks' service. The Doctor holds membership in the G. A. R.

Though his duties as a general practitioner over a wide field have been arduous, Dr. Ziegler has found time to indulge his literary tastes, which have taken him particularly into the field of history and genealogy. In this connection he is a zealous member of the Lancaster Historical Society, the Pennsylvania Historical Society, the Presbyterian Historical Society, the Pennsylvania Genealogical Society, and the Forestry Society, and he is a recognized authority in local history. His chronicles are reliable, and well set forth. Since 1875 the Doctor has been collecting data for a history of Donegal Church, which has been recently published. In 1880 he was honored by Lafayette College with the degree of A. M.

Dr. Ziegler has attended the Donegal Church since 1840, and has been on the membership list since 1845. He is an elder at present and has never shirked his part in the benevolent work of the congregation. Though not particularly active in public affairs, at any rate as an office holder, the Doctor served two years, 1861-62, as burgess of Mt. Joy. He is a Republican in political sentiment. All in all, he has played a useful part in the community where his lot has been cast, and he has commanded the highest esteem from all with whom he has been associated.

On April 18, 1848, Dr. Ziegler was married, at his present home in Mt. Joy, to Miss Harriet B. Patterson, who was born in Rapho township, this county, daughter of Col. James and Mary (Watson) Patterson. They were natives, respectively, of Rapho and East Donegal townships, and passed their latter days retired in Mt. Joy, dying in the home now occupied by Dr. Ziegler. Mrs. Ziegler passed away July 9, 1900, in her eighty-third year, and her remains rest in the Donegal Church cemetery. She was the mother of the following named children: James P., M. D., who practices with his father; Walter M. L., M. D., of Philadelphia; J. Stanley, who is in the Government employ at Washington, D. C.; Thomas M. B., ticket, freight and express agent at Luray, Va.; and Mary R., who died at the age of eight years. The sons are all unmarried.

CHRISTIAN EBY, deceased. The Eby family is one of the oldest and best known in Lancaster county, and among its noted representatives a century ago was Bishop Peter Eby. Christian was the second son of this well known bishop and was born on the homestead at Eby's Curve in Salisbury township, Aug. 22, 1795. He was a life-long farmer and remained on a portion of the old homestead until 1847, when he removed to Strasburg township and there spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1877, aged eighty-one years. He was a man of superior mental and moral attainments, though quiet and unostentatious in manner. Before the free school system was established he took a deep interest in the cause of education and served in the ca-capacity of trustee. But though public-spirited, progressive and the strong advocate of law and order, he was content to live his own quiet, individual life, and did not seek public office nor public prominence. When a young man he married Miss Rebecca Witwer, a native of Earl township, daughter of David and Mary (Rife) Witwer. To Christian and Rebecca Eby were born a family of twelve children, namely: Mariah, widow of Henry Brackbill, residing in Paradise township, south of Leaman Place; Margaret, who died unmarried, at the age of seventy-two years; David, who resides on the old homestead in Strasburg township; Elizabeth, unmarried; Levi, a resident of Lancaster city; Rebecca, wife of Henry Rohrer, of Hagerstown, Md.; Samuel, a sketch of whom appears below; Benjamin, a resident of East Lampeter township; Catherine, wife of Emanuel Neff, a resident of Strasburg township; Emanuel; Peter, who was killed in childhood; and Anna, who died in infancy. The parents were devout members of the Mennonite Church.

SAMUEL EBY, son of Christian and Rebecca Eby, was born April 19, 1834, in Salisbury township. He was reared on the farm, receiving his education in the common schools of Salisbury and Strasburg townships. At the age of twenty-two years he began his own individual career by taking a farm in Strasburg township to work on shares. Later he purchased from his father a farm of 117 acres in Bart township. This he operated for a period of six years, when he sold it and removed to Nottoway county, Va., purchasing a farm there and occupying it for ten years. Returning to Lancaster county, he re-engaged in farming, locating first in Strasburg township and managing the J. F. Herr farm for two years. After one year spent on a farm in East Lampeter township, he moved to the old Eby homestead at Eby's Curve, where he resided for seven years. He then removed to the B. J. Leckler farm, north of the Gap, where he remained for five years. Making public sale of his effects, he spent one year on a small farm of twelve acres and then in 1896 came to Paradise village and engaged in the coal, feed and lumber business, as partner in the firm of Buckwalter & Eby. Three years later Mr. Buckwalter, the junior partner, withdrew and Mr. Eby's son became associated with him, the firm name changing to Eby & Son. The business was established by Adam K. Witmer & Bro., about the time the Pennsylvania road was completed. The present firm do a general warehouse business and Mr. Eby gives it his entire attention. He possesses superior business ability and moreover possesses that broad view of life which looks to the general weal of the community in which he lives. He is one of the most public spirited men in this part of the county, and not only gives passive assent, but active and influential co-operation to enterprises and measures for the public good.

He is highly respected for his many estimable qualities and ranks high in influence and worth.

He married in January, 1856, Miss Mary Ann Esbenschade, daughter of Adam and Mary (Kreider) Esbenschade. Mr. and Mrs. Eby are the parents of three children, Kezia, Phares E., and Elizabeth. Kezia is the wife of Henry Pickel, who conducts the stage line between Lancaster and Paradise and resides at Paradise Village. Phares E., associated with his father in business, was married first to Hettie Snavelly, who died without issue; second, to Salinda Hershey, who left one son, Franklin H.; and third, to Mary Ann Rutt. Elizabeth is the wife of Henry S. Denlinger a farmer of Paradise township. They have four children, Lloyd, Annie, Lottie and Irvin. Mr. and Mrs. Eby and their family are members of the Mennonite Church.

ALEXANDER K. MORRISON, a highly respected citizen and excellent farmer of Lancaster county, resides on his farm of 107 well-improved acres, in Little Britain township, at King's Bridge, and was born in Colerain township, Sept. 30, 1837. His parents were Alexander W. and Margaret (McCommon) Morrison, natives of the same township, but of Scotch-Irish ancestry.

Great-grandfather Gabriel Morrison came to Lancaster county and bought a large tract of land in Colerain township; his son, also Gabriel, married Ann Love, the three children of this union being, Thomas L., Alexander and Julia Ann.

Alexander W. Morrison was born in 1796 and died in 1872. In 1823 he was united in marriage to Margaret McCommon, and eight children were born to this union. Ann Eliza is the widow of Vincent King, of King's Bridge, and the capable housekeeper for A. K. Morrison. She was born in 1824 and her living children are: Elizabeth, the wife of Emmerson Walton, of Colerain township; Vincent, of Colorado; Laura, the wife of John Furniss, of Little Britain; Horace, of Christiana; Joseph M., of California; and Thorwald, of Philadelphia. James M. is a resident of the State of Oregon, a minister in the Presbyterian Church. Joseph B. is a resident and practicing physician of Missouri. The life of Alexander K. is given below. Samuel W. died in 1890; the other three children died in infancy.

Alexander Kinkade Morrison grew to young manhood on the farm, and acquired his education in the public schools of his locality. In August, 1862, he testified to his loyalty to his country by enlisting as a volunteer in the 122nd P. I., and took part in some of the fiercest battles of the Civil war, notably, Fredericksburg, the second battle of Bull Run, Chancellorsville and the Potomac campaign, being honorably discharged in May, 1863. Having escaped both imprisonment and injury, Mr. Morrison returned home and resumed farming, closely applying himself to the line he had chosen. His present fine farm is well improved and bears testimony to his excellence as a farmer, while the respect in which he is held by the community speaks for itself as to his upright character as a citizen.

In politics Mr. Morrison is an active Republican; he served as deputy coroner from 1882 to 1885 and again from 1893 to 1900. He took the census in 1890 for his township, Little Britain; in 1902 he was elected school director for the same township. He is a leading member of the Union Presbyterian Church in Colerain township. Fraternally he belongs to the G. A. R. post, and enjoys talking over the times of stress with comrades who, like himself, were not found wanting when their country's call came. Mr. Morrison has never married, his beloved sister giving him loving care and doing the honors of his hospitable home.

HENRY N. EBY, a general farmer of the township of West Hempfield, Lancaster, was born where he is now living Aug. 16, 1837, a son of Jonas and Veronica (Nissley) Eby, who were born in Elizabeth and Rapho townships, respectively, and came in 1826 to the farm on which Henry N. is now living.

Jonas Eby was engaged from 1820 to 1826 in the milling business on the Little Conestoga river. In 1846 and 1847 he operated the Chiques Valley mill. A man of considerable importance in the local affairs of his time, he served as school director for many years. Born March 14, 1799, he died Oct. 11, 1884. Mrs Veronica Eby was born June 21, 1798, and died Oct. 30, 1839. The father was buried at the Landisville Meeting House cemetery, and the mother on the old Nissley farm. They were members of the Mennonite Church. His standing in the business world is evident from the fact that he served several years as a director of the Union Bank of Mt. Joy. Their children were: John, who is a retired farmer of Lancaster, Pa.; Fanny, late wife of Martin Peiffer, of Salunga, Pa.; Elias, a retired farmer of East Donegal; Samuel, a retired merchant of Mt. Joy; Simon, a retired farmer of Mt. Joy; Amos, died unmarried in 1860; Henry N. Both father and mother were twice married. Dec. 12, 1819, Jonas Eby was married to Veronica Nissley, and Nov. 12, 1863, to Martha Strickler, who died in West Hempfield township, Aug. 7, 1876, at the age of sixty years and almost eight months. She was a daughter of Abraham Strickler, of Lancaster county, who married a Miss Hostetter. Mrs. Veronica (Nissley) Eby, was first married to Abraham Hoover in 1815, and there was born to them Nancy, who was twice married, first to John Bossler, and then to Daniel Kreider, and who is now dead.

John and Mary (Witwer) Eby, the grandparents of Henry N. Eby, were both born in Elizabeth township in this county, and were farming people. The grandfather followed milling along with his farming labors. John Eby died May 25, 1845, at the age of seventy-seven years, and his wife, who died Aug. 25, 1856, was eighty-three years old. They were buried on the old homestead where their long and useful lives had been passed. Born to this union were: Catherine; Jonas; Mary; Rebecca; Elias, who married Elizabeth Erb; Elizabeth, who married Samuel Risser; Levi, who married Anna Nissley; Anna, who married Samuel Hershey.

The paternal great-grandparents of Mr. Eby were Christian and Catherine (Bricker) Eby, who spent their lives on the old homestead, in the township of Elizabeth, where both were born. Christian Eby was the son of Christian, and the grandson of Theodorus, the pioneer settler of the family in this part of the state. Theodorus Eby was a noted man in the family records. The son of Bishop Jacob Eby, he was born in Switzerland in 1663, and, because he was a devoted Mennonite, was compelled to leave his native country in 1704 to escape unendurable persecution. For about eleven years he made his home in the "Palatinate," Germany, but here persecution was quite as severe as at home, and with other co-religionists he left for Philadelphia, Pa. in the spring of 1715, and some time in August of the same year effected a settlement in Lancaster county, where he lived until his death, in the full enjoyment of that liberty that seemed denied elsewhere through all the world. He died Dec. 11, 1737, leaving four sons and one daughter, as follows: Peter; Hannes; Jacob; Christian; Elizabeth, who married Hannes Baehr. The sons were all skilled in the mechanical arts of the day, and it is a matter of tradition that their father built an important mill with no other assistance than they were able to render him.

The maternal grandparents of Mr. Eby were Bishop Samuel Nissley, of Rapho township and Anna Mumma, of West Hempfield township. Bishop Nissley was married three times, to Barbara Greider, to Anna Mumma, and to Maria Longnecker.

Henry N. Eby was twice married, first in 1860, in Lancaster county, Pa., to Mary Franck, becoming by this marriage the father of the following family: Daniel, who died of diphtheria in 1871; Amos F., a farmer in East Donegal township, who married Anna Reist; Fanny, who married Simon E. Garber, of West Donegal township; Jonas, who died at the age of seven months; Levi, a farmer, who married Kate Stauffer, of East Donegal township; Anna, wife of Elias Lindemuth, a farmer of East Donegal township. Mrs. Mary (Franck) Eby, who was born in Warwick township, died Jan. 3, 1876, at the age of thirty-five years, and was buried in Landisville; she was the daughter of Christian and Catherine (Snyder) Franck. Her father was the son of Deacon John Franck, of Warwick.

The second marriage of Mr. Eby occurred Nov. 6, 1878, in Manheim, Pa., when he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Hostetter, and there were born to this marriage, Henry and Elizabeth, twins, and David, all living at home. Elizabeth (Hostetter) Eby was born near Manheim, Pa., Sept. 1, 1841, and was a daughter of David and Maria (Peiffer) Hostetter, both natives of Penn township, where they lived and died. David was the son of Bishop Jacob Hostetter, who passed his entire life on the old homestead of the family in Penn township, a pioneer settler of Lancaster county. They came from Switzerland about 1712, and were Mennonites in the home country.

Mr. Eby has spent his life on the farm where he is now residing, and is one of the prominent and well-to-do people of the county. In religion he is a member of the Mennonite Church, and for ten years served as assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school.

Amos F. Eby, son of Henry N. Eby, a general farmer of East Donegal, and a member of the Paragon Fruit and Nut Co., of Lancaster county, is a man of much push and energy; he was born on the farm of his parents, Oct. 4, 1864. Henry N. and Mary (Frank) Eby, his parents, whose lives are noted above, are living on the old Eby homestead in West Hempfield township.

Mr. Eby was married Oct. 17, 1889, in Rapho township, to Anna Reist, and to this union were born Rhoda R. and Henry R. Mrs. Anna (Reist) Eby is a daughter of Henry B. and Catherine (Garber) Reist. Amos F. Eby remained with his parents until he was twenty-five years old, when he left their sheltering roof to work a year in a creamery, and then entered upon his present work. He has a farm of eighty-one acres, and is in very prosperous circumstances. Since 1897, he has been a school director. Since 1896 Mr. Eby has been associated with the Fruit and Nut Company, and is a prominent and thrifty young man. He belongs to the Mennonite Church.

Mrs. Catherine (Garber) Reist, the mother of Mrs. Amos F. Eby, was born in West Donegal township, May 19, 1833, and was a daughter of John and Catherine (Sechrist) Garber, who were born in Manor and West Hempfield townships, respectively. The father, who was a farmer all his life, died in 1842, and the widowed mother, who survived many years, died in 1879, in her eighty-sixth year, and was buried in West Donegal township. They were members of the Mennonite Church, and became the parents of the following family: Michael; Mary, who married Christ Snyder; Anna, who married John Longnecker, of West Donegal township; Barbara, who died young; John; Christian; Catherine. Her paternal grandparents were Andrew and Maria (Nolt) Garber, of Lancaster county, and her maternal grandparents were of the Sechrist family, an important one in the same county.

Henry B. Reist, the father of Mrs. Anna Eby, of East Donegal township, who is noted above as marrying Amos F. Eby, was a valuable and useful citizen of Lancaster county in his lifetime. His great-grandparents, Peter and Anna (Boyer) Reist, came from Switzerland, and settled in Pennsylvania, where their descendants have all occupied an honorable and useful station in life.

Henry B. Reist was born in Rapho township, Lancaster county, where he was long and successfully engaged not only in farming but in commercial and financial pursuits. For twelve years prior to his decease, he was president of the First National Bank, of Mt. Joy, and was highly esteemed in the community in which he lived. He and his wife had children: Ely G., who is now a farmer in Rapho township, Lancaster county; John G., a farmer, and manager of a creamery in Mt. Joy; Mary, the wife of S. S. Kraybill, a farmer of East Donegal township; Henry, an electrician at Schenectady, N. Y.; Emma, the wife of H. N. Hostetter, a farmer in East Donegal township; Anna, the wife of Amos F. Eby, a farmer in East Donegal. Henry B. Reist died in 1879, at the age of forty-seven years, and was buried in East Donegal township. Both he and his wife were members of the Mennonite Church. Mrs. Reist is still living, and makes her home with her daughter Mrs. Eby. Mr. Reist served as school director in Mt. Joy township, for some years.

John G. Reist, who was born in Mt. Joy township in 1857, resides in Mt. Joy, and devotes his attention to the large creamery business of Reist, Nissley & Co., of which he is the junior partner. The creamery was built in 1887, and its patronage is steadily increasing under its very able management. In 1889 Mr. Reist was married to Miss Catherine Hostetter, of Manor township, and a daughter of Ezra Hostetter; to this union were born three children: Florence, Esther and John.

HENRY R. ERB, of Pine Hill, Lancaster county, was born Aug. 12, 1847, on the farm adjoining that on which he at present resides, and is a son of Reuben and Hettie (Royer) Erb, both now deceased.

Reuben Erb was a son of David Erb, who was descended from Christian Erb, one of the earliest natives of Lancaster county. Reuben Erb was a miller and farmer in Warwick township, and was reared to these vocations in his father's mill and on his father's farm. To his marriage with Hettie Royer were born two children, Henry R. and Susannah, of whom the latter died in early childhood. In politics Reuben Erb was a Republican.

Henry R. Erb was reared on the home, and agriculture has been his life pursuit, although he is now practically retired. He is the owner of productive farms adjoining, and comprising 500 acres. These farms have long been the property of the Erb family—one tract of 225 acres for several generations. His great-great-grandfather, Christian Erb, above alluded to, owned and lived upon this farm, and it is surmised that the father of Christian was the original purchaser, as he was the founder of the Erb family in this county.

Henry R. Erb has been one of the most active and public-spirited men of the county, and as a Republican has taken considerable interest in public affairs. He has held the office of school director and at present is a director in the Lititz National Bank.

Mr. Erb was married, in 1867, to Miss Elizabeth A. Wolf, daughter of Henry Wolf, of Warwick township, and to this union have been born two children, of whom one died in infancy; the other, Annie N., is the wife of D. M. Grobill, of East Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

The Erb family, besides being one of the oldest, is one of the most highly respected in Lancaster county, where, even within the memory of Henry R. Erb himself many miraculous changes have taken place in the county limits. To the great improvements that have been made locally Mr. Erb has contributed freely of his means, and has been personally active in their promotion.

MILTON KEYLOR, a wealthy and retired farmer of Colerain township, Lancaster county, was born June 14, 1828, in Bart township, a son of John and Sarah (Meginness) Keylor. The father was born in Raumland, Germany, Jan. 19, 1790; and the mother Oct. 13, 1795, in Colerain township. She was a daughter of James Meginness, who was born in Delaware in 1767. His life was mostly spent in Colerain township, Lancaster county, where he died Nov. 1, 1839. John F. Meginness is one of his grandsons.

John Keylor was the son of Jacob Keylor, who came with his wife and family to the shores of America in 1795, to escape the woe and devastation of war in Germany. They landed at Newcastle, Delaware, and made their way to Chester county, where they were given employment by Richard Baker, who had his home on the banks of the Brandywine. Jacob Kuehler, whose name was anglicized to "Keylor," died at his home in Chester county in 1816, leaving a widow and five children. John was the father of Milton Keylor; Henry, who was born in Germany in 1793, married Eliza A. Swisher, and settled in Bart township, where he died July 21, 1875; Katherine Keylor, born in Germany in 1795, married Thomas Mullen, who settled in Delaware, where she died in 1826. There were born to Jacob Keylor and his wife after their arrival in this country two daughters, Maria and Hannah. Maria Keylor, who was born in 1800, married John Buffington, and settled near Atglen, where she died in 1896. Hannah Keylor, who was born in Chester county, in 1802, married Nathan Famous, and settled near Unionville; she died in the home of her son-in-law, Thomas Mullen, at Kennett Square, in 1892.

John Keylor, the father of Milton, began his career in Bart township, as an independent farmer. During the war of 1812 he was called upon to raise a company, which he did, though their services were never required. In his after life he was very successful, and became quite prosperous, owning three farms in Lancaster county. His death occurred Nov. 3, 1872, and he was buried by the side of his wife in Friends' cemetery. She died in September, 1865. In Germany the Keylors were Presbyterians, but as Richard Baker, mentioned above, was a Quaker, they accompanied him to the Friends Meeting at Bradford, and soon learned to use the Quaker speech, and adopted that faith.

John Keylor and his wife had seven children who lived to maturity. (1) Ann E. Keylor, born in January, 1825, married Daniel Byer, in February, 1848, and settled in Juniata county, where in 1875 Mr. Byer died. She moved to Chester county, where she died in 1879, leaving four children: John J., of Chester county; Hannah, who died at home in 1902; Sarah, who married Davis Bailey, of Thorndale, Chester county; and Anna at the home in Chester county. The first child, Emma, had died previously.

(2) Hannah M. Keylor, born Aug. 10, 1826, was the widow of E. H. Emory, and lived on a part of the old Keylor homestead, which had passed into her hands. She died in April, 1902. Her two sons, John K. and Clement M. Emory, are both single.

(3) Milton Keylor, whose name introduces this article, is the third member of the family.

(4) Sarah Keylor was born Feb. 26, 1830, and married for her first husband Lewis H. Selzer, a merchant of Steelville, who died very shortly after marriage, leaving one son, Harry, who is in business in Wilmington, Delaware. Mrs. Selzer later married W. F. McLimaris, and has her home in West Grove, Chester county.

(5) John B. Keylor, born Dec. 2, 1831, became a cabinet maker, and devoted several years of his early manhood to this trade. He was married to Miss Leah L. Ritz, of Bart township, in 1858, and located in South Charleston, Clark Co., Ohio, where Mr. Keylor died Feb. 10, 1863, leaving a widow and one son, Howard R., who was born Oct. 9, 1860. Mrs. Keylor did not remain in Ohio long after the death of her husband, but came back to Pennsylvania in May, 1871. She married for her second husband, George Sterrett, of Philadelphia. They removed in October, 1871, to Walla Walla, Washington, where she died April 10, 1889. Howard Keylor, her son, was educated in the University of Michigan, where he was graduated as a physician in 1882. After this he took a special course in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore. In December, 1882 he began the practice of his profession at Walla Walla, Wash., where he soon became eminent. He was appointed surgeon-general of the Territorial militia, which position he held at the time Washington was admitted to the Union,

May 10, 1890. He was afterward appointed on the State Board of Medical Examiners, and became its secretary, a position he is still holding. In 1889 he married Miss Sarah F. Stine, of Walla Walla, a native of California. They have two daughters, Edna and Leah.

(6) George Keylor, born May 18, 1834, married Anna McGinness, of Montour county, Pa., in March, 1856, and had a home on a farm in Colerain township, where Mrs. Keylor died in May, 1874, at the age of thirty-nine years. Her remains were taken to her home and interred at the family lot in Milton, Pa. She left one son, Harry J., who was born in March, 1857. He learned the saddler's trade, and located in Montour county. Harry J. Keylor married in Danville, Pa., and has two children. George Keylor married for his second wife, Anna Scott, of Bart township, and located in Delaware, where he died in January, 1900, leaving one son, Bayard, who has since died.

(7) Henry Keylor, born in April, 1836, was reared as a farmer, and married Martha Scott, of Colerain township, where they are now living on a farm. They have two children, Frank and Nannie, both of whom are at home.

(8) Wellington Keylor, born in 1838, died in childhood in 1844.

Milton Keylor remained at the home farm until he was of age, and received his early education in the district schools in Bart township. For a few months he also attended a select school taught by James Brown. Mr. Keylor and Rebecca Byer, the eldest daughter of David and Mary (McElwain) Byer, were married Sept. 13, 1849. Mrs. Keylor was born Feb. 17, 1827, and was reared to young womanhood in Bart township. She is a lady of high character, and has shared with her husband fifty-three years of married life. They celebrated their golden wedding Sept. 13, 1899, on the farm they purchased in 1854.

For many years Milton Keylor took an active part in local affairs; for twelve years he was a member of the school board, and his interest in the cause of public education is shown by the fact that at one time he provided a house on his farm for the establishment of a high school, which was taught by James McCullough. Mr. Keylor was one of the founders of the Colerain and Bart Farmers' Club, and the Quarryville National Bank. He took an active part in the building of the Oxford and Peach Bottom Railroad, contributing liberally to its funds. For many years he was a trustee of the Colerain Baptist Church, of which he and his family have been consistent and helpful members. In his politics he is a Democrat.

Mr. and Mrs. Keylor have been devoted to the education of their family. They would go with their children on long drives as far as into Maryland, and would stay for a few days at Cape May, Long Branch or Atlantic City. He has attended the inauguration of two presidents, Gen. Grant and Grover Cleveland, taking Mrs. Keylor on both occasions to the national capital. Mr. Keylor has also attended three national expositions, in New York in 1853, the Centennial at Philadelphia, in 1876, and the Columbian, at Chicago, in 1893. Both are enjoying good health, and their friends cherish the hope that they may be long spared to each other.

The oldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Keylor was James Ellwood, born Aug. 21, 1851; he was educated in the public schools of his community, and at the Millersville State Normal, for several years following the profession of teaching. In April, 1881, he married Anna C., a daughter of John M. and Fannie (Stively) Sherk, of Quarryville. For four years after his marriage he continued to teach, and then, feeling a call in that direction, prepared for the gospel ministry, at Crozier Seminary, in Chester county, and in the fall of 1885 set himself to a theological course, which he concluded in 1888. That year he received a call to the Baptist Church in Newfield, N. J., where he was ordained in November. For seven years he was pastor of that church. In 1895 he was called to the Windsor Baptist Church, in Chester county, where he is still located. He is the father of two children, John Milton and Rena F. John Milton Keylor is a graduate of the West Chester Normal, of Chester county, and now holds a position as teacher in Swarthmore College. Rena F. Keylor, born in December, 1884, resides at home, and is a student at the Westchester Normal.

Anna M. Keylor, the second child of Milton Keylor, was born at the present home of the family, April 18, 1853, was educated at the Union High School and was a successful teacher for four years. She was married in 1876 to William B. Ryner, a native of Bart township, and they are now living on their farm in Colerain township, where they have two children: Rebecca A., born in 1883, who graduated in 1902 at the State Normal School at Millersville and is now teaching; Spencer C., born in 1887, who is at home with his parents.

Dr. Henry E. Keylor, second of Milton Keylor, born Aug. 13, 1855, studied medicine with Dr. Thomas Wentz, of Kirkwood, was graduated with honor at Jefferson Medical College in 1878, and at once entered upon the practice of his profession, but he was taken ill and died in September, 1880. He never married.

Dr. Josiah B. Keylor, the fourth child of Milton Keylor, studied in the public schools, and the Union High School, and graduated at the Millersville State Normal in July, 1879. After a year teaching, for which his degree of B. E., indicated ability, he received the degree of M. E., and in 1880 was made the head of the high school of Maytown, Lancaster county. In 1881 he resigned this position to take that of superintendent of the Manheim borough schools. It was his first intention to continue the profession of teaching as his life work, but after the death of his brother Henry, he determined to become a physician himself. He began his medical studies under Dr. George T. Dare, of Oxford, Chester county, and in 1882 entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, at Baltimore, from which he was graduated in 1885. He began his professional career at Cochranville, Chester county, and very soon made for himself more than a local reputation as a capable and rising physician.

In religion he is a member of the English Baptist Church, in politics, a Democrat, and fraternally, a devoted and enthusiastic member of the I. O. O. F., of which he has been an efficient member for a number of years. He is a Past Grand of Hebron Lodge, No. 437, of Chester county. He is also a Past Master of Skerret Lodge, No. 343, F. & A. M., having served as representative to the Grand Lodge, Masonic Temple, Philadelphia.

Dr. Keylor has traveled quite extensively, and has visited in thirteen states of the Union, from the Atlantic to the Pacific; in 1880 he spent seven weeks in Colorado and Wyoming with his brother Henry, who was seeking a return of health in the mountains.

Dr. Keylor was married in June, 1895, to Miss Lillian B. Rakestraw, of Strasburg township. They have their home in Cochranville, where the doctor owns real estate, and they have one daughter, Catherine Rebecca.

JOHN H. ZELLER (deceased) was in his day one of the leading officials and citizens of Lancaster county, as well as one of its most enterprising business men. He was born in Shrewsbury, York Co., Pa., May 29, 1832, son of Charles and Martha (Green) Zeller, the former a native of York and the latter of Lancaster county.

John H. Zeller was reared in Florin, Lancaster county, where he was educated in the public schools, and at the age of fifteen years began teaching, a vocation he continued to follow until about 1862, when he was elected to the office in the court of quarter sessions of the county and moved to Lancaster; he remained in the city but six months, however, and then returned to Florin. In 1857 he was elected a justice of the peace, but on his removal to Mt. Joy in 1870, resigned this office; in the meantime, from the expiration of his office in the court of quarter sessions in 1866 until his coming to Mt. Joy, he conducted a mercantile business in Florin. At this place in 1872, he was again elected justice of the peace and re-elected in 1877. In 1879 he was elected clerk of the Orphans' Court, served three years and then expressed a desire to retire to private life. But his many friends insisted upon his once more taking the office of justice of the peace, which he had previously so ably and satisfactorily filled. He finally consented and filled the office until 1883, when he resigned in order to become a notary—an office he held until death, Oct. 31, 1898.

In addition to the elective offices, Mr. Zeller had filled, he was active in other walks of life. For many years he was a school director, was a director in the First National Bank of Mt. Joy, was one of the founders of the Henry Eberly cemetery at Mt. Joy, and for forty-seven years clerked at public sales. He was also director in the Marietta and Mount Joy Turnpike Company, was a fire insurance and real estate agent, was a collector, scrivener and surveyor, and did a large business in settling up estates. He was one of the busiest men in the county, was known everywhere and stood very high in the esteem of the people. He was a quiet, unassuming gentleman, of a kindly disposition and honest to the core. He was emphatically what is called a self-made man, having started as a farmer-lad and rising to the position of leading official and a business man of eminence. In politics he was a Republican and fraternally was a Knight of Pythias.

Mr. Zeller was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Hinny, who was born in Oregon, Lancaster Co., Pa., March 3, 1833, daughter of Samuel and Margaret Hinny. To this marriage there were born nine children, in the following order: Samuel H., Nov. 27, 1851, died April 19, 1854; Charles H., born Oct. 25, 1855; William H., July 25, 1858, died Sept. 28, 1888; John B. S., Jan. 3, 1861; Sallie A. H., Jan. 10, 1863, now the wife of C. L. Erby; Jacob H., March 3, 1866, the representative of the Prudential Life Insurance Company, and for six years superintendent of the Lancaster Caramel works at Mt. Joy; U. S. Grant, born Oct. 31, 1868, died July 1, 1872; Henry H., born Dec. 18, 1870, a clerk and salesman; Etta May, born April 19, 1873, the wife of C. K. Bennett.

Charles H. Zeller, the eldest living of the above named children, was reared in Mt. Joy and was there educated in the common schools. At fourteen years of age, he began learning the painter's trade, but two years later abandoned it, and for six years was engaged in iron moulding in Mt. Joy and Lancaster; he was next employed in various lines of business until 1877, when he began auctioneering and this he has followed successfully for twenty-six years, averaging twenty-five sales annually. For years, also, from 1884, he has been a trusted collector and in February of that year was elected justice of the peace, a position he has held with credit to himself, continuously until the present time. At the death of his father he succeeded to the business, which he still conducts in all its details. He also served from about 1879 to 1882 as constable, and is now a justice of the peace. He is also a director in the Marietta and Mt. Joy Turnpike Company.

Fraternally, Charles H. Zeller is Master of Records of the K. of G. E.; is Recording Secretary of the O. U. A. M.; is treasurer of the D. of L., in which he has passed all the chairs, and is a member of the Degree of Pocahontas; also of the K. of M. C., the I. O. O. R., and the K. of M. In politics Mr. Zeller has always been a Republican.

Charles H. Zeller was married Dec. 23, 1875, to Miss Subilla Morton, daughter of William Morton, of Lancaster county. Mr. Zeller, through his business ability and astuteness, has realized a competency and is now living in comfort and in the enjoyment of the esteem of a large circle of warm-hearted friends.

EPHRAIM E. WEAVER, a skillful, progressive and energetic farmer of Manor township, is a native of Lancaster county, born on the old homestead in East Lampeter township Dec. 7, 1866, and was educated in the public schools of that locality. He remained at home until his father retired from active business, and then entered the employ of his brother-in-law, Mr. Girven, on whose farm he worked two or three years, after which he was in the employ of his brothers, Aaron and Benjamin F. Weaver, in Manor township, for ten years.

On Nov. 18, 1891, Mr. Weaver married Miss Hettie E. Houser, a daughter of Christian and Emma (Hoover) Houser, and a granddaughter of John Houser. The first of the Houser family to come to America was her great-great-grandfather, Christian Houser, a native of Germany, who located in Lancaster county, Pa. Mrs. Weaver's father was one of a family of four children, was a farmer of Lampeter township, and was a member of the Mennonite Church. He died June 19, 1898, at the age of fifty-four years, but her mother is still living, at the age of fifty-six. In their family were nine children, of whom Mrs. Weaver is the eldest, the others being John E., a farmer of Lampeter township; Winnie M.; Lizzie M., who died Aug. 16, 1902; Ella M., who was married March 12, 1902, to Ellis Weaver, and is living on a farm in West Lampeter township; Mabel K.; Emma L.; Ethel A.; and Maud C. Mr. and Mrs. Weaver have two children: Albert E., born March 14, 1893; and Ruth E., born June 2, 1895.

In the spring of 1892 Mr. Weaver located upon his present farm in Manor township, which he had purchased the previous fall. It consists of forty-seven and a half acres on the Columbia turnpike, three and a half miles west of Lancaster, and since it came into the possession of Mr. Weaver he has made many valuable improvements thereon, the place and its entire surroundings denoting the thrift, enterprise and prosperity of the owner. He follows general farming, and is numbered among the most progressive men of his community. In his political affiliations he is a Republican.

JOSEPH DICKINSON HARPER, one of the prominent and prosperous business citizens of Christiana, Pa., was born in Upper Oxford township, Chester county, on Oct. 3, 1844. His parents were Jacob W. and Rachel (Dickinson) Harper, of Upper Oxford township, on the father's side, who was born in the old Harper homestead there, and of Salisbury township, in this county, on the mother's side, her native place having been on the site of what is now Lapps postoffice.

Grandfather William C. Harper was a native of County Derry, Ireland, a nail maker by trade, and he came to America at the time of the Irish insurrection. His marriage was to Mary Weldon, and they settled in Chester Co., Pa., on a farm near Russellville, and both belonged to the Presbyterian Church. The maternal grandparents of Joseph Dickinson Harper were Joseph and Phoebe (Morris) Dickinson, of Lancaster Co., Pa. Mr. Dickinson in connection with his farming engaged in merchandising also, and erected what is now Lapps store, for his son, Joseph.

Father Jacob W. Harper was a blacksmith by trade and a veterinary surgeon by profession, became prominent in his township and held many of the local offices. His death occurred in 1885, at the age of seventy-four years, and that of his wife in 1877, at the age of sixty-five years. Their burial was at Faggs Manor Presbyterian cemetery, in Chester county, the former having been a member of the Presbyterian Church, while the latter adhered consistently through life to the tenets of the Society of Friends. Their children were: Joseph D.; Mary W., who married Harry Witmer, a grocer in Lancaster; Phoebe A., who married Henry Bowman, a farmer of Buck Run, Chester county; Rachel, who died young; Emma J., deceased, who married Samuel Brookhart, of Silver Spring, Pa., a conductor on the Philadelphia & Reading R. R.; and John, who died from the effects of a kick from a horse, in 1875.

At the age of eight years Joseph Dickinson Harper went to live with his paternal grandparents and remained there, going to school and working on the farm, until he was seventeen years of age, returning then to his father, under whom he learned the blacksmith's trade. At the age of twenty-one he went to Russellville and worked for twenty-three months in a carriage-making establishment, going from there to Jennerville, where he rented a large carriage-making shop for a period of two years. For four years he was in the same business in Cochranville, coming to Christiana in 1876. Here he bought out the establishment conducted by Lingerfield & Hirst, and has successfully pushed this business ever since, becoming a leader in this part of the county. Mr. Harper has been noted for his industry and his present large business is mainly due to the honest and upright methods which he has adopted, in connection with a close attention and thorough, practical knowledge of all details.

The marriage of Mr. Harper was on Jan. 15, 1874, in Lancaster, to Miss Eliza A. Harvey, and the children born to this marriage were: Taylor W., who lives at home, unmarried, and follows the trade of carriage painter; Arvilla J., a talented teacher; Chester T., who is attending college at New Brunswick; and Myra E., at home. The birth of FARM AND HOME OF E. E. WEAVER , MANOR TP.

Mrs. Harper was in West Fallowfield township, Chester county, in 1844, a daughter of Capt. Joseph and Eliza (McGloughlin) Harvey. The former was a farmer and also a blacksmith, was captain of the old Pennsylvania militia, and died in 1872, at the age of seventy-eight years, the mother surviving until 1879, dying at the age of seventy-five. Both parents of Mrs. Harper were consistent members of the Baptist Church. Their children were: Streeter, who died young; James, who died aged seventy; E. Pennock, a farmer of Chester county; Rebecca, who resides with her sister, Eliza A., Mrs. Harper; Joel M., a butcher and grocer, in Parkesburg, and Taylor, deceased.

Mr. Harper has long been a member of the Presbyterian Church where he contributes liberally of his means. In political belief he is a Democrat, although his personal feelings lead him to favor much that he finds in the Prohibition party. In all things he is a good citizen, and fills every duty to his family, church and community in a way to secure to him the high esteem of his fellow-citizens.

DAVID S. HORST, a watchmaker and formerly a farmer of Rapho township, was born in Mt. Joy township, Jan. 1, 1824, son of Peter and Christina (Shelley) Horst, of Lancaster county.

Peter Horst was a miller, as early as 1816 building a mill in Mt. Joy, on the Little Chiques creek which he ran for forty years. The property still remains in the family. Mr. Horst died in 1876, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years; his wife died in 1870, at the age of seventy-four years. They are both buried in private burying grounds in Rapho township. They were members of the Menonite Church. This couple had children as follows: Abraham S. who died at the age of seventy years, married to Mary Musser; Henry S. who died at the age of seven years; Catherine S., deceased wife of Peter Risser; Fanny S., late wife of Samuel Meckley; David S.; Elizabeth S., who lives at Mt. Joy, Pa.; and Anna S., who is also unmarried, and lives with her sister Elizabeth. The grandparents of Mr. Horst were Michael and Veronica (Shelly) Horst, of Lancaster. In the year 1780 Michael Horst built a stone house which adjoins the residence property of his grandson, David S. Horst. The grandfather, who was a farmer, died in 1829, at the age of seventy-seven years, and his wife died fifteen years later.

There were three brothers of the family who came from Switzerland, one settling in Groffs Dale, Lancaster county, who was the great-great-grandfather of David S. Horst; one near Lebanon, Pa., and the other in York county, Pa. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Horst were Christian and Anna (Engle) Shelley.

In 1850 in Lancaster, David S. Horst married Miss Mary Hershey, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Mr. Strine. There have been no children born to Mr. and Mrs. Horst. Mrs. Horst was born in Rapho township in November, 1825, daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Witmer) Hershey, of Lancaster county. Her father, who was a farmer, died in 1841, at the age of fifty years. His wife died in 1863, at the age of seventy-two years, and they are buried in Cross Roads Meeting House cemetery, East Donegal township. They were members of the River Brethren Church. There were born to this couple the following children: Joseph, deceased; Catherine, deceased wife of John Heisey; Barbara, deceased wife of David Martin; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Benjamin Ritter; Mary, wife of David S. Horst; Veronica, late wife of Joseph Gish, of Rapho township; Susan, wife of Abraham Young, of Mt. Joy; and Jacob, deceased. Mrs. Horst's grandfather was Christian Hershey, of Lancaster county.

David S. Horst remained with his parents until his marriage, when he came to his present home. He worked in the mill part of the time, and part of the time on the farm. He had when a boy of nine acquired a knowledge of the watch making trade, and followed it from that time on whenever he had the time and occasion; as a child he made wooden clocks for his own amusement. Mr. and Mrs. Horst are members of the River Brethren (Dunkard) Church. In politics, Mr. Horst votes the Republican ticket, but he has never been a seeker after office. He is in affluent circumstances, and prominent in the community in which he resides. Although well along in years his health is excellent, and he is able to attend to business as well as a much younger man.

CHARLES H. HINKLE, deceased. There are men who possess a certain kindliness of heart, steadiness of purpose, and stanch assertion of principle, combined with unassuming manners that attract irresistibly to them as steadfast friends all right minded individuals. A man of that character was Charles H. Hinkle, whose life was cut off most prematurely, when he was but forty years of age, and when he was entering upon a career of extended usefulness. In his younger years he was a fireman on the Pennsylvania Railroad, but he abandoned that hazardous occupation to accept the position of messenger and watchman in the Columbia National Bank, a position which he held for nine years to the day of his death in 1885. But he was not only a messenger and watchman. He rose to the position of director as well. He was also at the time of his death a director of the Columbia Gas Company, of which he was for a time secretary and treasurer. He possessed keen business ability and had already acquired a competence when overtaken by death.

Charles H. Hinkle was born in West Hempfield township in 1845, the son of Henry and Sally (McGee) Hinkle, representatives of the oldest families of Lancaster county. His grandfather, Honnes Hinkle, was born near Lancaster in 1775. His father, Henry Hinkle, also a native of Lancaster county removed to Maytown in 1768, and remained there until 1778. He was drafted into the Revolutionary war but ran away with several other drafted men and took refuge on Mundorff's Island, below Safe Harbor, where he was captured by a detachment of soldiers and brought to Lancaster. He was detailed to drive a team in the supply train of the Continental army, and participated in the battles of Trenton and Brandywine. He remained in the army until honorably discharged.

Honnes Hinkle had the following children: Joseph, who became a farmer of York county; William, who settled in Donegal township, Lancaster county; John, who moved to Ohio; Honnes; Henry; Isaac; Patience, who was married to Joseph Mays; Catherine, who married Henry Knights, a tanner and also for a time proprietor of the "Black Horse Hotel" in Columbia; Nancy, who married Jacob Attstatt, and Elizabeth, who married John Lockard. Honnes was a man of rugged pioneer type, honest and blunt in manner, and a general favorite among the early settlers. He married a Miss Kauffman.

Henry Hinkle, son of Honnes, was born in West Hempfield township, near Columbia, in 1801. After the death of his father, which occurred about 1830, Henry and his brother Isaac took charge of the home farm, and continued joint tenants for more than thirty years, occupying the same residence and eating at the same table. Isaac's health failing, the property by mutual agreement was divided, and Isaac removed to Columbia, where he died a few years later. Henry also removed to Columbia in after life, and there he died Aug. 24, 1875. He had become a director of the Columbia National Bank, and left an estate of over $80,000, to be divided among his children. His wife, whose maiden name was Sally McGee, also died at Columbia. Their children were as follows: Rebecca, who married Christian Hershey, and is now deceased; Isaac, a retired farmer of Wrightsville; Joseph, who died in advanced life, a retired farmer; William, who operated the hotel at Wrightsville, and is now deceased; David, proprietor of a hotel at Columbia; Charles H.; John, deceased, and Catherine, wife of William Hardy, a blacksmith at Columbia, for the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Charles H. Hinkle was reared on the farm. In 1867, in Columbia, he married Miss Amelia M. Ulmer, daughter of Joseph and Mary Gertrude (Hine-land) Ulmer. Five children were born to Charles H. and Amelia Hinkle, namely: James B., of Columbia; Lizzie C., wife of Edward Becker, a bookkeeper of Columbia; Lotta, deceased; Clara, deceased, and Mary, deceased. Mr. Hinkle, the husband and father, died in 1885 aged forty years. He was buried at Columbia. His widow, eight years later, married John Rodkey, of West Hempfield township, whose sketch appears elsewhere. Charles H. Hinkle was a member of Chiquesalunga Tribe, Red Men, and at the time of his death was secretary of the Columbia Gas Company. He was one of the prominent, progressive business men of Columbia, whose personal influence and efforts were ever directed to the upbuilding of the city's interests.

MARTIN R. SHEAFFER. One of the prominent and eminently successful farmers of Upper Leacock township, is Martin R. Sheaffer, who also has been extensively engaged in tobacco packing.

The birth of Mr. Sheaffer occurred in Earl township, July 25, 1843, and he was a son of Philip and Leah (Rutter) Sheaffer, who were natives of Earl and Leacock townships, respectively. The great-grandfather of Mr. Sheaffer of this record came from Germany and was one of the pioneers of the first settlement of Earl township, and bore the name of Martin Sheaffer, this being a family name. The paternal grandparents of Mr. Sheaffer of this sketch were Martin and Mary (Miller) Sheaffer, the former of whom was born in 1770 and died at the age of forty-nine years, in 1821. He was a successful farmer and well-known and respected citizen of Earl township, and became the father of seven sons and five daughters. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Sheaffer were Henry and Elizabeth (Royer) Rutter, farming people of Lancaster county.

Philip Sheaffer was born in December, 1803, and died on April 13, 1864, and was buried in the Groffdale cemetery. In his early life he carried on a distilling business, but later settled down to agricultural pursuits. The mother of Mr. Sheaffer of this sketch was born on Aug. 25, 1815, and is now an honored member of his household. Martin R. was the only child of this marriage.

Martin R. Sheaffer, who is the subject of this biography, attended the district schools during boyhood and assisted his father on the homestead farm until he was twenty years old, then beginning to farm on his own account and continuing thus engaged at the same place until 1876. At this date he retired from farming and moved into the village of Bareville, where he resided for five years. Then he returned to the farm for one year, but finally disposed of it and returned to town life and engaged in tobacco packing in Bareville, where he has since remained, one of the most substantial citizens. Mr. Sheaffer is a Republican in politics, and actively upholds the principles and candidates of his party. For the past six years he has been a director in the New Holland Bank, one of the firmly established financial institutions of the county.

The first marriage of Mr. Sheaffer was on Nov. 17, 1864, in Mechanicsburg, to Caroline Graybill, and the children of this marriage were: Graybill, who died May 5, 1866; Martin G., who is an attorney of Lancaster city, married Anna M. Leight, to whom have been born two children, Dorothy and Martha; Cora, who married John W. Eshleman, of Ephrata, Pa., where he is engaged in the manufacture of cigars, and whose children number four, Fanny, Esther, Caroline and Martin S.; Caroline, who resides at home; Clayton R., who resides in Philadelphia; Blanche E., deceased; and Walter, deceased.

Mrs. Caroline (Graybill) Sheaffer was born in Earl township on March 6, 1846, and died on May 25, 1886, and her burial was at Groffdale, Pa. She was a daughter of Levi and Fanny (Kinport) Graybill, natives of Lancaster county, of Swiss ancestry.

The second marriage of Mr. Sheaffer was on June 18, 1888, in Lancaster, to Lottie A. Myer, and the children born to this union were: Leah M., deceased; Amanda M., who died in infancy; and Rebecca, who lives at home.

Mrs. Lottie A. (Myer) Sheaffer was born in Upper Leacock township Jan. 19, 1860, daughter of Samuel R. and Amanda (Evans) Myer, the former of whom was for many years a prominent minister in the German Baptist Church. A sister of Mrs. Sheaffer is the well-known instructor, Miss Elizabeth Myer, of the Elizabethtown College.

Mr. Sheaffer is a man for whom his neighbors have the highest respect; his business ability is firmly established and his integrity unquestioned. The family is an old and honorable one in Lancaster county.

JACOB H. MECKLEY, who unites the business of a lumber merchant and a farmer in Bainbridge, was born in Conoy township, Oct. 2, 1840, Conoy not having then been set apart from Donegal township.

Benjamin and Barbara (Haldeman) Meckley, his parents, were born in Mt. Joy and Rapho townships, respectively, and both died in Conoy township. The father was a farmer, and operated a sawmill from 1849 to 1880. He was a successful man, occupying a prominent place in the community, and serving as a school director for several years. For some ten years prior to his demise he lived retired, dying in 1892, at the age of seventy-six years. Mrs. Barbara Meckley died in 1859, at the age of forty-two years, and both were buried in Good's Meeting House Cemetery in West Donegal township. Benjamin Meckley was a member of the Mennonite Church, and his wife of the United Brethren. They had the following children: Jacob H.; Christ H., a cigar maker at Lock Haven, Pa.; Anna H., wife of Benjamin Fink, a carpenter and contractor in Conoy township; Elizabeth, widow of Andrew Shank, living in Bainbridge; Mrs. Barbara Meckley died in 1859, at the age of Abraham H., of Columbia, Pa., mentioned elsewhere; Benjamin H., who died young; Samuel H., who was married and died at the age of twenty-two years; and Martin H., single and living in Mt. Joy township.

The paternal grandparents of Jacob H. Meckley were Melchior and Elizabeth (Hoffer) Meckley, both natives of Lancaster county, and life-long residents of Mt. Joy township, where their lives were devoted to farming. Mr. Meckley's maternal grandparents were Christian and Barbara (Swartz) Haldeman, both also natives of Lancaster county, who passed their lives on a farm in Rapho township. Mr. Meckley is related to the Meckleys and Hoffers of Elizabethtown, sketches of whom are found in another place.

Jacob H. Meckley was married in Conoy township, Dec. 23, 1877, to Miss Anna Wilhelm, and to this union were born the following children: Franklin B., Mary W., Elizabeth W., Benjamin Harrison and Jacob W. Mrs. Meckley was born in Maytown, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Ney) Wilhelm, of Conoy township, where they both died, her father, a veteran of the War of the Rebellion, in 1866, and her mother in 1872, at the age of fifty years. They were devoted members of the Lutheran Church, and were laid to rest in the cemetery at Bainbridge.

Mr. Meckley spent the first eighteen years of his life at home with his parents, and then became an apprentice at the carpenter trade in Manchester, Pa., where he spent two years. At the end of that time he came back to his native township, and followed his trade until September, 1862, when he enlisted in a regiment that was being raised by Col. Dickey, and went to Chambersburg and Green Castle, but was rejected as not meeting the physical requirements of the service. Coming home, he followed his trade until 1866, when he was put in charge of the Meckley sawmill, which he carried on until 1871. From that time until 1888 he had charge of the Locust Grove steam sawmill in Conoy township. At the end of this time he moved to Bainbridge to start a lumber yard, and at the same time engaged in farming. Mr. Meckley is a hustling and energetic man, and has been quite successful in his various undertakings, accumulating a fair competence and winning a very enviable standing in the community. For the past sixteen years he has served as school director, and is a member of the Church of God. He belongs to the Senior O. U. A. M. In his politics he is a Republican.

GEORGE M. MAURER. In thriftiness, industry and all those sterling qualities essential to permanent success on the farm George M. Maurer takes prominent rank among the citizens of West Hempfield township, Lancaster county. He has for many years engaged in general farming and gardening on the well-improved and well tilled acres which his father purchased more than forty years ago.

The father, George Maurer, was born June 9, 1817, in Niederlirbach, Hessen-Darmstadt, son of Frank and Mary (Kline) Maurer. There were three sons and one daughter, of whom George, the youngest, was the only one who ever came to America, although all the others have descendants here. George started to earn his own living when a mere boy, and in 1830 we find him at Schloss Neuburg, near Heidelberg, an old castle which had been rebuilt, and was then occupied by Johann Friederich Schlosser, a renowned author and translator. Here the boy acted as valet to Father Heinrich Lemcke, the family priest, a man who had been first a soldier, fighting against Napoleon for five years, then was ordained as a Protestant minister and finally, in 1826, was converted to the Catholic faith. In 1833 Bishop Kenrick, of Philadelphia, issued a circular letter to the Catholic priests of Germany, asking for help for the German Catholics scattered through western Pennsylvania. Father Lemcke decided to be one of the missionaries, and urged George to go with him, promising to do for him all that a father could, but friends persuaded the boy to refuse, a decision he regretted all his life.

After losing this good friend George drifted from one employment to another among the German upper classes, at last becoming gardener to the Rev. Stapleton, a minister who had a small congregation of English at Heidelberg during the summers. By this time his parents had died and George had married Anna M. Melbert. Becoming filled with democratic ideas and with the hope of earning better wages, he determined to go to America; in 1852, leaving his family in Germany, he came to this country and settled at Cordelia Furnace, in West Hempfield township, Lancaster county. Here he found employment, and his family joined him the next year. Almost his first act in America was to make inquiries for Father Lemcke. Now, the priest's meeting with Prince De Galliyin in the Alleghanies, his labors there and later in Arkansas, are matters of history, but then George Maurer found it impossible to get a trace of him, and not until a year before his death did he hear of his old master. Then, in a Catholic almanac, he found a sketch of Father Lemcke's life and the notice of his death in Arkansas, a year previously. Meantime, Maurer was prospering; in 1861 he purchased a farm of twelve acres in West Hempfield township and there began in a modest way an agricultural career which continued uninterruptedly until his death, which occurred Oct. 22, 1885, at the age of sixty-eight years. George Maurer was a tall, strong man, over six feet in height and of proportionate build; in all business papers he was designated as "George Maurer (big)," to distinguish him from others of his name, and among the German-speaking people about him he was usually known as "Der grosse Maurer." For his character, it is sufficient to say that his word was as good as his bond. His widow survived until 1890, passing away at the age of sixty-seven years. They were buried at Columbia, Pa. Both were devout members of the German Catholic Church. Two children blessed their union, Barbara, who married John Geltz, and is now deceased, and George M.

The latter was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, March 20, 1848, and was brought to America by his mother in 1853. He was reared in West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, and has ever since resided there, remaining with his father until the latter's death, in 1885. He then took charge of the little farm, which he has since conducted most profitably. He married, Nov. 17, 1870, in Columbia, Miss Mary Michael, who was born in Prussia, Germany, July 22, 1848, daughter of Mathias and Margaret (Michael) Michael. She emigrated to America in 1859 with her parents, who settled in Mt. Joy township, Lancaster county. The father enlisted in a Pennsylvania regiment and served in the army during the Civil war. Soon after his honorable discharge he removed to Missouri where he took up a homestead and remained until his death, which occurred in 1871. He was a member of the Catholic church. To Mathias and Margaret Michael were born a family of four children, namely: Peter, who died in Missouri; Catherine, wife of John Kline, a farmer of West Hempfield township; Mary, wife of Mr. Maurer; and Stephen, who resides in Missouri.

To George M. and Mary Maurer have been born ten children, as follows: George, Stephen and John, deceased; Mary, wife of George Sipp, of West Hempfield township; Frank, a silk weaver, who married, Sept. 25, 1902, Mary, daughter of Samuel Steckler; Joseph, deceased; Elizabeth, Simon and William, at home; and Charles, deceased. Mr. Maurer and family are members of the Catholic Church.

HENRY ZAHM RHOADS, who retired from the jewelry and art goods business some six years ago, only to engage more actively than ever in other pursuits, has an ancestry on both his father's and mother's side that goes back to the early days of 1700.

The first Rhoads of whom we have any account was Yohon Ludwig Roth (as the name was spelled in those days), who came to America from Bonfeld, Alsace, about 1728, and settled near the Trappe, in Montgomery county, Pa. Philip Roth, a son, accompanied him. In 1800 John Rhoads, grandfather of Henry Zahm, began writing the name as it is now written—Rhoads, instead of Roth. John Rhoads had three sons, William, Daniel and Jacob. All three became hatters, although their father was a tailor, learning their trade with John H. Fox, a hat manufacturer, who had married their sister. Daniel and Jacob came to Lancaster in 1831 and began the hat business. Daniel retiring from the business in 1852, and Jacob in 1856. After discontinuing his trade Jacob Rhoads bought a large tract of land in the Eighth ward, and proceeded to develop that section, the commodious home which he built, and the fine orchard which he planted, being still in the possession of Henry Z. Rhoads. Jacob Rhoads was married, in 1838, to Elizabeth, daughter of Godfried Zahm, a well-known brushmaker, prominent in the affairs of Lancaster. Five children blessed this union, two of whom are living, Henry Zahm and Emma, the latter the widow of the late Henry Deitrich Groff. The Zahms came to America in 1730, from Herrnhut, Saxony, settling in Montgomery county, Maryland.

Henry Zahm Rhoads was educated in the public schools of Lancaster, and, after leaving school, was engaged for a time at daguerreotyping, modern photography not having been known at that time. After this he became an apprentice to the jewelry business with Zahm & Jackson, and later, to perfect himself in watchmaking, served an apprenticeship with Theodore Wolf. He next went to Virginia, working as a journeyman jeweler and watchmaker until the war broke out, when he returned to Lancaster. On Oct. 12, 1861, Mr. Rhoads began the jewelry business on the north side of West King street, in partnership with C. J. Gillespie, and nine months later bought Mr. Gillespie's interest. His next venture was in 1868, when, in partnership with his brother, Charles, he bought the old "Lamb Hotel," on the south side of West King street, and in 1869, H. Z. Rhoads & Bro. left the original stand on the opposite side of the street and removed to the old "Lamb Tavern" property, which they had converted into a modern store, and here Mr. Rhoads erected the first public clock (besides the courthouse clock) in the city. The property is now occupied by Metzger & Haughman, dry-goods merchants. After a time Mr. Rhoads built the elegant and substantial structure, now known as Nos. 4 and 6 West King street, and there the second public clock was erected, the third being in Centre Square. Charles Godfried Rhoads, his brother, became a partner in the business in 1865, and remained as such until his death, in 1882. Henry Z. Rhoads continued the business until 1896, when he retired, yet he did not retire from active pursuits, having since become interested in the business of the Lancaster Silver Plate Company, in partnership with Albert Rosenstein. He was also one of the promoters of the Conestoga Fire Insurance Company, of which he is the present secretary, and which began business in August, 1897; although organized as a mutual company, it changed to a stock concern, and has already (1902) written over $2,000,000 of insurance. Mr. Rhoads has also been considerable of a builder, having erected twenty fine dwelling-houses in the Eighth ward, and owning the ground for many more. In the summer of 1901 he added to his building operations by erecting an elegant home for himself on South Prince street, the house being fashioned after a Parisian model. While in the jewelry and art business Mr. Rhoads visited Europe five times, bringing over such treasures in jewels and art goods as were never before (nor since) offered to Lancaster purchasers in the home market.

Twice the Democrats of the Eighth ward have elected Mr. Rhoads a member of the board of school directors, and he proved as industrious and intelligent in the direction of school matters as he did in his own affairs.

Mr. Rhoads was married, in young manhood, to Miss Anastasia McConomy, daughter of the late Peter McConomy, one of Lancaster's most prominent citizens, and who was for twenty-nine years treasurer of the Lancaster school board. Two children were born of this union: Rebecca, who was the wife of Dr. W. H. Lowell, but who entered into rest in 1893; and Godfried Zahm, connected with the Lancaster Silver Plate Company.

SAMUEL MARTIN. One of the very prosperous general farmers of Salisbury township, Lancaster county, is Samuel Martin, who was born Jan. 29, 1855, on the homestead which is still his residence. His parents Joseph and Magdalena (Oberholtzer) Martin, were born in Salisbury and Cocalico townships, respectively. Joseph Martin engaged in farming in his native township until 1876, when he retired from active life, but he retained his home on the farm until the spring of 1892, when he moved to Bareville, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying Sept. 19, 1900, at the age of seventy-six years; his wife died in 1869, when she was forty years old. Both parents were devout members of the Mennonite Church, and the remains of the mother were interred in Hershey's cemetery, and those of the father in Groffdale. Their eleven children were born in the following order: Elizabeth, wife of John Keaner, a farmer of Strasburg; Magdalena, deceased wife of Elam Landis; Anna, widow of Benjamin Brackbill; Samuel, whose name opens this biography; Abraham, deceased; one that died in infancy; Joseph, Henry, Isaac and David, all deceased; and another that died in infancy. Susanna, a step sister of these children, is also deceased.

Samuel Martin has passed his entire life on this farm, which by inheritance is now his own, and which comprises 101 acres. He has improved the place in many respects over its former conditions, and keeps it under a high state of cultivation, being familiar with all its details and capabilities, and being himself thoroughly trained to agriculture. His success, however, is greatly due to his own industry and good management, and it is doubtful whether or no there is a farm of its size in the township more productive, or which presents to the eye of the passer-by a more pleasing ideal of rustic beauty, or agricultural thrift.

On Nov. 19, 1876, Samuel Martin was united in marriage with Miss Amanda Landis, at New Holland, Lancaster county, and of whose genealogy something additional will be said. This union was blessed with sixteen children, namely: Mary, who is the wife of Martin Weaver, a farmer in Earl township, and has three children; Hettie, deceased; Lizzie, Abraham and Mettie, still at home; Lydia, deceased; Emma, at home; Landis, deceased; Amanda, Anna, Samuel, Jr., and Katie, also at home; Amos, deceased; Ella, deceased; and Ada and Joseph, still under the parental roof.

Mrs. Amanda (Landis) Martin was born in Leacock township, Lancaster county, Sept. 22, 1855, a daughter of Levi and Mary (Buckwalter) Landis, the former of whom was a son of Christian and Mary (Landis) Landis, and the latter a daughter of Abraham and Esther (Hoover) Buckwalter, both families being prominent and greatly respected farming people of Lancaster county, and residing in Eden and Upper Leacock townships, respectively. Levi Landis was called from earth Dec. 14, 1897, at the age of seventy-one years. In religious belief he was a Mennonite, and was buried in Hershey's cemetery. His widow, who was born May 27, 1825, has her home on the same farm with her son-in-law, Mr. Martin. To Levi and Mary Landis were born six children, namely: Elam, a farmer in Earl township; Hettie A., deceased wife of David Groff; Amanda, now Mrs. Samuel Martin; Emma, Anna M. and Lydia, at home.

Samuel Martin is the owner of as fine a farm as there is in Salisbury township, and his skillful management keeps it fully up to the standard. He has ever been industrious and thrifty, upright and public-spirited, and ready at all times to contribute his share toward the promotion of such public works as may result in the benefit of the neighborhood in which he lives. He is a member of the Mennonite Church. In politics he is a Republican, and is universally honored as a citizen.

SAMUEL L. CARPENTER. Prominently identified with the development and growth of Lancaster county for a number of years, the name of Carpenter has become associated in the public mind with uprightness of character, and honest and energetic business methods. The original founder of this family was Henry Carpenter, who came from the Canton of Berne, Switzerland, and settled at Germantown, Pa., as early as 1698. In 1700, he returned to his native land, and there married Salome Ruffner, of the Canton of Zurich, and in 1706, with his wife and two small sons, Emanuel and Gabriel, four and two years of age, respectively, returned to Germantown. In 1717 he removed to Lancaster county, settling first in West Lampeter, but subsequently in West Earl. His birth occurred in 1675, and his death between 1743 and 1748. The children born to the emigrant founder of the family were: Emanuel, born in 1702; Gabriel, born in 1704; Salome; Dr. Henry; Christian; Daniel; Mary; and Jacob. During the war of the Revolution, Emanuel Carpenter was a member of the Committee of Safety.

Gabriel Carpenter married Apalina Herman, who was born in 1702, and died in 1767, and their children were: Christian, Salome, Jacob, Catherine, Susannah, Daniel, John, Mary and Elizabeth.

Christian Carpenter was born in 1729, and died in 1800. He married Susan Herr, and their children were: Jacob, who became colonel of the 5th Battalion of the Lancaster county militia, during the Revolutionary war; Joel; Daniel; Catherine; Susan; John; Christian; Salome; and Nancy.

Joel Carpenter, the second son of Christian and Susan (Herr) Carpenter, was born in 1758. He married Margaret Defenderfer and reared these children: Ephraim, Miles, Giles, Aaron, Allen, Charles, Bryan, Elizabeth, Susan, Sophia, Esther and Catherine.

Giles Carpenter, the third son of Joel and of the fifth generation in America, married Jane McClintick, and they had these children: Amanda, born Oct. 27, 1832, married Solomon Weaver, but is deceased; Margaret, born June 20, 1834, married Philip Lash, and they now reside in Michigan; James J., born Jan. 18, 1837, is deceased; Martha, born Jan. 16, 1839, married Isaac Beard, and resides in Illinois; Belinda, born Feb. 3, 1840, married Amos Sellers, and they reside in Lancaster county; Alvin, born Aug. 21, 1841, married Ellen Fees, and they reside in Beavertown; Arabella, born March 16, 1843, married Adam Good, a resident of Farmersville, but she has passed away; and Samuel L. is the subject of this biography.

Samuel L. Carpenter was born Oct. 1, 1844, and very early became accustomed to the duties pertaining to farm life, at the age of eight years being hired out to a neighboring farmer by the name of John Oberholtzer. His duties were such as a lad of his age could perform, and he was paid $1.50 per month, these conditions continuing until he was seventeen years old, the summers being filled with farm work, and the winters with attendance at the district school. So well did Mr. Carpenter embrace every opportunity for acquiring an education, that before he was eighteen he was employed to teach in the public schools of West Earl township, continuing until he entered the Construction Corps of the United States army, where he remained for six months. As soon as he had become of age, he enlisted in the 21st P. V. C., and with the Army of the Potomac bravely did a soldier's duty; he participated in the campaigns before Richmond and Petersburg, and at the close of the war received an honorable discharge.

Returning then to his home, Mr. Carpenter again took up his professional work during the winters, following the carpenter trade in the summer time, but in 1872 he opened up a butchering business and pursued that until 1876, when he entered into his present line, that of hides and tallow. Possessing excellent business ability, Mr. Carpenter has dealt successfully in live stock for the past twenty years, still continuing in this profitable line, with headquarters at the "Leopard Hotel," in Lancaster.

On Sept. 5, 1869, Mr. Carpenter was married to Miss Mary McCloud, a daughter of Reuben and Susannah (Shirker) McCloud, of West Earl township, and one child was born of this union, Stella J., born March 8, 1871, who married Lemon Shirker, of West Cocalico township, and has one son, Samuel Carpenter, the idol of his grandfather, born Dec. 13, 1899.

Mr. Carpenter has never taken any great interest in politics, but was appointed census enumerator, in 1870, and was re-appointed in 1880, but refused to qualify. For a number of years he has been township auditor and school director, and has always been interested in all matters pertaining to the advancement of his section. Although he began life in indigent circumstances, Mr. Carpenter is not disposed to consider that any disadvantage to an industrious, ambitious and energetic young man. As one of the wealthiest men of the township, he is in a position to speak with knowledge, and he attributes his universal success in all his undertakings, to his close and constant attention to business and the exercise of good judgment. The township has in many ways profited by his generosity, and he stands high in its esteem. Both Mr. Carpenter and wife are consistent members of the New Mennonite Church.

CHRISTIAN B. STOLTZFUS is a descendant of a family long settled in America, his first ancestor in this country, Nicholas Stoltzfus, coming in 1766 from his native place, Zweibruecken, Germany, and settling near Reading, in Berks county, Pa. His wife had died in Germany, and he brought with him his four children, one son, Christian (then aged eighteen years), and three daughters. He took up his home on a farm near Reading, and devoted his life to its cultivation.

Christian Stoltzfus first married a woman named Garver, by whom he had three children, John, Jacob and Christian, all of whom lived and died in the neighborhood, and were buried in the Moyer graveyard, excepting the mother, whose remains were interred near Reading. Christian Stoltzfus married for his second wife the widow Lanz, whose maiden name was King; she had by her first husband two children, John and Samuel. To her marriage with Christian Stoltzfus were born: Abraham, David, Solomon, Catherine, Elizabeth, Anna, Barbara, Esther and Magdalena, all of whom were buried in the Mill Creek burying-ground. After his second marriage Christian Stoltzfus came into Lancaster county, and settled near Rissler's Mill, where he owned large tracts of land, and was a life-long farmer. He was one of the first Amish ministers to settle in that part of the State, becoming one of the bishops of that church, and lived to attain a great age.

Christian Stoltzfus, noted above, was born in Berks county, and when but a young lad came with his parents into Lancaster county, where he lived all his days. He followed farming, and proved himself a most industrious and upright man, and was well known, especially in the Amish Church, of which he was a zealous and devout member. Mr. Stoltzfus married Anna Blank, by whom he had a family of three sons and six daughters, Samuel, Christian, John, Catherine, Rebecca, Anna, Barbara, Elizabeth and Susanna.

Samuel Stoltzfus, the father of Christian B., whose name introduces this article, was born in 1812, and was a lifelong farmer, locating on a ninety-acre farm in Earl township, about a half mile north of New Holland, where he lived for many years. Later in life he bought another farm of eighty-five acres, half a mile west of the old place, where he spent the rest of his life, dying April 25, 1883. He was a devout member of the Amish Church.

Mr. Stoltzfus married Miss Elizabeth Biler, a daughter of David Biler, whose home was near Rauck's Station, in East Lampeter township. She died in 1860, at the age of forty-five years, six months, twenty-three days. They had the following children: Benjamin, a retired farmer, whose home is in Berks county; David, deceased; Anna, deceased, who married David Umble; Jacob, a farmer in East Earl township; Samuel, deceased; Christian B.; Simeon, deceased; and Susannah and Rebecca, both unmarried, who make their home with their brother Christian B., on the farm about a half mile north of New Holland.

Christian B. Stoltzfus was born Dec. 24, 1843, and was reared on the farm where he was born, in Earl township, receiving his education in the common schools. For the last thirty years he has been farming for himself, and now owns one of the fine farms of the county. It comprises seventy-five acres, on which he has erected a good farm residence, and also a commodious frame barn. Many other valuable improvements have been effected by him, and every foot of ground indicates active and intense farming. Mr. Stoltzfus is a broad-minded and progressive man, and is ever ready to lend a helping hand to anything that looks to the public good. He belongs to the Amish Church.

AARON H. SHANK, a general farmer in West Donegal township, was born in the township in which he is living, June 7, 1844, and is a son of Michael and Catherine (Heisey) Shank, both natives and lifelong residents of West Donegal township. The father was a farmer and veterinary surgeon of high standing. For many years he was school director. He died Jan. 18, 1870, at the age of seventy-one years and the mother died in Feb., 1893, at the age of ninety-one years. Their remains are resting in a private burying ground on their old homestead. They were members of the Mennonite Church, and had the following children: Susan, who died in infancy; Mary and Henry, deceased; Catherine, who died single, at the age of sixty years; Elizabeth, deceased, who married Martin Winters; Anna, the wife of David H. Meyers, a farmer in West Donegal township; Jonathan, who died young; Rachel, who died unmarried, at the age of fifty-six years; Jacob, a farmer in West Donegal township; Aaron H., whose name appears above; Samuel, who died at the age of thirty years, and John, who died young.

Jacob Shank, the paternal grandfather of Aaron H., spent his life in Lancaster county. Henry and Susan (Berk) Heisey, the parents of Mrs. Catherine Shank, were natives of Lancaster county.

Aaron Shank and Mary A. Barnhart were married Aug. 11, 1867, in Elizabethtown, and became the parents of the following children: Samuel, who lives in Florin, Pa., married Sadie Shires, and is the father of three children, Lizzie (deceased), Mary and Ruth. Katie is the widow of Abraham G. Nisslev, and makes her home with her parents, bringing back with her two children, Paul (now dead) and Clarence; Irvin and Phares, both at home.

Mrs. Mary A. Shank was born in West Donegal township, and is a daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Eshleman) Barnhart, both born in West Donegal township. Her father, who was born Oct. 27, 1821, retired from farming shortly after the death of his wife, who died April 13, 1890, and was buried in Mt. Tunnel cemetery. They were both members of the Mennonite Church, and had the following children: Lizzie, who died in infancy; Mrs. Mary A. Shank; Lovina, who married Cyrus Schroll, a resident of East Donegal township; Uriah, deceased, and Louisa, who married William Geibe, and lives in Dauphin county, where he is engaged in farming.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Shank were John and Susan (Sherbone) Barnhart, both natives of Lancaster county. Her maternal grandparents were Michael and Polly (Hess) Eshleman, of Lancaster county.

Aaron H. Shank remained at home until he reached the age of twenty-one years, when he bought a farm in Mt. Joy township. On that place he made his home until 1896, when he came to his present location. His hard working habits and strict integrity, together with his genial disposition and kindly nature have won him the respect and confidence of the public to a marked degree. For two years he served as supervisor, and his judgment on public affairs is regarded as worthy of close attention. Mr. and Mrs. Shank are members of the Mennonite Church; in politics, he is a Republican.

WILLIAM H. WENTZ, one of the leading and representative citizens of Martic township, was born there March 16, 1844, son of William G. and Hannah (Penny) Wentz, of Lancaster county.

William G. Wentz, the father, was born in 1812, and died in 1871. He was a son of Joseph Wentz, of German origin, who had these children: John, Isaac, William, David, Thomas, Joseph, Matilda, Sarah, Susan and Maria, all deceased except Thomas and Maria. William G. Wentz married Hannah M. Penny, in 1836, and they had a family of six children, three of whom grew to maturity, namely: Mary M., the widow of Elias Aument, of Greene, Pa.; Isaac J., of Harrisburg; William, of this sketch. William G. Wentz was one of the leading citizens of his township and very acceptably filled a number of the local offices.

William H. Wentz of this sketch was reared to farming life, and attended the public schools. He has always taken a great interest in agricultural matters and is justly regarded as one of the best farmers of this locality. In politics he is a sound Republican. In 1900 he was made census enumerator, fulfilling his duties to the satisfaction of all concerned. For eighteen years he has served as school director, holding the office of secretary the whole time, and has been interested in all legislation looking to the advancement of education.

On Sept. 12, 1872, Mr. Wentz was married to Miss Louisa A. Yost, born in 1851, daughter of Charles K. Yost and sister of Dr. John F. Yost, of Bethesda, Pa. (An extended mention of the Yost family will be found in another part of this volume). To this marriage were born three children, namely: Walter G., who died in childhood; Charles Elvin, born Oct. 14, 1876, residing in Martic township, unmarried, and Leila E., at home.

Mr. Wentz and family belong to the Methodist Church in Bethesda, in which he is both trustee and steward. Fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias at Rawlinsville, and the Knights of the Mystic Chain, at Mt. Nebo. He is known in his neighborhood for his integrity and uprightness of character, and his personal qualities make him esteemed as a neighbor, friend, husband and father.

PHILIP LEBZELTER. Among the prominent men of Lancaster who have materially assisted in its growth as an industrial center is Philip Lebzelter, proprietor of the Eagle Wheel & Bending Works of that city, and who, although he has reached the age of seventy-three years, is still quite capable of taking active interest in the business which he founded in 1856.

Mr. Lebzelter was born March 9, 1829, in Neulautern, Wurtemberg, Germany, son of John and Catherine (Roeser) Lebzelter, both of whom were natives of Germany, where their whole lives were spent. John Lebzelter was a man of prominence in his native community, and for twenty-four years was the burgomaster of the village. By trade he was a woodturner. His death occurred in 1864, at the age of eighty-four years, and that of his wife in 1854, at the age of fifty-eight years. Both were members of the Lutheran Church. Of their seventeen children we have record of the following: Hannah, who is the widow of Jacob Woerner, a farmer living near Tremont, Ill.; Christian, who died in Germany; Elizabeth, deceased, Mrs. Kline; Wilhelm, deceased, who was a skilled wood worker, and had a family of fourteen children; J. Philip, whose name opens this sketch; Philopena, who married Albert Hoch, deceased, a prominent man in his native town in Germany; and Catherine, who married John Shlippf, a farmer in Germany.

Philip Lebzelter served an apprenticeship with his father and thoroughly learned the business of woodturning. On June 22, 1849, with his brother, Wilhelm, he left Antwerp, and after a voyage of thirty-eight days landed in New York. They went to relatives in Pennsylvania, but not finding work there nor in the German settlement in Lehigh and Berks counties, Philip walked to Reading, Pa.

W. F. Lebzelter

Philip Lebzelter

There he found employment on the Muhlenburg farm, at $4 per month, but his faithful services were recognized, and he was paid at the rate of $5 a month. Going from there to Reamstown, he was employed by John Killiam in his woodturning shop for a short time. In the meantime his brother William had been successful in the same line of work in Allegheny, Pa., and had written Philip to join him, which he did, working in the same shop where Andrew Carnegie was once the assistant engineer. This shop was owned by John Hay, and when he died it was bought by William Lebzelter, the price being $1,400. The business prospered during his life, and after William's death his widow attempted to carry it on, but owing to other duties she could not give it necessary attention, and to relieve her Philip Lebzelter bought it. He soon found that his business interests in Lancaster would suffer, and he was obliged to dispose of it.

Mr. Lebzelter came to Lancaster, and first secured work in the woodturning shop of Bowers & Eshleman, where he continued for one and one-half years, and in 1854 began his present business, purchasing a lot on South Queen street, opposite the "Columbia Garden Hotel," and erecting a small shop. Prosperity smiled on him, and a year later he leased of James Potts the present site of the business house of Philip Lebzelter & Son. When his leased expired, at the end of three years, another firm secured the site, and Mr. Lebzelter returned to his South Queen street factory. In 1862 he purchased the present site, and has been there ever since. His business was started with limited means, and in a modest way, but its founder was a skilled worker as well as an excellent business man, and with each year of its existence, under his judicious management, it expanded, until now it is one of the leading industrial plants of the city. From a shop force of two men, in 1865, Mr. Lebzelter gradually required more help, even with the introduction of much labor-saving machinery, and now thirty-eight men are employed, and the output of manufactured goods includes second-growth hickory bent rims, shafts, poles, spokes, wheels, bows, reaches, banded hubs, a specialty being made of fine-grade wheels. The plant is located at No. 241 North Queen street, Lancaster. It is worthy of note that the first labor-saving machinery used was of the founder's own invention. The strict business methods and upright manner of dealing with the public that have marked this business from the beginning, and have contributed to its rapid growth and development, are continued under the active management of William F. Lebzelter, the most efficient and capable son of Philip Lebzelter, who since 1901 has been the manager of the works.

On April 2, 1854, in Lancaster, Mr. Lebzelter married Elizabeth Heleine, who was born in Lancaster in 1834, daughter of Philip and Mary Heleine, both of whom were natives of Alsace, France. Mr. Heleine was a stocking weaver by trade, and carried on that business in Lancaster, and when he retired from activity he moved to Reading, where his last years were spent. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Lebzelter were: Katie, Frank and Emma all died young. William, born Nov. 11, 1866, is now the manager of his father's large plant; in 1890 he married, in Little Falls, N. J., Miss Emma V. Hoff, by whom he has two children, Florence B. and Marian K. Charles, born Jan. 12, 1869, was killed while coasting in Reading, Pa., and buried on his twelfth birthday.

In politics Mr. Lebzelter is a staunch member of the Republican party, but with the exception of six years of service in the city council he has never accepted office, although his peculiar fitness for positions of trust and responsibility has long been recognized. Many very flattering offers have been made him, to induce him to connect himself with various financial institutions, but he has confined himself in a general way to his industrial plant and to real-estate transactions. He is a large property owner in various parts of the city of Lancaster, among his valuable holdings being the "Bridgeport Hotel," in East End Park, the "Schiller Hotel," in Lancaster, and the "American House," the latter being regarded as one of the two leading hotels in the city, a most desirable and remunerative property.

From childhood Mr. Lebzelter has been a member of the Lutheran Church, and he is a liberal supporter of all its charitable and benevolent enterprises. He is well and favorably known in the city. His English education was obtained by attending night school, Hon. J. B. Livingston, then a young lawyer and now president judge, being his teacher. A thorough business man, an excellent financier, scrupulously honest at all times, ambitious and energetic all his life, Mr. Lebzelter has accumulated large means through his own industry, and while so doing has won and retained the esteem of his fellow-citizens.

JAMES W. FITLER, a well-known conductor on the Pennsylvania railroad, now residing in Columbia, was born in Marietta, Lancaster Co., Pa., April 27, 1843, and is a son of John K. and Rosina M. (Trainer) Fitler, the former a native of Fitler's Green (now Neffsville), and the latter of Columbia, both in Lancaster county. The family name was originally Fidler, but was changed by a school-teacher, named Rankin, two generations back. The grandfather of James W., Leonard Fidler, founded Fidler's Green in 1807, a village in which he built two hotels.

John K. Fitler was a carpenter, was a brewer for Scheide in Marietta and for thirty years was a boatman; he was a man of mark in Marietta, where he served as chief burgess and councilman and filled various other offices. There his wife expired June 17, 1876, when fifty-six years old and there his own demise took place, June 19, 1890, at the age of eighty; their remains were interred in St. Mary's cemetery at Columbia. To the marriage of these parents were born the following named children: William, who died in infancy; James W.; Anna, who also died in infancy; Mary J., who is married to J. H. Hagermer, a contractor in Marietta; John H., also living in retirement in the same town; Edward P., a molder, in York; Frank B., a printer, in Philadelphia; Susan and Thomas, deceased.

Leonard Fidler, father of John K. Fitler, born on the old homestead of 360 acres in Rapho township, Lancaster county, was a butcher and carpenter. He married Barbara Kaufman, to which union were born: Nancy, who was married to John Kaufman; Elizabeth, who died unmarried; Martha, married to Amos Kapp, and John K. The father of this family died in 1857 at the age of seventy-eight years and the mother in 1859, aged seventy-seven.

Leonard Fidler, the father of the Leonard mentioned above, was a native of Womelsdorf, Berks county, settled in Lancaster county, and followed farming until the end of life.

The maternal grandparents of James W. Fitler, Patrick and Rosina (Trainer) Trainer, were respectively born in County Tyrone and County Donegal, Ireland, came to America when children and were married in Wilmington, Del. Patrick Trainer was a contractor, and died in 1818, aged thirty-two years; his wife died in 1857, when sixty-six years old. Their children were named Susan, who was married to Peter Baker; Margaret, of Marietta, Pa.; Rosina M.; Ann, of Philadelphia, and Edward, deceased.

James W. Fitler began canal-boating at Marietta when but twelve years old and followed the calling until 1869; he next clerked for the Philadelphia and Erie Railroad Company three years; was next a brakeman for three months, then a flagman for nine months, and in 1872 came to Columbia; here he worked as a brakeman two weeks, as a flagman eighteen months, and was then promoted to his present position of conductor.

November 20, 1873, Mr. Fitler married Miss Mary A. Peoples, at Lancaster, and to this union have been born six children, viz: Marguerite, Rose M., James (killed by the electric cars in 1893), Mary R., Bernardino and Isabella. Mrs. Mary A. (Peoples) Fitler was born in County Donegal, Ireland, March 22, 1848, and is a daughter of James and Cecelia (Kennedy) Peoples, who came to America in 1848 and settled in Lancaster, Pa. James Peoples was a blacksmith and horseshoer, rose to prominence in Lancaster, was for many years a member of the select council, and died Dec. 9, 1880, at the age of sixty-five years; his wife died April 19, 1866, when but thirty-nine years old, the remains of both being interred in St. Mary's (Catholic) cemetery in Lancaster. To James and Cecelia Peoples were born the following children: Mary A. (Mrs. Fitler); Margaret C., deceased; James F., a machinist at Allegheny City, Pa.; Hugh, deceased; John H., a printer in Reading, Pa.; William, a plumber of Newark, N. J., deceased; Stephan, a farmer and blacksmith in Chester county, Pa.; Charles, who died in Denver, Colo., in 1894, and Katie, who died young. The paternal grandfather of this family was a native of Scotland, whence he migrated to Ireland.

James W. Fitler is a sincere Catholic and a liberal contributor to the support of his church; in politics he is a sound Democrat.

JACOB S. MUMMA. Prominently identified with the growth and development of the industrial and farming interests of East Donegal township, which has been his home all his life, is Jacob S. Mumma, one of the most substantial citizens of this locality.

Mr. Mumma was born on his present farm, March 14, 1846, a son of Jonas and Catherine (Sherk) Mumma, the former a native of East Donegal, and the latter of Chestnut Hill, West Hempfield township, but both died on the farm now occupied by Jacob S. The father lived to the age of eighty-two, dying May 2, 1882, and the mother reached the same age, her death occurring Feb. 2, 1892, and both parents were buried in the Kraybill cemetery, in this township. They were most worthy members of the Mennonite Church, and had a family of three children: Jacob S.; Jonas, who married Ellen R. Nissley, died at the age of twenty-eight; and Catherine died young.

The paternal great-grandfather was Frederick Mumma, who was born in Switzerland and was a pioneer in Lancaster county. The grandfather was Jacob Mumma, who married Anna Kraybill, both of whom died on this farm, which has been in the possession of the family so many years. The maternal grandfather was Christian Sherk, which name was originally written, Sherrick.

Jacob S. Mumma has resided on this fine farm all his life, and every association of youth is connected in some way with these broad acres. General farming and some stockraising has been successfully pursued, and since 1890, a very profitable dairy business has also been operated here. This estate comprises 207 acres of some of the most fertile land in Lancaster county. Although an intelligent and progressive agriculturist finds a sufficient amount of labor connected with farming on an extensive scale, the drudgery and isolation which was, in times past, a necessary part of the life of a husbandman, have been changed, as the country has developed and machinery has been made to save time and labor, and now there is no more ideal life than that of the prosperous farmer. Mr. Mumma has taken advantage of modern methods and his farm is a very valuable, well-cultivated and desirable piece of property.

Jacob S. Mumma was married in Elizabethtown, Oct. 21, 1866, to Rebecca Nissley, and the children born of this union were: Anna, who married Harry S. Rich, cashier of the First National Bank, of Marietta, Pa., and died Oct. 24, 1901; Christian, who conducts a meat business in Mt. Joy; Katherine, who married George U. Best, of Lancaster; Minerva, who is a nurse in the University Hospital, in Philadelphia; Jacob N., a steam fitter, in Philadelphia; Elizabeth, at home; Helen, who died in infancy; John M. and Harry J., at home.

Rebecca (Nissley) Mumma was born in Mount Joy township Nov. 30, 1848, daughter of Hon. Jacob and Elizabeth (Kraybill) Nissley, the former of whom died in Mount Joy township March 8, 1861, at the age of fifty-four. Until 1846, he lived the life of a farmer, but at that time was elected to the Legislature, and during the remainder of his life was occupied in the settling of estates, etc. The mother of Mrs. Mumma died in 1893, at the age of eighty-one, and was laid away in the Kraybill cemetery.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Nissley were: Jacob K., a retired farmer of Florin, Pa.; Martha, who married Elias Eby, a retired farmer of East Donegal township; Barbara, who married Jonas Hostetter, of Florin, Pa.; Catherine, who married Michael H. Engle, a merchant of Elizabethtown; Elizabeth, who married David Rutt, a retired farmer of Sterling, Ill.; Anna E., who married Jacob E. Good, of West Donegal township; Rebecca; and Simon K., who conducts a restaurant in Lancaster.

For the past ten years, Mr. Mumma has testified to his interest in the public schools, by acting as school director, and he has been very earnest in the discharge of his duties. Socially he is connected with the Masonic order, being a member of the Blue Lodge, and in politics, he is an active Republican. Mrs. Mumma is highly valued in the Mennonite Church, where she has long been recognized as a consistent member. The family is one of the leading ones in the township, and enjoys the esteem of all in this locality.

BENJAMIN K. DENLINGER. The Denlinger homestead is a well-known farm in East Lampeter township, and its present owner and occupant, Benjamin K. Denlinger, is a worthy representative of an honorable family, which for many years has given to Lancaster county some of its best citizens.

Benjamin K. Denlinger was born on this farm, located but three miles east of the flourishing city of Lancaster, Jan. 20, 1846, a son of Benjamin and Annie (Kreider) Denlinger. Grandfather Abraham Denlinger inherited, by title, from his father, seventy-two acres of the fertile soil of East Lampeter township, and the title has since been handed down by will. The birth of Abraham Denlinger reaches back to July 21, 1785, his life covering the intervening years until March 6, 1836. He married Annie Landis, and their children were: (1) Martin, born on April 30, 1812, who married Barbara Johns, and died Feb. 5, 1879, the father of three children; a daughter who married Rev. John Landis, a minister of the Mennonite Church; Abraham, who died April 25, 1850, aged sixteen years, three months and twenty-seven days; and Martin, Jr., who married

Anna Groff, and died at the age of thirty-nine years, ten months and one day, leaving his widow with ten children, the youngest six weeks old. These children were: Emma, who married Samuel Herr; Barbara, who married John Denlinger; Lizzie, unmarried; Anna, wife of John Zimmerman; Elam, who married a Miss Burkholder; David, a teacher for a number of years; Martin; Salinda, wife of Jason Ranck; Abraham, a teacher; and Ida, wife of Reuben Buchwalter. One child, Mary, who died aged seven years, nine months and twenty-six days, preceded the father to the grave. (2) Benjamin, born Aug. 6, 1814, died Aug. 27, 1888. (3) Mary, born Nov. 26, 1808, became the wife of John Kreider, and died June 14, 1863. (4) Barbara, born Feb. 4, 1824, became the wife of Daniel Kreider, and died Sept. 8, 1844, aged nineteen years, seven months and three days. (5) Elizabeth, a twin sister to Mary, married Tobias Leaman, and died at the age of seventy-seven years, four months and twenty-six days.

The homestead was the abiding place of Benjamin Denlinger and wife, all their lives, and here they reared a large family of children, teaching them good principles and giving them wise, Christian counsel, and surrounding them with pious influences. These children were: Martin and John, both of whom are mutes; Abraham, who first married Annie Buchwalter, a daughter of Rev. David Buchwalter, and second, Hettie Landis, a daughter of Benjamin Landis; Annie, deceased, married David L. Buchwalter, a son of Deacon Michael Buchwalter; Benjamin K., of this sketch; Tobias K., who married Martha Brubaker, a daughter of Deacon John Brubaker; Daniel K., who married Hettie Hershey, a daughter of Jacob S. Hershey; Esther K., who married John Musser; Mary K. and Elizabeth K., twins, the former of whom is the widow of Henry E. Metzler, a son of Abram Metzler, and the latter, the wife of Christian M. Brackbill, a minister in the Mennonite Church; Barbara K., who married John H. Mellinger, a son of Jacob Mellinger; Lydia K., a mute, who married Daniel Rohrer, also a mute; Catherine K., a mute, who married Henry Kulp, also a mute.

Benjamin K. Denlinger received but few educational advantages. His entire life has been devoted to farming, in which he has taken much enjoyment, and under his ownership the old homestead improves every year. The location of this farm is most desirable, the old Philadelphia pike road running through the land. Until 1893 the family resided in the old house, but in that year, Mr. Denlinger erected his present most comfortable brick residence, and one year later completed the barn and other buildings needed in the management of a large estate. Not only is Mr. Denlinger a superior farmer, but he is also a floriculturist, and has built two commodious greenhouses, 21x60 and 23x100 feet, fitted with all conveniences, where he gives much time and attention to flowers of all kinds, succeeding well in their culture.

In 1868 Mr. Denlinger was united in marriage to Maria Wenger, a daughter of Joseph Wenger, the death of the latter occurring when his daughter was but fifteen years of age. Five years later, Mrs. Denlinger was bereft of her mother, also. To Mr. and Mrs. Denlinger were born: Annie; Benjamin W., who married Lydia Lefever, a daughter of Daniel Lefever, and operates his father's farm; Mary W., who died at the age of four years, six months and twenty-four days; Abraham W., who married Bertha Mary Leaman, a daughter of Amos Leaman; John W., who was always an invalid, and who died at the age of seventeen years, six months and twenty-four days; Harry W.; Martin W.; Joseph W.; and Katie W.

Mr. and Mrs. Denlinger are leading members of the Old Mennonite Church, in which faith they have carefully reared their family. Mr. Denlinger has been a generous contributor, and when the Melinger Church was built was an active member of the building committee. His interest in its progress and extension of influence is great, and he has the charge of the grounds and cemetery. The family is one which enjoys the respect of the community, and all are known as most estimable, upright people.

MISS PAULINE LAMPARTER, daughter of the late Everhardt Lamparter, and sister of Mrs. Eugene Bauer (both of whom are fully mentioned elsewhere), makes her home with her brother, Everhardt, the well known glue manufacturer of Rockland street. Miss Lamparter, though keeping house for her brother, is the owner of a very fine home in the Third ward of Lancaster. She was educated in the schools of Paradise township and Lancaster city, and is a lady of more than ordinary intelligence and of most kindly nature. She is a member of Trinity Lutheran Church, and is never so happy as when she is brightening the lives of those less fortunate than herself.

JOHN H. WEAVER. The family of Mr. Weaver, who is widely known and universally esteemed as one of the most successful farmers in East Lampeter township, has achieved no little distinction in both church and secular affairs. For three generations its members have borne the reputation of skillful agriculturists, good citizens and devout members of the Reformed Mennonite Church, to whose ministry they have contributed two preachers of note.

John H. Weaver is a grandson of John, who was the father of three sons and one daughter, all deceased. The daughter, Nancy, married Conrad Sitzman. The sons were named John, David and Henry. John and Henry belonged to the clergy of the Reformed Mennonite denomination. Henry, the father of John H. Weaver, was a farmer, as had been his father. He was noted for his earnest Christian character, his piety having that vitality which actuated and controlled all his dealings with his fellow men. He married Anna Howry, who bore him four children. He passed away in September, 1898, and sleeps in the quiet grave yard which lies near the old Longenecker meeting house. John H. was the eldest child; the others were Henry, Anna and Levi, the last named a Mennonite minister, who married Ella Fraley, and lives in Strasburg township.

John H. Weaver was born Oct. 1, 1842. He inherits from his ancestors a love for the soil and from them has also descended to him an earnest faith, which is attested by his work. His life has been the quiet, uneventful one of a prosperous farmer, void of any ambition other than to perform well each duty of life as it presented itself to his mind and hand. His marriage to Frances, daughter of Martin Weaver, which occurred in 1872, has been blessed by the birth of three children, Elmer, Charles and Cora.

Elmer Weaver, the eldest son, is one of the most extensive and successful horticulturists in Lancaster county. His greenhouses with the contiguous land, where are situated the other appurtenances of his plant, cover 33,508 square feet, and the amount of glass used in covering them exceeds 37,000 square feet. His chief markets are Philadelphia and Pittsburg, to both of which points he is a large shipper. His specialty is carnations, although he also sends to market large quantities of violets, mignonette, smilax, asters and sweet peas. On May 3, 1899, he was married to Miss Alice Kohr, a daughter of Jacob Kohr, of Manheim township. In that same year he built, from plans conceived and drawn by himself, a handsome residence, replete with all the conveniences known to city homes, and there he now lives.

SAMUEL NISSLY. Prominently identified with the financial interests of Lancaster county is Samuel Nissly, president of the Lincoln National Bank, at Lincoln, Pa., and also a director and stockholder in the Lancaster Bank, and the Lititz National Bank, at Lititz, Pa. For more than sixty years he has been before the public and stands as a worthy example of uprightness of life and careful and conscientious work.

Samuel Nissly comes of Swiss stock, the first emigrant of the name coming to the State of Virginia about 1720, and from there came Grandfather Martin Nissly, who located in Lancaster county. Martin Nissly was born in 1759, and died in 1842, leaving two children: Henry and Catherine.

Henry Nissly married Catherine Martin about 1805, and reared a family of nine children: Peter, Martin, Henry, Samuel, John, Isaac, Elizabeth, Catherine and Annie, the three daughters living on the old home place in Clay township, while the brothers all, except Samuel, have passed away.

Samuel Nissly was born May 29, 1815, and like many another who has come to the front in other walks of life, he was reared on a farm, although his inclinations did not induce him to select an agricultural life as a profession. At the age of eighteen he went to Lititz to learn the trade of cabinetmaker, returning three years later to Clay township, where for a few years he pursued this avocation. Being of a mathematical turn of mind, he then took up surveying and conveyancing, under instructions from his uncle, Peter Martin, and followed that line for some sixty years.

In 1850 Mr. Nissly was elected to the office of justice of the peace, and so efficiently has he served that he has been retained continuously ever since, his present term not expiring until 1905, a most unusual term of service. In 1844 he was one of the organizers of the Northern Mutual Life Insurance Co., and for the following fifty-six years served it in the capacities of director, secretary, treasurer and president, lately resigning the last named position. Mr. Nissly was also interested in other financial organizations, and is at present president of the Lincoln National Bank, an office he has held since its organization in 1884. He was one of the organizers of the Ephrata National Bank, and is also a director and stockholder in both the Lancaster Bank and the Lititz National Bank. Mr. Nissly possesses considerable valuable property in this locality, four fine farms and other real estate, and he resides somewhat retired at his home in Clay township, three-quarters of a mile from Lincoln, Pa., just across the line in Clay township from Ephrata township.

In politics Samuel Nissly is an ardent Republican, and cast his first vote for William Henry Harrison in 1840. Known far and wide for his honesty and his adherence to his convictions of right, no citizen of Lancaster county stands higher in the esteem of the public.

PHARES S. MOORE. Eminently fitted by inherited talent and by a liberal education for important business responsibilities, Phares S. Moore, proprietor of the Keystone rolling mill in West Hempfield township, is one of the best known citizens of the western part of Lancaster county. He was born on the farm which he now owns and occupies Nov. 19, 1862, son of Michael H. and Barbara (Stoner) Moore.

Michael H. Moore, a prominent business man of Lancaster county for many years, was born at Junction, Lancaster county, in 1818; he removed in 1854 to the farm in West Hempfield township, now occupied by his son. In 1862 he removed to Rohrs-town, and there operated an iron rolling mill for four years. Returning to his West Hempfield township residence, he there remained until 1897, when he removed to Lancaster. Though now well advanced in life he still attends to his own extensive business correspondence. Since 1894 he has been president of the Chestnut Hill turnpike. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Lancaster, of which he is now a director. He is a stockholder in the Conestoga Traction Co., and has other large financial interests. In politics he is a Republican, and in religious faith a member of the old Mennonite church. He was the oldest son of Michael and Elizabeth (Hertzler) Moore, pioneer farmers of Penn township, whose six children were Michael H.; John, engaged in the milling business in Rapho township; George, who died on the old farm; Martin, who also died on the old farm; Elizabeth, of Florin, widow of C. J. Heaston; and Harriet, of Philadelphia. Michael H. Moore married Barbara Stoner, daughter of Joseph H. and Barbara (Sprinkle) Stoner, farmers of York county, Pa. To Michael H. and Barbara Moore were born three children; Ella S., wife of Dr. Jacob F. Trexler, of Huntington; Phares S.; and Alice B.

Phares S. Moore was reared on the farm which he now occupies, and he has resided there continuously except while a student at school. He attended the district schools from the age of seven years until he was seventeen. Then for two years he was a student at York Collegiate Institute, York, Pa. His education was completed by a term at the Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. His business career began with a clerkship in the First National Bank of Lancaster, where he remained three years, and there laid the foundation for a thorough and practical business career. Returning home he took charge of his father's milling business in West Hempfield township, continuing in that capacity until Nov. 1, 1898, when he purchased the property and has since successfully conducted the same. The mill on this site was first built by Christian Hertzler in 1811, and has been in the Moore possession for more than forty years. It is operated by water from the Big Chickies creek, and is of forty horse power capacity.

Mr. Moore married, in Penn township, in March, 1895, Miss Emma S. Gross. She is a native of Penn township, and a daughter of Levy S. and Elizabeth (Espenshay) Gross, farmers of Penn township. To Phares S. and Emma S. Moore have been born three children, Michael G., Serena G. and Levi G. In politics Mr. Moore is a Republican.

MOSES SNAVELY, a retired miller, who is passing the last years of an industrious and highly useful life in an honorable retirement in Intercourse, Lancaster county, was born in that village Feb. 18, 1842, son of Joseph and Martha (Hershey) Snavelly.

Joseph Snavelly was born in Lebanon county, and the mother in Leacock township, Lancaster county. The father was a farmer all his life, but spent his last fifteen years in retirement. They were married in 1825, and lived for a time in Clay township, but presently removed to their farm in Leacock township, where the greater part of their mature lives was spent. He was born in 1801, and died Aug. 1, 1871; she was born in 1804, and died July 14, 1857. They were both members of the Mennonite Church, and their remains are resting in the cemetery connected with the Hershey Church.

Joseph and Martha Snively were the parents of the following family: Elizabeth, who lives in Intercoarse, unmarried; John, who died in 1900, unmarried; Joseph, living retired in Wayne county, Ohio, who married first a Miss Martin, and second, a Miss Tigert; Martha, deceased wife of Solomon Warner; Samuel, who married Anna Rudy, and is dead; Henry, a retired farmer in Earl township, who has had two wives, Elizabeth Hershey and Fanny Martin; Anna, married to Israel Eberly, a retired farmer of Stevens, Pa.; Benjamin, who is unmarried and living with his sister at Intercoarse; Moses; Jacob, who married Malinda Rutter, and lives in Wayne county, Ohio; Lydia, who died young; and Amos, a farmer in Wayne county, Ohio, who married a Martin.

The paternal grandparents of Moses Snively were John and Elizabeth (Long) Snively, who spent their married lives in Lebanon county. His father came from Germany. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Snively were John and Anna (Hurst) Hershey, both of Dauphin county, Pa. His father was born in Lancaster county.

Moses Snively was married in Leacock township to Miss Susanna Clark, and there were born to this union the following family: Hettie A., late wife of Phares Eby; Jesse Miller, who married Ida Lantz, and lives in Paradise township, where they have a family of three children, Elmer, Ralph and Jesse; Magdalena and Elizabeth, both of whom died young; Susie, at home. Mrs. Susanna (Clark) Snively, born in Salisbury township, May 2, 1846, is a daughter of Jesse and Hettie (Shirk) Clark, of Lancaster county. Her father was a farmer, but lived retired during the ten years prior to his death, which occurred in 1893, at the age of eighty-one years. His widow survived until 1896, when she died at the age of eighty-one years. They were buried in Ashland county, Ohio, having removed to that section in 1869. Both were members of the Mennonite Church. They were the parents of the following family: Fanny, wife of Amos Esbenschade of Lancaster county, who moved to Ashland county, Ohio, in 1866, and who had eighteen children; Martin, who married Jemima Hess, and is a life insurance agent in Ashland county, Ohio; Peter, a farmer in Salisbury township, who married Anna Brackbill; Susanna, the wife of Moses Snively; Jesse, who died young; John, who married in Ashland county, Ohio, and is a retired farmer; Catherine A., who died young.

Moses Snively remained with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-four, when he began farming in Leacock township. Ten years later he purchased a mill in Paradise township, which he carried on for eighteen years, and then retired to a pleasant home in Intercoarse, leaving the mill in the hands of his son, who has become a very popular miller. Mr. Snively and his wife belong to the Mennonite Church, and he is a Republican. For the last three years he has been a director of the Conestoga National Bank at Lancaster. His business talents have long been recognized, and he is highly esteemed by all who know him.

HENRY F. HOSTETTER, a resident of Manheim township, belongs to one of the old and honored families of Lancaster county, and was born on the farm where he is now residing, Nov. 28, 1841, a son of Christian and Catherine (Franck) Hostetter. His father was born in Donegal township in 1805, and was there reared. A year after his marriage he purchased the farm on which his son, Henry F., is now residing. It comprises ninety-seven acres, and as long as the parents lived it was their home. It was about 1827 that the elder Hostetter bought it, and greatly improved it. In 1852 he erected the farm home, and there he lived until his death in 1879. The son of Christian Hostetter, he was a man of much character and force, and with his wife belonged to the Old Mennonite Church.

Catherine (Franck) Hostetter was born Sept. 2, 1807, and died in December, 1886. She was the daughter of Deacon John and Maria (Bowman) Franck. Christian and Catherine Hostetter had a family of ten children: Maria, late wife of Jacob Oberholtzer; Michael, a resident of Manheim borough, a retired farmer; John, a carpenter in Lancaster; Christian, a retired farmer of Donegal township; Catherine, the widow of Isaac L. Stoner, of Penn township; Henry F.; Benjamin, who died at the age of seventeen years; Anna, the wife of Joseph G. Gachenhauer, of East Hempfield township; David F., a farmer in Manheim township; one who died in infancy.

Henry F. Hostetter was born and reared on the old homestead, where he still resides, midway between Neffsville and Petersburg. Educated in the public schools, at the age of twenty-four he began operating the homestead, which he carried on for eleven years, when he moved to a farm belonging to Abraham Huber, near Lancaster, where he spent two years. On the death of his father he returned to the homestead to care for his mother during her declining years, and on her death he purchased fifty-seven acres of the family estate, and has made that his home till the present time. His entire attention is given to the tilling of his soil, and his name is classed with those of the most successful agriculturists of the section.

Mr. Hostetter was married Oct. 24, 1865, to Miss Anna B., a daughter of John and Fannie (Buckwalter) Huber, and born in Leacock township, May 9, 1846. Mr. and Mrs. Hostetter are the parents of two children: Fannie, who died April 15, 1897, in her thirty-first year; and Katie, who is the wife of Willis S. Kilheffer, of Lancaster. They have two children, Annie and Abraham.

Mr. and Mrs. Hostetter are members of the Old Mennonite Church, of which he is a trustee. The family all stand high in the esteem and confidence of the community.

ABRAHAM BACHMAN, one of the progressive and public-spirited men of Lancaster county, belongs to one of the solid, respected and substantial families who for many years have taken part in the affairs of this part of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Abraham Bachman was born Aug. 13, 1843, a son of John and Anna (Herr) Bachman, in Pequea township, where he was reared and educated. His father was a competent cabinet-maker, and owned an establishment, and while but a lad Abraham took an interest in this trade and began working in wood also, later learning the trade of carpenter under the supervision of his brother, Benjamin H. Bachman. For many years he followed journey work, beginning contracting on his own account in 1875, since which time he has been busily engaged and is considered one of the most satisfactory workmen in his line in Lancaster county. Many of the best built residences and barns in this locality are the work of his skilled hands.

Abraham Bachman married Catherine Houser, a daughter of John Houser, of West Lampeter township, and five children have been born to this union: Jacob F., who is a farmer of West Lampeter township; Henry H., a mechanic in the employ of William Wohlsen, in his sash and door works, in Lancaster; A. Morris, a blacksmith of West Lampeter township; John W., a cabinet-maker and carpenter, associated with his father in business; and Lydia Ann, the wife of Moses R. Landis, of East Lampeter township.

The father and sons are all Republicans, and are among the best citizens of the township, well representing the business interests of that part of Lancaster county.

GEORGE M. DELP, one of the representative men of Manheim township, was born in Lower Leacock township, Lancaster county, Oct. 3, 1843, and is a son of John and Anna (Meixell) Delp.

John Delp was born in Montgomery county, Pa., and when a young man came to Lancaster county, where he met and married Miss Anna Meixell, who was a native of Lancaster county, and a daughter of John Meixell, of Leacock township. After their marriage, the young couple spent several years in Montgomery county, Pa., and about 1840 returned to Lancaster county. Here John Delp died, about 1856, when he was fifty-five years of age. In his politics he was an ardent Abolitionist, and was the son of parents who were members of the New Mennonite Church. His widow with her two youngest sons went West to make her home near Sterling, Ill. She passed away at the age of seventy-eight years, having been the mother of twelve children: Jacob, who resides in Kansas, and is a veteran of the War of the Rebellion; Catherine, who married Henry Roland, of Manheim township, and is dead; Elizabeth, late wife of Henry Butt, of Lancaster; Mary, the widow of Henry Faltz, of Lancaster county; Michael, a veteran of the war of the Rebellion and now a farmer in Kansas; John, who lives in Whiteside county, Ill.; Francis, who served in the Union army, and is a resident of Lancaster; George M.; David, who served in the Union army, and is a farmer and stock raiser in Wyoming; Samuel, who died at the age of two years; Samuel (2), a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and now a farmer in Whiteside county; Isaac, a mechanic and a stone mason in Kansas.

George M. Delp was reared to a farm life, and was compelled by the death of his father to care for himself at the early age of thirteen years. For several years he found employment among the neighboring farmers, working by the month until he was about eighteen years old. He attended school during the winter's season, and worked during the summer. It was a hard struggle but it fitted him for the activities of life before him, and was a large factor in his success.

Mr. Delp enlisted in Co. E, 79th P. V. I., Sept. 20, 1861, when he was less than eighteen years, and was mustered out March 4, 1865. Among the battles in which he bore a gallant part were those at Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, and at White Point, where he was taken prisoner; he was immured at Richmond, Danville and Andersonville, where he was confined eleven months, and then taken from there to Florence, S. C., and to Goldsborough, N. C., where he was rescued by the Union troops. On the first day at Chickamauga he was slightly wounded, but he has never recovered from the effects of his prison life. After he was mustered out, Mr. Delp returned home and for two or three years was engaged in the butcher business at Neffsville. After this for some two years he worked out by the month.

When Mr. Delp married, he settled on a farm, and for some two years lived on a rented place. Later he purchased a farm of twelve acres about a mile southwest of Neffsville, and this has been his home to the present time. His acreage has been increased by subsequent purchases of twelve acres in one tract and sixteen in another, and he proved himself a hard-working and successful farmer. He built the home in which he lives and the farm buildings have all been newly built by him. By his industry and thrift he has accumulated considerable property, and is well regarded by his fellow townsmen, who have elected him supervisor of Manheim township.

Mr. Delp was married in 1868 to Miss Maria Shriner, a daughter of Jacob and Sarah Shriner, of Manheim township. To them came a family of seven children, all of whom are living: Ida, the wife of Benjamin Hertler, of Mechanicsville, Lancaster county; John, at home; Ulysses, who married Ellen Huber and resides in Warwick township; Sadie, the wife of Meno Hess, of Manheim township; Laura, Ellen and Mahlon, at home.

Mrs. Delp died in April, 1889. Mr. Delp belongs to the Old Mennonite Church, is a man of much character, and stands well in the community where he has passed so many industrious and useful years.

HENRY M. MAYER, a resident of Rohrerstown who needs no introduction to the citizens of his section of Lancaster county, was born March 23, 1844, in Manheim township, on the farm now owned by the John Keller estate, near the city of Lancaster. He comes of old Pennsylvania stock, being of the sixth generation in descent from John Mayer, who came hither from Switzerland in the seventeenth century, and settled in Manheim township, taking up a large estate purchased from the Penns.

Martin R. Mayer, father of Henry M., was born in April, 1798, in Manheim township, near Lancaster City. He was the owner of some 540 acres, including the Keller farm before mentioned. For over thirty years he served in the ministry of the Old Mennonite Church.

Henry M. Mayer was reared in his native township, and received the greater part of his education in its common schools. He attended the Lititz Academy for two years, 1860 and 1861. Taking up the vocation to which he had been trained from boyhood, he worked on the farms of his father and brother until his marriage. In the spring of 1868 he commenced farming on his own account; in East Hempfield township, where he resided for seventeen years, successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits, and acquiring a high reputation as one of the most intelligent, up-to-date farmers of that region. Diligence in the improvement of the land, the crops, the manner of cultivation, in everything, in fact, pertaining to the proper and profitable conduct of a farm, was rewarded with the most encouraging results. But Mr. Mayer in this, as in all other work he has undertaken, merely followed the natural bent of his character for thoroughness, perseverance and painstaking industry, and his place was as nearly a model farm as unceasing labor and judiciously expended means could make it. In 1885 he moved to Rohrerstown, in East Hempfield township, in order to give more attention to his surveying and conveyancing interests, which were becoming extensive, and there he has ever since resided, prominently identified with the town and its affairs. Mr. Mayer is holding important trusts in settling up and managing large estates, and he has by his fidelity and sterling integrity in the conduct of such business won the hearty respect of all with whom he has been associated. Mr. Mayer was the first vice-president of a national bank ever elected in Lancaster county and was one of the officers of the Fulton National Bank of Lancaster when it was first organized.

In 1880 he was elected a trustee of the State Normal School at Millersville, which position he still holds, and since 1883 he has been chairman of the Committee of Instruction and Discipline of that institution. The affairs of his town have also received his attention, his services as member of the board of school directors in East Hempfield township covering the period from 1872 to 1884, during eleven years of which he was the efficient secretary of the board. All in all, Mr. Mayer has led a life alike of value to the community and creditable to himself, for although he had the advantage of worthy ancestry to give him standing in the world, he has lived fully up to the standard, and the universal esteem which he enjoys is the best evidence of what he has accomplished on his own merits alone. In 1878 he joined the Church of God at Rohrerstown, and the same year was elected one of the elders of the church, still serving in that capacity.

In November, 1867, Mr. Mayer was united in marriage with Frances M. Hershey, eldest daughter of J. Hoffman and Barbara Hershey, of West Hempfield township. Two daughters blessed this union, Dora E. and Mamie B., of whom Mamie died in her eighth year. Dora is the wife of Harry E. Hershey, treasurer of the Steinman Hardware Company, to whom she was married in February, 1900.

JOHN WITMER HESS, M. D. (deceased). Few physicians of Lancaster ever left behind them a more lasting memory than Dr. John Witmer Hess, who passed out of life Nov. 13, 1895, after a professional career marked with unusual success and followed with a faithfulness which precluded active interest in every other line of endeavor. Dr. Hess was, first, last and all the time, the physician, careful, patient, watchful and skillful.

The Doctor was born March 7, 1840, in Eden township, Lancaster county, and although only fifty-five years of life were granted him he accomplished more in alleviating pain and advancing his beloved science than have many whose life span extended much farther. He was a son of Daniel and Barbara (Witmer) Hess, the former of whom was a farmer and also a hotel-keeper for many years on the Columbia pike, four miles west of Lancaster. The following children were born to Daniel Hess and his wife: Dr. John W.; Martin, a soldier during the Civil war, who has retired to the Soldiers' Home; Witmer J., a farmer at Mountville, Pa.; Edward, a farmer in Kansas; Catherine and Emma, deceased; Elizabeth, widow of John S. Hoover, of Mountville; Alice, who married George Trout, a farmer of Landisville; Ellen, who married Harry Detrich, of Manor township; and Zena, deceased, who married Alfred Coble, of South Bend, Ind. The Hess family is of Swiss extraction and more extended mention of its members will be found elsewhere.

Dr. Hess received the educational advantages afforded by the district schools, and later graduated from the Millersville Normal School, where he was regarded as an unusually bright and ambitious student. Soon after he entered upon his medical reading, with Dr. Alexander Cassidy, of Millersville, and then entered Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, graduating from that institution in 1864, and immediately commencing practice with Dr. Cassidy, his old preceptor. Dr. Hess married, and then started upon his own career, remaining in Millersville until November, 1876, when he removed to Lancaster. Almost immediately he entered upon a large and engrossing practice, and, as stated, so faithfully did he attend to its demands that he refused all political or other office, although he sympathized strongly with the Republican party. He passed away in November, 1895, and was buried in Woodward Hill cemetery. In 1873 he joined Lodge No. 43, F. & A. M.; and he also belonged to Chapter No. 43 R. A. M.; Council No. 19; Commandery No. 13, K. T.; The Lodge of Perfection; and the Knights of Pythias.

J. D. Kef

In 1864 Dr. Hess was united in marriage to Miss Sarah A. Baer, born in Hempfield township, daughter of Martin H. and Mary (Baer) Baer, the former of whom was a farmer. Mr. Baer died in 1837, at the age of thirty-five years, a member of the Mennonite Church, and was buried in the Mennonite cemetery in Millersville. Mrs. Baer married (second) Jacob Bausman, more extended mention of whom will be found elsewhere. Mrs. Hess is kind and liberal, and with other members of the family recalls Dr. Hess and his work with pardonable pride, justly considering him one of the representative men of Lancaster. Her pleasant home is in the city, where she is surrounded by many attached friends. She belongs to the Reformed Church. Her family also has long been a prominent one in Lancaster county.

EDWIN M. GILBERT, a leading member of the Lancaster County Bar, is a descendant of John and Florence Gilbert, who came to the American shores from Cornwall, England (where they belonged to an old and honored family), in company with William Penn in 1682. They settled in Byberry, on a land grant from the Penns, this ancient estate being still in the hands of their descendants. These early Gilberts were farmers by occupation, and Quakers in religion. The family came to Lancaster county in the early part of the nineteenth century and settled near Bird-in-Hand. When the Gilbert family removed from Bucks county they settled at Gilberton, in Carbon county, to which they gave their family name, and after living there six months they were captured in 1781 by the Indians and taken to Canada, where they were kept in captivity a number of years. There the elder Gilbert died, and his body was buried along the Niagara river. This was E. M. Gilbert's great-great-grandfather, and his grandfather, John, who was a farmer, was born in captivity.

Joseph H. Gilbert, father of Edwin M., died in 1893, in Eden township, where he was a farmer and had a tannery. Hannah H. Whitson, his wife, was the daughter of Micah Whitson, of a noted Quaker family. This union was blessed with seven children, five of whom are living: Mary W., the wife of A. Walton, a farmer of Bart township; Amos, in the creamery business at Quarryville; Edwin M., of Lancaster; Hugh W., the postmaster at Quarryville, where he has a livery business; and Joseph H., a laundryman in Chester county.

Edwin M. Gilbert was born in Eden township, on the old homestead, March 9, 1862, and had his education in the district school, and in the Union Academy at Colerain, under Prof. Andrews, completing it in the State Normal School at Westchester. Young Gilbert then came to Lancaster to become a student in the law office of J. W. Johnson. For three years he studied law, and for a time taught school, pursuing his legal preparation during the interim of the school sessions, and was admitted to practice Oct. 14, 1885. Two years later, according to the rules of the courts, he was admitted to practice in the Supreme and Superior courts, in both of which he has since been a constant worker. Mr. Gilbert is an ardent Republican, and was honored with the position of solicitor for the prison inspectors of Lancaster county, and has served as, and is now, city solicitor of Lancaster.

On Jan. 2, 1887, Mr. Gilbert was married to Miss Carrie V. Yonkers, whose ancestors were the founders of the now famous Yonkers, N. Y. This union was blessed with one child, Rodney Yonkers, who is now a student of Yeates Institute. With the exception of the Young Republican Club, Edwin M. Gilbert belongs to no organization save the Society of Friends of Bart Meeting, Bart township, devoting his entire time to the practice of the law, in which he has been very successful.

JOHN G. WESTAFER, editor and proprietor of the Elizabethtown Chronicle, and one of the leading and most influential citizens of Elizabethtown, Pa., was born in Middletown, Dauphin Co., Pa., on April 8, 1850. His parents were George and Mary (Zimmerman) Westafer, of York and Dauphin counties respectively; the father was a man of prominence, being both constable and tax collector of Middletown for a period of twenty-five years. He passed out of life in 1863, at the age of seventy-three years, and the mother survived until 1885, dying at the age of seventy-eight years; their burial was in the cemetery at Elizabethtown. They were consistent members of the Church of God.

John G. Westafer was the only child of his parents, and was educated in the public schools of Middletown. Between the ages of fifteen and nineteen he was under the tutorship of J. W. Stofer, in the printing business, on the Middletown Journal. In November, 1869, he came to Elizabethtown, and on Dec. 6 established the Elizabethtown Chronicle, this excellent journal being now in its thirty-fourth volume. It began its existence as a six-column folio, which has been enlarged into an eight-column folio, and it has a very large circulation among a most intelligent class of readers. Mr. Westafer wields a ready and facile pen, keeps thoroughly abreast of the times, and gives his patrons a first-class, instructive and newsy journal, taking care to make it a paper suitable for all ages, and a proper fireside companion. His efforts have been successful, and the influence he wields in the Republican party ranks is a very important political factor. Mr. Westafer has a complete job printing department connected with his office.

Mr. Westafer has held a number of positions of responsibility. For nine years, despite the cares of a growing business, he has been the very efficient president of the board of health, and has shown his interest in the schools by serving as director for three years. For twenty-eight years he has been a valued member of the I. O. O. F., and no one in his vicinity doubts his adherence to the principles of the Republican party.

In September, 1872, in Elizabethtown, Mr. Westafer was united in marriage with Miss Esther Weaver, who was born March 9, 1848, a daughter of Daniel and Magdalena (Minnich) Weaver, of West Donegal township, where the former was engaged as a carpenter and also in farming. The two children born to this union are: Jenny L., wife of Ambrose Raffensberger, who is the telephone pole inspector at Elizabethtown; and George W., who married Birdie Angstadt, and has three children, Vera, Ruth and John G. Since April 1, 1902, George W. has been engaged as a partner with his father in the printing business, under the firm name of John G. Westafer & Son, and he is also in the green-house business. The family are connected with the Lutheran Church, and are prominent in the social life of their town.

LUKINS PENROSE, of Liberty Square, Pa., was born in Drumore township, on the farm which he now owns, Sept. 6, 1845, a son of Benjamin and Hannah (Lukins) Penrose, the former a native of Bucks county and the latter of Montgomery county.

Benjamin Penrose was born in 1803 and was a son of Israel Penrose, who married Susan Folk, both being natives of Bucks county. The children born to Benjamin and Susan Penrose were: Jane, who died unmarried; Elizabeth, deceased, who married William Ambler, of Martic township; Edith, deceased, who married James Martin, of Union county, Ohio; Benjamin, the father of Lukins; and Joseph, who married Margaret Lukins.

Grandfather Israel Penrose came to Drumore township with his family in 1828 and purchased the farm and the mill property which is now known in this locality as Hess' Mills, and lived there until his death, in 1857. Benjamin Penrose, the son of Israel and the father of Lukins, was married about 1835, to Hannah Lukins, and the eight children born to this union were: Edith, the widow of Isaac Shoemaker, of Drumore township; Everard, a resident of California; Israel A., a retired farmer of Fairfield, Pa.; Lukins; Annie Elizabeth, who died unmarried; Sarah S. Rutter, who is living in Drumore. The others passed away in infancy. Benjamin Penrose died in 1881.

Lukins Penrose was reared on the pleasant old farm and learned his father's trade in the mill, but in 1865 he began farming operations, continuing through these years to carry on agricultural work, and his fine farm of 180 acres, which he inherited from his father, is well improved and very valuable.

Lukins Penrose was married on Dec. 17, 1873, to Miss Rachel Ankrim, of Drumore township, who passed out of life on Dec. 17, 1883, leaving a vacant place which has never been filled. In every way she was a good woman, a kind friend, and was devoted to her home and family. The children born to this union were: Benjamin E., born Nov. 9, 1874, unmarried, and living in Union county, Ohio; Hannah Elizabeth, who was born July 11, 1879, and is now her father's very capable housekeeper; Alice May, born April 2, 1881, who resides with her uncle, Israel Penrose, at Fairfield; and Joseph, born June 5, 1883, who died on April 23, 1901.

In his religious belief Lukins Penrose is a Quaker. In politics he is a Republican. Mr. Penrose enjoys the esteem of the community, is an excellent farmer, an accommodating neighbor, a kind and indulgent father, and a man who represents in every way a high type of citizenship.

GEORGE W. BAIR, a resident of Earl township, was born in Leacock township, near Ellsworth, a son of Joel Bair and a grandson of Joel Bair.

Joel Bair, the grandfather, was a farmer in Leacock township, and was classed among the larger land owners of the day. He married a Miss Wolf, by whom he had the following family: George, who died in Upper Leacock township; Joel, the father of George W.; Daniel, who died in Ohio; Henry, a resident of Chester county; Jacob, who died in Chester county; Hetty, who married D. Musselman, and removed to Adams county; Catherine, the widow of Henry Kurtz, of Cocalico township; Christina, married to Jacob Hershey, both deceased; Caroline, who married Daniel Eby, both now deceased.

Joel Bair, the father of George W., was born and reared in Leacock township, where he began as a farmer, making that the occupation of his life. About 1862 he moved into Earl township, where he bought a farm of 126 acres, on which he erected good buildings, and there he lived until his death. This home is now owned by two of his sons. In course of time he became one of the better known and substantial citizens of the county, and had more than a local reputation as a farmer and stock raiser. He and his wife, Leah Bushong, were members of the Reformed Church. She was a daughter of John Bushong, and was born in East Lampeter township. Her death occurred in 1884.

at the age of sixty-six years. Mr. Bair died in 1890, at the age of eighty years. To them were born seven children: Eve Anna, the wife of Diller Rauck, of Chester county; Israel, a resident of New Holland; John B., a resident of Leacock township; Amanda, the wife of Elam Kling, a resident of Earl township; George W.; Amos O., who died when two years old; Jason D., a merchant in Leacock township.

George W. Bair was born July 6, 1853, was reared on the farm and had his education in the public schools. When he was twenty-five he began farming on his own account in Upper Leacock township, in which occupation he was engaged for one year, when he returned to Earl township, and in 1884 located on the farm where he still resides. This farm contains sixty acres, and is cultivated so that it ranks among the very best in the county. He owns a second farm of thirty-two acres, adjoining his home place, and both are well improved. Mr. Bair is an enterprising and public-spirited man, and takes a deep interest in anything that looks to the public good. He has filled the office of supervisor and has been a member of the County Republican Committee. For the last six years he has dealt largely in phosphates.

Mr. Bair was married Nov. 19, 1878, to Miss Laura J. Bushong, daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Zook) Bushong, who was born in Upper Leacock township in 1857. To this union have come four children: Elva Mary, who died at the age of ten months; Ira Garfield, born Oct. 8, 1881; Mabel Leah, who died when two and a half years old; Edna I., born Jan. 20, 1887.

Mr. and Mrs. Bair are members of the Reformed Church, in which he is an elder. He is president of the Consistory, and superintendent of the Sabbath-school connected with the local church. Mrs. Bair is a teacher in the Sunday-school, the son is librarian, and the daughter is organist. Mr. Bair united with the church when he was seventeen years of age, and when he was twenty was made a deacon. Since 1894 he has been an elder of the church, which he has represented at the Classis.

WALTER S. BUNTING, a prominent and respected farmer of Colerain township, Lancaster county, was born in the home where he is now living, and is a son of Robert and Margaret (Morgan) Bunting, natives of Colerain and Pequea townships, respectively.

The mother was a daughter of William Morgan; the father was the son of Walter Bunting, who came from Ireland and established the present homestead in 1782. Here in 1791 he erected a stone barn which remained in a good state of preservation until Aug. 23, 1902, when it was burned. The stone house on the property was built in 1817, and it is one of the good and solid structures of the present time. Here Walter Bunting and his wife died, leaving four children: Elizabeth Bunting, who married a Mr. Smith, and moved to Ohio; Margaret Bunting, who married a Mr. McCoy, and also moved into Ohio; William Bunting, who lived and died in Chester county; Robert Bunting, the father of Walter S., who settled with his wife on the Bunting homestead, where he lived and died. During his active years Walter Bunting added many solid improvements to the farm, and brought it into a high state of fertility. He died in 1880, and his widow two years later. They were among the founders of the Presbyterian Church in Colerain township, and were devoted members of that body. In politics he was a Democrat, and at various times was elected to local positions in Colerain township.

Robert Bunting and his wife had seven children. (1) Nancy Bunting married A. J. Miller, and lives in Philadelphia, where he holds a position with the Pennsylvania Railroad, with his office at Broad street station. They have six children: John; Margaret B., the wife of Joseph P. Rea, of Philadelphia; Mary; Louisa; Emma; and Francis. (2) William lives in Philadelphia. (3) Ella was educated at the Union High School, is unmarried, and makes her home in Philadelphia. (4) Robert died when a young man. (5) Walter S. (6) Mary Bunting died when a young woman. (7) Thomas Bunting died in childhood.

Walter S. Bunting was educated in the Union High School, and remained on the home farm until his marriage, in February, 1877, when Mary L., the daughter of James and Margaret (McIntyre) Lindsey, became his wife. James Lindsey was born in Lower Oxford township, Chester county. Margaret McIntyre was born near Oxford. After their marriage they settled on the John Lindsey homestead in Chester county. John Lindsey, the grandfather of Mrs. Bunting, came from the North of Ireland in 1782, to make his home in Chester county, where he lived and died on a farm, leaving five children, James, John, Jackson, Mary and Hannah. The homestead fell to James Lindsey, and there Mrs. Bunting was born. She was educated at the home schools, and the Oxford Seminary.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bunting settled on a farm adjoining their present location, where they lived seven years. In 1885 they moved to the old Bunting homestead, where he has lived to the present time. He is a man of standing in the community. On his present farm he has made many very substantial improvements, has put hot and cold water and steam heat into the building, and has greatly improved the place. He is the father of four children: (1) Robert J., secured his education in the Union High School, and taught school for two years in Colerain township. In 1899 he secured a lucrative position at the Broad Street depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Philadelphia. (2) Mary E. attended the Union High School, from which she graduated, and the West Chester State Normal, where she was graduated in the class of 1901, and is now one of the teachers in the Colerain Union School. (3) Walter

S. and (4) Albert M. were twins; Albert died when two and a half years old; Walter S. is now a student at the Union High School.

Mrs. Walter S. Bunting belongs to the Presbyterian Church, with which her husband is also connected. In politics he has always been a Democrat, and for seven years was school director.

The Buntings are an old and prominent family in Colerain township. The old stock were all Presbyterians, and were widely known all over the county as prosperous and successful farmers, and worthily wears an honored name.

HENRY B. NISSLEY, now a retired farmer at Florin, Pa., is somewhat advanced in life, and has put behind him useful and industrious years as his contribution to the welfare of his native community.

Mr. Nissley was born March 28, 1846, the son of Christ E. and Fanny (Breneman) Nissley, both of whom were born in Rapho township. For fifteen years prior to his death the father was a retired farmer. A man of some prominence in the community, he filled the position of school director for eighteen years and was a shrewd and thrifty farmer, of good habits and high character. In 1891 he passed away at the age of seventy years, and his widow in 1894, at the age of sixty-four years. They were both members of the Mennonite Church, and were buried at Landisville. To them were born: Henry B.; Samuel, a farmer in West Hempfield township; Jonas, a farmer in West Hempfield; Anna, who married John Stehman, of Lancaster county; Catherine, who married Daniel Forney; Fanny, who married Amos Shelly, a farmer in the township of Mt. Joy; David, deceased; Ellen, living in Lancaster, Pa.; Emma, who married Witmer Rohrer, a foreman in the silk mill at Lancaster.

The parents of Christ E. Nissley were Samuel and Emma (Eby) Nissley, who were honest and industrious farming people near Petersburg, where they both died on their farm. The maternal grandfather of Henry B. Nissley was Henry Breneman, of Lancaster county.

Henry B. Nissley was twice married. Nov. 30, 1869, in Lancaster, Pa., he was married to Rebecca B. Brubaker, by whom he became the father of these children: Alice, who died at the age of twenty-three years; Isaac B., a farmer in Salunga, Pa.; Frances B. and Enos B. are at home; Minnie; Paris; Walter B., a farmer in this county; Ira B., deceased. Mrs. Rebecca B. Nissley was born in Rapho township, and died Oct. 11, 1888. She was buried in Graybill's cemetery in East Donegal township, and was a daughter of Isaac and Rebecca (Hershey) Brubaker, both of whom died on their homestead in Rapho township.

Mr. Nissley and Mrs. Kate (Hoffer) Risser were married May 18, 1890, in Lancaster, Pa. Mrs. Nissley is the daughter of Jacob and Mary (Herst) Hoffer, of Dauphin and Lancaster counties, respectively. Her father died in 1881, at the age of sixty-four, and her mother in 1877, at the age of sixty years. They were both buried in the cemetery connected with the Green Tree meeting house in Mt. Joy township. They were members of the German Baptist Church, and were good, honest people, of industrious habits and fine character.

Jacob Hoffer came to Lancaster county in 1857, and remained there until his death. To him were born these children: Mary, Isaac, David and Ely, all deceased; Kate, Mrs. Nissley; John, deceased; Tobias, a retired farmer in Elizabethtown, Pa., Elizabeth, the widow of Peter Nissley, and living at Elizabethtown.

Mrs. Nissley's first husband was Christ Risser, of Mt. Joy, by whom she became the mother of the following children: Ellen, who married Edward Ginrich, a retired farmer in Dauphin county; Minnie, the wife of Christ Ginrich, a drover of Lebanon county, Pa.; Ulysses, who married Minnie Hartz, and is a physician in Campbelltown, Pa.; Dora, the wife of Frank Hershey, a machinist of Waynesboro, Pa.; Phoebe, Christ and Herbert, at home; Ada, deceased. Christ Risser, who was born in Lebanon county, Pa., died in 1888, at the age of forty years, on the farm where his life was spent; the son of Christ and Mary (Nissley) Risser, he was a man of considerable importance in the community where his well-ordered life was devoted to honest industry.

Henry B. Nissley remained with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-three years, when he bought a farm of ten acres near Lancaster and engaged in truck farming for two years. The young farmer then sold his place and bought a large farm of 146 acres in East Donegal township, remaining there for a few years, and then for nine years in Mt. Joy township, after which he returned to his place and continued there until 1896. That year he came to Florin to make it his permanent home, and there he has remained until the present time. In Florin he is engaged in the raising of fruit, and rents his farm at a good figure.

In his political sentiments Mr. Nissley is a Republican. His wife is a member of the German Baptist Church. They are prominent and wealthy people, and well deserve a place in any record of the better class of Lancaster county.

JOSEPH BARNETT, a retired hotel man of Lancaster, is probably one of the best known citizens of Lancaster county, and he holds a high place in the regard of his fellow citizens wherever he is known. For many years he was an active business man of the city where he yet makes his home.

Mr. Barnett was born in Lancaster Oct. 18, 1827, son of Joseph Barnett, a native of Germany, who came to the United States during early manhood in order to escape military service. He was naturalized in Lancaster. He married Catherine Smith, who was born in the United States, and they became the parents of children as follows: Charles, Henry L., Caroline, Mary Ann, Joseph and Jacob, of whom Joseph is now the only survivor. None of this family married. The father was a member of St. Mary's Church, while the mother belonged to the Reformed Church. She passed away in 1834, and Mr. Barnett followed her to the grave in 1844, at the age of sixty-five years. Their remains rest in Lancaster cemetery. He was a blacksmith by trade, but for a number of years engaged in the hotel business, carrying on a hotel in the upper part of the city of Lancaster.

Joseph Barnett was reared in Lancaster and remained with his parents as long as they lived. He followed in his father's footsteps, learning the trade of blacksmith and machinist, for which he possesses considerable ability, and, rising gradually, became master mechanic for the Ohio & Mississippi railroad, at St. Louis, Mo., holding that position one year. In 1858 he returned to Lancaster, and made his home with his brother, Henry L., who was at that time conducting the old "Cadwell House" (now the "Imperial"), continuing in its management thirteen years. After his death, which occurred Oct. 18, 1878, Joseph Barnett took charge of the hotel, which he carried on until his retirement from business life, in 1891. As a hotel man he was highly successful, as, indeed, all the members of the family who have engaged in that line have been, his genial disposition bringing the house much popularity and good will. Though he now leads a quiet life, Mr. Barnett has in his day been a prominent, useful citizen, and as such won the esteem of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. He is now enjoying the ease to which a long life of activity entitles him. Mr. Barnett is a Democrat in political faith, and interested in the success of his party.

ELIAS WOLF. Among the thrifty and well-established citizens of Akron borough is Elias Wolf, who successfully conducts a business in coal and lumber, and through a long career has won for himself the respect and esteem of the whole community.

Elias Wolf was born Sept. 17, 1843, a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Kemper) Wolf, of Ephrata township. Samuel Wolf was a son of Jacob Wolf, a well-known farmer of Lancaster county, was born in 1810 and died on April 9, 1898; his wife, born in 1810, passed away in 1876. They reared these children: Sarah, who married Reuben Mohler; George, deceased; David, deceased; Susannah; Samuel; Elias; Elizabeth; Catherine, deceased.

Elias Wolf was reared on a farm and received his education in the common schools of his district. Possessed of but limited means, he was both provident and industrious and in the course of time accumulated large means, at present being the owner of an excellent business and two fine farms near Akron.

The marriage of Elias Wolf to Miss Miranda Germon, of the borough of Akron, occurred Feb. 20, 1867, and to this union have been born fifteen children: Emma Elizabeth, born Sept. 16, 1867, died June 1, 1872; Sylvester, born Jan. 20, 1869, died May 30, 1872; Ellen, born June 11, 1870; Harry, born Oct. 17, 1871, died June 12, 1872; Harvey, born April 28, 1873; Theodore, Aug. 22, 1874; Clara, Dec. 15, 1875; Ada, Aug. 9, 1877; Samuel, Jr., Sept. 25, 1878, and died May 17, 1879; Maggie, Jan. 17, 1880; Mary, Aug. 23, 1881, died March 6, 1882; Elias, Feb. 29, 1883; Bertha, March 13, 1884; Charles, July 20, died Jan. 19, 1887; and Sadie, Jan. 6, 1892.

In politics, Mr. Wolf is a staunch Republican and has held a number of the township offices, filling them most efficiently; in his religious belief, he is a consistent member of the Dunkard Church. In all Ephrata township there is no man more highly regarded as one who is honorable and upright in all business dealings, and in every walk of life he has displayed those attributes which make a good citizen, kind husband and careful father.

HIRAM L. BATTEN, the efficient superintendent for the sub-station for the Conestoga Traction Company, located at Mechanicsburg, Pa., was born in Upper Leacock township, Oct. 11, 1849; he was a son of Israel and Elizabeth (Garber) Batten, the former of Upper Leacock and the latter of West Earl township. The death of the mother occurred on the old homestead in 1869, at the age of fifty-three. The father still resides on the old farm, a woolen manufacturer who operated mills in West Earl and East Donegal townships, retiring from activity in 1870. Both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Church. The children born to them were: Anna E., who died in infancy; and Hiram L.

The paternal grandparents were Hiram and Susannah (Meixell) Batten, natives of Downingtown, Chester county, where he was brought up to the trade of stone mason, also teaching school during his younger days. In 1790 he came to Lancaster county and operated a hotel in Upper Leacock township, and in 1800 purchased the farm property on which Israel Batten resides. The maternal grandparents were John and Rachel (McArthur) Garber, natives of West Earl township and Chester county, respectively.

Hiram L. Batten remained with his parents in the home at Batten's Corner until his marriage. In his early years he attended the district schools and from eighteen to twenty he was a student at the Lebanon Valley College, and later at the Shippensburg State Normal School. When about twenty-one years old Mr. Batten began to teach school, and from his beginning in Upper Leacock township he continued in that profession for twenty-one years, being recognized as one of the leading instructors in the county. On Feb. 10, 1901, he assisted in establishing the sub-station at Mechanicsburg and was made its superintendent. For two and one-half years he has been justice of the peace, while for the past fifteen he has been the valued agent for the Northern Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Lancaster county.

Mr. Batten was married Sept. 18, 1881, in Bird-in-Hand, to Miss Sallie Armstrong, and to this union two daughters have been born, Grace E. and Maud M. Mrs. Batten was born in Williamstown, Pa., a daughter of Jacob and Susan (Fenninger) Armstrong, the former of whom was a railroad engineer, who died at the age of forty-one at Columbia in 1874. The mother resides in Gordonville, Pennsylvania.

The family are consistent members of the Methodist Church, in which Mr. Batten has been a local preacher for five years and where they are most highly esteemed. In politics he has ever been in sympathy with the Republican party.

JOSEPH H. GOCHNAUER. One of the well-conducted farms of Lancaster county, Pa., located in East Hempfield township, midway between Petersburg and Landisville, is owned and successfully operated by Joseph H. Gochnauer, a well-known agriculturist.

Joseph H. Gochnauer, a son of John and Rebecca (Hersh) Gochnauer, was born April 6, 1844, on the farm upon which he lives, and was reared and educated in East Hempfield township, passing all his years there, with the exception of ten months spent in the West. In 1873 he took charge of the farm by himself and since that time has brought his sixty acres to a high state of production, confining himself to general farming. Many substantial improvements have been made on the place since he took charge of it and it is one of the most valuable and desirable in the neighborhood.

On Nov. 17, 1872, Joseph H. Gochnauer was married to Anna Hostetter, a daughter of Christian and Catherine (Frank) Hostetter, who was born in Manheim township, in Lancaster county, and three children have been born of this union: Christian H., who is a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, of Lancaster City, in the class of 1900; John H., a pupil in the State Normal School at Millersville; and Joseph H., who is a student at Elizabethtown College.

These worthy people are among the most highly esteemed residents of the township, and are connected with the Old Mennonite Church, in which Mr. Gochnauer is a trustee, and where they are known to be kind, charitable and Christian examples.

JOHN M. GOCHNAUER. The name of Gochnauer is an old and well-known one in Lancaster county, Pa., the great-grandfather of John M. Gochnauer, one of the pioneers of the township, having met his death while at work in the fields, when the Indians attacked him on the spot where the "Black Horse Tavern" now stands. There was one son left to perpetuate the name, Joseph, who became the grandfather of John M. and was born and reared in East Hempfield township and spent a long and useful life there. He was a farmer and owned and operated a large estate, being one of the most extensive farmers of the county at that time, and a man who left an impression upon his generation, prominent in public affairs and one who was regarded favorably by the members of a community where his advice and judgment were relied upon. It was by his suggestion that the names of East and West were given to Hempfield township at the time the division was made.

The wife of this worthy man died in 1828, in her fifty-ninth year, but he survived to be eighty-two years old, and died in March, 1847, having had the following children: Jacob, the eldest, who went West to grow up with the country, first to Ohio and later to Indiana; John, the father of John M.; Michael, who made his home in Lancaster county until his decease; Joseph, who died in Lewistown; Henry, a farmer; Annie, the wife of George Weiler; Elizabeth, the wife of Peter Kreider; Magdalene, who married Martin Heisey; Fanny, who married Adam Brenneman; and Mary, married to George Shriner, of Elkhart, Indiana.

John Gochnauer was born in East Hempfield in August, 1793, and died Jan. 21, 1858; he was reared to manhood in East Hempfield township, engaged in farm occupations, became prominent in the Old Mennonite Church, and in the same township married, and in time passed to his fathers. The first marriage of John Gochnauer was to Anna Miller, who was born Dec. 3, 1803, and died June 22, 1834, two children surviving: Henry, who died in 1893, at the age of sixty-four years, a farmer in East Hempfield township, where he had reared a family; and John M., our subject. The father was married again, to Rebecca Hersh, who was born Aug. 2, 1807, and died Oct. 20, 1884, leaving the following family: Martha, a most estimable lady who resided with John M. until her death, May 20, 1901, at the age of sixty-four years; Rebecca, who married Benjamin Reist, and died in 1892; Joseph, a farmer of East Hempfield township; and Annie, who resides with her brother John.

John M. Gochnauer was born on the old homestead, near East Petersburg, June 19, 1834, was a son of John and Anna (Miller) Gochnauer, and a grandson of Joseph and Annie (Kauffman) Gochnauer, and spent his boyhood in that locality. In 1873 he removed to his present farm, since which time he has lived retired from active work. Among the leading members of the Old Mennonite Church, he takes a prominent part in all benevolent enterprises, and is much esteemed by the members of the church and by the whole community.

JACOB L. LANDIS. Among the prominent and representative farmers of East Lampeter township is Jacob L. Landis, a worthy grandson of Abram Landis, who was born on the same farm on which Jacob L. now lives.

Abram Landis (2), the father of Jacob L. Landis, was also born on this old home place, in 1811, and followed farming all his days. A man who enjoyed the esteem of every one, Abram Landis became a leading member of the Old Mennonite Church. He married Esther Landis, the estimable daughter of Benjamin Landis, and they had five children born to them: Elizabeth, who died unmarried; Benjamin, a farmer of East Lampeter township; Jacob L.; Mary, deceased, the wife of Samuel H. Burkhart; and Abram, a farmer of East Lampeter township.

Jacob L. Landis was born on the old homestead on Aug. 22, 1842, and remained with his father until he was thirty years of age. His education was obtained in the public schools, but being of bright intelligence, he soon was far in advance of others of his age. Mr. Landis has given some attention to the settling of estates, and has adjusted many matters with judgment and skill, showing that if he had directed his attention to a profession he would undoubtedly have become prominent in it.

At the death of his father, about 1871, Mr. Landis inherited the old home, and since that time has devoted much attention to the improvement of his property. Mr. Landis was married to Miss Annie D. Rohrer, and to this union have been born two children: Emma, who is the wife of Benjamin Witmer and has two children, Hattie L. and Anna Mary; and Amos R., who farms the old homestead for his father. The latter has two grandchildren, Elvin W. and Esther Susan, the children of Amos R. and Ida (Weaver) Landis. The religious connection of the family is with the Old Mennonite Church.

ALVIN BROWN, one of the honorable citizens and successful farmers of Little Britain township, resides on his well-cultivated and highly improved farm of 154 acres, located near the Chester county line.

He was born in the pleasant home which he now owns, in 1845. His father was Jacob Brown, who was born in Lancaster county in 1809, and died in 1861, having had these children: Alvin; David C., of Cecil county, Md.; Elmira, a widow, of Kansas; Delilah, a teacher in the public schools of Wilmington, Del.; Hannah, a trained nurse in Philadelphia; Naomi, a professional seamstress of Wilmington, Del.; and Lewis J., a farmer in Kansas. The mother of this family was born in 1814, and died in 1876. Jacob Brown was an honest, upright man, prominent in the Society of Friends and during his life was one of the leading citizens of Little Britain township. His wife had been reared in the Presbyterian Church and always adhered to that faith.

Alvin Brown was reared on the farm he now owns, and received his education in the common schools of his township. His life has been an agricultural one and it has been crowned with success, the result of intelligent effort in this line.

Alvin Brown was married on Dec. 28, 1867, to Anna M. Griffith, of Lancaster county, a member of one of the honorable old families of this locality. Her parents were William and Susan (Pugh) Griffith, of Chester county, Pa., and she was born Aug. 13, 1847, the other members of her parents' family being: Elizabeth, the wife of Atwood Montgomery, a farmer of Cecil county, Md.; Martha, the wife of James Ewing, of Cecil county; Lucretia, the wife of Joseph Brobson, of Lancaster county; and Evan and Winnifred, deceased.

The six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Brown were: William J., who lives on the home farm; Adda P., who married Joshua Wason, a farmer of Cecil county, Md., and has one son, Alvin; Hugh M., a farmer of Cecil county, Md., who married Mina Reynolds; Kirk, a blacksmith in Chester county; Mary S., who married Thomas Cooney, a merchant, and lives in Chestnut Level; and D. C., the youngest of the family, busy on the home farm.

Mr. Brown is one of the most highly esteemed citizens of this locality both in public and private life, and is also one of the most intelligent. Not content with the advantages afforded by the public schools, he passed through the Fairville High School and then took a collegiate course in the Clear Springs Academy, of Indiana. Noted in the community for his charity and kindness, Alvin Brown follows in his life the peaceful precepts taught by the Society of Friends, and enjoys in the highest sense, the esteem of all with whom he comes in contact. Politically, he is a Republican and for six years has faithfully served his township as supervisor, attending to the duties of the position with the reliability which attends all his actions.

CHARLES H. TYSON, who holds an honored place among the farmers of Bart township, Lancaster county, where he is now pursuing a retired life, was born Aug. 25, 1842, in Cecil county, Md., his parents being Samuel and Ellen (Timmons) Tyson, both natives of Maryland. The father was born in Cecil county in 1804, and the mother was born in 1818.

Samuel Tyson was a son of William Tyson, who was born in Maryland, and took part in the Revolution. The family settled in Cecil county, but William Tyson died at the home of one of his children in Chester county, Pa. He had five children. (1) Amor died when a young man. (2) Maria, born in Maryland, married Tobias McKinsey, who settled and died in Newark, Del., where she also died, leaving a family: Elizabeth, deceased; Zebulon, of Newark, Del., deceased; Susan, the wife of George W. Moore, of Wilmington, Del.; William, who lives at Rising Sun, Cecil Co., Md.; Harry, of Newark, Del.; Elma, unmarried and living in Wilmington, Del.; Tobias B. and Mary, both living in Wilmington, Del. (3) Jane married John White, and died leaving no family. (4) Elizabeth, born in Maryland, married Eber Niels of Chester county, and has her home in Coatesville, where he is engaged in the contracting and building business. Their children were: Otley, who married and settled in Coatesville, where he left a widow and four sons, Morris, Eber, Wesley and Chester; Anna, a widow in Chester county; Newton, died in young manhood; Emma, late wife of Joseph Pierce; Ida, deceased; Ella, who married Harry Woodward, of Chester county; Maggie, married to Joseph Woodward; John, deceased. (5) Samuel was the father of Charles H.

Samuel Tyson was reared in Cecil county, Md., married Ellen Timmons in 1839, and engaged as a miller, working in different parts of Cecil county, until the later years of his life. He located in Wilmington, Del. In 1873 he visited his son, Charles H. in Georgetown, and there he died. His widow survived until 1882, when she died at the home of a daughter in Wilmington, Del. Mr. Tyson was a strong anti-slavery man, and was a staunch Republican after the formation of that party. To him and his excellent wife were born the following children: (1) Amelia A. Tyson, born in Cecil county, Md., in 1840, married Edward Thomas, of Delaware, where they both died. Her death occurred in February, 1878. (2) Charles H. (3) Martha J. Tyson, born in Cecil county, in 1844, married Daniel Hanna, of Cecil county, Md., where they lived many years, and where he died, leaving her with six children: Chester; Nettie; Martha, who is the wife of Edward Hitchens, of Cecil county, Md.; Lila; Sherman, and Reba. (4) Oliver E. Tyson, born in 1847, married Anna Scott, of Delaware, and has his home in Frankford, near Philadelphia, where they have had the following children: Bertha, who married George Walker, and lives in Philadelphia; Leroy, of Chester; William, of Frankford; Oliver and Edwin, deceased. (5) Samuel Tyson, born in Cecil county, Md., married Miss Sarah Money, of Delaware, and located in Wilmington, where both died, leaving two children; Harry and Mary, both of Philadelphia; the latter is the wife of Albert Kite. (6) Annie Tyson, born in Maryland, married Henry Wright of Cecil county, and after living for some years on a farm near Elkton, Md., moved to Wilmington, Del., where she died in 1893, leaving a large family: Susan, the wife of Joseph Bedwell, of Wilmington; Clarence, single; Cecelia, deceased; Ellis, unmarried; Mabel, the wife of John Kirkpatrick, of Cecil county, Md.; Clinton and Otis, unmarried. (7) George Tyson, born in Cecil county, Md., married Miss Sarah Moore, of Wilmington, where they live. They have had five children: Estella, Reba, Ethel and Covington are dead; Grace is at the family home in Delaware. (8) Amanda Tyson, born in Cecil county, Md., married James Tibbitt, of Delaware, and is now dead, leaving two children: Viola and Charles. Viola is married to Robert Morrison.

Charles H. Tyson, the oldest son of Samuel Tyson, was reared to manhood in Cecil county, Md., and when a young man learned the trade of a house painter and decorator, in which he was engaged until after his marriage in 1867. His wife was Miss Lydia B. Thompson, daughter of Jacob B. and Mary (Clayton) Thompson, born in Christiana, April 28, 1844.

Jacob B. Thompson was born at Steelville, Lancaster county, in 1790, and his wife, Mary Clayton, was born near Baltimore, in 1818. They settled in Strasburg, where for some years he carried on business as a merchant. He had a general store at different times, in Philadelphia, and in other parts of the State. His last location as a merchant was in Christiana, where he was in business at the time of his death in 1855. His widow moved to Bart in 1857, where she lived until her death in 1898. To this worthy and estimable couple were born the following children: John C., living unmarried in Bart township; Lydia B., Mrs. Tyson; James A., deceased; Harriet E., the wife of Milton Heidelbaugh, a prominent character of the city of Lancaster; Robert F., a commission merchant in Philadelphia; William D., a farmer; Jacob, who married Miss Clara Miller, and resides on a farm in Bart township.

Charles H. Tyson and wife settled in Wilmington, Del., where he engaged in the grocery trade. In 1868 he moved to Newark, where he engaged at the painting trade, and in 1869 removed to Bart township to spend the ensuing two years with his wife's mother. He was a clerk in the Nickel Mines Store, Lancaster county, for Milton Heidelbaugh some eight years. For a time he was a clerk in a Georgetown store, and then moved to the farm of Milton Heidelbaugh, where he spent some eight years. In 1899 he bought the farm on which he is now living, and where he has a very pleasant home.

Mr. and Mrs. Tyson have three children: Ella May, born in 1868, married to Harry Pickell and living in Cochranville, Chester county; W. Clayton, born in Lancaster county, in December, 1869, unmarried and at home; Mary E. A., born in July, 1878, is the wife of Charles D. Hocking, of Lancaster City, and the mother of three children, Charles Lee, Beatrice Tyson and John Warren.

Mr. and Mrs. Tyson are members of the Octoraro Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a Republican, and from time to time has filled various local offices, such as those of assessor, tax collector and supervisor. In 1880 he was appointed enumerator of the census for Bart township.

LEWIS S. HARTMAN, who passed away at his home on the morning of March 9, 1895, was one of the most dearly beloved and highly respected citizens in Lancaster.

Mr. Hartman was born in that city June 7, 1843, a son of Lewis S. Hartman, in his time an enterprising and public-spirited business man. In his boyhood Mr. Hartman attended the public schools and later Yeates Institute. Always a high-spirited and ambitious lad, he entered the business world with an enthusiasm that never forsook him. He clerked in a grocery store owned by his brother, John I. Hartman, and also in Shultz's hat store. The outbreak of the Civil war found him but a boy in years, but fired with a holy patriotism, he enlisted July 10, 1861, in Co. B, 13th P. V. I., and became a part of the Pennsylvania Reserves, whose record makes a most brilliant page in the history of the Civil war. Mr. Hartman enlisted for three years or during the war; and after the battle of Antietam, in September, 1862, he was promoted to the rank of corporal, although at that time he was the youngest man in the company. With his company and regiment he participated in many of the most notable and hotly contested conflicts of the war, among which may be mentioned Gaines' Mills, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, South Mountain, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, and Cold Harbor. In all of these engagements Mr. Hartman displayed such conspicuous bravery as to win high commendation from his superior officers. Through them all, too, he seemed to bear a charmed existence, and while the bullets whistled all around him he miraculously escaped unscathed until the battle of Cold Harbor. His term of enlistment had expired, but the regiment decided to take part. In the thickest of the fight stood the young corporal, and as he turned to speak to a comrade a bullet pierced his body, and he sank to the ground. Comrades conveyed him two miles on a stretcher to the ambulance train, ready to start for Washington. The ball had struck him under the left arm, pierced the lung, and passed out at the right shoulder, making a hole entirely through his body, and of so dangerous a nature that the army surgeon gave him up. His recovery is still regarded as a remarkable one, and he lay for many weeks in the hospital before being able to be moved home, and then a year passed before he was considered well.

When once again able to enter the world of commerce, Mr. Hartman engaged in the grocery business on North Queen street, and later bought out the cigar store of Andrew McGinnis, known as the "Yellow Front." He engaged in the manufacture of cigars, and also quite extensively in the leaf tobacco business, continuing same up to within a few years of his death, when he sold out to John B. Markley. However, he retained the rear office, which he used as his political office and headquarters. He was one of the founders and heaviest stockholders of the Fulton National Bank, of which he was a director at the time of his death; and he was also one of the founders of the Lancaster Trust Company.

Always a Republican in politics, Mr. Hartman early became one of the leaders in the party organization. As early as 1870 he entered the lists as a candidate for recorder of deeds, but was defeated in so far as the office was concerned. The campaign he made, however, brought him prominently to the front, and was the foundation upon which was built his later successes. In 1875, and again in 1890, he was elected prothonotary. It was as a leader or as an organizer rather than as an office holder that Mr. Hartman was best known. The excitement of a political struggle was his ruling passion—the more desperate the chances the more keenly he became interested, and the harder he worked. Unlike many politicians, he was intensely loyal to his chosen candidates, and once his word was given, he remained in the fray until the polls were closed. Of generous impulses, of much personal magnetism, and possessed of unbounded ardor, he drew men to him, and even his political foes loved him for his warm-hearted kindnesses. Thoroughly familiar with the political features of every section of the county, he was looked upon as a man who could lead an apparently "lost cause" to victory. He was an ardent admirer of James G. Blaine, and in 1880 visited the Chicago convention to use his influence for his favorite; in 1884 he was a delegate to the convention that nominated the "Plumed Knight," and great was his sorrow when his defeat came in November.

Socially Mr. Hartman was a great favorite, and his hospitable nature enjoyed the comforts of home. He was one of the organizers of the Bay Club, which made several cruises on Chesapeake Bay, and has been sorely missed by the members. From the time of its organization he had been its treasurer, and at the time of his death was engaged in making arrangements for its annual celebration. Out of respect to his memory the club postponed indefinitely the intended celebration. The community mourned his death as the loss of a good man, a kind friend, and an upright citizen, whose place could not soon be filled.

In 1867, in Lancaster, Mr. Hartman was united in marriage, by Rev. Mr. Greenwald, of Trinity Church, with Miss Mary A. Deichler. This union was blessed with the following children: Walter S., who died at the age of two years; Milton H., a civil engineer, who married Anna Miley; Howard S., who is engaged in the tobacco business; Alice R., who married Rev. Elmore L. Wessinger, a Lutheran minister at Shiremanstown, Pa.; Clara E. and Elizabeth O., both at home; and Lewis S., who died at the age of eight years. Mrs. Hartman and family are members of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Hartman did much to help build up the city and the home he erected on North Duke street, where his family reside, is one of the finest houses in the city.

Maximilian Deichler, father of Mrs. Hartman, came with his parents to America when five years of age. They settled in Baltimore, Md., and there the boy grew to manhood, learned the trade of shoemaker, and married his good wife, Catherine Messenger. The young couple removed to Lancaster, where Mr. Deichler found employment in a shoe store, and later engaged in the shoe business for himself at the present site of Woolworth's building, where he remained until his death in 1893, when he was aged seventy-seven. His wife died in 1887, at the age of sixty-seven. Their remains rest in Woodward Hill cemetery. Both were members of Trinity Lutheran Church. Mr. and Mrs. Deichler were the parents of ten children.

JESSE SCOTT. A prominent and successful farmer, as well as a most estimable citizen of Lancaster county, is Jesse Scott, who was born in Bart township, in this same county, June 7, 1843, a son of John and Alice (Davis) Scott. The parents were also natives of this county, and were born in Colerain township, the father in April and his wife in Sept., 1806. The mother was a daughter of Abner and Barbara Davis, a pioneer family.

John and Alice (Davis) Scott were married Jan. 21, 1830, and nine children were born to them. Abner and Margaret died in childhood. Francis, now the eldest of the family, was born in 1835, remained at home after the death of his father and assisted in the care of the family; he married Miss Rachel Rockafeld, of this county, and they now with their children reside on his farm in Colerain. Joseph, born Jan. 27, 1837, married Martha Gilland, of Bart township; they lived for a time in Georgetown, where he worked at his trade of wheelwright, and later settled in Bart township on a farm, where he died in 1896, leaving a wife and three children, Howard, Leah, and Meta, who still reside on the homestead. Sarah E., born in September, 1839, is the wife of Elam Pickle and they reside in Chester county, Pa., their ten children bearing these names: William, Harry, Alice, Frank, Davis, Annie, Amos, Aaron, Dora and Blanch. Harvey, born in June, 1841, married Miss Sidney Thomas, of this county, and settled on a farm in Sadsbury township, where he remained until his death, in 1889, leaving a wife and two sons, Cauley and Walter. Jesse was the seventh child. George, born in 1846, grew up in the old home and married Miss Hannah Thompson, of Bart township, and they now reside in Georgetown, where he is engaged in business. They have two children: John and May, the wife of David Myers, of Chester county, Pa. Barbara A., born Oct. 13, 1850, is the wife of Albert Heidelbaugh, of Bart township and their seven children are thus named: Jessie, Alice, Emma, Clyde, Forest, Earle and Lenore.

For a few years John Scott and his wife resided in Bart township, but in 1850 Mr. Scott purchased the present home farm, with the expectation of passing upon it a long and useful life. However, but two years had elapsed when he passed out of life, leaving his bereaved widow with a family of small children to rear. Mr. Scott had been industrious and had cleared a part of his land, but the most of it was heavily wooded, and a very serious future faced the widow and her family. After due consideration, she determined to retain the farm for her children, considering that soon her sons would be able to manage affairs. In this she was not disappointed, as they proved to be affectionate, dutiful and industrious children.

Jesse Scott grew to manhood on the old place and assisted his brothers in its management and cultivation, and when they married and moved to homes of their own, he remained in charge of the farm, taking care of his mother in her declining years. She passed away in 1887, at the age of eighty-one. Through life she has been a thorough Christian woman, and with her husband had been a worthy and consistent member of the Presbyterian Church at Middle Octoraro, in this county, which they had helped to found.

In politics Mr. Scott is a staunch Republican, although his father always voted with the Democratic party. For a number of years he has served as school director and has been interested in all matters of general interest in the county, during his long residence there. The old homestead is his own property, and at the present time he is remodeling and renovating it, making it one of the most comfortable and attractive homes of the county. Mr. Scott has never married.

Jesse Scott is well known and most highly respected. His success as a farmer has been noted in the county, while his admirable traits as a man have won him the esteem of all who have come into contact with him.

ISAAC S. FUNK was born Feb. 21, 1845, in East Hempfield township, Lancaster county.

Martin Funk, father of Isaac S., was born in Manor township, Lancaster county, Nov. 10, 1808. His father died when he was eight years old and he was bound out at that age to Abram Miller, of Manor township, where he lived for eight years. He then went to live with his stepfather, John Breneman, of Manor township, where he made his home for nearly seven years. He then married Miss Elizabeth Shertzler, of Manor township, Nov. 12, 1835, and commenced farming for Abram Stoner, of East Hempfield township. He continued at that until 1845, when he removed to Manor township and engaged in general work for three years. He then bought the farm where his son Isaac now resides and remained there until his death, March 31, 1876, up to that time following farming exclusively. During the seven years that he lived with his stepfather he walked twice to Dayton, Ohio. The first time he walked all the way home, but on his second journey home he bought a horse and rode him back, afterwards trading him for a gold watch. He was a consistent member of the Old Mennonite Church. He always voted the Democratic ticket but never sought an office. Mr. and Mrs. Martin Funk were the parents of the following children: Elias and Abram, deceased; Elizabeth, the wife of Levi Good, of Conestoga; Mary S., who died in childhood; Isaac S.; Barbara, deceased; and Charlotte, the wife of John Henry, of Conestoga.

Isaac S. Funk remained at home with his father until the death of the latter in 1876. Three years afterwards he purchased the farm and has since given his entire time and attention to its management. He is a member of the Old Mennonite Church and is one of its trustees. Like his father he is a member of the Democratic party but the only office he has ever held was that of assistant assessor of his township for one term. He married Annie, daughter of John Warfel, of Conestoga township. They have but one son, Martin, who lives with his parents.

Mr. Funk owns a farm of ninety-three acres which has a magnificent view of the Susquehanna river and is one of the finest places in the county. This gentleman is in prosperous circumstances and is fully abreast of the times in all his ideas. He is greatly respected and is a good substantial citizen.

THEODORE M. STORB, one of the leading business men of New Holland, Pa., conducts in this borough a large and prosperous business in marble and granite cutting, established by his father, and now conducted in association with his two sons, under the firm name of T. M. Storb & Sons.

Theodore M. Storb comes of excellent parentage, his father, Theodore Storb, having been for many years a highly appreciated teacher of languages in the schools of Pennsylvania, and later the founder of the business which is so ably carried on by his descendants. Theodore Storb, Sr., was born in Prussia, in 1794, a son of Hermann Storb, a blacksmith near Dusseldorf. He came to America at the age of twenty-three, landing in Philadelphia, and locating first in Lehigh county, Pa., where he married a Miss Grobb, the children born of this union being Albert, of Pottstown, Pa.; Caroline, deceased; and Augustus and Sarah, who died in childhood, Mrs. Storb also passing away. In 1831 he married Elizabeth Minker, of Berks county, this marriage resulting in the birth of: Hannah and Henry, who died in childhood; Theodore M., born Aug. 16, 1835; Elizabeth, of New Holland; Mathias, deceased; and Amelia, who married David S. Schlauch, of New Holland. The father died in 1872 and the mother in 1884.

The education of Theodore M. Storb, was received in the excellent schools of Montgomery county, Pa. He came with his father when the latter located in New Holland in 1854, and upon his father's death in 1872 he succeeded to the business, since that time greatly extending it and taking into partnership his two very capable sons, Lewis M. and Harry K. Mr. Storb is a practical man, thoroughly understanding all of the details of his line of trade; he has prospered and is now justly regarded as one of the substantial men of the locality, his name carrying with it financial responsibility and business confidence.

In Oct., 1860, Theodore M. Storb was married to Miss Mary S. Mentzer, of Earl township, a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Kurtz) Mentzer, of Lancaster county, and to this union have been born: Ella, who married Dr. John B. Kohler, of New Holland, and has two children—Mary and Clara; Lewis M. and Harry K., both connected with their father in the marble business. Harry K. Storb married Mary Besore, of New Holland, and has two children, Henry and Theodore.

Mr. Storb is a prominent Republican of Earl township and occupies a number of important positions in the county, being a director in the Downingtown and Lancaster Railroad Company; manager of the New Holland Turnpike Road Company; a director in the New Holland Water Co., and also connected with various other enterprises of minor importance. He is a member and trustee of Earl Lodge, I. O. O. F., of New Holland. Mr. Storb is thoroughly representative, and the type of man who has given Lancaster county its prominence in the eyes of the business world.

WILLIAM C. GEIGER, a well-known business man of Quarryville, Lancaster county, was born Sept. 29, 1849, near Baltimore, Md., son of Christopher and Annie (Beates) Geiger.

Mr. Geiger is descended from one of three brothers who came to America from Germany and settled at Gibraltar, Berks county. Of these, Anthony bought a tract of land from the Penns. That he reached Berks county at least as early as 1735 is shown by a land warrant issued to him in that year. Christopher Geiger, son of Anthony, was born in 1720, married Mary Robeson, and died in 1805. Elisha Geiger, son of Christopher, was born in 1776. He married Mary Jones, daughter of Thomas Jones, Jr., and died in 1821, leaving two sons, Christopher and Elisha, and several daughters. Elisha settled in Lancaster county, where he died some years ago. Susan died unmarried. Kitty married a Mr. Robinson, who died in Lancaster county, leaving his widow and one son, Charles, now a retired business man of New Jersey, and one daughter, Annie, who married a Mr. Polk, and moved to Philadelphia.

At the death of his father Christopher Geiger, then a lad of eighteen years, being the eldest, became the chief support of the family. He contracted for work on the Reading canal when it was building, and after that was manager in a foundry at Pottsville, Pa., of which he later became owner, conducting the business for some time and finally selling it. He then built a hotel in Pottsville, which he ran for a number of years. About 1837 he married a Miss Park, of York county, Pa., who died shortly afterward, leaving one daughter, Mary, now Mrs. Heitshu, of Lancaster, and two sons, Samuel and Philip, both deceased. In 1848 Christopher Geiger again married, his second wife being Miss Annie Beates. They located at the Ashland Furnace, sixteen miles from Baltimore, where Mr. Geiger carried on an extensive iron business for a number of years, and which he had, in partnership with Philip and Samuel Small, of York county, Pa., and Edward and Joseph Patterson, of Baltimore

(the brothers of Jerome Bonaparte's wife), built in 1846. In 1840 Mr. Geiger and the Small brothers had built Manor Furnaces in York county. He finally sold out, and moving to Lancaster city engaged again in the foundry business at that place, until 1860, when he sold out and removed to Blair furnace. There he purchased a furnace which soon afterward was entirely destroyed by fire, entailing a serious financial loss to Mr. Geiger. He then removed to Hollidaysburg, Blair county, where he engaged in furnace work for a year, and then moved back to Lancaster, and began operating in mines near Knoxville, Md. This was after the conclusion of the Civil war, and about 1868. In 1870 he removed to Quarryville, and followed mining and ore shipping for several years. In 1884 he built the Sarah Furnace, in Harford county, Md., which he operated. He again moved to Lancaster, where he lived retired until the time of his death, in 1889, at the age of eighty years. His wife died in Lancaster in 1880, leaving a family of five children: William C., who is the eldest; Annie, born in 1851, who lives in Lancaster county, and is unmarried; Charles, born in Lancaster county in 1854, and now living at Quarryville, a United States Deputy Revenue Collector; Edward, born in Lancaster county in 1857, unmarried and a resident of Reading; and Laura, born in Lancaster county in 1860, the wife of P. T. Watt, a general merchant of Lancaster, who has four children, James, Charles, Donald and Laura.

William C. Geiger was reared in Lancaster county, and obtained his education in the public schools. When a young man he acted as superintendent of mines for his father near Quarryville and other places. In 1877 he married Mrs. Rebecca J. Lovett, of an old Lancaster county family, daughter of Martin and Rebecca Hess. Mrs. Geiger was born in Drumore township, July 17, 1856, and after growing to young womanhood married William Lovett, a business man of Quarryville borough, who died shortly after their marriage, and left no children. Mr. and Mrs. Geiger were located near Quarryville, where he engaged in mining and shipping ore in partnership with the late C. M. Hess. After the death of his partner, Mr. Geiger continued the business until 1889, when he engaged in general storekeeping in Quarryville borough for three years. In 1876 he was in partnership, in a general merchandising business, with Charles Geiger, where the Hawes Dickinson establishment now is. He sold out his store in 1891, and again carried on mining and shipping ore. In 1888 he purchased his present home, a fine brick residence on Church street, where, in 1895, Mrs. Geiger opened a millinery business, which she still carries on. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Geiger, as follows: William F., born in 1877, was educated in the graded schools of the place; he is unmarried, and is engaged in the plumbing business. C. Martin, born in 1879, is unmarried, and is engaged in business in Lancaster city. Walter B., born in 1883, travels for his brothers, who manufacture neckwear in Lancaster city. Harry E., born in 1883, is at present of the firm of Geiger Bros., manufacturers of neckwear, Lancaster city. Chester A., born in March, 1887, is at present a student in the borough schools. Anna R. was born in July, 1889, and Joseph Hess was born in 1891.

In politics Mr. Geiger is a Republican, and he has held the office of street commissioner of the borough. Mrs. Geiger is an active member of the Reformed Church. Her parents, Martin and Rebecca Hess, located on a farm in Drumore township in 1849. Mr. Hess also kept a hotel in connection with his other enterprises. Later he purchased a large farm near Quarryville and built a fine brick residence upon it, in which he resided for about thirty-five years. He then purchased a property in Quarryville, in which his son-in-law, Mr. Fritz, now resides. Mr. Hess died while a resident of the village, in 1887, and his wife died at the family place in 1901. This worthy couple had one son and four daughters: Abby A., wife of Jacob Fritz; Joseph, unmarried; Susan, wife of Ezra Fritz; Rebecca J., Mrs. Geiger; and Emma, wife of I. G. Le-fever, of Quarryville.

Mr. Geiger is well and favorably known in business circles over the entire county, and is a man of fine character and social qualities. Ever ready to help, his advice is frequently sought by young men entering life's struggle. Mrs. Geiger is a lady of fine mental and business abilities, and of kindly disposition.

WITMER. The Witmer family is one of the oldest and longest-known in Lancaster county. It is of Swiss origin, the first American progenitors, John Witmer and Benjamin Witmer, having been born in Switzerland; John about the year 1688. They were first cousins, and emigrated to America together, in 1716, John bringing his family, consisting of his wife, Catharine, and two small children, Elizabeth and Michael, the latter then about two years of age. They came directly within the border of the present Lancaster county. Benjamin located a short distance to the eastward of the present city of Lancaster, where he died in 1753, leaving a number of children and grandchildren. He was the grandfather of Abraham Witmer, the originator, builder and proprietor of the present stone turn-pike bridge over the Conestoga, east of Lancaster, and who died in 1818.

John Witmer continued beyond and settled on a tract of vacant land on a branch of the Little Conestoga Creek, three and a half miles west of the present city, lying on the south side of and adjoining what is now known as the Lancaster and Columbia turnpike, containing 200 acres and allowance of six per cent. for roads and highways, bounded on the north by the lands of Christian Pellman and Henry Parr (now A. B. Kready, Henry Witmer and the turnpike aforesaid); on the east by the land of Andreas Coffman (now Susan C. Kready); on the south by vacant land (now John F. Charles); and on the west by vacant land and the land of Christian Pellman (now John F. Charles and A. B. Kready, respectively). With the exception of a strip of meadow along said stream, the tract was thickly covered with timber. He built a small log cabin close to a large spring, near the central part of the tract, and worked hard to fell timber, make improvements and a scanty living until 1728, when he died, leaving the widow and three children to support themselves as best they could, for he had not yet obtained a title to the property, nor paid anything on it. In 1724 the names of John Witmer, Benjamin Witmer and Benjamin Witmer, Jr., were the only Witmer names then on the assessment list of all the territory now embraced within the bounds of Lancaster county, then known as Conestogoe, and as a part of Chester county, then extending westward and northwestward an indefinite distance beyond the Susquehanna river. The future town site of Lancaster was at that time still covered with timber, with the exception of a swamp in the southern part, and another in the northeastern part, and a portion thereof was still vacant land. About this time one George Gibson erected a tavern near a large hickory tree, a short distance east of the present Centre Square, alongside of the great highway leading from Philadelphia to Wright's Ferry (now Columbia), and which became known as the "Hickory Tavern" at Gibson's pasture. On Feb. 26, 1729, the first survey of a portion of the boundary of the present town site was made, but was not completed until sometime during 1730, at which time the locality was still known by the same name, although it had then attained to a small hamlet of about two hundred souls.

The inventory of the estate of John Witmer, appraised Dec. 17, 1728, is on file in the register's office, at West Chester, and contains only the following five items: The improvements of 200 acres of land, £34, 10s.; a parcel of horses, mares and colts, £51; a cow, calves and sheep, £17, 15s.; all the household goods and gears, etc., for the plantation, £19, 7s.; a parcel of books, 5s.; total amount, £122, 17s.

The administrator, Christian Vitty, after settling up the estate, married the widow, but died within a few years; and, as the records show, the widow then made application, and on June 4, 1735, obtained a warrant of survey in her own name as the widow of Christian Vitty, deceased. The land was surveyed, the survey returned, approved and confirmed; and during the latter part of the same year John Penn, Richard Penn and Thomas Penn, as absolute proprietors and governors in chief of the province of Pennsylvania, and the counties of Newcastle, Kent and Sussex, in Delaware, executed to her a Patent Deed for the said tract, graciously specifying and granting to her therein, among other things, the privilege to hunt, hawk, fish and fowl, on said premises, at all times. The consideration money therein mentioned is £20 to them in hand paid, and the premises subject to a yearly quit rent of one silver English shilling for every hundred acres, to be paid annually thereafter, on the first day of March, at the town of Lancaster. Three full and clear fifth parts of all Royal Mines, free from all deductions and reprisals for digging and refining the same, is also fully excepted and reserved therein. The said deed is dated Nov. 18, 1735, in the ninth year of the reign of King George II. over Great Britain, etc.

Of the three children, Elizabeth married Christian Swartz, and Barbara became the wife of George Kendrick. The son, Michael, married Anna Long, and on Oct. 21, 1751, a tripartite deed from his mother and his sisters and their husbands was executed to him for the said tract of land, the consideration money for the same mentioned therein being now increased to £250, the land subject to the same reservations as before. The widow died in 1760. Of the daughters and their descendants we give no further record.

Michael Witmer, the son, was an unexceptionable, far-seeing, hard-working man, endowed with superior business abilities, and prospered far above and beyond the average farmer of his time and locality. The issue of his marriage was five children: John, born in 1750, married Elizabeth —, and died June 3, 1817, leaving a widow and nine children; Abraham, born in 1756, married Maria Swartz, and died Feb. 21, 1826, leaving a widow (they never had any children); Anna, born Aug. 5, 1760, married Jacob Eberly, and died as his widow Feb. 18, 1831, leaving six children (her husband had died Dec. 2, 1810); Mary, born in 1763, married Jacob Knopp, and died in 1789, leaving her husband and an only child, also named Jacob; and Herman, born July 22, 1753, was twice married, and died Jan. 5, 1829. His first wife was Widow Barbara Groff, who was born Oct. 6, 1749, and died July 27, 1797. His second wife was Barbara Schucker, born Oct. 15, 1779, who died Jan. 1, 1862.

In and by the last will and testament of Michael Witmer, bearing date Aug. 27, 1789, executed only a few days before his demise, he bequeathed to his son, John Witmer, a tract of land bordering on the south side of the Mahantango Creek, and on the west side of the Susquehanna river, in the northeast corner of what is now Juniata county, containing 232 acres, and allowance of six per cent. Also, another tract adjoining it, but lying on the opposite side of the creek, in what is now Snyder county, containing 150 acres, more or less. To his son, Abraham Witmer, he gave a tract of 150 acres and allowance, located at and embracing the well-known "McKee's One-Half Falls Hotel" and store property, fronting along the west shore of the Susquehanna river, thirty-six miles above Harrisburg, and also in Snyder county since the division of Union, in 1855. To his son, Herman Witmer, he gave the original home tract of 200 acres and allowance, and valued it to him at £1,600. The daughters, the will says, he had previously provided for, to some extent, and he gives to Anna the balance of her equal share in cash. To his grandchild, Jacob Knopp, Jr., he gives £150, to be put on interest for him until he arrives of age, and then to be paid to him, with the interest. His wife, Anna, he also provided for liberally and far beyond her needs, and an itemized list of the various and numerous now obsolete articles given to her would appear ridiculously strange if inserted into a will at the present time. He died during the first week in September, 1789, and his widow in the beginning of March, 1792. The three sons occupied, lived and died on the respective tracts of land devised to them.

Herman Witmer, in his youth, learned the trade of a shoemaker, which he carried on, along with his agricultural pursuits, for a long time. He was an amateur blacksmith, cooper and carpenter, and did his own blacksmithing, horseshoeing and repairing in the line of cooper and carpenter work required on the farm. He also carried on a distillery on the farm, as most of the farmers did at that time. He was ingenious and inventive, a leader in experimenting with and introducing new implements, machinery and features on the farm and in the household. He took great delight in pomology, was an expert in grafting, and introducing new varieties of fruit, and at the time of his death there was probably not another farm in Manor township containing such an abundance and variety of fruit, and all grafted by his own hands; and, as a novelty, he frequently grafted many varieties of apples and pears promiscuously on the same tree. He was an industrious and persevering reader, and a well-informed man, and at the time of his death had accumulated quite an extensive library of books, mostly in the German language, and on one of the fly-leaves at the end of many of the volumes he left a memorandum in his own handwriting, stating that he had read the book through, and expressing his opinion of the contents.

By his first wife Herman Witmer had one son, Dr. John Witmer, born May 10, 1785, who married Anna Baer, and died Dec. 14, 1847, leaving a widow and nine children. His widow was born Nov. 24, 1789, and died May 31, 1854. By his second wife Herman Witmer had two children, Jacob S. and Elizabeth. The latter was born Dec. 25, 1813, became the wife of Daniel Graybill, a farmer of East Hempfield township, and died Dec. 21, 1885, leaving a husband and five children—Magdalena (wife of Daniel Kreider), Herman W., Amos, Benjamin and David W. The husband and father died Oct. 29, 1890.

Herman Witmer divided his land, the 200-acre tract, during his lifetime, between his two sons, giving to John a little the larger portion. Although having suffered a heavy loss through a loan and endorsement for an unworthy friend, he was still sufficiently prosperous to leave, at the time of his death, cash and securities sufficient to give to the daughter, Elizabeth, an equal share in money.

Jacob S. Witmer, son of Herman, was born Jan. 11, 1804. He married Mary, oldest daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth Rohrer, of Manor township, on May 30, 1826. She was born Aug. 15, 1802, and died Aug. 23, 1877. To them were born ten children—five sons and five daughters. He carried on farming nearly all his lifetime. In 1837 he sold his portion of the original farm to his half-brother, Dr. John Witmer, and purchased another farm, in the western part of the township, which he occupied until 1865, when he sold it also and retired to private life in the village of Millersville until after the death of his wife, when he made his home with his son, A. R. Witmer, during the remainder of his life. He was a man of strict integrity, of a kindly disposition, a reliable and helpful friend to the poor, ever willing and ready to do a favor, even when against his own interest, and thereby was often imposed on, and suffered numerous financial losses in consequence. He possessed good business abilities, and was very accurate and methodical in all business matters, and settled up more decedents' estates, as executor and administrator, than any other person in his section of Manor township. He was assessor and a school director of Manor township for many years. He also held the offices of prison inspector and county and township auditor, but was never a professional politician.

It may not be out of place to remark that all the members of this Witmer family, from the Swiss progenitor down to the present time, always voted the Republican ticket, or what had previously been its equivalent. Jacob S. Witmer was a good penman, a very rapid writer, and very industrious reader, but never a devoted student. He died March 12, 1890.

Of the ten children, Elizabeth, born Aug. 17, 1828, was married March 16, 1849, to Joseph S. Berger, a son of Philip Berger, of Manor township. In 1865 they moved to Canton, Ohio, where they and their children still reside. Henry R. Witmer, born April 6, 1830, married, Nov. 25, 1852, Fanny Kindig, a daughter of John Kindig, of Manor township, and in 1866 moved to Canton, Ohio, and a few years later from thence to Jasper county, Iowa, where he died March 30, 1899. His widow and children still reside there. Anna was born Nov. 14, 1831, and on Dec. 27, 1863, was married to Emanuel S. Frey, of Manor township. In 1865 they moved to Jasper county, Iowa, where he died Oct. 14, 1901. His widow and two sons still survive. Jacob R. Witmer was born Dec. 29, 1833, and, after returning from the war for the Union, became a resident of Jasper county, Iowa, and there, on July 4, 1869, married Elizabeth Kindig, a daughter of John Kindig, of the same place. She died Feb. 6, 1900. Himself and children still reside there. Benjamin R. Witmer was born March 19, 1835, and on Dec. 23, 1856, married Catharine Kauffman, a daughter of Isaac Kauffman, of Manor township. He located in Millersville, and died there Feb. 27, 1901. The widow and several of the children still reside there. Mary was born July 28, 1836, was married to Michael R. Shank Oct. 28, 1856, and became the mother of fourteen children. They and some of the children reside in the city of Lancaster. Barbara was born Feb. 3, 1839, was married Dec. 24, 1871, to Dr. John A. Knox, of Jasper county, Iowa, and died there May 19, 1873, survived by her husband, but no children. Lydia was born June 7, 1841, was never married, and has her home with her brother, A. R. Witmer. Daniel L. Witmer, the youngest of the family, was born Sept. 27, 1845, and Dec. 21, 1869, married Esther Witmer, youngest daughter of Jacob Witmer, Sr., of Manor township. He died Jan. 21, 1882. His widow and several of the children reside in Millersville. Jacob, Benjamin and Daniel, of this large family, enlisted in the Union army and served during the war of the Rebellion.

Abraham R. Witmer, the eldest of this family of children, was born April 12, 1827, and raised on a farm, where he was tied down to hard work until he was eighteen, and up to that time had but once enjoyed the pleasure of getting beyond fifteen miles from home. His early educational advantages were those of the public schools, such as they were in the rural districts from sixty to seventy years ago, and he was never favored with admittance to any other. But he was remarkably studious at home, taking more pleasure in reading and study than in play, and thus improved many an hour snatched from the ceaseless drudgery of the farm. Several years before quitting school he had outstripped every other pupil in it, regardless of age or size. In 1845 the school board of Manor township tendered him a school, which he accepted, and taught seven winter terms within the township, to the satisfaction of the board and patrons. During his last term he made arrangements with a chance acquaintance of a few years before to take up the study and practice of surveying with him, at Williamsville, Erie Co., N. Y.; and, at the close of his school, went thither, remained a year and a half, and then returned to his old neighborhood, near Safe Harbor, in Manor township, where he purchased sixteen acres of land, cut off from a farm, whereon he built a comfortable home which he still occupies, and commenced housekeeping, having been married just previously to making the New York State arrangement, and taken his wife along to board with him in the family of his employer and instructor. He soon became very successful in his new line of business, embracing surveying, scrivening and clerking of public sales of real and personal property, along with farming on a small scale.

A few years later he was elected assessor of Manor township, and served four years. In 1862 he was elected a justice of the peace of Manor township, and has been re-elected every term since, and still holds the office, with, probably, less costs to the county than any other justice in it—his official fees in all the cases returned to court during forty years not yet amounting to one hundred dollars. In 1863 he was elected county surveyor, and held the office nine years. He also served as deputy coroner over Manor, Conestoga and Martic townships for nine years.

While teaching his winter term of 1851-52 Mr. Witmer took up the science of phonography, or short-hand writing, studying from text-books on the subject, without a single lesson from a teacher. There was then but one system, Benjamin Pitman's, and it was not taught outside of the larger cities, and was then something new and unheard of in the rural districts. As he was then boarding at a country tavern, where the young men of the neighborhood congregated nearly every evening to enjoy themselves playing cards and dominoes and teasing him for wasting his time in studying nonsense, as they termed it, instead of joining in with them, his bar-room studies received many interruptions, but, heedless of their sneers and gibes, in due course of time he mastered the system to his satisfaction. In 1853 he commenced keeping a diary of the daily events of the neighborhood, of his business, incomes and expenses, state of the weather, and many other things, and which he has kept up without missing a day up to the present time; and all written in short-hand, and with special care to write plainly rather than speedily. All his diaries, from first to last, now fifty in number, are models of neatness and accuracy, and carefully preserved.

Being fond of travel, after several shorter excursions, Mr. Witmer made his first tour to the Western country in the spring of 1849, leaving Lancaster with two trunks full of a miscellaneous assortment of books, to sell along the way to pay expenses. He traveled mostly by canal, along up the Susquehanna and west branch, and in course of time reached Pittsburgh, where he replenished his stock, and started down the Ohio by steamboat, with less than a dollar in his pocket. On leaving Cincinnati he took passage aboard a White Water Canal Packet to Cambridge City, Indiana. By the time he arrived there he had learned that in order to sell books with success he was obliged to either strain the truth or not tell it all, and thereby became disgusted with the business, boxed up the few remaining volumes on hand, and shipped them back home by freight. Making inquiry, he soon found a three weeks' job of honest work at sawing and splitting cooper stuff in the woods, and then a month's work at haying, harvesting and threshing on a farm, mowing grass with the scythe, and raking and binding wheat after a cradle. After a visit to Hamilton and Tipton counties he bought a pair of horses and rode all the way back home from Indianapolis, over 600 miles, on horseback, arriving a few days in advance of the appointed time to take charge of his school.

His second tour he made in the spring of 1851, extending it beyond the Mississippi, where the most reliable mode of travel then was by going afoot and lugging your baggage on your back, as there was then not a mile of railroad west of the great river, nor a single bridge across it anywhere. After trudging over 250 miles afoot over the sparsely settled western prairies of Iowa and Illinois, he returned to Indiana, purchased three horses and rode all the way back home on horseback, a second time. Since then he has been in every State and Territory in the Union with the exception of South Dakota; also in Mexico, British Columbia, the Klondike and headwaters of the Yukon, Ontario and Quebec. Among the endless variety of grand scenery abounding within the United States which he has visited and described in his numerous letters of correspondence for publication in The New Era and other Lancaster papers, are the Falls of Niagara; the White Mountains of New Hampshire; the Natural Bridge of Virginia; the Caverns of Luray; Pike's Peak, on the top of which he spent a night, nearly three miles above sea level; the Yellowstone National Park, spending a week therein; the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and the Petrified Forest of Arizona; the Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa Grove of Big Trees in California; the Garden of the Gods in Colorado; the Bad Lands Region of Desolation in the Western part of North Dakota; the pictured rocks along the south shore of Lake Superior; and many other places of wonderful interest.

Mr. Witmer has visited and become familiar with nearly all the large cities of the United States and British America, including Sitka, Juneau, Skagway and other small, but important, towns in Alaska. He has visited the extensive copper mines of Lake Superior; the Treadwell Gold Mine, the largest in Alaska; the Sweet Water Dam, ninety feet in height, and the Tuolumne Dam, 101 feet in height, both in California, and built at enormous expense for irrigation purposes; the Lick Observatory on top of Mount Hamilton, mounted with the monster telescope, 50 $\frac{1}{4}$ feet in length, through which he peered into the crater of an extinct volcano on the surface of the moon; the great Brooklyn bridge; the steel arch bridge across the Mississippi at St. Louis; and the steel tubular bridge across the St. Lawrence, at Montreal, which are stupendous works of ingenious mechanical engineering skill, and he has spent hours at a time in viewing each of them from different points of vantage.

He has traveled afoot, on horseback, stage-coach, prairie schooner, canal packet, river, lake and ocean steamer; by steamer on the Hudson, the Potomac, the St. John's, the Oklawaha, the Niagara, the St. Lawrence, the Ohio, the Mississippi, the Illinois, the Columbia, Puget Sound, Long Island Sound, all the Great Lakes and several coast lines on the Atlantic and Pacific.

Mr. Witmer has always kept strict account of all his business matters. Also a complete record of the leading lines of his scribbling, clerking, surveying, and, among other things, he has written 156 wills, nearly 1,400 deeds and mortgages, and clerked without assistance 784 public sales of real estate and personal property. He has also settled up twenty-four estates as executor, administrator and assignee of the same; and was appointed and served as guardian for quite a number of minor children. He is, and always has been, strictly temperate in his habits, and has never used intoxicants nor tobacco in any form. He says he has been trying for years past to get out of business, but finds it is now more difficult to get out of it than it was to get in.

Mr. Witmer was married Dec. 16, 1852, to Fanny Buckwalter, a daughter of Jacob and Fanny Buckwalter, of Manor township. She was born Aug. 4, 1827, and died July 31, 1887. To them were born five children, the second and third of which died in infancy. The eldest, Annie B. Witmer, was born Dec. 22, 1853, and Oct. 24, 1876, was married to Henry G. Wittmer, a son of John Wittmer, Sr., a farmer of near Blue Rock, in Manor township. To them was born an only child, Clara W. Wittmer, on Oct. 31, 1890. They acquired one of the several farms of his father, on which they reside, and cultivate the same. Ellen B. Witmer was born Sept. 30, 1862, remains unmarried, and has her home with her sister, Annie. She is greatly interested in, and devotes much of her time and aid to church, missionary and Sunday-school work. Allen B. Witmer, born Nov. 28, 1865, married Bertha Steigelman, a daughter of John Steigelman, late of Manor township, deceased. He carries on a general store at Masonville, and is postmaster of Letort, at the same place. To them have been born three children, Charles M. Witmer, on Jan. 31, 1891; Mary S. Wittmer, on June 22, 1892; and Ada E. Witmer, on Oct. 6, 1901. The latter died March 1, 1902.

EDWARD CORNELIUS HALL (deceased), who for many years successfully conducted the "Delmonico," the well-known hotel on Center Square, Lancaster, and at the same time carried on classes for dancing and deportment, was born in Strasburg, Lancaster Co., Pa., Sept 1, 1854.

Mr. Hall was a son of Carpenter and Elizabeth (Treen) Hall, of Strasburg, who removed to Lancaster when Edward C. was a small boy. They had a family of eight children, as follows: Abram C. and Joseph, both residents of Canton, Ohio; John F., in Massillon, Ohio; Edward C., whose name introduces this sketch; and Harry, Albert, Miss Ella and Ida (wife of George Swain), all four residents of Lancaster.

After following various occupations Edward C. Hall engaged in the hotel and cafe business, which he carried on with marked success for sixteen years or more, his place of business being known as the "Delmonico." For eighteen years, ably assisted by Mrs. Hall, he conducted dancing classes, which in their day were the most popular in Lancaster, receiving the patronage of the best people of the city. Mr.

Edw. C. Hall

Hall died Dec. 6, 1899, at the age of forty-five years, in the prime of life, and so popular and highly esteemed was he that it seemed as if the entire city attended his funeral to pay the last sad tribute of esteem and regard. He was a Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Knights of Pythias, Knights of the Golden Eagle, Knights of Malta, and Artisans. In politics he was a Democrat.

In 1875 Mr. Hall was married to Miss Sarah Matilda Afflebach, daughter of the late Daniel Afflebach, who belonged to an old and well known family of this section. He died just ten weeks after the decease of Mr. Hall. To this union were born four children, as follows: Miss Mabel Gray, living at home; Charles Willison, who is learning the jeweler's trade with L. C. Reisner & Co.; Walter Daniel, attending Yeates Institute; and Reah Baker, also at school.

Mrs. Hall bravely took hold of the work her husband had laid down, and the "Delmonico" is kept fully up to the high popular standard it has all along maintained.

CYRUS D. STAUFFER. A prominent member of one of the old Lancaster county families which has long been noted for those qualities which have given this locality its high standing, is Cyrus D. Stauffer, now a retired farmer of West Donegal township, in the outskirts of Elizabethtown, where he erected his fine brick mansion in 1893.

Cyrus D. Stauffer was born May 21, 1843, son of Samuel K. and Mary (Dieffenderfer) Stauffer, of Mt. Joy township. The former died in 1895, in East Donegal township, aged eighty-one years, and his widow survived three years, dying at the age of seventy-five, both being buried in Bossler's Meeting House cemetery, in West Donegal township. For a decade prior to his death, he lived a retired life. Both he and his wife belonged to the Old Mennonite Church. Their children were as follows: Aaron D., a retired farmer in East Donegal township; Cyrus D.; and Samuel D., a prominent resident of Lancaster.

On Sept. 20, 1866, at the home of the bride, in West Donegal township, Cyrus D. Stauffer was married to Miss Susan E. Heisey, and the children born to this union were: M. Grace, who married Benjamin F. Hoffman, of Conoy township; Dora M., who married R. S. Buch, a manufacturer of Elizabethtown; Irvin H., who is the teller in the Exchange Bank, in Elizabethtown; Katie H., at home; and Mary, Paul H. and Abner H., who all died young.

Mrs. Stauffer was born May 9, 1845, in West Donegal township, daughter of Henry B. and Catherine (Wolgemuth) Heisey, both of whom were born in Mt. Joy township, but died in West Donegal, where Mr. Heisey was a farmer in his earlier years, and where he lived for thirty years prior to his death in retirement from activity of that kind. He died in 1895 at the age of eighty-seven, his wife having died in 1890, when seventy-four years old. Both were buried in Pleasant Hill cemetery, in West Donegal township. They were most estimable, Christian people, devoted members of the River Brethren Church.

Until 1893 Cyrus D. Stauffer continued to farm the old homestead, during which time every part of his domain was kept up to its full measure of capacity, winning for Mr. Stauffer the reputation of being one of the best farmers in his locality. For several terms Mr. Stauffer served West Donegal township on its school board. He belongs to the Brethren in Christ Church and is a man highly respected by all who know him.

IRVIN H. STAUFFER, teller in the Exchange Bank, of Elizabethtown, Pa., was born Sept. 25, 1870, in West Donegal township. His education was acquired in the common schools and until he was seventeen years of age, he assisted his father on the farm. As he advanced to early manhood, the restrictions of rural life and the limited opportunities for development of business ability, caused him to seek a position as clerk in Lancaster. For a year and a half he clerked in a clothing store in this city, but desiring to perfect himself in the higher branches of knowledge, he resigned this position and became a student at the Millersville State Normal School. There he took two courses, returning home in the spring of 1890, in time to accept the responsible place offered him of teller in the Exchange Bank, in Elizabethtown. In this position he has made a record for faithful service and is in direct line of promotion, possessing every qualification for a successful financial career. He takes an intelligent interest in politics, belongs to the Republican party and is prominent in social life. He is a member of Christ's Reformed Church, is one of its liberal supporters and a promoter of every worthy enterprise in his community.

On Nov. 27, 1901, he was married to Miss Cora McAllister, daughter of Jacob and Barbara (Greider) McAllister, of Pequea township. She was born July 5, 1873.

DANIEL ZIMMERMAN. Among the respected and substantial farmer-citizens of West Earl township, is Daniel Zimmerman, who resides in great comfort upon his fine farm of seventy-three acres, located about one mile from the village of West Earl.

Daniel Zimmerman was born Dec. 25, 1846, a son of Emanuel and Mary (Stauffer) Zimmerman, the former of whom was well known as a good farmer and worthy citizen. The family of Emanuel and Mary Zimmerman numbered nine children, these being: David, deceased; Jacob, a farmer of Earl township; Daniel; Samuel, a farmer of Earl; Annie, the wife of Samuel Abot, a farmer of Earl; Elizabeth, the wife of Jacob Horst, an Earl farmer; Mary, the wife of John Good, of West Earl; Lydia, at home; and one child who died young. Mr. Zimmerman was born in 1823 and died in 1895, while his wife was born in 1822, and died in 1892. The grandfather of Daniel was Christian Zimmerman, a man of means in his day, whose ancestors came to America from Germany, and he and his wife reared a family of ten children: John, Christian, David, Jacob, Martin, Elizabeth, Barbara, Susan, Emanuel and Peter.

Daniel Zimmerman was reared on the farm and all his life has taken a great interest in agriculture. His present farm gives every evidence of good management, for his buildings are of the best construction and all of the other improvements thoroughly modern. Mr. Zimmerman was educated in the public schools, and he has supplemented this with reading, so that he is one of the intelligent and progressive men of the township.

Daniel Zimmerman was married in 1870 to Miss Annie Erb, a daughter of Jacob L. and Elizabeth (Groff) Erb, of West Earl township, and this union has been blessed with two sons and two daughters: Benjamin, a farmer of West Earl; Martin, who resides at home; Mary, the wife of Christian Risser, of Clay township; and Elizabeth, the wife of William Good, of West Earl township.

In politics, Mr. Zimmerman is a staunch Republican; and he is a consistent member of the Mennonite Church. His personal character is high, and he enjoys the esteem of the whole community.

SIMON DENLINGER, a retired farmer of Leacock township, and one of the most highly esteemed and upright residents of that community, was born in Paradise township, Oct. 23, 1845, a son of John and Mary (Brubaker) Denlinger. His father was born in Paradise township, and his mother in West Hempfield. The father, who was a farmer all his life, died in 1895, at the age of seventy-nine years, his wife having passed to her reward two years previously, at the age of seventy-eight. The remains of both are resting in the Hess cemetery, of Salisbury township. Mr. Denlinger had retained his physical abilities to such an extent that he had been retired only six years before his death. He and his wife were members of the Mennonite Church.

To Mr. and Mrs. John Denlinger were born the following children: Franie, who died young; Barbara and John, both unmarried, and living on the old farm; Lizzie, who is the widow of Elias Leaman, and has her home in Intercourse, Pa.; Samuel, a retired farmer in Paradise township; Elias, a retired farmer in Salisbury township; Simon; Jacob; Mary, wife of H. E. Musser, of Paradise, Pa., whose sketch may be found elsewhere; Tobias, of whom a sketch is given elsewhere, died in 1898; Christiann, married to Henry Hershey, of Intercourse, Pa.; Evaline, wife of E. H. Hostetter, living in Leacock township.

Simon Denlinger was married Nov. 24, 1870, in Paradise township, to Anna Mary Leaman, by whom he became the father of the following family: Noah B., a farmer, and engaged in the cultivation of the old Denlinger homestead and married to Hannah Eby; Leaman J., a farmer in Leacock township, who married Emma Hoover, and with whom Mr. Denlinger makes his home; Jason, who died in infancy; Harry, living on the old homestead with his brother Noah.

Mrs. Anna M. Denlinger was born in Leacock township, March 14, 1851, and died Aug. 10, 1897. Her remains rest in the Hess cemetery, Salisbury township. She was the daughter of Jacob and Lydia (Buckwalter) Leaman, both of Lancaster county. They were the parents of the following children: Catherine, who is the widow of John Kreider, and resides in Paradise township; Susan, married to Ephraim Hershey, of Salisbury township; Elam, a farmer in Leacock township, married to Mina Landis; Jacob, a farmer in Leacock township, who married Annie Hershey; Anna M., the wife of Mr. Denlinger; Frank, of Gordonville, Pa., married to Ida Hershey; Ezra, a cigar box manufacturer in Paradise township, married to Grace Hunsecker. The father, Jacob Leaman, a farmer, died and his widow married Albert Deffenbaugh, registrar of wills at Greenland, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Denlinger remained with his parents until his marriage, when he began farming in Hempfield township, in which he was engaged eleven years. At the end of that period he removed to a farm in Paradise township, on which he was located until 1898, when he retired, and came to live with his son. Both he and his wife were members of the Mennonite Church; in his politics he is a Republican.

AMOS P. SMITH. Among the honorable and respected farmers of Drumore township is Amos P. Smith, who resides on his fine farm of 115 acres, situated less than a mile from Fairfield, Pa. Mr. Smith was a grandson of Joseph Smith, who was a native of Chester county, Pa., coming to Lancaster county when a young man. There he married Tracy Shoemaker, of Drumore township, who was born in 1806, he being five years her senior, and they had a family of four children who grew to maturity: Rachel, a resident of Drumore township; George and Amos, twins; and Ellen W., who is the wife of Hon. William Brosius, a member of the Legislature from this district, more extended mention of whom may be found elsewhere.

George Smith, the father of Amos P., was born in 1825, and married Emily Tennis, who was born in 1826. They were married in 1848 and reared four children: Amos P., who was born Oct. 4, 1849; Annie M., born Feb. 15, 1852, wife of Gardner Crawford, of Perryville, Md.; Gerritt, born Oct. 17, 1857, who resides on the old home place, and whose biography appears in this work; and Ellsworth, born Sept. 6, 1861, who died while still a young man.

Amos P. Smith was married on Dec. 5, 1871, to Lydia S. Lamborn, who was a daughter of Smedley and Margaret (Bolton) Lamborn, of Martic township. She was born Oct. 29, 1851. This marriage has been blessed with these children: Ellsworth W., born Nov. 27, 1877, at home, unmarried; Eva May, born Jan. 2, 1882; Edna R., June 14, 1884; Emeline T., Oct. 24, 1886; Joseph E., Jan. 4, 1890; and George A., Sept. 22, 1892.

Mrs. Smith was reared in a family of ten children, as follows: George S., of Martic township; Aquilla B., of Britain township; Emeline, the wife of Joseph Shoemaker, of Drumore township; Ellwood, deceased; William, deceased; Mary E., the wife of Thomas B. Hambleton, a merchant of Fernglens, whose sketch appears elsewhere; Sarah E., the wife of Jacob K. Brown, of Fulton township, whose sketch is a part of this volume; Alice, the wife of William L. Shoemaker, of Fulton township, whose sketch also appears; Lucinda, the wife of Benjamin F. Tennis; and Lydia S., the wife of Mr. Smith.

The fine, well-improved farm which is now the home of Mr. Smith and his family was purchased by him in 1899, and is one of the most desirable properties in this county. It is under excellent cultivation, while the attractive residence, commodious barns, fruitful orchards and complete fencing, show that Mr. Smith is a very capable manager of it all.

Mr. Smith is a Republican in politics, although in no way a politician, and both he and his wife manifest a great interest in the welfare of the locality. As he was reared, so he has continued, a consistent and worthy member of the Society of Friends. He has taken a great interest in the workings of the W. C. T. U., believing it to be a great moral factor, and his daughter Eva is the secretary of the Union at Fairfield. This is one of the truly representative families of Drumore township.

JOSEPH H. BEILER. Among the passengers on the ship, the "Charming Polly," which sailed from Rotterdam and landed its cargo at Philadelphia, Pa., on Oct. 8, 1737, was one Jacob Beiler, who bought land in eastern Pennsylvania and reared there a family. His son, Christopher S., was a resident of Chester county, as was also his son, Christian. The next in line was John, who was a son of Christian and he was the grandfather of our subject, Joseph H. Beiler, of Upper Leacock township, in Lancaster county.

John Beiler was born in East Lampeter township and married Elizabeth Lapp. They were farming people and members of the Old Mennonite Church. John Beiler died in Union county, Pa., in 1868, at the age of eighty-six years, but his widow survived until 1877, dying at the home of one of her children, in Upper Leacock township, at the age of eighty-four years.

Deacon John L. Beiler, son of John Beiler, was born in Lancaster county and was about two years old when his parents removed to Mifflin county, where he married and remained until 1854, when he returned to Lancaster county and located on a farm in East Lampeter township. There he died in 1892, aged seventy-five years, six months and three days. The mother of our subject was born in Mifflin county and lived until 1874, dying at the age of fifty-four. They lie side by side in the old burying ground known as Rancks, in East Lampeter township. Both were pious and worthy members of the Amish order of the Mennonite Church. From 1866 to his death, in 1892, John L. Beiler held the honorable office of deacon in the church. This worthy man was held in the highest esteem through the locality.

The children born to Deacon John L. Beiler and his wife were: David, who lived to be forty years old; Elizabeth, who lives in East Lampeter township, unmarried; Joseph H.; Nancy; Sarah; Jemima, who married John Zook, a farmer of Upper Leacock township; John, who died at the age of thirty-one; Samuel, the farmer on the old homestead, near Witmer, Pa.; Joel; Rebecca, who died in infancy; Mary, who died unmarried, at the age of thirty-five. Elizabeth, Nancy, Sarah and Joel are all single and reside together on the old farm in East Lampeter township, highly esteemed in their neighborhood.

Joseph H. Beiler acquired his education in the district schools and remained on the home farm, assisting his father, until he was about twenty-two years of age, at which time he began to learn the carpenter trade and worked at it for the following three years. However, he later decided to return to farming and began operations on land in the vicinity of Gordonville, Pa., where he remained until 1875, when he came to his present fine farm, located a quarter of a mile south of Mechanicsburg, on the New Holland turnpike. Here in connection with his farming he has conducted a threshing outfit, but since 1892 he has been retired from activity, his son-in-law carrying on operations on the farm.

Although Mr. Beiler has retired from active labor, it is not on account of age, as he was born in Mifflin county, on June 11, 1845, and is still in the prime of life. His parents were John L. and Lydia (Hertzler) Beiler, of whom mention has been made. On Dec. 15, 1870, in Leacock township, Joseph H. Beiler was married to Miss Sarah Kauffman, and to this union was born one daughter, Anna K., who married Moses P. Stoltz, who manages Mr. Beiler's farm. To Mr. and Mrs. Stoltz three children have been born, Daniel, Joseph and Sarah.

Mrs. Sarah (Kauffman) Beiler was born in Leacock township, Jan. 11, 1850, a daughter of John Kauffman and Susan King, the former of whom was born in Mifflin county, and the latter in Lancaster county. Mr. Kauffman was a large farmer and died in Leacock township on April 3, 1898, at the age of seventy-six years. He had been one of the leading men of his county, and was township auditor at one time, but for some years had lived retired from active duties. The mother of Mrs. Beiler was born in 1826 and now resides in the daughter's family, every member of which is solicitous for her comfort. Both she and her husband belonged to the Old Mennonite Church. Their children were: Samuel, who died young; Elizabeth, who married John S. Fisher, and resides in East Lampeter township; Sarah, the wife of Joseph H. Beiler; Jacob, who is a farmer of Leacock township; Susan, who married John B. Fisher, now a retired farmer of this township; Ely, who is a farmer in Leacock township; Salome, who died young; and Rebecca, who died at the age of twenty years. The grandparents of Mrs. Beiler were old and most highly esteemed citizens of this part of the State, those on the father's side being John and Eliza (Lapp) Kauffman, natives of Chester county, while those on the mother's side were John and Eliza (Stoltzfus) King, both natives of Leacock township. All were farmers and religiously connected with the Old Mennonite Church.

Joseph H. Beiler has been a life-long Republican, although he has taken no very active part in politics, contenting himself with doing his duty as a citizen. For three years he served his township as school director and has always shown interest in all measures promising advantage to the county. Both he and his family are connected with the Old Mennonite Church and he is known to be a man of integrity and high character.

DAVID H. HESS, a blacksmith of Conestoga township, is a son of Daniel Hess. The father, Daniel Hess, was a blacksmith, who learned his trade with a man named Johnson, in Pequea township, and followed it all his life. For a number of years before his death, in 1866, he was connected with the Old Mennonite Church. He was a staunch Democrat in politics, but never sought office. He married Mary, daughter of Isaac Hoak, of Slackwater. They were the parents of nine children: Christina, wife of Cyrus Stombaugh, of Millersville; Tobias, who was drowned in the Conestoga about twenty years ago while fishing; Isaac H., bar-tender for Mrs. Caroline Hoak, of Millersville; David H.; John F. M., of Sterling, Ill., a carpenter; Martin H., of Conestoga township, a tobacco farmer; Henry H., of Sterling, Ill.; Lizzie, wife of Stephen Watson, Conestoga township, a farmer; Fannie, wife of John Benge, a paper-maker in Delaware.

David H. Hess was born Oct. 8, 1855, in Conestoga Center. His father died when he was only eleven years old. He was soon thereafter hired out to Jacob B. Herr, a farmer in Pequea township, where he remained four years. He then worked for Jacob B. Stetman, of Conestoga, for two years. After this he went with Cyrus H. Stombaugh, of Millersville, to learn the blacksmith trade and he remained there three years. He then removed to Rock Hill, started in business for himself, and has remained there ever since.

In February, 1877, he was married to Barbara, daughter of Jacob Burkhart, of Conestoga. They are the parents of four children, Minnie E., Susan B., Oscar B. and Charles H., all at home. In addition to Mr. Hess' blacksmith business, he has a farm of thirty acres which he uses for raising vegetables for market. He rents a stand in the Southern Market, Lancaster City, where he disposes of his produce every Saturday afternoon. Mr. Hess had a common school education but has studied the topics of the day since reaching mature age and is well posted on all matters of general interest. He has been successful through his own efforts and is an honored citizen of his neighborhood.

CHRISTIAN WISE, of the firm of Wise Bros., successful brick manufacturers of Lancaster, Pa., whose products find a ready sale throughout the entire county and neighboring districts, is one of the enterprising business men of the city, and was formerly a member of the common council. He was born Dec. 18, 1845, in Baden, Germany, son of Adam and Catherine (Meister) Wise, also natives of Germany.

Adam Wise was a weaver in his native land, and after his marriage he emigrated to America, arriving in Lancaster, Pa., in April, 1847. For some time after his arrival Mr. Wise was employed in unloading coal on the "Engleside," and later engaged in the manufacture of brick in the employ of George Kautz, of whom he learned the business. In 1871 he embarked in that line of business for himself, assisted by his sons, and continued in the same until his death, which occurred March 4, 1875, when he was not quite fifty-eight years of age. His wife, who has now reached an advanced age, resides at Lancaster. Her father, Lanhait Meister, also emigrated to America, and died in Lancaster at the age of eighty-two. Adam Wise was a Democrat in politics, in which he took a deep interest. His religious connections were with the Reformed Church. To himself and wife eleven children were born, but only three grew to maturity, Christian, John V. and Louisa, Mrs. Beaumann, all residing in Lancaster. John V. Wise, ex-president of the select council of Lancaster, and one of the leading members of the Democratic party of this locality, was nominated county commissioner on the Democratic ticket June 6, 1902. He is the partner of his brother, Christian, in the firm of Wise Bros. He is a veteran of the Civil war, and was one of the youngest soldiers received into service. On June 23, 1872, John V. Wise married Margaret Kroft.

When Christian Wise was only eighteen months old his parents took him to the New World, the little party landing upon the free soil of their future home after a stormy voyage of forty-five days. His boyhood days were spent in Lancaster, where he attended the common schools and worked in a brickyard. Later he attended school during the winter, learning at the same time the trade of cigarmaker, which he put to good use after his return from the war. But when his father and brother John entered into the brick business, he joined them and since that time has devoted all his time and attention to this branch of industrial life. The brickyards and kilns owned by Wise Bros., the two brothers succeeding to sole control after the demise of their father, in 1875, are the best equipped in the county, and are well adapted to the immense volume of business annually transacted by the firm. The plant is located on the corner of Manor and Prospect streets, the yards covering twelve acres, and the plant is fully supplied with a 30-horse-power engine and all requisite brick-making machinery. When running full force employment is given to forty men. There are three kilns and the annual output averages 3,500,000 brick. In addition to the manufacture of ordinary bricks, the firm have a large demand for pressed and hand moulded varieties. The clay used is of the very best quality, and great care is exercised in every process of manufacture. In 1881 Mr. Wise bought a 160-acre farm near Richmond, Va., and lived there two years.

On Feb. 25, 1864, although then scarcely nineteen years old, Mr. Wise enlisted in Co. C, 2d Pa. H. A., being mustered into service at Philadelphia and sent to the front, and attached to the Army of the Potomac, with which he participated in the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania and Cold Harbor, and the Siege of Petersburg. Later, he was transferred to the Army of the James, under Gen. Butler, with which he remained until the surrender. On July 4, 1864, while on picket duty near Petersburg, on the Richmond & Norfolk railroad, he was wounded, a bullet passing through his right cheek and coming out at the back of his neck. Although given a justly earned furlough, before two months had passed the brave young soldier was at duty again, with his regiment, in which he became corporal. While near Petersburg, June 17, 1864, he had received a buckshot wound in the left knee. He was finally discharged in February, 1866, after he had made a war record of which he and his children may well be proud.

In politics Mr. Wise has always been a stanch Democrat, members of his family having supported the principles of that organization from the time of their location in Lancaster. About 1869 Mr. Wise served as a member of the city council for one term, and he always takes a most active part in all campaigns; he has served also as judge of election. Being recognized as a man of sterling merit, calm judgment and keen discrimination, he is often called upon to serve upon the petit juries. Socially he is well and favorably known throughout the entire community, and fraternally he is associated with Monterey Lodge, I. O. O. F., and with the Knights of Pythias. The family are members of the St. John's Reformed Church of Lancaster.

In August, 1866, Mr. Wise married, in Lancaster, Emma R. Pyle, and the following children have been born to them: Emma married John K. Warren, a tailor of York, Pa., and they have had seven children, two of whom are deceased; Adam, with his father in the brickyard, and a resident of Lancaster, married Catherine Benner, and they had one child; Frederick, also employed with his father, married Ida Reece, and has had four children, one of whom is deceased; Miss Mamie is at home; Louisa married Samuel Charles, and they have three children; Kate married Benjamin Herr, of Lancaster, and they have four children, one of whom is deceased; Miss Minnie is at home. The family reside in a pleasant home built by Mr. Wise in 1886.

Mrs. Wise was born in Lancaster Oct. 8, 1843, a daughter of Frederick and Catherine (Miller) Pyle, of Lancaster. Frederick Pyle, who was a distiller, died Sept. 4, 1880, when he was sixty-two years of age, while his wife died May 18, 1858, aged forty-eight years, and both are buried in Lancaster cemetery. They were members of the First Reformed and Trinity Churches, respectively. They had the following family: Rebecca, who died in childhood; George, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Sarah, widow of John Silvas, of Lancaster, Pa.; John (deceased), who was a soldier in the 79th P. V. I., and was wounded; Emma R., Mrs. Wise; Mary (deceased), who married Henry Leonard; Washington, a railroad detective of Lancaster, Pa. (he was a soldier in the 79th P. V. I.); Lucy, deceased; Margaret, deceased; Philip, of Lancaster; Allen, of Lancaster; Harry and Frederick, twins, the former of whom died in childhood, the latter at the age of twenty-two; and Joseph, deceased.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Wise were Philip and Margaret (Wilkerson) Pyle, he a native of Germany, and she of Virginia. The history of Philip Pyle reads like one of the modern novels dealing with by-gone days. Only eighteen, ignorant of the language of the new land, he was sold in Virginia for his passage and remained there four years. At the expiration of his period of bondage, he married, and with his faithful wife made his way to Lancaster, Pa., where he became a distiller and one of the leading men of that city, dying in 1849, aged seventy-eight. His wife survived him one year, dying at the age of seventy-six, and both are buried in Lancaster cemetery. They were consistent members of the Reformed Church. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Wise was George Miller, of Lancaster, a prominent pump manufacturer and leading citizen.

HENRY AUGUSTUS ROLAND was born in New Holland, Pa., Nov. 26, 1819, and died in that borough, June 21, 1901. His remains rest in the Trinity Lutheran cemetery at New Holland, Pa.

He was a lifelong resident of New Holland and was descended, both paternally and maternally, from pioneer Germans, those early Palatinate settlers who, in 1709, on the invitation of Queen Anne, fled from religious persecution on the banks of the Rhine in Germany to seek a haven in the New World. Ever since their original land grant from Thomas Penn, as early as 1733, the Rolands have been large land owners, and have been prominently identified for more than a century and a half with the management and progress of affairs in the community. Henry Augustus Roland was the fifth of a family of seven children born to Henry and Margaret (Seeger) Roland, and received his early education at the New Holland free school and at Beck's noted Academy at Lititz, Pa. He was married in 1849 to Jane Whann Heyl, a daughter of Philip and Margaret (Whann) Heyl, of Philadelphia, Pa., by whom he had the following family: Oliver, a physician at Lancaster, Pa.; William H., an attorney at Lancaster, Pa.; Frederic A., cashier of the Second National Bank at Reading, Pennsylvania.

Possessed of a strong and logical mind, Mr. Roland manifested from early manhood those sterling qualities of success, energy, accuracy, tact and prevision in the successful management of the many responsibilities that were thrust upon him. As a financier he was keen and alert, shrewd and sagacious, yet prudent and cautious, qualities which he lived to see bring him his well earned increment.

It has been truly said, "he was progressive in his ideas, and encouraged and supported every movement calculated to advance the interests of the community in which he spent his entire lifetime." He was from early age a member of the Trinity Lutheran Church, and was prominently identified with the erection of their present church building in 1850. He was, for over fifty years, a director and manager of the New Holland Turnpike Company; was chosen president of the Centennial Jubilee at New Holland, July 4, 1876, and volunteered much encouragement and assistance in the production of the "History of the Three Earls."

He took an active part in the organization of the New Holland National Bank, in which he was one of the original stock holders, although magnanimously waiving all suggestion in its management, owing to his growing years. He, nevertheless, always displayed a keen and solicitous interest in its progress and success. He advocated the incorporation of New Holland into a borough, and was active in the movement which led to that result in 1895. He encouraged and supported in a substantial way the organization of the New Holland Water Company, and was prominent and foremost in all progressive movements.

Although continually employed with financial cares, he gave much time to literary pursuits, was thoroughly conversant with the topics of the day, whilst his voluminous reading extended to the higher sciences, to philosophy and to religious thought, which his reasoning mind was so well adapted to grasp. As a cultured gentleman, of genial disposition, engaging manners and scrupulous integrity, his companionship was much sought by his friends.

JOHN D. RUTHERFORD, a prosperous and successful general farmer of Conoy township, Lancaster county, was born in Adams county, Pa., July 11, 1834, and is a son of William and Leah (Decker) Rutherford. The parents came into Lancaster county in 1840, and made their home in Bainbridge, where their lives were spent. The father was a mason by trade, and did a tobacco farming business. When he died, in 1881, he had reached the age of sixty-seven years. The mother died in 1870, at the age of sixty years, and both were buried in Bainbridge. They were members of the Lutheran and the Reformed Churches, respectively, and were the parents of the following family of children: John D.; Leah, unmarried, who lives in Elizabethtown; Julia Ann and Martin, deceased; Levi, a stone mason in Elizabethtown; Daniel, dead; William, a stone mason in Elizabethtown; Catherine, dead; Henry, a resident of Marietta.

Samuel Rutherford, the paternal grandfather of John D., came from England, and married a German-born woman, in Adams county, where their married life was spent and where he died; his widow died in Bainbridge, Lancaster county.

John D. Rutherford and Rachel A. Shelly were married Nov. 13, 1859, in Columbia, by Rev. Mr. Menges, and to this union came the following children: Mary Ann, now dead; William L., who married Anna C. Lanstrum, and is a Lutheran pastor at Dayton, Ohio; Frances, the wife of Samuel Sapping, a cigar maker in Philadelphia; Bellmina and Mary, both deceased; John, who married Emma Dennison and lives in Philadelphia; Effie, married to William Harlan and living at home; Bessie and Emma (who married George Shields), both deceased.

Mrs. Rachel A. Rutherford was born in Chester, Pa., Jan. 31, 1834, and is a daughter of Godlib and Catherine (Iseman) Shelly, both born and bred in Germany, where they married. When they came to this country they settled in Chester, but moved into Lancaster county in 1848, making their home near New Holland. The father was a farmer, and worked in tanneries during the winter season. Born to them were John, deceased; Fredrika, who married Charles Reisler, and is dead; Louisa, late wife of Christ. Sweinard; Rachel; Emma, the wife of John Swartz, of Philadelphia; Agnes, the widow of George Robbery, who lives in Philadelphia; Lizzie, the widow of John Sellers, who has her home in Philadelphia; Fanny and Lydia are unmarried and live in Philadelphia.

John D. Rutherford remained with his parents until he became of age, then for about two years worked among the neighboring farmers. After his marriage he worked eight years on the railroad, and rented farms for several years. In 1885 he came upon the farm where he is now found. It forms part of the Cassel estate, and is a very valuable piece of real estate.

Mr. Rutherford is a Republican, and has served as constable four years. Both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church, and bear themselves well in the community where their peaceful and industrious lives are passing. They are straightforward and strictly honest in all their dealings, and their kind hearts and genial disposition have made them many friends.

FRANK R. GROFF, a contractor of concrete and mason work in Conoy township, Lancaster county, Pa., has extensive farming interests also in that locality, and has made a comfortable place for himself in the community in which his useful life is passing. Mr. Groff was born in Laupheim, Wurtemberg, Germany, Oct. 31, 1849, and came to this country in 1872, crossing the ocean on the French ship "The Sign Lawrence." Landing in New York, he at once made his way to Lancaster county, and here he has resided to the present time. He is a son of Fridolin and Waldburger (Romer) Groff, both his parents living and dying in Germany. The father was a brick layer, mason and contractor, dying in 1865, at the age of fifty-eight years; the mother died in 1872, at the age of sixty-one years. They were both members of the Catholic Church, and had the following children: George, a Catholic priest, who went to South America in 1853; Pius, an architect, who is deceased; Frank R.; Magdalena, deceased wife of Christ. Weisman, a salesman; Elizabeth, late wife of Joseph Zimmermann, a carpenter and contractor; Philomena, the wife of Nenzenz Speitel, a miller on the island of Sicily. Of this family Frank R. is the only one to come to the United States.

Frank R. Groff and Catherine Schroll were married in York county, Jan. 22, 1880, and to their union were born the following two children: Frances S., who married Harvey Shank, and lives in Newville, Lancaster county; Frank P., who is at home. Mrs. Catherine Groff was born in Manchester township, York county, Dec. 8, 1857, and is a daughter of Solomon and Mary M. (Hartman) Schroll, both natives of York county, where their lives were spent. The father was a farmer, and died in 1892, at the age of seventy-eight years; the mother died in 1893, at the age of eighty-two years; they were buried in the cemetery connected with Hoover's Church, in York county. Born to them were the following children: Jacob, who is dead; Henry, a veteran of the Civil war, living in the Soldiers' Home; Daniel, deceased; Solomon, a resident of Harrisburg; Emanuel, of Lancaster; Christina, of Mt. Wolf, Pa., married to Abraham Rhoads; Susan, who married James Maze, and is dead; Elizabeth, who married Joseph Judy, and has her home in Middletown; Magdalena, deceased; Catherine, wife of Frank R. Groff.

Frank R. Groff remained at home with his parents, working at his trade, until his coming to this country. After his arrival here he spent some time in several of the large cities, was at Cincinnati, St. Louis and Kansas City, making a permanent location, however, in Conoy township, Lancaster county, in 1877, and moving to his present home in 1881. He is a capable and energetic man, strictly honorable and reliable, and belongs to the Mennonite Church. In his politics he is a Republican, and he is highly regarded by those who know him best. His wife belongs to the Dunkard Church.

CHRISTOPHER HAGER, attorney at law, Marietta, Pa., was born in Lancaster city May 6, 1860, and is a son of Henry W. and Ellen (Hayes) Hager. Henry W. Hager was a dry-goods merchant, and carried on business in Lancaster with his brothers, John C. and Charles F. Hager, under the firm name of Hager & Bros. He was also postmaster at Lancaster under President Grant's first administration, and died Dec. 23, 1872, at the early age of thirty-six years. Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Hager had born to them three children, viz.: Isabella H., wife of John R. Nicholson, Chief Justice and Chancellor of Equity for the State of Delaware, and residing in Dover, that State; Christopher, whose name opens this article; and Mary Bell, married to Robert D. Stewart, a railroad contractor in Lancaster.

The paternal grandparents of Christopher Hager were Christopher and Catharine (Sener) Hager, the former of whom was a dry-goods merchant and also president of the Farmers National Bank in Lancaster. Christopher Hager, the great-grandfather, came from Worms, Germany, in 1764, and settled in Lancaster, where he engaged in merchandising. The maternal grandparents of our subject were Alexander L. and Isabella (Patterson) Hayes. Alexander L. Hayes came from York River Plantation, Sussex Co., Del., to Reading, Pa., in 1820. He had graduated from Dickinson College, Pennsylvania, and, locating in Reading, practiced law there a few years, when he moved to Lancaster, having been appointed Judge of the Lancaster District Court, which was afterward abolished; for term after term he was subsequently elected Judge of the General Courts of Lancaster county, serving a total of more than fifty years on the Bench, and died in Lancaster in 1875, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. Mrs. Isabella (Patterson) Hayes was a daughter of Col. Galbreth Patterson, a gallant patriot of the Revolutionary war, and was a granddaughter on the maternal side of Brig. Gen. William Thompson, of Carlisle, Pa. Gen. Thompson was a brother-in-law of George Ross, of Pennsylvania, and George Reed, of Delaware, both signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Christopher Hager, the subject proper of these lines, at the age of eleven years was sent to a boarding-school conducted by A. R. Beck, of Lititz, Pa., and a year later was transferred to the Franklin and Marshall Academy, in Lancaster, and two years later to Cheltenham Academy, in Montgomery county, from which he graduated when eighteen years old. He then became a member of the firm of Hager & Bros., dry-goods merchants, being in the sales department of the store until 1885, after which he traveled through the United States and Europe for a year. In 1886 he entered the law office of Hon. J. Hay Brown, as his first student. After a course of law study for two years he entered the office of Nathaniel Ellmaker, his uncle, with whom he remained a few years, after which time he devoted his attention to fire insurance for four years, and then sold out his agencies and the business he had established. He then went to Philadelphia, and was appointed cashier of the State Insurance Company of Philadelphia, with which corporation he remained two years. He then opened a law office in that city, and for a year had a successful practice there, until November, 1898, when he settled in Marietta, where he at once rose to prominence as an attorney, becoming borough solicitor, attorney for the First National Bank of Marietta and many leading business houses; he is also the solicitor and treasurer of the Pioneer Fire Company of Marietta.

In June, 1896, Mr. Hager married, in Marietta, Miss Maud E. Baker, a native of the borough, and a daughter of Col. Frederick and Jennie (Jack) Baker, of Marietta and Lancaster, respectively. Col. Frederick Baker was for a long time editor of the Marietta Register, and died in 1885, when sixty years old. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Hager was Peter Baker, a leading lumber merchant of Marietta, and her maternal grandfather was Joshua Jack, an architect, contractor and builder, of Lancaster.

Besides attending to his law business in Marietta Mr. Hager also occupies the old Ellmaker law office in Lancaster. He is a member of Lamberton Lodge, No. 476, F. & A. M., the Historical Society of Pennsylvania and the Society of the Sons of Revolution. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, and in politics is a Republican. As a lawyer he stands in the front rank with his professional brethren, and as a citizen he enjoys the unfeigned respect of all who know him.

HENRY GERHART, of No. 46 North Queen street, Lancaster, enjoys the distinction of being proprietor and manager of the largest merchant tailoring establishment in that city. His successful career has been the result of his complete mastery of every detail of his business, and of the absolute integrity of all his business methods.

Mr. Gerhart was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, Nov. 22, 1835, a son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Thies) Gerhart, the former of whom was a merchant in that place, and passed away in 1836. Henry Gerhart spent his boyhood days in his native town, and when his school days were ended was apprenticed to the tailor's trade. Early in 1850 he sailed for America, by way of London, landing at New York, where he studied American methods, and then began working as a journeyman, coming to Lancaster the same year. In 1865 Mr. Gerhart began business for himself, and has proved very successful as a merchant tailor. For many years he was located on the east side of North Queen street, but the demands of an increasing trade made better quarters a necessity, and he secured his present location, where he maintains by far the largest tailor shop in the city. In the fall of 1900 Mr. Gerhart added the making of ladies' tailor-made garments to his other business, and this new departure brought a very generous response from the trading public, now rivaling in volume the original business.

In 1866 Mr. Gerhart was married to Miss Margaret Wittlinger, of Lancaster, daughter of the late John Wittlinger, a prominent old-time brewer of the city. Mrs. Gerhart died in November, 1893, leaving one son, J. H. Gerhart, who after graduating from Franklin and Marshall College entered the big establishment of his father on North Queen street, as an assistant; in 1894 he married Anna M. Wolf, of Lancaster.

Mr. Gerhart was one of the founders, and a stockholder and director, of the Maennerchor Hall Association, of which he was president for a time, and treasurer for a period of eight years. He belongs to Zion's Lutheran Church, where he has been a vestryman for twenty-five years, as well as superintendent of the Sunday-school, and financial secretary of the parish for the same period. Socially he is a charter member and past officer of Hebel Lodge, I. O. O. F., and is one of the organizers and former officers of the Order of Seven Wise Men. In all the affairs of life Mr. Gerhart has always proved faithful and worthy of respect and confidence, and after a mercantile career of thirty-five years in Lancaster he is still wide-awake and vigorous, with a trade that is yearly taking on larger proportions. He has a wide circle of friends and patrons.

GEORGE LEWIS LYLE. For many years George Lewis Lyle was a trusted and efficient railroad man, but in 1892 he yielded to the wishes of family and party friends and left that line to accept the position of justice of the peace in Columbia, in which situation he gave general satisfaction, testified to by several re-elections.

Mr. Lyle was born in Paradise township May 17, 1843, a son of Samuel B. and Fanny (Graham) Lyle, natives of Lancaster county. The father was connected with railroading, and died in Columbia, at the home of his son, on Aug. 25, 1868, at the age of sixty-three years, one month and twenty-one days. The mother passed away Dec. 6, 1875, at the age of sixty-six years and eleven days. Both parents were worthy members of the Presbyterian Church, and in that faith reared a family of six children, these being: John and Edward, twins, the former a resident of Baltimore, Md., the latter deceased; Emma and Fanny, twins, both deceased; Mary J., Mrs. George W. Hoover, who, with her husband, is now dead; and George Lewis.

When Mr. Lyle was but two years old his parents moved to Indiana, but they returned to Columbia two years later, and he was reared on a farm, while he received his education in the public schools. Before entering upon railroad work he was employed for some two years in a saw mill, but he found better opportunities on the road, became a brakeman in the employ of the Pennsylvania lines and in 1861 was made a conductor. During the great strike in 1877 Mr. Lyle resigned his position, later accepting a similar one with the Reading Railroad.

Although Mr. Lyle had spent many years in railroading and was most highly regarded by all with whom he had business relations, his family desired him to make a change, and in 1891, in deference to their wishes, he resigned his lucrative position, and the next year was appointed justice of the peace, having served as constable of Columbia during 1878-79 and -80. Many quite important cases were brought before Justice Lyle, and all were adjusted without appeal to a higher court.

On Sept. 19, 1867, Mr. Lyle was married to Anna M. Ranck, and the children of this union are: William D. deceased; Ella M., who married Henry E. Kline, of Columbia; Samuel E.; Mary J., who married Charles Fine and is now dead, leaving one child, who lives with Mr. Lyle; John W.; Anna S.; George P.; Frances M.; Joseph C., and Fred T., all living at home; and Jessie L., deceased. The parents of Mrs. Lyle, Jesse and Sarah (Shultz) Ranck, were old residents of Paradise township. The parents were of German descent. Her father's death occurred in Ohio, after a number of years spent in Columbia, in the saddlery business.

In his political affiliations Mr. Lyle is a Democrat, as was his father before him. In 1902, through political changes, Mr. Lyle lost his office of justice, and has since acted as notary public in Columbia. He is becoming unable to perform much labor, as in 1898 he was partly paralyzed. In Columbia, where they are all known, the family is most highly esteemed, and Mr. Lyle is considered a representative citizen.

WILLIAM K. BENDER. The founder of the Bender family came from Germany, a country which has contributed to Lancaster county many of its best citizens.

David Bender, the founder, located a large tract of land in Upper Leacock township and became a large land owner there and a very pronounced Federalist, always advocating the rights of the colonies. He was successful in many lines of business, was the owner of superior horses and operated a distillery, the product of which he marketed himself in Philadelphia and in Pittsburg. As a stanch supporter of the Lutheran Church he was highly esteemed, and at an advanced age he passed away, and his is among the earlier tombs in the old Heller burying-ground, where many of his descendants also rest. Two sons and two daughters survived him: Susan and Elizabeth, who never married; John, who followed closely in the footsteps of his father, lived out his life in Upper Leacock township and there reared a family; and George, the grandfather of William K., of this biography.

Grandfather George Bender married a member of the Kinzer family, which came from England, and they reared a most estimable family, their son, Kinzer D. Bender, becoming a power in Lancaster county. For many years Kinzer D. Bender was associated in the closest bonds of friendship with that great statesman of Pennsylvania, Thaddeus Stevens, and with him held strong views on the slavery question and other subjects of public morality. At the time of which we write, it was the universal practice through the farming regions to supply intoxicants to the assistants who helped in the haying and harvesting, and to take a firm stand against the practice was almost as serious a business as it was to break one of the old laws of the Medes and Persians. However, Kinzer D. Bender was a man of principle and he took his stand against the custom and was forced to bear the brunt of much indignation and misrepresentation. As a financier he was highly regarded, and was welcomed as a director in some of the leading banks of the county; and as a farmer, he was one of the first to place improved machinery on his estate. The free school system received his hearty support, and all schemes for the advancement of his section met with his approbation. To his church, of the Lutheran faith, he was generous, and only those nearest him knew of his charities. His life was extended to eighty-two years, his death occurring in 1890.

Among the children left by this most worthy and honored citizen were: Franklin, a resident of Mechanicsburg; John W., deceased, who left one son, who resides near Heller's Church, in Upper Leacock township; William K.; and Mary, the wife of Jacob Burkholder, who resides near Mechanicsburg, all of them being among the esteemed residents of the county.

William K. Bender was reared on the farm and had the advantages resulting from his father's intelligent companionship. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted as sergeant in Co. B., 122 P. V. I., and took part in the battles of Chantilly, the second battle of Bull Run, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, and in all of the skirmishes in which his regiment was engaged. At Chancellorsville he was painfully wounded by a minie ball, but remained at his post until the regiment was relieved.

For many years William K. Bender was connected as a director with the Susquehanna Iron Company, of Columbia, and when it, with the Lebanon Iron Company, with which he was also connected was absorbed by the combination now known as the American Iron and Steel Manufacturing Company, he continued to be financially interested.

As a prominent citizen he is connected with many of the financial institutions of the county, is a director in the Lititz Agricultural Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Lancaster county and is one of its active promoters. His interest in education equals that of his father, and in early manhood he taught in the public schools in his native county for two years, 1860 and 1861, giving that up in 1862 to respond to his country's call as a volunteer in support of the administration which received his first vote. Later he served on the school board for many years, and has advocated many reforms in the county.

In 1865 William K. Bender was married to Elizabeth A. Hartman, of German and French descent and from a most worthy and honorable family. At the time of their marriage both were connected with the M. E. Church and were untiring workers in the Sunday-school field, in both church and union schools, county and village, advocating that the period for retirement only comes when the workman is called to his reward, and this spirit has been imbibed by their three daughters. Mr. Bender's passion for music, both vocal and instrumental, was marked, and he found no higher enjoyment than that which grows from its acquisition and rendering. He has advocated its cultivation in the public schools as one of the refining forces in molding and elevating society. In his family he has insisted upon a higher education for his children as a sure and safe investment, the pleasure imparted repaying for the time and expense involved. The eldest is a graduate of the Collegiate Institute in Hackettstown, N. J.; the second, of the Woman's College, in Baltimore, while the third is a senior in Dickinson Seminary at Williamsport, Pennsylvania.

ABRAHAM W. ENGLE, an old and highly respected farmer, at present living in retirement, was born Aug. 28, 1835, in Conoy township, on the farm where he now resides, a son of the Rev. Jacob S. and Barbara (Wolgemuth) Engle.

The father, who was born on an adjoining farm, was married in 1833, and came to the present homestead in 1834. For many years he was a preacher of the River Brethren Church, having served for forty-nine years in a clerical capacity; he also taught school. From 1870 until his death, Feb. 13, 1894, he lived retired. At his demise he was eighty-five years and three months old; his widow survived him for a time, dying Dec. 18, 1900, at the age of eighty-eight years and eleven months. They were members of the River Brethren Church, and were interred in the East Donegal cemetery. To them were born the following children: Abraham W., born Aug. 28, 1835; Fanny W., Jan. 16, 1837, who died young; Daniel W., Nov. 2, 1839, who died young; Barbara W., Oct. 7, 1841; Jacob W., Feb. 5, 1844; David W., Aug. 8, 1846, who married, first Fanny Nissley, and second, Maria Sallenberger, and died June 28, 1890; Anna W., Jan. 15, 1851, who married Amos B. Musser, the treasurer and a trustee of the Messiah House, at Harrisburg. The paternal grandparents of A. W. Engle were Jacob and Martha (Strickley) Engle, farming people of Lancaster county. His maternal grandparents were Daniel and Barbara (Witmer) Wolgemuth, also farming people of this county.

Abraham W. Engle and Fanny Hoffman were married in Lancaster Nov. 12, 1863, and to their union were born the following children: Irwin H., born Feb. 18, 1865, died Oct. 17, 1896, aged thirty-one years, who married Amanda Stauffer, and had one daughter, Lizzie S.; Martin H., born Jan. 21, 1867, died Feb. 20, 1867; Hiram H., born July 24, 1868, who married Emma Herr and is farming at the old homestead; Anna, born Jan. 23, 1870, who married E. Hershey, of East Donegal township, and has three children, Engle, Harry and Abraham.

Mrs. Fanny (Hoffman) Engle was born in East Donegal township, July 31, 1843, is a daughter of Christian and Anna (Snyder) Hoffman, both native to Lancaster county, and is a lady of many genial and admirable traits. Her father died April 19, 1873, on the old family homestead in East Donegal township, which he had spent his life cultivating. The mother died in Conoy township, Dec. 24, 1893, at the age of seventy-nine years, and was buried in Boslers Meeting House cemetery in West Donegal township, where her husband had been interred years before. They were members of the River Brethren Church, and had the following children: Eli, who married Fanny Lindermuth, and is a retired farmer in Dickinson county, Kan.; Mary, who died young; Christian, who lives in Kansas and married Lizzie Garber; Fanny; Anna, the wife of John Forney, who is in the creamery business in Abilene, Kan.; Lizzie; Martha, the wife of John Shank, a farmer of Conoy township; Henry, who married Lizzie Nissley, who is dead. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Engle were John and Fanny (Engle) Hoffman, farmer-folk of Lancaster county, as were her maternal grandparents, Henry and Mary (Witmer) Snyder.

Abraham W. Engle remained at home with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-eight years, when he went into Dauphin county and spent six years in farming. After the end of that period he came back to Conoy township, and settled on his present homestead, where he has since remained, and where he has achieved a decided success as a farmer and as a business man, being widely known for his sterling manhood and unswerving honesty. The farm on which he is located has been in the Engle family for more than a hundred years. Mr. Engle is a Republican, and is a worthy representative of one of the good old families of Lancaster county.

AMOS HUBER. Not only is Lancaster county the home of some of the best farmers in the State, but it also can claim a number of successful horticulturists, who have demonstrated that some of the finest peaches and melons placed on the market can be profitably grown in this part of the State. Among those whose success has made them prominent is Amos Huber, who has become known through horticultural circles for his successful methods of cultivating fruits of all kinds, and for especially fine specimens of peaches and melons.

Amos Huber can claim an ancestry that reaches back many years, when it originated in Switzerland, from which country came his great-grandfather, who located in Lancaster county, near Marticville. Peter Huber, the father of Amos Huber, was born and reared in the southern part of this county and spent the greater part of his life in Martic and Little Britain townships, but about thirteen years previous to his death, he removed to East Lampeter township, where he died Aug. 11, 1855, at the age of fifty-nine years and ten months. His principal occupation was farming, although as he grew older, he often occupied himself in working for others when his services were needed.

Peter Huber was married to Susan Huber, of Lampeter township, a daughter of Henry Huber, and to them was born a family of eight children: Fannie, now deceased, the wife of Henry Hartman, of Lancaster county; Martha, the widow of John Ressler, of Lancaster; Mary, deceased, wife of Frederick Seidoff, of Lancaster county; Susannah, who is the wife of Abraham Lautz, of Lexington, Richland county, Ohio.; Annie, of Strasburg township; Amos; Leah, deceased wife of Joseph Nissley, who lives near Hagerstown, Md.; and Lizzie, unmarried, who lives with her brother.

Amos Huber was born in Little Britain township, this county, Feb. 28, 1841, and was but one year old when his parents removed to West Lampeter township, and there he remained until he had attained his legal majority. His education was received in the public schools, but he had only reached the age of fourteen, when his father died, and he was compelled to take up the battle of life for himself. For a lad of but fourteen that is a serious matter, and thus Amos found it, but he was an honest, industrious boy, and soon obtained employment on the neighboring farms by the year. After he was seventeen he found it more advantageous to work by the day and continued thus, until in his twenty-first year he decided to learn the millwright trade; as that did not quite suit him, he finally changed to the carpenter trade, entering the shop of Benjamin Bachman, in Willowstreet, and serving his apprenticeship there.

As a good workman, Mr. Huber found employment for a time, but when his uncle, David Huber, offered him employment with him in tobacco raising and trucking, in Willowstreet, he accepted and filled out several busy years in this way. However, in 1875, he removed to his own property, which he had purchased in Strasburg township, one and one-half miles south of the borough; the original tract contained twenty-two and one-half acres, to which he has added two and one-half more, and, with six acres devoted entirely to fruit, he raises early vegetables on the remainder and engages in trucking. Mr. Huber has had very encouraging success and may well feel gratified, for he has earned all he possesses by his own industry and economy.

Amos Huber was married Sept. 27, 1865, to Miss Susan Deets, a daughter of John and Annie (Pickle) Deets, of Lancaster county, both parents deceased. Mrs. Huber was born in East Lampeter township, Sept. 18, 1843, and she has become the beloved mother of eight children: Hettie, born Dec. 29, 1867, the wife of E. W. Harsh, of Strasburg township; Franklin, born May 4, 1871, who married Miss Kate Mowrer, lives near Providence, and has two children, Mary and Myrtle; Henry, born Aug. 23, 1873, who married Miss Annie Givin, resides in Paradise township, and has one son, Clarence; Elam, born Dec. 29, 1875, who married Miss Mary Buckwalter; Annie and Mary, twins born Dec. 28, 1878, Annie married to Enos Herr, and Mary residing at home; Amos, born Jan. 8, 1881, who died April 8, 1897; and an infant son, who passed away.

Mr. and Mrs. Huber are members of the Old Mennonite Church, and he is connected with the Republican party. The family is one which is highly esteemed in the community.

ROLAND S. BRUBAKER, a meat merchant and the proprietor of a slaughter house in New Holland, was born in that borough Feb. 10, 1838, and is a son of Isaac R. and Ann (Hoover) Brubaker, both residents of New Holland. The father was a butcher, and in his later years a farmer, while for two terms he filled the office of assessor. He died in 1889, at the age of seventy, and the mother passed to her rest at the age of sixty; they were both buried in the cemetery at Groffdale. They were members of the Mennonite Church. To them were born: Isaac H., the proprietor of the "Bird-in-Hand Hotel;" David, who died in 1871; Roland S.; Hester A., married to Abraham Doner, of Lancaster; Saloma, who died in 1898, the wife of Rev. David Hostetter, a minister of the Mennonite Church; Jonathan, who is dead; Catherine, who married Phares Buckwalter, of Lancaster, a teacher; Lydia, married to Daniel Eby, a farmer of East Earl township; Mary, married to Adam Diller, a contractor in Lancaster; Rachel, who married Isaac Groff, a farmer in East Lampeter township. The paternal grandparents of Roland S. Brubaker were Isaac and Saloma (Roland) Brubaker, of Lancaster county; they were of Swiss stock, and descendants of Johann Brubaker, who came to this country in 1709. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Brubaker were David and Hettie (Hartman) Hoover. They were farming people of Lancaster county.

Mr. Brubaker was married Jan. 1, 1861, to Margaret A. Smoker, by whom he had the following children: Cora, who married James E. S. Paxton, an engineer on the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, has her home at Honey Brook, and has had two children; Annie, who married Dr. Daniel W. Marshall, a druggist of Reading; Harriet, who married Dr. W. N. Klemmer, a physician in Germania, Pa., and has one child; Gertrude, who married Charles M. Diller, a merchant of New Holland, and has had two children, one deceased.

Mrs. Brubaker was born in Earl township, Dec. 25, 1840, a daughter of Isaac and Nancy (Ditlow) Smoker. Her father died May 6, 1862, at the age of seventy-one, and his widow passed to her rest in June, 1871. Both were buried in the New Holland cemetery. They were members of the Lutheran Church, where he was a vestryman many years, and was instrumental in building the elegant structure in New Holland. In his younger days he did a business in speculating, and carried on a hotel. To him and his wife were born: Ditlow, who died in St. Louis; John, Isaac and one other child, who all died in infancy; Eveline, who died unmarried at the age of seventy; Abraham G., deceased; Anna, who married Levi Kinzer; Amanda B., who married first Dr. Daniel Henderson, and second, Jacob Mentzer; Louisa, who married Levi Watts; Amos married to Catharine Carpenter; Elizabeth, married to Henderson Wallace; George M., who married Fannie Vandersal; and Margaret A.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Brubaker were Isaac and Nancy Smoker, both residents of Lancaster county, and farming people.

Roland S. Brubaker lived with his parents until he was ten years of age, when he went to Lancaster to attend school for three years. There he remained until he was fifteen, when he was taken into the store of Moses Eby, at Intercourse, and held that position for three years. At the end of that period of clerking he went into the store of Diller & Brubaker, at New Holland, where he was retained for three years. At the end of this time he bought out Mr. Philip R. Brubaker, and with E. C. and Amos Diller operated the store for ten years. At that time Mr. Amos Diller retired in favor of his son, William G. Diller, and for four years the firm was Diller, Brubaker & Diller. At the end of this time Mr. Brubaker disposed of his holdings, and was retired for a year and a half, engaging in settling up affairs.

His next business enterprise was in the butcher business with John Meyers, with whom he continued until the death of the latter in 1900. Since the death of Mr. Meyers, Mr. Brubaker has carried on the business alone.

Mr. Brubaker was president of the town council for the first three years after the incorporation of the borough. Both Mr. and Mrs. Brubaker are members of the Lutheran Church, of which he has been an elder for twenty years, and Sunday-school superintendent for forty years. In politics he is a Democrat.

WILLIAM YEAGER HALDY, proprietor of the extensive granite and marble works on North Queen street, Lancaster, is a worthy member of a family than whom none is better known or more highly respected in the city or county.

Lewis Haldy, father of William Y., was born Feb. 17, 1825, at Herbezeim, Lorraine, at that time a province of France, now a part of the German empire. In September, 1832, his widowed mother, with her son, three daughters and a sister, set sail in the ship "Pennsylvania," from Havre, France, for Philadelphia, and on Sunday morning, Dec. 2, 1832, the vessel grounded on a sand bar off Cape Hatteras, on the coast of North Carolina. After a day and a night of great suspense—for the vessel threatened every moment to go to pieces—passengers and crew were rescued by a passing vessel and taken to Charleston, S. C., where the unfortunates were cared for most kindly. Everything they possessed was lost in the wreck, but the good people of the city provided them with all necessities, and looked after their personal comfort. After three weeks' time the Haldy family were placed aboard a vessel bound for Philadelphia, but were fated to not reach their destination without further trials, for while in the Delaware river the ship they were on became frozen fast in the ice for six days. At last the "Quaker City" was reached, and a week later the emigrants were taken to Cecil county, Md., by Henry Horstman, a brother of Mrs. Haldy. There Lewis remained until 1841, early in that year coming to Lancaster county, and locating in Strasburg, where he commenced to learn the tinner's trade. Not liking that line of business, however, he, in April of the same year, removed to Lancaster City, and apprenticed himself to Daniel Fagan, a marble mason, who had his works on North Queen street. After learning the trade he went to Reading to work, but not long afterward he returned to Lancaster, and for some time was employed by the Moderwells, who operated a freight line between Lancaster and Philadelphia. In 1849, he went into business for himself, on West Chestnut street, in the granite and marble industry, finally removing to North Queen street, and in 1884 he admitted his son, William Y., into partnership. For nine months during the Civil war he served in the 50th P. V. I., as quartermaster, and in 1864 he went out with the emergency men in the ninety-days call.

On Nov. 15, 1846, Lewis Haldy married Miss Mary Sabina Yeager, daughter of the late Frederick Yeager, and in 1896 this honored couple celebrated their golden wedding. Three children were born to them; Walter A., who was cashier of the Lancaster

H. Y. Haldy

County National Bank, and who died Dec. 1, 1801; William Y., of whom further mention will presently be made; and Miss Mary W., at home. The father was called from earth April 12, 1899; the mother is yet living in Lancaster, enjoying the esteem and regard of a wide circle of friends and relatives, and beloved by her children.

Lewis Haldy in religious connection was a prominent member of the First M. E. Church, and in fraternal relationships was affiliated with Lancaster Lodge, No. 67, I. O. O. F., also with Washington Encampment, No. 11, and for many years he was a member of the Tucquan Club. In the days of the old volunteer fire department of Lancaster he belonged to Friendship Fire Company, and at one time was its vice president. For many years he was a director of the Lancaster County National Bank, and in every walk of life he was a good citizen, always ready in his years of health and strength to take part in any movement for the good of the city in which he passed over half a century of his life. Probably the most noble and distinguishing characteristics of Mr. Haldy were his Christian benevolence and practical patriotism, and during the years of his active life in Lancaster there was seldom a movement in the interest of religion or charity in which he was not an active and influential factor. Not a little of the noblest work of his life was done as the coadjuter of the Patriotic Daughters, of which society he was in many ways the main reliance, in their self-sacrificing efforts to aid and comfort the volunteer soldiers during the Civil war.

William Yeager Haldy, second son of Lewis, was born March 11, 1854, in Lancaster, in the old brick dwelling which is now the North Queen street front of Haldy's Marble Works. At the public schools of his native city he received his education, and was graduated from Lancaster high school July 1, 1870. Just seventeen days thereafter, he entered the employ of his father as an apprentice to the granite and marble cutting trade, serving four years and eight months. On April 1, 1884, he was received into partnership by his father, the firm name becoming Lewis Haldy & Son, and during the last ten years of his father's life the son was practically in control of the business. Since the death of the former the latter has carried on the concern under his own name.

In 1877 William Y. Haldy married Miss Ada F. Zook, daughter of Noah Zook, who with his brother, Abraham, was murdered, in 1866, at Vicksburg, Miss., whither they had gone to engage in the cotton trade. The body of Abraham Zook was found, but that of his brother, the father of Mrs. Haldy, never came to light. They were brothers of J. Gust Zook, the prominent leaf-tobacco dealer, whose sketch will be found elsewhere. To Mr. and Mrs. Haldy children were born as follows: Mary S., a graduate of the Lancaster high school; Abbie F., who attended the Girls' high school, Lancaster, class of 1902; and Harry R. and Fred Zook, both of whom entered the Lancaster high school in September, 1901. The entire family are adherents of the First M. E. Church, of Lancaster.

Socially Mr. Haldy is one of the most popular citizens of Lancaster, progressive and loyal. He belongs to Washington Encampment, No. 11, I. O. O. F. A thorough business man, and expert in his particular line, it is not a matter of surprise that the business established by the father, large as it was, should have grown to its present mammoth proportions under the management of the son on whom the mantle fell.

ROBERT S. KNOX, a prominent citizen and general farmer of Manor township, Lancaster county, Pa., who owns a farm of forty-five acres near Letort, was born in Lycoming county, Sept. 27, 1845, and is a son of John H. and Ann E. (Moran) Knox of Irish descent.

John Knox, grandfather of Robert S., was a native of County Antrim, Ireland, but at the age of twelve years he went to Scotland, and soon afterward came to the United States, finding a home at Larry's Creek, Lycoming county, Pa., where he grew to manhood, engaged in farming; he also operated both grist and saw-mills, and was altogether a successful business man. A bitter opponent of slavery as it then existed at the South, he was an active worker on the underground railroad, and his home was a safe harbor for many a dusky fugitive. To his marriage with Catherine Stewart, a native of Lycoming county, but of Irish extraction, were born four children, viz: Charles, who drifted to some point in Illinois; Robert, a civil engineer and school teacher, who settled in Kansas; John H.; and Jane, who was married to Hughes Russell, an extensive farmer and miller of Lycoming county. The parents and children are all now deceased. They were all members of the M. E. Church.

John H. Knox was born April 15, 1815, was educated at Carlisle University, was a farmer, and also erected and conducted a cement mill. For years he was an active Republican; when the Civil war broke out he raised a company of infantry at his personal expense in April, 1861, was elected its captain, and was assigned as Co. D, to the 11th P. V. I., for three years' service. This regiment had its first experience at the front under Gen. Burnside, but early in the campaign Capt. Knox was seized with camp fever, and returned home, and died Feb. 28, 1862.

To the union of John H. Knox and Ann E. Moran, daughter of John and Mary (Penny) Moran, were born four children, viz: Catherine S., wife of Henry Kehler, of West Hempfield township, Lancaster county; John M., a wholesale commission merchant, of Hazleton, Luzerne county; Robert S.; and James R., an expert machinist of Richmond, Virginia.

Robert S. Knox was reared in his native county and attended the public schools of Jersey Shore until seventeen years old, and then enlisted June 27, 1863, in the 47th Pennsylvania State militia for ninety days and was mustered in as corporal. In June, 1864, Corporal Knox enlisted in Co. F, 195th P. V. I., served in Maryland and West Virginia, and was honorably discharged Nov. 7, 1864.

At the conclusion of his military career, Robert S. Knox went to Jeddo, Luzerne county, entered the mercantile establishment of G. B. Markle as clerk, and was also associated with the Lehigh Railroad Company as shipping clerk for twelve years; he then came to Lancaster county on a visit, but once here decided to remain. His first marriage took place in this county Jan. 30, 1879, to Annie M., daughter of Joseph and Barbara (Hostetter) Hershey, and the newly married couple at once settled on the present farm of forty-five acres, which they converted into a most desirable home. Mrs. Annie M. Knox, however, passed away Jan. 6, 1888, without issue, and May 30, 1892, Mr. Knox married Miss Annic Garretson, who was born in Flora Dale, Adams Co., Pa., and is a daughter of Joel and Anna (Cookson) Garretson. This union was blessed with four children: John M., born March 26, 1894; Robert G., born Nov. 7, 1897; James Stewart, born July 17, 1900; and Henry Kehler, born Sept. 10, 1901, who died Nov. 18, 1901.

Robert S. Knox is a most public-spirited gentleman and has taken a great interest in the welfare of the community since residing in Manor township; he has been on the school board for nine years, now serving his fourth term as a Republican member, and is a member of Gen. Welch Post, No. 118, G. A. R.

PETER H. SAUDER. Among the prominent citizens and worthy representatives of an old and honored county family of East Earl township, is Peter Sauder, who resides on the old farm first purchased by his grandfather, Henry Sauder, supposed to have come hither from his native Switzerland. His life was a pastoral one, his acres being many and his herds large. His death occurred in this locality about 1822 or 1824.

Peter Sauder, son of Peter and father of Peter (3), was born in 1801, and died in 1864. His home through life was on the fine old farm located within one mile of the village of Goodville, where he followed agricultural pursuits, added to his acreage, made improvements and reared a large family to become highly respected and useful citizens of this vicinity. He married Esther Hoffman, who was a daughter of George Hoffman, her death occurring at the age of fifty-seven years. Seven of their children grew to maturity: Henry, who is a resident of East Earl township, a retired farmer; Elizabeth, the wife of David Newswenger, of Caernarvon township; Esther, deceased wife of Levi Weaver; George, deceased, a farmer of East Earl township; Peter H.; Susannah, the wife of Emanuel News-wenger, of Caernarvon township; and Mary, the wife of Abraham M. Brubaker, of East Earl township. Both parents were consistent and worthy members of the Mennonite Church, and exemplified in their lives the simplicity and uprightness of their religious belief.

Peter H. Sauder, our subject proper, was born March 24, 1832, and grew from boyhood to youth and manhood with his interests always centering in agricultural pursuits. The old farm has been his home and he owns 100 acres of the land, the old estate having been divided into two farms of some 140 acres each. Mr. Sauder is one of the most progressive men in the locality as he has also been one of the most successful. His interest has always been shown in educational matters and he has been a leading and influential member of the school board in his township.

The first marriage of Mr. Sauder was in 1861, to Miss Annie Wanner, a daughter of Daniel Wanner, of East Earl township; her death occurred in 1874. Eight children were born to this union: Maria, the wife of David Martin, of East Earl township; Alice, the wife of Henry Newswenger, of Salisbury township; Annie, the wife of John Shetzley, of East Earl township; Moses, of East Earl township; Susannah, the widow of Eli Martin, of East Earl township; Emma, unmarried; Barton W., who married Hittie Martin, and farms the old homestead; and Margaret, the wife of Morris Banshman, of East Lampeter township.

For his second wife Mr. Sauder married in September, 1875, Barbara Hurst, a daughter of David and Leah (Musser) Hurst, a native of Ephrata township, and a most estimable lady and devoted wife and mother. The two daughters born to this marriage are Barbara and Leah, both at home. The family is one of the old and honored ones of the county and has long been prominent in the Mennonite Church.

AMOS GILBERT, mayor of Quarryville, was born July 7, 1858, in Eden township. His parents were J. Harding and Hannah H. (Whitson) Gilbert, of Lancaster county, where both were born, Mr. Gilbert in 1824 and Mrs. Gilbert in 1828.

The father was reared in Lancaster county, and after arriving at maturity conducted a tannery for many years in Eden township. In 1858 he purchased a farm, which he conducted in connection with his tannery business. He was elected a justice of the peace in his township, and held that office for over thirty years, and to within a few years of the time of his death, in 1893. His aged and worthy wife still resides on the homestead. Of a family of seven children, five are living, as follows: May, born in Lancaster county, who is the wife of Albion Walter, a farmer of Bart township, and has one daughter, Emma; Edward M., a leading lawyer of Lancaster City; Hugh W., born in Lancaster county, a leading business man and postmaster of his borough, who married and has a family of five children; Joseph H., born in Lancaster county, who is unmarried and is engaged in the laundry business in Oxford, Chester county, Pa. Two of the children, George and John, died when young.

Amos Gilbert was reared on his father's farm, and was educated in the schools of the district. In 1886 he married Miss Hannah Dickinson, a young lady born and raised in Lancaster county. She was the daughter of James and Ruth Dickinson, a leading Quaker family of the county. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert moved to Quarryville, where he purchased a creamery which he still successfully conducts. Mrs. Gilbert died in 1893, leaving her husband and three sons, E. Dickinson, J. Roland and James D., to mourn her loss.

Mr. Gilbert has always been identified with the Republicans in politics, and is prominent in that party. In 1889 he was elected mayor of his borough, and he still holds that position. When the borough was first organized he was elected a school director, and held that office for seven years. In 1902 he was elected a delegate to the State convention. He is a member of the Masonic Order, Washington Lodge, No. 156, of Quarryville.

In 1897 Mr. Gilbert was married to his present wife, who was Miss Olive Graybill, of Duncannon, and a lady of fine mental and social qualities. No children have been born to this union. Mr. Gilbert takes a prominent part in the social, business and political circles of his vicinity, and is well and favorably known throughout the county. His family is one of the pioneer Quaker families of this part of Pennsylvania. His father, J. Harding Gilbert, is especially well remembered by the older members of the community, as an honest and an upright citizen, and the same may well be said of his son, for no man has ever charged him with any unfair transaction or treatment of a fellow-citizen. He is very popular and possesses the friendship and esteem of the entire community.

SYLVESTER FRYBARGER. This native-born citizen of Salisbury township, Lancaster county, veteran of the Civil war and general farmer, was born Dec. 14, 1841, a son of George and Lydia A. (Sterlinger) Frybarger, natives respectively of Germany and Lancaster county, Pennsylvania.

George Frybarger was but two years of age when he was brought to America by his father, John G. Frybarger, in 1804, and put in charge of John Kurtz to be reared. George Frybarger, who was born in 1802, was a school teacher in his earlier years and later a farmer, and died March 19, 1873; his wife, who was born in 1804, died Oct. 17, 1872, the remains of both being buried in Asbury church cemetery. To their marriage were born six children, namely: William L., deceased; Catherine, widow of Martin Dein and still living on the old home place in Salisbury township; Lydia A., deceased wife of Levi Bowers; Mary, deceased; Sylvester; and George, a carpenter at Kansas City, Missouri.

Sylvester Frybarger lived on the home farm with his parents until his marriage, when he went to housekeeping in another dwelling on the same land from September until April, and then in another dwelling elsewhere in the township, meanwhile working out for the neighboring farmers until his enlistment. His marriage took place June 2, 1862, in Salisbury township, to Miss Sabina Fellenbaum, who has borne him twelve children, namely: Elmer E., of East Earl township, and married to Catherine Marshall, who is now the mother of eight children; Laura, who was married to Isaac Means, had four children, and is now deceased; Matilda J., wife of John Lowery, a produce merchant of East Earl township, to whom she has borne three children; John H., residing in Nankin, Ohio; Anna M., and Mary E., who died in infancy; George M., and S. Clayton, still at home; Walter H., a farmer in Salisbury township and married to Mabel Palmer, who has two children; Emma, wife of John Spots, and the mother of three children; Lydia S., who died young; and Hannah M., still residing with her parents.

Mrs. Sabina (Fellenbaum) Frybarger was born in Earl township, Lancaster county, March 1, 1843, and is a daughter of Edwin and Hannah J. (Clark) Fellenbaum, of Salisbury township, the former of whom died May 6, 1865, when forty-six years old, and the latter, Dec. 14, 1865, at the age of forty-five; they were buried in Rauck's church cemetery. Their children, ten in number, were born and named in the following order: Edwin, a laborer in the Middletown pipe mill, Middletown, Pa.; Sabina, now Mrs. Sylvester Frybarger; George, a farmer in Ashland county, Ohio; Susan, wife of Isaac Palmer; Thomas, a farmer in East Earl township; John, in Missouri; William, deceased; Amos, in Ohio; Sarah J., wife of Benjamin Roland, in Ashland county, Ohio; and Margaret, now Mrs. Roland, of Elkhart, Indiana.

In the spring of 1863, unable longer to brook the outrageous contumely of the Rebels at the South, Mr. Frybarger responded to the call for ninety-day volunteers, enlisted, and was stationed at Hagerstown, Md., and while there received word that he had been drafted in Salisbury township and had been assigned to Co. C, 83d P. V. I. He took part in his first engagement three weeks after leaving home, was on picket duty for some time, was all through the Rappahannock Valley campaign, was at Cold Harbor and in front of Petersburg, Va., and in fact in all the marches, skirmishes, sieges and engagements in which his regiment took part, without receiving even a wound, until honorably discharged at Harrisburg, Pa., July 3, 1865, when he returned to his home, and the day after his arrival cradled, tied and shocked two acres of grain.

Mr. Frybarger continued to work out for the neighboring farmers until 1866, when he purchased his present farm, to which he has since devoted his entire attention, and which is now as fine a farm of its dimensions as there is to be found in Salisbury township.

In 1875 Mr. Frybarger met with a serious accident, being thrown from his horse and breaking his right leg, which necessitated amputation above the knee, but otherwise he has enjoyed excellent health and is remarkably active considering the loss of his limb.

Mr. and Mrs. Frybarger are consistent members of the United Evangelical Church, and in politics Mr. Frybarger is a staunch Republican. He has always led an industrious life and is deservedly worthy of the high esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens of Salisbury township.

JACOB MELLINGER. Among the early settlers of Lancaster county, whose descendants still bear the old name with honor, respected by their fellow-citizens, were the ancestors of the Mellinger family, who with courage and enterprise did much to develop the natural resources of this part of the great State of Pennsylvania.

To go no farther back into ancestral history than the father of Jacob Mellinger, we reach across a long space of years, as John Mellinger was born on Oct. 19, 1790, and lived until Sept. 12, 1855. His wife was born in Manor township, May 2, 1799, and died in Strasburg township, March 16, 1871. These parents reared a family of nine children: Christian, born Oct. 20, 1816, who lived in Leacock township at the time of his death; John B., born Sept. 19, 1818, in Strasburg township, who died there Nov. 19, 1845, a farmer; Benjamin, born Oct. 12, 1820, who lived on the old homestead with his brother Jacob, and died there Nov. 16, 1883; Elizabeth, born May 12, 1823, who married Abram Denlinger, of Millersville, and died at the age of seventy-five; Jacob; Abraham, born July 6, 1829, who died Nov. 16, 1833; Ann, born June 30, 1833, who died about 1897, the wife of John E. Hershey, of Paradise township; Mary, born June 26, 1836, married to Bishop Isaac Eby, of Kinzers, Lancaster county; and Susanna, born Feb. 5, 1839, who died unmarried.

Both John Mellinger and his wife were leading members of the Old Mennonite Church, where they were respected and beloved for their many traits of true Christian character. When John Mellinger began farming operations for himself, he located in Strasburg township, purchased a farm of 102 acres, situated some two miles north of Strasburg and there he spent his days and reared his large family in peace and comfort. A lover of law and order, he instilled such principles into his children, and through life he was one of the best of citizens, ever respecting the rights of others, and leaving behind him a large circle of warm friends.

Jacob Mellinger was born June 27, 1826, on the farm where he still lives, a son of John and Annie (Hertzler) Mellinger, and was reared on this farm and was sent to the public schools. Not until his thirtieth year did he decide to set up a domestic hearth, being united in marriage Jan. 15, 1856, to Elizabeth Hershey, a daughter of Rev. Jacob Hershey, of Paradise township, who was born March 8, 1831. Seven children have been born of this union: Margaret, born Oct. 22, 1856, the widow of Isaac Lefever, of Paradise township; John H., born Dec. 7, 1858, who married Barbara Denlinger, and has seven children, Benjamin, John, Jacob, Enos, Jesse, Annie and Martin; Ezra H., born Feb. 3, 1861, who conducts a dairy and milk depot, in connection with his father's farm, married to Mary K. Andrew, with two children, Annie and Clarence; Anna, born July 4, 1864, married to Ezra L. Buckwalter, who is now a farmer of Marion county, Mo.; Jacob H., born Nov. 27, 1866, a farmer, residing at the old home; Mary E., who was born April 10, 1870, and died Dec. 3, of the same year; and Frances, born Sept. 25, 1871, who married Isaac H. Rohrer, a farmer of Paradise township.

Since 1889, Mr. Mellinger has lived retired from active life, leaving stronger and younger hands to carry on the duties of the farm. Having reared his family in the tenets of the Old Mennonite faith, it gives him great comfort to find them adhering to it as they reach maturity. His son Jacob is associated with the Welsh Industrial Mission as secretary and assistant superintendent, and he purposes eventually to give himself entirely to this work.

ISAAC DILLER. For many years Lancaster had no more prominent or useful citizen than Isaac Diller, who passed out of life in that city Nov. 28, 1892, and was laid to rest in Woodward Hill cemetery. He was born in Lancaster Feb. 5, 1823, and was a direct descendant of Casper Diller, a French Huguenot, and the progenitor of the family in Lancaster county. There are documents in the possession of the family dating back to Michael Diller (1543), who was a court preacher and also a distinguished literary man, some of his works being still extant. Casper Diller came to America with his wife, Barbara, whom he had married in England, and their three children, and in 1738 settled in the locality of New Holland, on Mill creek, in Lancaster county, Pa., where he engaged in agriculture, becoming a very successful man. Many members of the family have been prominently identified with the medical and legal professions, and the ministry; some gained distinction in the Revolutionary war and in subsequent struggles for the rights of American citizens in the United States. Casper Diller had three sons—Philip Adam, H. Martin and Casper, Jr.—and seven daughters.

Philip Adam Diller, son of Casper, was born near Heidelberg, Germany, and came to Lancaster with his parents. He married Magdalena, daughter of Leonard Ellmaker, who came from Germany and settled in Earl township, this county, in 1726. One of their children was Leonard, the grandfather of Isaac.

Leonard Diller served in the Revolutionary war. He married Magdalene Hinkle, daughter of Rev. Paul Hinkle, and left five children, George, Adam, Jeremiah, Elizabeth and Mary. Gen. Adam Diller, the second son, was for two terms, beginning in 1835, adjutant general of Pennsylvania—the second highest officer in the State at that time. During the Mexican war he raised a company for the Government service and was out for a short time. He was a bold and courageous man, and a fine horseman. Dillerville, Lancaster county, was built on his land.

George Diller, son of Leonard, and father of Isaac, resided in Lancaster, where he was in business during the greater part of his life. He married Lydia Souder, and had eight children: William; Jacob W.; George; Samuel; Isaac; Catharine, who married John Reilly, and left two sons, Edward and John; Sarah, who married W. Fisher, of Chambersburg; and Mary Ann, who became Mr. Fisher's second wife. The second son, Dr. Jacob W. Diller, was the beloved rector of St. Luke's, Brooklyn, N. Y., for nearly forty years; he met a tragic death on board the ill-fated steamship "Seawanaka."

Isaac Diller was reared at Lancaster, and started out in life as a boy in the mercantile business. His first employment was as clerk in a grocery store, and from 1836 to 1843 he was a clerk in the dry-goods store of George Fahnestock. He spent five years in the store of John M. Lane, and gained a reputation for integrity, besides acquiring valuable knowledge of the business. In 1848 he entered the Steinman hardware store, as bookkeeper, and afterward became a valuable salesman. From 1860 to 1872 he was a partner in the firm, which was known as George M. Steinman & Co. In the last named year he retired from the firm, but continued his business relations therewith until 1877, when he purchased the large hardware establishment on East King street, and successfully conducted business there until his death, assisted by his sons. He was a vestryman of St. James Episcopal Church until, in 1853, he helped to organize St. John's Free Church, of which he was a charter member. He was chairman of the building committee, and senior warden from 1854 until his death. He always manifested a deep interest in the affairs of the church. In the renovation of the property, in 1871, he assumed three-fifths of the expense incurred, besides the sum subscribed, and, as the records show, made "a generous donation of the lot adjoining." Fraternally he was a member of the Blue Lodge, F. & A. M. While he was a Democrat in politics, he was never an active politician, performing only the duties of good citizenship.

On June 6, 1849, Mr. Diller was united in marriage to Anna M. Frey, who was born in the city of Lancaster, daughter of Jacob and Maria (Haverstick) Frey, the former of whom was a wholesale and retail dealer and general merchant in Lancaster; he died in 1875, at the age of seventy-five years. Mrs. Maria (Haverstick) Frey died in 1876, aged eighty years. Both were members of the Reformed Church, and both were interred in Lancaster cemetery. Their children were as follows: Catherine married Jacob King, and died in 1902; William died in 1901, in New Jersey; Anna M. is the widow of Isaac Diller; Jacob L. is a leaf tobacco merchant in Lancaster; Maria L. (deceased), was the wife of John B. Markley; Amanda, who is a resident of Lancaster, first married Harry Zink, and, for her second husband, Jacob Roth, who is also deceased; Emma (deceased), was the wife of John D. Skiles, of Lancaster; James B. (deceased), was a prominent merchant in Lancaster; and Adeline (deceased), was the wife of Dr. F. A. Gast, of Franklin and Marshall College. The paternal grandparents were Jacob (Sr.) and Catherine (Brisler) Frey, of Lancaster, the former of whom was a very well-known merchant, and manager of a transportation line between Pittsburg and Philadelphia before the building of the railroads, and was also interested in the operations of iron furnaces in Lancaster county. He was one of the reception committee of five to receive and entertain George Washington when he paid his only recorded visit to Lancaster, on July 4, 1789. Both Jacob Frey, Sr., and his wife died in Lancaster. They had a family of twelve children of whom four were named Jacob, three of these dying in infancy, and the father of Mrs. Diller being the youngest.

On the maternal side also Mrs. Diller is connected with old and honorable families. Her maternal grandparents were William and Mary (Deshler) Haverstick, the former a native of Lancaster county and the latter of Philadelphia. William Haverstick was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary war. In early manhood he studied medicine under the celebrated Dr. Rush, but later embarked in the jewelry business in Philadelphia and in Lancaster, settling again in Philadelphia, where he died in 1780. He was a son of Col. Michael Haverstick, who came from Germany to the United States in 1735, and whose title was obtained by service as an officer in the Revolutionary army; he is recorded as having been a good and reliable soldier, and at one time had entire charge of the wagon trains under Gen. Washington.

Children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Diller as follows: Jacob died in infancy; Miss Lydia is at home; Rev. Alonzo P., a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, and of the General Theological Seminary, New York, and afterward ordained a priest of the Episcopal Church, married Marian Morrell, and he and his wife and child perished in the terrible Johnstown (Pa.) flood, in which city he was the beloved rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church; George S. died in infancy; William F., who is a coal and slate merchant in Lancaster, married Lida Schofield, and they have three children, Mary B., Alonzo P. and William F., Jr.; Charles F.

is a resident of Lancaster city; Isaac died at the age of three years; Samuel B., who died June 4, 1902, had one son, Robert D.; Anna M. is the wife of Dr. Edwin D. Starbuck, who is a professor of the great Stanford University, of California, and they have had two sons, Arthur and Edwin (the latter deceased), and one daughter, Anna M.

Mrs. Diller and family are members of the Episcopal Church, and they are factors in the intellectual and social life of Lancaster. Miss Lydia Diller is a Daughter of the Revolution and prominent in that connection, but is probably better known as a manager and secretary of the Witmer Home for Old Ladies, located in Lancaster. Mrs. Diller is much esteemed, and hers is one of the refined and intellectual homes for which this beautiful city is noted. She enjoys her library, and keeps fully abreast of the times in current literature, being favored with as good eyesight as in her youth.

HARRY B. SLACK, justice of the peace at Intercourse, Lancaster county, who has made for himself more than a local name as a wide-awake and public-spirited citizen, was born March 13, 1851, in the township where he still lives, a son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Brower) Slack. His father was born in Chester county and his mother in Lancaster county.

Joseph Slack came into Lancaster county in company with his parents when a child, and was reared in Leacock township, where he followed farming for a time, retiring from that occupation some thirty years prior to his death. For many years he lived retired in the enjoyment of the competence his industry and economy had accumulated. A man of public affairs, he was school director for thirty years, and tax collector ten years and was intimately associated with local interests in many ways. He died December 29, 1900, when eighty-six years old, and his wife passed to her reward Oct. 29, 1891, at the age of seventy-six. Both were buried in the cemetery of Christ Episcopal Church in Leacock township, of which they were members. Joseph and Elizabeth Slack had six children: Anna L., the widow of Samuel Snyder, living in Leacock township; Esther R., married to John High, who is at present street commissioner at Christiana, Pa.; Christie E., who married William Hoar, farmer of Salisbury township; J. Milton, who married Josephine Nelson, and died at the age of thirty-three years; Harry B.; Susannah B., who is unmarried, and makes her home with her sister, Mrs. Snyder. The parents of Joseph Slack were John and Ann (Smith) Slack, of Chester county, Pa., the former of whom was a blacksmith. In 1816 he removed his home to Lancaster county, where he lived and died. Henry Brower was the father of Mrs. Joseph Slack.

Harry B. Slack was married April 12, 1876, in Chester, Pa., to Kate E. Raineer, and they have had four children: Joseph B., who married Susan Lefever, and lives in Pittsburg, Pa.; Charles M., a school teacher, who is at home, as are also K. Bessie and Harry B. Mrs. Kate E. (Raineer) Slack was born in 1856 in Philadelphia, daughter of Charles H. and Kate (Everts) Raineer, of that city. They removed to Chester, where the father was engaged in the coal and lumber business, but he spent his last years in Philadelphia, dying in 1889, at the age of fifty-two years. Mrs. Raineer, who now resides in Camden, N. J., was born in 1838. She belongs to the Methodist Church, as did also Mr. Raineer. They were the parents of the following named children: Kate E., Mrs. Slack; Sally, who died at the age of nineteen years; William B., who died in 1895, in Alabama; Frances B., who married Warren Burgess, and lives in Camden, N. J.; and Charles H., who lives in Philadelphia.

Harry B. Slack remained with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-two years, when he entered a general store at Chester and spent eight years. In 1880 he came back to Leacock township, and for ten years was engaged in farming and as a clerk at sales. In 1890 he was elected a justice of the peace, and has continued to fill that position to the present time, with marked credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the community. He has acquired a fine reputation as a business man and an upright citizen. He has taken the third degree in Masonry and in religion is a member of the United Brethren Church. In his political relations he is a Republican.

DAVID E. GROFF. That the State of Pennsylvania should stand pre-eminent among her sister States is not remarkable, when the material from which she draws her agricultural supremacy is considered, for the tillers of the soil are the bone and sinew of any commonwealth, the source of her wealth and greatness. In the great county of Lancaster may be found score upon score of intelligent, progressive farmers, whose industry is untiring and whose integrity makes of them the best of citizens.

Among the old and honorable agricultural families of this favored county is that of the Groffs, who have been connected with farming, milling and mining interests here for a great number of years. The grandfather of David E. Groff was named Joseph Groff, and both he and his brother Abraham, as well as a half-brother, locally known as "Swamp John Groff," on account of the location of some of his land, were widely known and became the progenitors of large families. Joseph Groff was of German descent, and was an extensive farmer in Martic, now called Providence township, owning a large farm located some two miles southeast of New Providence. Upon this farm a valuable vein of iron ore was later opened and operated for some sixty years, although not during the life of Joseph Groff, who devoted his time exclusively to his farming interests. He lived to a good old age, respected by all, and was buried in what is yet called Shenk's burying ground, in Providence township. Joseph Groff was three times married, the children of the first union numbering eight. (1) John was a farmer of Providence township; he first married Mary Eshleman and second, Leah Kendig. (2) Jacob was a day laborer of Martic township. By his first wife he had two sons—Eli and Ephraim, and two daughters; by his second wife, Barbara Miles, he had four sons, Benjamin, Henry, Alfred and Emanuel, and two daughters, Barbara and Elizabeth; his third wife, Polly Herr, bore him no children. (3) Joseph was a farmer in Drumore township, where he died. Two of his sons are living: Isaac, of Drumore township, and Elias N., of Washington, D. C. (4) Abraham was a farmer of Strasburg township; he married a cousin, Fannie Groff, but all of his family have passed away. (5) Henry died unmarried. (6) Samuel became the father of David E. (7) Elizabeth married David Nesswanger, of Eden township. (8) A daughter died young. The second marriage of Joseph Groff was to Mary Shaub, but no children were born of this union. Joseph Groff married for his third wife Nancy Whitestick, and from this union were born: David, a blacksmith, of Martic township, who married Mary Kendig, and removed West; Benjamin, a farmer, who succeeded to a part of the old homestead and married first, Eliza Lefever, and second, Annie Shaub; Amos, who began life as a farmer, but later became a hotel keeper, and still later was made sheriff of Lancaster county; Franklin, a farmer, and later engaged in hotel keeping; and Martha, who married John Miller, of Providence township, formerly a farmer, but latterly a hotel keeper.

Samuel Groff was born in Providence township in 1807, and was reared on the old homestead, receiving his education in the best schools the district then afforded. Engaging in farming in Eden township, he was operating a fine farm of 100 acres when the Civil war broke out. In the spring of 1862, he enlisted as a private in the 7th P. V. C. and gave up his life for his country, dying at Nashville, Tenn., in July, 1862, from wounds received in a skirmish in which he was gallantly fighting. He had married Barbara Ronk, who was born in Leacock township, a daughter of Philip Ronk; she died March 1, 1849, in the thirty-eighth year of her age, the mother of eleven children; Elizabeth, deceased; Rachel, the wife of Jacob Homsher, of Strasburg; Jesse, of Lancaster, the trusted night-watchman of the Wickersham Printing House; Rebecca, the wife of Martin Reese, of Providence township; David E., the subject of this biography; Albert, deceased; Samuel, a resident of Drumore township; Benjamin, deceased; Isaac L., a farmer of West Lampeter township; Jacob, a resident of Lancaster, the competent engineer of the Penn Rolling Mill; and Henry, who died in infancy.

David E. Groff was born Dec. 25, 1837, grew up on the farm and learned the science of farming in a practical way, which knowledge he has applied in the management of his extensive agricultural operations in several townships. At the age of nineteen he started out to carve his own fortune, chose the milling business, being instructed by Christian Binkley and for the following thirteen years followed the trade, leaving it to enter farming on an extensive scale; he has operated in Strasburg township since then, with the exception of ten years passed in Paradise and West Lampeter townships.

Not only is David E. Groff known to his fellow-citizens as an excellent farmer, miller and public-spirited citizen, but they can also easily recall that in August, 1862, when his country called for defenders, he was one to respond, enlisting as a private in Co. G, 122d P. V. I. and participating in the battles at Fredericksburg, Antietam and Chancellorsville, serving gallantly and gaining the respect of his comrades.

On Dec. 22, 1864, David E. Groff was married to Mary A. Shaub, who was born in Strasburg township, April 14, 1837, a daughter of Jacob and Sophia (Huber) Shaub, and to this union eight children have been born: Charles, born in January, 1867, died on the day of birth; Harry F., born in March, 1868, now a resident of East Lampeter township, who married Ida Leman, and has one child, Dora; Christian J., born in May, 1870, who married Nettie Mowery, and has one child, Catherine; Lizzie S., born in February, 1872, who resides at home; Katie E., born in November, 1873; Amos H., in November, 1875; Morris D., in September, 1877; and Jesse R., in March, 1880. Politically, Mr. Groff is an ardent Republican, has taken an active part in public matters in the township, for five years has served as the efficient judge of elections, and is justly considered one of the leading men of this locality, identified with all progressive movements. Socially he is connected with J. N. Neff Post, No. 406, G. A. R., of Strasburg.

ANDREW H. HERSHEY, the well known merchant of Petersburg, Huntingdon Co., Pa., who resides in Mountville, Lancaster county, was born in East Hempfield, April 9, 1850, one of the seven children of John L. and Elizabeth (Hanlen) Hershey. The other children of the family are: Tobias H., in the coal business at Petersburg; Anna H., wife of Benjamin S. Risser, a retired farmer of Clay township; Emaline H., married to Harry S. Bowers and living on the old homestead in East Hempfield township; John H., a farmer in the same locality; Susan, wife of David C. Sowders, a merchant in Lancaster; and Elizabeth, wife of Harry Cassell, a farmer of Penn township.

The paternal grandparents of Andrew H. Hershey were Andrew and Elizabeth (Landis) Hershey, of East Hempfield and Manheim townships, respectively. Andrew Hershey was a lifelong farmer and died in 1832, when forty-eight years old; his wife had passed away in 1828, at the early age of thirty-eight years. To this couple were born the following children: Anna L., who married Jacob Snively, both now deceased; Mary L., deceased wife of the late Jacob Gotshall; Jacob L., who married Anna Stehman and died in Petersburg, where his widow still resides; John L., deceased, father of Andrew H.; Henry L., deceased, married to Eliza Swarr, who resides in East Hempfield; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Jacob Brubaker; Christian, deceased, married to Susan Swarr, who resides in Landisville; and Andrew, deceased, whose widow, Susan Kaufman, lives in Petersburg. The maternal grandparents of Andrew H. Hershey, Jacob and Eliza (Seachrist) Hanlen, died respectively in 1837 and 1830.

Andrew H. Hershey received a good education and at the age of twenty-five opened a coal and lumber yard at Petersburg. The following year, in company with his father, he started another coal and lumber yard, of which he assumed the entire management, but a year later the father's interest was purchased by one of the other sons, Tobias H., and the brothers then began the handling of leaf tobacco in addition to the other business. In 1888 Andrew H. Hershey removed to the village of Cordelia, and purchased a large stock of general merchandise of Mr. Habecker; one of his clerks was appointed postmaster and the office was located in his establishment. In 1893 he removed to Mountville but retained his interest at Cordelia until 1896. In 1898 he relinquished his coal and lumber business by selling that lucrative trade to his brother, and is now engaged in the mercantile business in Silver Spring, Lancaster county, and has tobacco warehouses in Lancaster City and Mountville, the business in Lancaster being conducted under the firm-name of A. H. Hershey & Co., the junior partner being Jacob H. Huber. Mr. Hershey is also engaged in the creamery business at Manheim, under the firm name of Hershey & Levan.

Mr. Hershey is a director in the Greenwood Cemetery Association in Lancaster, being also its treasurer and a director of the People's National Bank of the same city. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Jr. O. U. A. M. and the A. O. K. of M. C., of which last he is treasurer.

In politics Mr. Hershey is a Republican. In 1890 he was elected a member of the Board of Prison Inspectors, serving as secretary of the board the first year, the second year as its treasurer and the third year as its president. In 1893 he was elected sheriff, and is well qualified for his responsible position. His high character and his genial manners have won him a high place in the regard of his fellow men.

On Jan. 2, 1877, Mr. Hershey was united in marriage with Miss Salinda B. Kauffman, a native of East Hempfield township, and a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Bimesderfer) Kauffman, residents of Petersburg, living retired. The father was born in April, 1830, and the mother in December, 1834, and to this marriage has been born one child only, Salinda B., now Mrs. Hershey. Her parents are devout members of the Mennonite Church. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Hershey, Christian and Martha (Miller) Kauffman, are retired farming people of East Hempfield township. Mrs. Hershey's maternal grandparents, George and Susannah (Meyers) Bimesderfer, were retired farming people of East Hempfield, and there George Bimesderfer died when he was ninety-one years old.

CHRISTIAN SHOFF, the great-grandfather of Frederic Shoff, a prominent business man of Lancaster county, came from Germany, and settled in this county on the farm now owned by Shoff & Good, along the Pequea, in Conestoga township, Lancaster Co., Pa. He married Miss Nancy Beahm, of Strasburg township, and they had the following children: John, a cooper by trade, who lived at Marticville; Jacob, a York county farmer; Abraham, a farmer of Bainbridge, Lancaster county; Christian, of Clearfield county; Frederick, grandfather of Frederic; Henry; Barbara, wife of Frederick Buckwalter; Nancy, wife of Bartley Clark; Susan, who died unmarried; Martha, wife of John Rumor, of Center county; and Fanny.

Frederick Shoff was the father of twelve children, all now deceased except Christian, the father of Frederic, viz.: John; Frederick; Christian, who died in childhood; Martha, wife of William Reil; Nancy, wife of Andrew Mehaffy; Abraham; Jacob; Christian (2), born Sept. 27, 1821; George; Barbara; Henry, of Martic township; and Margaret.

Christian Shoff lived on the home farm until after he was married, and then went to work in the rolling-mill at Colemanville, where he remained about fourteen years, after which he went back on the old farm, which he worked on shares for four years. He then returned to the rolling-mill for six years, and back to the farm again for two years. His next move was to Shenks Ferry, where he kept hotel for six years. At the end of this time he returned to Colemanville, the place of his birth, where he has lived for twenty-four years, and there he still makes his home, with his children. He married Eliza, daughter of David Groff, of Lancaster county, and they are the parents of the following named children: Maris, of Philadelphia; Martha, wife of Martin H. Good; John, of Altoona, Pa.; Henry, of Martic township; Abram, of Logansport, Ind.; Frederic, the subject proper of this sketch; Christian, of Conestoga; Annie, wife of Martin B. Foulz, of Conestoga; and George, deceased.

FREDERIC SHOFF was born April 1, 1857, on the old farm where his ancestors first settled, and he remained at home until he was fourteen years old, when he started in the contracting business for himself, taking logs off the river and also dealing in furs. For eight years he followed fishing and trapping, and then went to work for his uncle for four years, after which he lived six years on the old farm where he was born. He then bought the place where he now resides, and has ever since been engaged in farming and contracting. Mr. Shoff also has a flourmill and saw and planing mills. He has been highly successful in all his undertakings. One of his first profitable ventures was the purchase of a bridge which had been blown into the Susquehanna, from the Pennsylvania Railway Company. He removed it in about six weeks, and cleared about $20,000 on the deal. In 1896 Mr. Shoff commenced growing Paragon chestnuts, establishing an orchard of 185 acres, which he sold in the fall of the same year to a Mt. Joy company. In 1897 he started an orchard of 300 acres, which he still holds, and another of 600 acres in York county, which he sold in the fall of that year to W. G. Reist. He also has another grove, of 370 acres, well started. Aside from several pieces of property in Columbia and Lancaster—eight dwellings in the latter place and two in the former—Mr. Shoff is the owner of over 3,000 acres of land, and in 1901 he shipped over forty thousand railroad ties—all made on his own property—and cut and chopped over five thousand telegraph poles, besides manufacturing thousands of feet of lumber, etc. He keeps seventy-five men in his employ.

Frederic Shoff

In 1898 Mr. Shoff conceived the idea of utilizing the Susquehanna river for generating power, and he at once organized a company for that purpose, at York Furnace, known as the York Furnace Electric Heat & Power Company, which has already invested several hundred thousand dollars.

In 1901 Mr. Shoff also launched another enterprise of considerable magnitude. Having decided to erect a large hotel on his property at Pequea, on the Susquehanna river, he at once put the wheels in motion, and a three-story and basement structure has been put up, which, when completed, is expected to afford accommodation for 150 guests; Mr. Shoff intends to keep his hostelry open all the year 'round. He has also put up twenty-seven cottages at the same place, of which he has made a very attractive summer resort.

In the fall of 1901 Mr. Shoff started a movement to secure a trolley road from Lancaster to York Furnace, to be known as the Lancaster & York Furnace road. After the initial survey was made, at his own expense, a company was organized with a capital of $200,000, Mr. Shoff being elected president. Under his energetic supervision the matter has progressed rapidly, and success is now assured, it having through his individual efforts gained the right of way.

Mr. Shoff is a Republican in politics, and holds the position of school director, in which he has served for the past sixteen years; for six years he was also director of the poor, and is now commencing his third term in that incumbency. In politics, as in business, he has been very successful, having never suffered defeat when a candidate for office. Fraternally

he is a member of Millersville Lodge, No. 496, F. & A. M.; of Tribe No. 1003, I. O. R. M., of Shoff, of which he is treasurer; and of the I. O. K. of M. C., of Mt. Nebo.

On Oct. 9, 1878, Mr. Shoff married Miss Delila, daughter of Samuel Warfel, of Conestoga township, and they have had eight children, as follows: Floyd, deceased; Walter, who is a fireman on the Pennsylvania railroad; William, at home, employed in the mill; Chester, who is a clerk in Frey's store; Milton, deceased; Edgar, with his uncle, Christian; Earl, at home; and Frederic, Jr., at home.

Mr. Shoff was left without a mother at twelve years of age, and was almost entirely deprived of the advantages of an education, but he has ever been one of the most enterprising and successful men of Lancaster county. He is very progressive, and always ready to lend a helping hand to any enterprise for the advantage of the county in which he lives.

HILL E. DAVIS, who for many years was engaged in farming in Colerain township, Lancaster county, was born in Delaware county, Pa., in February, 1844, son of William S. and Catherine (Engle) Davis. The parents were also natives of Delaware county, where the father was born in 1804, and the mother in 1805. His parents, William and Rachel (Robinson) Davis, passed all their married life in Delaware county.

William S. and Catherine Davis lived on a farm in Delaware county until 1855, when he sold the place and moved into Colerain township, near the Chester county line, where he owned the large place known as the "Col. Bell farm." There he remained until his death, in 1887; his wife passed to her reward in 1883. They were reared in the faith of the Friends, and always adhered to that belief. To them were born eleven children, of whom nine lived to maturity, Caroline and Susan dying in young womanhood. (1) Joseph Davis, born in Delaware county, married Miss Lucretia Hayes, of Chester county, where they made their home for some years, then moving into Colerain township; there his wife died, leaving one daughter, Catherine, who is now the widow of Rufus Springer, of Chester county. Mr. Davis later married Miss Anna Wright, of Delaware county, where they located, and where he died in 1900. (2) Mary Davis, born in Delaware county, married James F. Turner, of Lancaster county, and after living for a number of years on a farm in Colerain township moved into Chester county, where Mr. Turner died, leaving his widow and seven children; William, now in Dakota; Caroline, wife of Charles Whiteside, of Colerain township; Montgomery, in Dakota; Engle, of Sioux City, Iowa; Anna, wife of Samuel Whiteside, of Colerain township; James; and Abbie, widow of William Reynolds, of Atglen, Chester county. (3) Dora Davis was born and educated in Delaware county, and married James T. Barnard, of Chester county, where they lived on his farm until April, 1902, when they moved to Christiana, Lancaster county. They have had seven children, of whom three died in infancy; William D., living in Philadelphia, who married Laura Shrack, of Northumberland, Pa.; Harry W., who married Ella Sidney Cooper, of Bird-in-Hand, Lancaster county, and lives on the old home, "Rosa Morado Farm," in Upper Oxford, Chester Co., Pa.; Mary, unmarried, at home; Dr. Everett, engaged in the practice of his profession in Philadelphia. (4) William Davis, born in Delaware county, married Miss Sheminith Underwood, and made his home in Colerain township, where Mrs. Davis died. Later he married Isabelle Holmes, of Chester county, and with her moved to Northern Kansas, where he died in 1884, leaving his widow and two children, who are still in Kansas; Carrie, wife of William Harmon, of Kansas City; and Edward, who is with his mother in Leavenworth, Kan. (5) Ellen Davis, born in Delaware county, married Brinton Walter, a grain merchant at Christiana, where they were living at the time of her death, in 1883. She left one daughter, Georgiana, a graduate (1902) of the Woman's Medical College, at Philadelphia. (6) Hill E. Davis is the sixth member of the family. (7) Louisa Davis, born in Delaware county in 1846, became the third wife of Brinton Walter. (8) Catherine Davis, born in Delaware county in 1848, is now the widow of Joseph Echternach, of Lancaster county. They were living on his farm in Strasburg township at the time of his death in 1890. The widow and her two children have their home in Christiana. Carrie is the wife of John Danner, and Joseph is studying dentistry in a dental school in Philadelphia. (9) Harry Davis, born in Delaware county in 1853, married Miss Roberta Ross, of Chester county, and they made their home in Christiana where she died, leaving two children, Helen and Norman. Mr. Davis later married Miss Phoebe Evenson, of Bart township. They have their home in Christiana, where he is engaged in a planing mill.

Hill E. Davis was educated in the schools of Lancaster county, and at the Millersville State Normal. He remained with his parents, and when a young man became manager of the home place, upon which he settled, living there until the spring of 1889, when he purchased the William Paxson farm, near the line of Little Britain, one of the finest farms in the township. There he had a large stone house, a fine bank barn and outbuildings, and there he remained until the spring of 1902, when he sold the farm to his son William, and moved to the Johnson farm near Oxford.

Mr. Davis was married Dec. 7, 1869, to Anna, daughter of David and Hannah (Turner) Bunting, who settled in Colerain township, where he died in 1859, his widow surviving until Jan. 4, 1902. They were the parents of five children: Nelson, of Colerain township; Washington, of Oxford, Chester county; Laura, wife of Jerre King, of Oxford; Ella, wife of William Burling, also of Oxford; and Anna, Mrs. Davis, who was born in Colerain township in October, 1849, and completed her education in the Union high school. She died on the farm in Colerain, Dec. 15, 1900. Mrs. Davis was a Christian woman, and long a member of the Presbyterian Church, having united with that body in her girlhood. She was the mother of five children: (1) Laura Louisa, born in Colerain township, in December, 1870, was educated in the Union high school. She was married in October, 1892, to Calvin Swisher, son of Samuel and Amanda Swisher, and they located in Coatesville, where he was engaged in the grocery trade up to the time of his death, in 1893. His widow is now living in her father's home. (2) William S. Davis, born in July, 1874, who now owns the home place, was married Feb. 19, 1903, to Miss Lena Boyd, of Colwyn, Delaware Co., Pa. (3) Clyde Davis, born in December, 1875, died in 1882. (4) Joseph Davis, born in August, 1884, is now a student in the Union high school. (5) Fred Davis, born in February, 1886, is at home.

Mr. Davis and his family are all members of the Presbyterian Church of which he has been a trustee for twelve years. In politics he is a Democrat, and for twelve years has been school director in Colerain township. Hill Davis, as he is commonly known, is a man of fine character and lofty principles, and commands the hearty and unstinted respect of the community in which his quiet but useful life is passing.

JONAS HUBER. Among the successful and representative citizens of Martic township is Jonas Huber, born April 14, 1851, son of Henry and Annie (Hess) Huber, both of whom are deceased.

The Huber family was founded in America by four brothers of the name, who came hither from Germany in the seventeenth century, one of whom settled in Lancaster county and one in Bucks county, Pa. Abraham Huber, grandfather of Jonas, was the father of ten children, namely, Henry, Nancy, Martin, Joseph, David, Martha, Barbara and John, the others dying young. Henry Huber, son of Abraham and father of Jonas, was a merchant and tailor in Marticville for more than fifty years. He was the father of nine children, five of whom grew to maturity, namely: David H., a retired farmer of Martic township; Abraham, a farmer of Conestoga township; Jonas; Sarah, the wife of Henry Rohrer, of the city of Lancaster; Samuel, also of Lancaster. Henry Huber was a Republican in his political attachment and was a most highly respected citizen. He belonged to the Mennonite Church.

Jonas Huber was reared in Marticville and early made himself useful to his father in the store. After completing his education in the public schools, he entered mercantile business and the wisdom of his choice of occupation is shown in the success which has attended his efforts. As a merchant he has displayed good business capacity and by honorable and upright methods has won and has kept the best trade of the town and vicinity. His store and dwelling are both valuable properties, and in the latter is carried a general line of seeds, suited to the demands of his trade, for which there is a constantly increasing patronage.

Mr. Huber was first married in 1874 to Miss Mary Miller, of Providence township, a daughter of Abraham Miller, and two children were born to this union; Elizabeth, who died in girlhood; and Annie, the wife of Adam Shank, of Manor township. Mrs. Huber died in 1889. In 1891 Mr. Huber was united in marriage to Miss Mary Hess, daughter of Amos Hess, of Pequea township, and this marriage has been blessed with two children: Verna, now deceased; and Ethel at home.

Mr. Huber has been an important factor in political life in Martic township and for a number of years has most efficiently filled offices of responsibility. For several years he has been postmaster of Marticville; in 1896 was appointed mercantile appraiser in the county, in 1898 was made paster and folder for the State Senate, and in 1900 was elected jury commissioner of Lancaster county. He has shown his interest in educational matters by service as school director and has been assistant assessor of his township. He is known as one of the leading Republicans of that part of the county. In both public and private life he is a man to be held in high esteem.

CHRISTIAN GEORGE BASSLER (formerly spelled Bossler), attorney-at-law, Lancaster, was born in Manheim township, Lancaster county, Jan. 2, 1856, son of the late John and Leah (Minnich) Bassler. The ancestors of the Bassler family were of Swiss origin, and came to America from their native land about 1749.

Christian Bassler, grandfather of Christian G., was born in Manheim township, Lancaster county, and there spent his entire life, engaged in agricultural pursuits. On attaining his majority he married Catherine Bachman, who came of one of the old families of the county, and of their children but one survives, Christian H., who resides on the old homestead in Manheim township. Christian Bassler died in 1862, aged seventy-nine years. His wife, born in 1787, died in 1865, aged about seventy-eight years. Their remains are interred in the family graveyard located on the homestead farm.

John Bassler was born in Manheim township in 1815, and like his father spent his entire life in his native township, engaged in the peaceful vocation of a tiller of the soil. To him and his wife were born five children: (1) Frances Augusta, married Herman W. Graybill and had the following children: Nora B., wife of John M. Groff, attorney-at-law, Lancaster; John B.; Laura, deceased; Daniel; Catherine. (2) Amos H. resides in Lancaster. He married Kate Miller, and they have one son, Harry

M. (3) John Jacob resides at home. (4) Christian G. (5) Benjamin F. died in 1878, aged eighteen years. John Bassler died in Manheim township, May 18, 1861. His wife, who survives him, lives at Petersburg, Lancaster county.

Christian G. Bassler, having lost his father when but six years old, went to live with his grandparents and remained with them until 1865. He then removed to the house of his uncle, Jacob Gamber, where he remained until he was fourteen years of age. During this period his education was limited to a very brief attendance at the district school. When he attained the age of fifteen years he went to Manheim and lived with his guardian, Elias Bomberger, and for two years he was a pupil in the Manheim school. At the expiration of this period he received a teacher's certificate, and securing a school he taught in Penn township until 1876. He then entered the Millersville Normal School for the purpose of taking a regular course and was graduated therefrom in 1878. He then secured a school in East Hempfield township where he taught for four years. Meanwhile he was industriously engaged during his spare hours in reading and studying law, and he was admitted to the bar in the fall of 1882. Removing to North Dakota, he settled in Minewaukan, where he successfully practiced his profession for five years. During this time he served as county attorney for Benson county, Dakota, for several months. In 1887 he returned to Lancaster county and settled in the City of Lancaster, since which time he has successfully practiced his profession in that city.

Mr. Bassler was married in Lancaster in 1879 to Maria, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Ruth) Shissler, of Lancaster, and they have had issue as follows: Olive Lodelia, a teacher in the public schools; John Franklin, who died in childhood; George H.; William Sidney. Mr. Bassler is a member of the Lancaster County Bar Association, and takes a deep interest in whatever pertains to the advancement of the material interests of the association and members.

J. MILTON HUBER. The Huber family belongs among the old agricultural settlers of Lancaster county, where it has grown and flourished these many years, its descendants and representatives being among the most highly esteemed in this part of the State of Pennsylvania.

Grandfather Abraham Huber was born in Germany, and there he was reared until young manhood, when he came to the United States and first located in the State of Virginia. His permanent home, however, was made in Lancaster county, and it was in Lampeter township that he purchased his first tract of land, consisting of seven acres, which lay just south of Willowstreet, a village which was then just being laid out and platted in five-acre tracts. Mr. Huber, with remarkable foresight, saw his opportunity, and began buying these five-acre tracts until he was in possession of 120 acres, a great part of this land being now owned by his grandson, J. Milton Huber.

Abraham Huber was a carpenter by trade, and worked at it until his land required his personal attention, when he devoted his later years to its improvement and development. He lived to be seventy-eight. He married Polly Stauffer, their children being: Katie, who married Abraham Harnish; Polly, who married John Huber; Susan, who married John Yordy; John, who was a well-known farmer of considerable prominence in East Hempfield township, and was locally called "Pap" Huber; and Levi, who was the father of J. Milton. The parents had reared the family in the instruction and membership of the Old Mennonite Church.

Levi Huber was born in 1812 and died in 1884. He was brought up on the farm and received his primary education in the public schools, his father later procuring for him a private tutor, under whose instruction he became educated in the profession of a scrivener and also of a surveyor, later engaging in farming, as well as in the practice of these arts. His life was spent on the old homestead at Willowstreet, as he succeeded to the property, and both socially and in a business capacity he was widely known and esteemed.

Levi Huber was married to Catherine Kuperts, who was born in Conestoga township in 1819, and died in 1893, her life having been devoted to good works and the rearing of a family of ten children, these being: Abraham, who was a successful farmer in West Lampeter and died at the age of sixty-three, leaving a widow, since deceased; Elizabeth, deceased, the wife of Martin Witmer, of West Lampeter township, now of Strasburg; John, who died at the age of thirty-eight, leaving a widow; in his profession of physician he served in the Civil war, remaining four years at Hilton Head, S. C., in the Hospital corps, as its superintendent, was a graduate of Jefferson Medical College and had previously studied medicine with Dr. Carpenter, of Lancaster; Catherine, deceased wife of Benjamin Huffman; Susan, the wife of Benjamin Hastings, also deceased; Louisa, the wife of John L. Brenne-man, of Lancaster City; Mary, who died in childhood; Elam, who died at the age of twelve; Levi, who died at the age of forty-three, a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, having previously read with Dr. Boyle, of Hagerstown, Md., and at the time of his death a surgeon in Kansas, in the employ of a Western railroad.

J. Milton Huber, of whom this biography is written, was the youngest of the family of Levi and Catherine Huber, was born Dec. 17, 1853, was reared on the large farm of his father, and attended the common schools of the district, later taking a course in the State Normal School at Millersville. When twenty-three years old he began work at the carpenter trade, and since then has given a portion of his time to it, and the remainder to operating his farm, as he owns eighteen acres of the old homestead. This place he has improved by the erection of a fine, modern brick residence and other substantial buildings, which make it a model country home, and one of the most attractive places in the neighborhood, Mr. Huber demonstrating that he is not only a competent carpenter, but also an excellent agriculturist.

As one of the leading men in the district and an ardent Republican, he has been recognized by the party of his choice and his activity rewarded by the appointment to local offices, having been a most efficient justice of the peace for the past fifteen years. During this long term of service he has never had any of his decisions reversed. His aim has been to adjust all matters peaceably, and to each case he gives time and close attention, and has thus gained the confidence of the community, who feel sure of his just dealing.

The marriage of J. Milton Huber occurred in September, 1875, to Henrietta Gall, a daughter of Henry and Nancy (Furry) Gall, who was born in Conestoga township in 1851. When Mr. Huber was but twenty-three years of age he became a member of the M. E. Church, and since that time has been one of its most active supporters and consistent members, has served for several years as trustee and is the efficient superintendent of the Sunday-school; in every way he is a good citizen, having done all in his power to advance his family, section and State.

RESH. Henry Resh, who came from Germany to Pennsylvania in 1748, first settled on a tract of land a short distance east of Lancaster, where he spent three years. In 1751 he bought 125 acres in Leacock township, from Joseph Musser, for which he paid £475. After his death, in 1754, this property passed into the hands of his widow, Frena Resh, and from her to her son, John, and, with the exception of a small fraction, was still held by his descendants in 1902—the larger portion, with the mansion house and original home, by Jacob Ranck, a great-great-grandson; the remainder belongs to the estate of Mary Shirk, a great-great-granddaughter. Henry Resh was the father of five children, two sons and three daughters: John, born in Europe March 2, 1737; Elizabeth, born in Europe Aug. 2, 1739; Christian, born in Europe Sept. 3, 1743; Barbara, born in Pennsylvania Jan. 13, 1751; and Magdalena, born in Pennsylvania March 19, 1753. The history of the family is traditional and not at all full. The daughters all married, Elizabeth to a Mr. Stoner, and Barbara to a Mr. Miller. The daughters of Mrs. Elizabeth Stoner married Bresslers; and her son, while yet a young man, was killed by his horse running away down the little slope just west of Henry Ressler's mill, on the Old Philadelphia road, which is now the Bird-in-Hand turnpike. Magdalena married Jacob Denlinger.

John Resh, the eldest son of Henry, came into possession of the old homestead in 1762. He married Elizabeth Stoner and had the following children: Barbara, born March 31, 1762; Henry (1), Jan. 13, 1764 (died in infancy); Fronica, April 20, 1766; John, April 25, 1768; Joseph, Jan. 20, 1771; Henry (2), June 7, 1773; a daughter, Sept. 10, 1775; Susanna, Jan. 27, 1778; Christian, April 18, 1780. After the death of his first wife, Elizabeth, John Resh married Magdalena Eshleman, by whom he had the following children: Jacob, who died in infancy; Jacob (2); Elizabeth; Mary and Magdalena, twins; and Esther.

Henry B Presch

John Resh (born April 25, 1768), owned and lived on the old homestead in Leacock township. He married Barbara Eby, and they had one son, David, born Feb. 22, 1802, who died unmarried, at the age of twenty years. A daughter, Lydia, who was born in 1803, married John Esbenschade, and after his death became the wife of Henry Denlinger. Another daughter, Elizabeth, never married, and died Dec. 17, 1875. A third daughter, Barbara, married Adam Ranck. A fourth daughter, Mary, became the wife of Henry Eby.

Joseph Resh, born Jan. 20, 1771, married Esther Sensenig, by whom he had the following named children: Joseph, Daniel, Jacob, Moses, Peter, John, Samuel, Benjamin, Elizabeth, Susanna, Fanny, Esther and Mary. All lived in Washington county, Md., and in Franklin county, Pa., with the exception of Jacob, who made his home in Lancaster county.

Henry Resh, born in Leacock township June 7, 1773, early learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for a number of years, and in connection with his brothers did much construction in Leacock township, a number of houses and barns which they built being yet standing. In his later years he was a farmer. He died June 5, 1849, in religion a member of the Old Mennonite Church. His wife, Magdalena, daughter of Francis and Magdalena Buckwalter, was born in 1784. They had seven children, all now deceased, one of whom, Daniel, died in infancy; Anna married John Bosler, and after his death became the wife of Jonathan Weaver; Mary married Samuel Sensenig; Elizabeth married Peter Herr; Martha married David Bair; Fannie married John Buckwalter; Henry B. is mentioned below.

HENRY B. RESH was born in Upper Leacock township Jan. 23, 1820, and lived with his parents until he was twenty-seven years of age. His education was received in the public schools, and he became a prominent and useful citizen. When he was twenty-seven he married Mary Buckwalter, daughter of John and Judith Buckwalter, and by her had one child, a son, who died in infancy, and was motherless from its birth. Mr. Resh was later married, March 21, 1855, to Susanna Sheaffer, who was born in Londonderry, Ireland, daughter of John and Elenore (Garvey) Sheaffer, and came to this country with her family when quite young. This union was blessed with three children: (1) Mary E., born Jan. 4, 1856, died Oct. 14, 1895. She married Dr. John K. Shirk, of Lancaster, and became the mother of four children, Florence M., Mary R., Helen R. and David R. (2) John died in infancy. (3) Anna M., born Oct. 4, 1858, married Frank L. Minnich. She lives with her widowed mother, and devotes herself to her two young children—Henriette R., born Dec. 3, 1890, and Anna Resh, born Nov. 10, 1895.

Mr. Resh made his home on the old homestead where he was born, and where he carried on farming until he was about forty-two years of age, at which time he retired. He died in 1887. In business circles he stood high in the community, and was a director of the Lancaster County National Bank for some twenty years. In Leacock township he filled the position of school director for a number of terms, and was a progressive and public-spirited citizen, devoted to public interests, and taking sides with the Republican party in all political issues.

PHILIP MECK. One of the respected citizens of Lancaster county, Pa., who now lives a partially retired life on a fine farm of sixty-six acres, in West Lampeter township, is Philip Meck, a son of George Meck, an old resident of this township.

Philip Meck was born June 13, 1829, in the old Meck homestead, was reared on the home farm and educated in the country schools, remaining under the parental roof until he had reached his majority. His first business venture for himself was when he began work by the month for his brother, and a couple of years later he took charge of one of the fine farms which his father owned in Manheim township, where he remained for four years. Upon his return to the old homestead he worked on shares until he was prepared to purchase, later becoming the owner of sixty-six acres of this excellent land.

Until 1884 Philip Meck carried on a general farming line upon this place, but at that time his son took charge of active operations and he purchased a home, with ten acres of land, in the village of Lampeter, and there he has since lived, looking after this tract and enjoying the ease which his ample means makes possible. Although Philip Meck has lived a quiet, unostentatious life, he has always been ready to respond when called upon to lend his influence for the public good.

Philip Meck was married on Dec. 4, 1851, to Esther Wade, a daughter of John and Susan (Warfel) Wade, who was born in Strasburg township May 24, 1824; to this union has been born a family of nine children, many of them among the most respected citizens of this county: George W., the farmer on the homestead, who married Mary Ervin and has a family of three children, Ella, Elmer and Mable; Martha, who married Benjamin Brubaker, near Freeport, Ill., and has three children, Ralph, Elva and Nora; Susan, who married Adam Tout, of the vicinity of Columbia, and has four children, Arthur, Laura, Chester and Bessie; Amos W., of Providence township, who married Lillie Mowrer and has four children, Edna, Margie, Lester and an infant daughter; Mary Ann and Hettie, twins, the former of whom married Ephraim Kauffman, of Manor township, and has two children, Ralph and Benjamin; and the latter married to Christian L. Herr, of Lancaster township, with four children, Paul, Esther, Elizabeth and Mary; Emma, at home; Aaron J., a farmer near Freeport, Ill., who married Emma Shoemaker and has two children, Clarence and Titus; and Lizzie, married to J. Newton Rohrer, of Strasburg, with two children, Jay and Esther.

Both Mr. Meck and his worthy wife have long been connected with the Old Mennonite Church, where they possess the esteem of all; and no family in the community stands in higher respect.

ISAAC PHENEGAR, of Strasburg township, is one of the representative citizens of Lancaster county. His maternal grandfather, Richard Glass, was the founder of the family in this locality, and came from his home in Derry, Ireland, and located here with his wife, who had been Miss Martha Watts, a member of the family so well known through their musical contributions to the various church hymnals.

Richard Glass and his family settled in Lancaster county about 1804, and here he lived until his death, in 1842. He left a family of seven children: James, who removed to Iowa and died there; Joseph, who located in Utah and died there; John, who removed to Illinois and died in Sterling; Richard, who lived and died in Iowa; Mary, who married John Petrie and moved to Ohio; Ann, who became the wife of Benjamin Phenegar and the mother of Isaac, of this biography (later married to John Ferguson); and Elizabeth, who married Henry Sides, of Paradise and Strasburg townships. Ann (Glass) Phenegar was born in Strasburg township and died at the home of her son, in 1884, at the age of seventy-two. She had two children, Isaac, and James, who died in infancy.

The birth of Isaac Phenegar occurred Jan. 4, 1832, and he was reared in his native place and attended the common schools, but at an early age he began to earn his own way in the world, beginning by doing odd jobs and assisting on farms, later entering a store and becoming a clerk. It was remarked that whatever Isaac attempted to do he did well, and when, on reaching the age of eighteen, he announced his intention of fitting himself for the profession of a teacher, his associates knew that he would accomplish it. After a winter spent in study he was found able to pass examinations satisfactorily, and for the following ten years was one of the most capable among the young teachers of Lancaster county, in the meantime being prepared by study and intelligent application for a very different line of work.

In 1863 Mr. Phenegar became the manager of the Strasburg Railroad, and served efficiently in this capacity for the succeeding ten years, at the end of which period he leased the road and operated it on his own responsibility for the following fifteen years. About this time he became interested in the First National Bank of Strasburg, with which institution he has been connected as a director to the present time. In connection with his business in railroad matters he conducted a warehouse and dealt in all kinds of grain, coal, etc., and also engaged extensively in tobacco packing, managing all these lines with the intelligence which leads to success.

In 1863 Mr. Phenegar was married to Miss Elmira Weaver, a daughter of John and Sarah Weaver, of Paradise township, and he and his wife are the parents of three daughters: Anna, who married J. C. Mylin, the railroad agent located at Leaman Place, and has three children—Arthur, Donald and Everett; Emma Eugenie, who married Willis C. Herr, of Lampeter, and has two children, Robert P. and Richard; and Eva, who married Rev. Joseph H. Earp, assistant rector of St. James Episcopal Church, of Lancaster, and has two children, Marjorie and John.

For some thirty years Mr. Phenegar has been the talented chorister of the M. E. Church in Strasburg and has been prominent in the affairs of that denomination and a leader in educational and religious circles in the community. Mr. Phenegar has efficiently filled the office of school director for the past six years and during his residence in Paradise township was a justice of the peace. As one of the most active and progressive business men of this part of Lancaster county he has gained the confidence and esteem of its citizens, and they see in his career the results of honesty, energy and application, and the rewards of an exemplary life.

SAMUEL ALEXANDER, a farmer and merchant of Mount Nebo, Martic township, is one of its honorable and esteemed citizens. He was born in Martic township June 20, 1848, son of John and Susan (Zarocher) Alexander, of Martic township, of Scotch-Irish descent.

John Alexander, the father, was a son of John, and one of a family of six children, viz., Samuel, David, James, Thomas, John and Rachel, all deceased. He was born in 1803, married Susan Zarocher in 1829, and died in 1877. They had a family of seven children, namely: Maris, who was killed while in the service of his country, during the Civil war; Martha, the wife of Amos Walton, of Fulton township; Mary, the widow of Lewis Jenkins; Samuel; Rebecca J., the wife of Henry Marsh, of Lancaster; John A., of Mount Nebo; Calvin, deceased.

Samuel Alexander is a leading citizen of Martic township. His early rearing on the farm gave him a taste and inclination toward an agricultural life, and after finishing his school course, he engaged in farming and still owns several well improved farms in his vicinity. Mr. Alexander also conducts a first-class general store in that locality, and is the postmaster of Mount Nebo, having been appointed by ex-President Cleveland. In politics he has long been recognized as an important factor in the Democratic party and at one time was the choice of the party for the State Senate. In all matters pertaining to the progress and advancement of his locality, Mr. Alexander takes a deep interest and is known as both liberal and public-spirited.

On Oct. 20, 1870, Mr. Alexander married Miss Jennie M. Hagen, of Martic township, born April 3, 1847, daughter of Elijah and Sarah Hagen, and this marriage has been blessed with eleven children, ten of whom still survive, as follows: Chester L., born in 1871, of Chicago; Maris C., born in 1872; Curtis, born in 1873; Gertrude, born in 1875, the wife of William Tollinger, of Fulton township; Minnie E., born in 1876, at home; Emma, born in 1878, the wife of Ray Neel, of Mount Nebo; Walter S., born in 1881; Harry B., born in 1883; Manie, born in 1884, and Charles, born in 1885. John C., born in 1879, died at the age of two years.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander are leading members of the Methodist church, where they both are active in good works. He is one of the stewards of that body and is honored and respected by a very large circle of acquaintances. Mr. Alexander is identified with these fraternal societies: The I. O. O. F., of Rawlinsville; the K. of P., of the same place; and Lodge No. 158, Mystic Chain, of Mount Nebo.

ADDISON B. LONGENECKER. For many years Addison B. Longenecker, the owner of 120 acres of some of the choicest and best improved land in Lancaster county, followed the plow, planted and sowed and in due season reaped a bountiful harvest, but now he lives a somewhat retired life, enjoying the results of his former industry and activity.

The Longenecker family originally came from Switzerland, the country which has sent to Pennsylvania some of her best citizens. Addison was born Dec. 27, 1841, a son of Jacob and Sallie (Bardoff) Longenecker, of Ephrata township. To them a large family was born: Susannah, who died in childhood; Fianna, who married Samuel Schlote; Henry, a retired farmer of Ephrata township; Addison; Mary Ann married to Andrew M. Baker; Allen, who resides in Adams county; Serena, who married John Bender; and Emma, who married Samuel Rupp.

Addison B. Longenecker was reared on a farm in Warwick township and attended the common schools of his district, starting out in life for himself with very limited means. However, he possessed industry and energy and with those levers he moved events and put aside difficulties until now he is considered one of the substantial men of the community. This is an excellent thing, but Mr. Longenecker possesses much more than a fine, well cultivated farm, for he is held in esteem by the neighbors among whom his life has been passed and they regard him as a valued friend, ever ready to extend a hand to help, and as an upright man in all his dealings with others.

The marriage of Mr. Longenecker occurred in 1871, when he was united to Miss Katherine Shirk, born Jan. 16, 1849, a daughter of Emanuel and Katherine Shirk, and to this union one child has come, Sallie, born Sept. 19, 1880.

J. MARTIN GOOD, a wealthy and respected farmer of Bart township, Lancaster county, was born at his present home in that township, May 6, 1849, and is a son of Samuel and Eliza (Hollis) Good. His parents were both natives of Chester county, where the father was born Oct. 18, 1799, and the mother, May 20, 1804. She was a daughter of George and Nancy (Moore) Hollis, both of whom were born in Chester county, Pennsylvania.

Samuel Good was a son of Andrew and Anna (Boyle) Good. She was born in Chester county, and came of Irish parentage. Andrew Good was born in Germany. He settled in West Fallowfield, Chester county, before the Revolutionary war. Two brothers accompanied him to America; one settled on the Schuylkill river, near Philadelphia, and the other moved to Reading, where he lived remote from the two. Andrew Good settled on a farm, where he lived and died. He was the father of seven children. (1) Grace Good, born in Chester county, died at the old home in her ninetieth year, unmarried. (2) Polly Good, born in Chester county, married Thomas Pearcall, a merchant of Baltimore, and became the mother of three children: John, Isaac, and Juliet, who married S. R. Wright, all of Baltimore. (3) Darlington Good, born in Chester county, married Sarah Hoar, and moved to Henry county, Ill., where he died. They had the following family: Alban, Sarah, Darlington, Samuel, and Emma, who married a Mr. Morris, of Illinois.

(4) Emma Good, born in Chester county, married James Turnbolt, and moved to Henry county, Ill., where she died, leaving two children, Sarah and Darlington, a prominent man of Chicago.

(5) Sarah Good, born in Chester county, is the widow of Samuel Finley, who passed his later years at Quarryville, where he died leaving the following children: Echnos; James, deceased; Lewis, who died in the Civil war; Samuel, of Chester county; Mary, who married Mr. Kimbell, and lives in Quarryville; John, of Chester county; and Martin, of Mechanicsburg. (6) Jane Good died unmarried.

(7) Jacob Good married Sarah Davis, also a native of Chester county, settled in Chester county, on the original Good home where he was born, and left the following children: Mary, the wife of Martin Espenheim, living in Chester county; Davis, deceased; Emeline, the widow of John Wilson, of Philadelphia; Sarah, the widow of Dr. Goman, of Coatesville; Ellis, who lives in Atglen; Elmira, a resident of Philadelphia.

(8) Samuel Good, the father of J. Martin, was reared in Chester county, where he was given a common-school education, and bred to a farming life. In 1830 he married Eliza Hollis, and lived for a year in Bart Valley. In 1832 he bought the farm on which his son is now established near Bartville, in the township of Bart; this he cleared with the assistance of his son, made extensive improvements, and erected the buildings which are now standing on the place. In 1880 he removed to Christiana, where he lived retired, to the time of his death in 1889. His wife died at the farm home in 1863. They were members of the Presbyterian Church in Octoraro. Politically he was a Democrat, and held a number of local offices at different times in his active and useful life. He was one of the first free school trustees of Bart township. To him and his excellent wife came the following family:

(1) J. F. Good, born in Bart township in 1833, married Miss Mary Mundenhall, of Bart township, and for a number of years he worked at the carpenter trade. During the Civil war he served in the State militia during the Rebel raid into Pennsylvania. For some ten years he worked at farming, and in 1872 moved to Renova, Clinton county, where he is employed in the shops of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Of his children, Clara, the oldest, is the wife of Charles Van Gordan, of Renova; Florence is the widow of Charles Young, of Renova; Abraham lives at Altoona; George lives at Lancaster, N. Y.; Albert is in Renova; Jenietta is the wife of Isaac Gates, of Renova; Ella is at home.

(2) Anna E. Good, born Aug. 27, 1835, is the widow of John McGovan, of Sadsbury township, and has one son, John W., who is a farmer in Sadsbury township.

(3) Sarah J. Good, born in June, 1837, is unmarried, and lives at the old home in Chester county, where she is a dress maker with a pleased and constant patronage.

(4) W. H. Good, born Jan. 5, 1840, a business man of Philadelphia, married Miss Sally Maloy, and has one son, Dr. A. P. Good, of that city.

(5) Mary L. Good, born May 15, 1842, is unmarried, and lives in Chester county.

(6) Samuel R. Good, born June 21, 1844, married Miss Mary Moore, of Bart township, and lived with her in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he is a contractor and builder. The wife died in Philadelphia, leaving three children, Washington, Nellie and Wilson.

(7) Washington Good, born Nov. 20, 1846, enlisted in Co. D, 2d Pa. Cav., and died at Camp Stoneman, Va., April 20, 1864.

J. Martin Good began life as a farmer boy, was educated in the local schools, and when only fourteen years of age had charge of his father's farm. In connection with farming he has followed for many years the business of an auctioneer.

Mr. Good was married Dec. 25, 1879, to Mary E., the daughter of Patrick and Susan (McNeal) Swisher. She was born in Eden township, Sept. 10, 1855. After their marriage the young couple lived on the old homestead, which has been their residence to the present time. To this marriage have come two daughters: Ellen Maud, born Feb. 20, 1882, graduated from the Quarryville high school, and now a successful teacher in Bart township, holding a first-grade certificate and enjoying a reputation of more than the usual ability; Malissa May, born Jan. 7, 1886, a student in the Bartville high school.

Mr. Good has been prominently identified with the Republican party, and at different times has held various local and town offices. In 1890 he was made census enumerator for Bart township, and for ten years has been road commissioner. He has long been a judge of the elections, and was actively associated with the building of the Central high school of Bart township. He and his wife are members of Middle Octoraro Presbyterian Church. He is an industrious and hard working man, an upright citizen, and a kind neighbor. His neighbors speak warmly of his many good qualities and sympathetic spirit, and he enjoys the hearty and unstinted respect of the community in which his life is passing.

FREDERICK BUCHER. In reviewing the lives of successful men the keynote that has gained fame and confidence for them is not uncommonly sought. Some men win as plodders, others by dash and brilliancy. In his earlier life, at least, Frederick Bucher was a man of action. He possessed the courage to choose for himself, to create opportunities rather than to become their creation, and this faculty, with his keen sagacity, has contributed immensely to his success. As one of the wealthiest, most prosperous citizens of Columbia, a brief outline of his career is especially interesting.

Mr. Bucher was born in Deggingen, Wurtemberg, Germany, Sept. 18, 1830, son of Joseph Maximilian and Barbara (Bernauer) Bucher, and was well educated in his youth in his native town. His father was a prosperous merchant, and at fifteen Frederick entered the paternal dry-goods store and grocery as a clerk. A year later he assumed the management of a carbonic spring, the property of his father, located at Ditzenbach, near Deggingen. Here he remained six years, gaining a knowledge of business and men which has stood him in good stead in the varied business interests in which he has since engaged. In 1852 Mr. Bucher's name, with many others, was placed in the "army wheel," but the drawing of Deggingen's recruits was completed without his name appearing in the lists, he having drawn a number which cleared him from military service. In the fall of the following year he sailed for the new world beyond the sea, where he hoped to build a home for himself, make new friends, and a fortune, all of which he has realized beyond his most sanguine expectations. Landing at New York, he did not at once find occupation which suited, the offer of a clerkship at eighteen dollars a month being the best that was offered him. Visiting an acquaintance in Philadelphia, he found desirable employment in that city also beyond his reach. Learning that George Tille, whom he had known at Deggingen, resided in Columbia, the ambitious young man started for that borough, which he reached in the winter of 1853. Mr. Tille was a clerk in the hardware store of Jonas Rumble, and there the newly arrived emigrant started up the ladder of success in America. For seven months he remained with Mr. Rumble, and at the end of that time accepted a better position with Henry Pfahler, also a hardware merchant of the borough, with whom he remained seven years. In 1858, deciding to seek his fortunes in the far West, he resigned his position with Mr. Pfahler and started overland for California. In the vicinity of Salt Lake City their camp, consisting of fifteen men, was suddenly attacked one evening by Indians. There was a vigorous defense, which gradually slackened until Mr. Bucher and one other man were the only survivors of the party. Favored by the darkness which had come on during the fighting they fled and made good their escape. Mr. Bucher finally reached New Orleans, but finding that the city was suffering from an epidemic of yellow fever, he decided to give it a wide berth, and shipped on a vessel for Havana. However, the vessel was not allowed to land, as several cases of smallpox had developed on board. He then returned to Columbia, via New York City, and re-entered the employ of Mr. Pfahler. He became owner in a patented stove, but in 1859 the patterns were destroyed by fire and he had no means to pay for new ones, consequently the stove enterprise proved a clear failure. This, however, was Mr. Bucher's first and only financial failure, and resulted in his staying with Mr. Pfahler as a clerk two years longer. In 1861 he accepted a position in the hardware store of J. W. Cottrell, with whom and his successors he remained five years. In 1866 he started in the grocery and hardware business for himself at the corner of Fourth and Locust streets, Columbia, which he continued successfully for twenty years. He also became largely interested in real estate in Columbia, and is now one of the most extensive real-estate owners there, in addition to other property, owning over fifty residences. He is a practical builder, and his houses have been constructed under his direct supervision.

Frederick B. Rucker

In politics Mr. Bucher is a Republican, and has always given his party a hearty and liberal support. He was elected a member of the borough council in 1884, and the following year served as its president. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F., having joined Susquehanna Lodge, No. 80, in 1856, and has passed through all the chairs; of the A. O. M. P., with which he has been affiliated since 1874, and in which organization he has also filled all the executive offices; and of Lancaster Lodge, No. 134, B. P. O. E. As president of the Columbia Rod and Gun Club he has ably served that society, and is still one of its most enthusiastic and prominent supporters.

On Sept. 13, 1862, Mr. Bucher enlisted in Company A, 2d P. V. I., and went with his regiment to Chambersburg, where it remained until Sept. 18th, when it went to Hagerstown, and thence three miles out in the Williamsport road, where it formed in line of battle and remained there twenty-four hours. It then moved a mile farther and went into camp, but the same evening started for Greencastle, taking cars for Harrisburg, where Mr. Bucher, with the rest of the regiment, was mustered out of the service Sept. 25th. In 1863 Mr. Bucher was the eighth man drafted in the army from the First ward of Columbia, but secured exemption, as the ward filled the quota. As a subsequent draft in the same year, his name was again the eighth to be drawn, and this time he paid $300 for exemption.

In addition to his mercantile and real-estate interests, Mr. Bucher has been prominently identified with a number of successful business enterprises. For years he has been a director of the Keeley Stove Works, of Columbia, and for a time served as treasurer of the Columbia Laundry Machine Co. He was also for a good many years treasurer of the New York Building & Loan Association.

Mr. Bucher has been an enthusiastic traveler, having visited Europe, Canada, the West Indies, and all parts of the United States. In 1880 he made an extended trip through Europe, revisiting his old home, and meeting his mother and three sisters, from whom he had long been separated. Two brothers had followed him to America, Christian in 1853, and Max in 1858, both now deceased. Mr. Bucher is one of the wealthiest citizens of Columbia, but has not, however, forgotten the Christian precepts of his early training, and the Golden Rule has guided his life. He has been generous in the distribution of his means for the public good. A kind and loving father and husband, a faithful and efficient public official, honest and just to his fellowmen, he ranks as one of Columbia's most prominent and influential citizens. He is actively interested in the affairs of life, and his beautiful home on Locust street, opposite the city park, contains a well selected library and many curios of interest. His disposition is companionable and genial, his observations keen and practical, and few men are better liked for their individual worth and personal character.

In 1860 Mr. Bucher married Miss Louisa Bartsch, daughter of Michael Bartsch, of Chestnut Hill, Lancaster county, and to this union have been born four children, viz.: Mary, who resides at home; Frederick C., who is a practicing physician in Columbia, and married Miss Estella Brant; Emilie, who married Dr. J. W. Grove, and resides in Columbia; and William, a druggist in Columbia, where he has two fine drug stores.

BENJAMIN Z. WITMER, a general farmer of Mt. Joy township, was born in that township July 2, 1858, son of John and brother of David Witmer, of Elizabethtown.

The education of Mr. Witmer was obtained in the district schools, and until his marriage he resided with his parents. Following this event, he began farming on his own account on his father's land, operating the home farm for three years, moving then to his well-cultivated farm of twenty-seven acres, upon which he has remained until the present time. Mr. Witmer belongs to the Republican party. His religious connection is with the German Baptist Church.

On Dec. 23, 1880, Mr. Witmer was married (first) in Manheim, Pa., to Miss Malinda B. Garman, born in Mt. Joy township, who died May 1, 1895 and was buried in Mt. Tunnel cemetery. She was a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Garman, the former of whom was a carpenter in Lancaster county, where both he and wife died. On Feb. 2, 1897, Mr. Witmer was married (second) in Mt. Joy township, to Miss Susan Kauffman, born in Penn township in 1863, daughter of Abraham and Catherine (McMullen) Kauffman, of Lancaster county. Mr. Kauffman was a carpenter by trade and was a much respected man. His death occurred in 1880, at the age of forty-two years, his wife having died in 1872, at the age of thirty-four years. They both were laid to rest in White Oak Church cemetery. Their children were: Monroe, who is a carpenter, in Brennerville; Lizzie, who married Samuel Ritter and lives in Springfield, Ohio; James, who resides in Rapho township; Henry, a farmer near Pennville, Pa.; Nathaniel, who lives in Lancaster; Katie, married to Philip Waterman, of Rickersville, Pa.; and Susan, the youngest of the family, who became Mrs. Witmer. Mr. and Mrs. Witmer have no children.

Mr. Witmer is an excellent farmer, a good neighbor and a first-class citizen. He and his estimable wife have a large circle of warm friends in their community.

DANIEL S. VON NIEDA. As proprietor of one of the most popular summer hotels of Lancaster county, Daniel S. Von Nieda has become acquainted not only with many citizens of Ephrata, but with a great number of intelligent and agreeable people from various States, who have found in him a model host and genial gentleman whom they are glad to call friend. The "Ephrata Springs Mountain House," located at Ephrata, is one of the most delightful summer resorts in that locality, situated near the summit of Ephrata mountain, in the midst of a large park of some 200 shade trees, and supplied with the pure and invigorating water of Ephrata Springs, which by many are considered very medicinal.

Daniel S. Von Nieda was born Dec. 23, 1844, son of the late Jacob and Catherine (Swartz) Von Nieda, of Cocalico township. The first of the Von Nieda family to arrive in America, were six brothers and one sister, namely: George, Martin, Jacob, Philip, Casper, Daniel and Catharine who left the Pfalz on the Rhine called Grammerchen in 1771.

Of these Jacob settled at Adamstown, Lancaster county, Pa. Jacob was the father of John, Rudy, Philip (2nd), Jacob (2nd), Henry, Elizabeth, Magdalena, Anmarie, and Catharine (2nd). Of the above Philip (2nd) was the father of the following children: Solomon, Philip (3rd), Jacob (3rd), Elizabeth, Susanna, and William, all of whom have passed away.

In 1842 Jacob Von Nieda (3), son of Philip (2), married Catherine Swartz, a daughter of Jacob and Mary (Pannabecker) Swartz, and to them were born five children: Daniel S.; Jacob L., born in 1849, who died in childhood; J. Wesley, born in 1853, who married Sallie Boger, of Reading, Pa., and is a printer by trade; Mary Emma, born in 1856, who married Rev. M. A. Salt, of Oberlin, Pa., a minister of prominence in the United Brethren Church; and Richard W., born in 1858, a printer and publisher in Reading.

Daniel S. Von Nieda was reared on a farm in his youth, and received his education in the public schools of Adamstown, beginning his business career as a photographer. During the Civil war he served eleven months as a drummer boy in the 195th P. V. I. In 1877 he started the Ephrata Review, the first newspaper published in Ephrata, in which enterprise his brother, J. Wesley Von Nieda, was associated with him. In 1881 he purchased the "Mountain House" at Ephrata, and for the last twenty years has been its successful proprietor, making it one of the most desirable resorts in that part of the State. On account of the vigilance which Mr. Von Nieda constantly exerts, and also his known pronounced prohibition views, this hotel has justly gained a reputation for respectability which makes it much sought after by those of refined and exclusive tastes.

On Oct. 24, 1869, Daniel S. Von Nieda was married to Miss Sallie S. Zartman, a daughter of William and Annie (Singer) Zartman, and five sons have been born to this union, all of them children of whom their parents have reason to feel proud. These children are: Oscar L., born Jan. 27, 1871, who married Miss Sarah H. Landis, and is a farmer in Ephrata; John W., born Dec. 15, 1873, an electrician; Harry J., born March 27, 1876, who is editor of the Ephrata Reporter, and resides at home; Robert D., born Aug. 16, 1880, who assists his father; and Walter H., born Oct. 23, 1883, at home.

As a business man and excellent citizen, Mr. Von Nieda stands high in the community, and socially he is known as a charitable and benevolent neighbor as well as a true Christian gentleman.

NOAH L. GETZ. The first member of the Getz family to locate in Lancaster county, Pa., where for many years its representatives have lived honest and honorable lives, was John Jacob Getz, who came to America, in the good ship "Dolphin," and landed in Philadelphia in 1738, his home having been in Pfalz, Germany. After a short residence in this country, he went back to Germany, but finally returned and located in Lancaster county, settling on Chestnut Hill and occupying a large extent of country, some 400 or 500 acres of the choicest land of this fertile county. Of an enterprising and progressive spirit, he favored many measures for public improvement, and in every way testified to the confidence he had in the future of the great country where he had found a hospitable home.

The family born to this emigrant forefather consisted of many daughters and one son, Jacob, who became the great-grandfather of the present representatives of the name in Lancaster county. Great-grandfather Jacob Getz owned the old homestead, and in 1818, after making proper provision for his numerous sisters, he built upon the place a large brick house and barn and suitable outbuildings, and also erected a barn upon the farm which is now in the possession of Noah L. On this same place in 1822 he built a house and also put up some buildings at the "Black Horse Hotel." The records show that he was a man of fertile mind and considerable capacity, followed farming successfully and carried on a business in the manufacture of whip stocks, which were sold in Philadelphia. His family consisted of five sons: John, George, Peter, Harry, and Jacob: the large estate was divided between them, and all settled and married in that locality except George, who was of a more adventurous and restless spirit.

Grandfather John Getz was born June 19, 1790, and died Nov. 18, 1842. He married Magdalina Gross, who was born Dec. 2, 1795, and died June 15, 1857. They owned 113 acres of the old homestead, together with thirty-seven acres of timber land, all of which now belongs to Noah L. Getz. During his life John Getz filled a number of situations acceptably, being engaged in general farming, while he also taught school, and was called upon to serve as clerk at sales, his ability putting him far in advance of his neighbors. His family consisted of a daughter, Lydia, and a son, Levi, the father of our subject.

Levi Getz was born Dec. 28, 1827, and passed out of life Feb. 20, 1896. His wife was a representative of another old and well-known, as well as numerous, family of Lancaster county, Maria L. Landis, of Manheim township. After his marriage, in 1849, he succeeded to the property and became not only a prosperous farmer, but a noted stock raiser; buying only thoroughbred stock and raising fine specimens of Holsteins, Shorthorns, Jerseys, and Devons, he was one of the leaders in this progressive industry in the county. The great and luxuriant meadows of Lancaster county made the raising of fine cattle and stock a very profitable business, and Levi Getz was so encouraged that he went into the business of improving his other stock also, introducing some of the best strains of hogs ever brought to Lancaster county.

For a number of years he was one of the directors in the Lancaster County National Bank and so much confidence was placed in him that he was selected, at the death of Benjamin Landis, his father-in-law, to become the guardian of the estate, and never was a trust more carefully fulfilled, or a great business matter better adjusted. Two children were born to Levi Getz and his wife; Hiram L., a successful practicing physician of Marshalltown, Iowa; and Noah L.

Dr. Hiram Landis Getz was born Nov. 14, 1850, in East Hempfield township, Lancaster county. His early education was gained in the schools of that region and then followed his professional studies in Philadelphia, where he was connected with various hospitals, was assistant and student under the noted surgeon, Dr. R. J. Levis, and was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College in 1874. He located at Marshalltown, Iowa.

In addition to his regular professional work, the doctor has been at various times connected with life and accident companies; has been county physician for Marshall county; is chief surgeon for the Iowa Central Railroad and is connected with a number of other Western roads; was for three years a professor in the Iowa College of Physicians and Surgeons; and has held other professional positions in the state, too numerous to mention. Dr. Getz is a frequent contributor to medical and surgical journals and has invented a number of instruments and conveniences for professional use. Besides being prominent in various State societies, he was elected president of the International Association of Railway Surgeons, 1900-01. In politics Dr. Getz is independent; he has served on many State boards and as postmaster of Marshalltown, always introducing many improvements and reforms.

On May 27, 1874, Dr. Getz married Miss Mary E. Worley, and they have two children: N. Worley, also a physician; and Igera M.

Noah L. Getz was born April 9, 1852, and was reared on the farm and received his education in the public schools, having the advantages of a short term at the Manheim Academy. On Jan. 6, 1876, he was married to Fannie H. Roher, of East Hempfield, who was born Nov. 28, 1856, and to them were born these children: Ferry R., a very bright young man, born in 1877, graduated from Marshall College, of Lancaster City, in the class of 1901; Noah R., born in 1879, educated in the common schools and at present a student in the International School of Correspondence, at Scranton, Pa.; Mable R., born in 1881, educated at the Manheim High School and graduated in the class of 1899; Annis R., born in 1882, who died in 1886; John R., born in 1883, a student in the Manheim high school; Maria R., born in 1885; Henry R., born in 1887; and Roher, born in 1891.

This traces the Getz family in one line, and other information tells of the will of John Jacob, which was made in 1803, and mentions that his son Jacob was one of the keepers of the "Black Horse Hotel," and evidently erected the same. It is interesting to trace family connections with old landmarks and much might be written which the limits of this biography would not permit.

When Noah L. Getz began life for himself he was twenty-six years old, and he and his wife settled on a tract of 120 acres of land which he had purchased from his father; and upon this place he has made his home, and added many valuable improvements, in 1879 erecting tobacco sheds and several smaller buildings, and in 1890 erecting a fine modern brick residence, which is one of the most attractive homes in the county. In April, 1896, he succeeded to the old homestead, at which time he remodeled the buildings and now has one of the largest as well as one of the best equipped farms in the neighborhood.

Mrs. Getz was the recipient of a fine property, almost adjoining the homestead, which was presented to her on her birthday, in 1899, the two together placing in the family the largest farm in Lancaster county. Mr. Getz has dealt largely in tobacco, also in walnut lumber, and is one of the largest dealers in stock and cattle in the county. Prominent in many ways, he is a member and stockholder in the Lititz Turnpike Co., and is considered one of the best representative men of Lancaster county.

JAMES M. WILSON, a retired farmer of East Drumore township, was born in York county, Pa., July 8, 1822, son of John and Charlotte (Watt) Wilson.

John Wilson was born in York county in 1796, and his wife was born in Chester county in 1795. John was the son of James and Eleanor (Hutchinson) Wilson, who were born in York and Chester counties respectively, and who reared a family of five children, three sons and two daughters: John, father of our subject; James, who moved to Ohio, and died there; David, who lived and died on the old homestead in York county; Elizabeth, who died unmarried in York county; and Margaret, who became the wife of John Collins, who died in York county.

John Wilson, father of our subject, first settled on a farm in York county, but in 1824 he moved to the southern part of Lancaster county, where he followed farming until his death in July, 1886, in his ninety-first year; his wife died at their home in 1874. They were members of the United Presbyterian church and were devout Christians. They left two sons: James and John D., the latter (who is unmarried) being a prominent and wealthy man of Lancaster county, whose early life was spent as a farmer, but who afterward engaged as a merchant in Drumore township; so continuing until 1861 when he was appointed deputy sheriff, and moved to Lancaster; he has also held several other offices, and is now living retired.

James M. Wilson grew to manhood on his father's farm, and was educated in the public schools. He remained on the farm until his marriage, in November, 1876, to Miss Jane Thompson, daughter of Miller and Mary (Watt) Thompson, pioneers of Lancaster county. Mr. Wilson located on his father's homestead where he remained until the spring of 1884, when he purchased his present fine farm which joins the borough of Quarryville. It is one of the well cultivated and desirable places of the section, and has a large brick residence and fine out buildings of all kinds. It was here that Mr. Wilson's first wife died, in 1892, leaving no children. In 1893 Mr. Wilson married for his second wife, Mrs. Harriet E. (Thompson) Campbell, widow of Dr. John C. Campbell, who in life was a prominent physician of the county. Mrs. Wilson was born Jan. 14, 1844, in Colerain township, whither her parents, George B. and Mary (Snyder) Thompson, of Chester county, had moved. The lady is well educated, and for twenty years was a teacher in the public schools. She had two children by her first husband: Anna D., born in 1869, who married Walter Scott, and has one child, Helen E.; and Bailey C., born in 1872, who is now a resident of Harrisburg, and has one son, John. Mrs. Wilson is the granddaughter of Francis and Mary (Black) Thompson, and her maternal great-grandparents were George and Hannah (Ross) Black, while her paternal great-grandparents were Col. James and Lydia F. (Bailey) Thompson, of Revolutionary fame. Col. James Thompson was born in Sadsbury township in 1745, and died in the same township in February, 1807. His wife, Lydia F. Bailey, was born in 1750, and died in 1806. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have no children. In religion they are members of the United Presbyterian church, of which both he and his brother have been strong supporters for a number of years. His father, John Wilson, was one of the early members of the United Presbyterian church of Martic township, and attended it for many years, holding various offices in it. Mr. Wilson has also filled positions of trust and honor in the same church, and is one of its foremost members. Volumes might be written of his Christian benevolence and charity. He is a man of integrity and honor, and well thought of by all who know him.

HENRY CLAY GEMPERLING, the popular court crier, lives in a beautiful home which he has erected on a part of the estate owned by his father, the late Daniel Gemperling, on East Orange street, near Ann street, in Lancaster.

Jacob Gemperling, grandfather of Henry Clay, who was a distiller and a farmer, was born near Rohrerstown; his son Daniel, who was born in Lancaster, died Nov. 13, 1895, at the age of eighty-seven years. The latter and his brother John, were the leading tinsmiths of the city for many years, filling many important contracts. Daniel Gemperling conducted the business on East Orange street alone to within a short time of his death, and became one of the best-known citizens of his time, owning a large amount of real estate, and making his influence felt in business and commercial circles. Anna Hurst, his wife, was a half-sister of Elam Hurst, a prominent citizen of Lancaster, and also a sister of the mother of H. C. Demuth. From this union were born three children, two of whom, William and Anna, died in early childhood, and the only survivor is Henry Clay Gemperling.

Henry Clay Gemperling was born in the large brick mansion at the southwest corner of East King and Jefferson streets, then the home of his parents, in February, 1846, and was educated in the city schools and at John Beck's celebrated school in Lititz. When less than sixteen years old he left school to enlist in the Union army, joining Co. A, 79th P. V. I., Aug. 19, 1861, and served throughout the war, receiving his discharge Aug. 12, 1865. He took a gallant part in all the battles and skirmishes in which his command participated, and was wounded in the arm at Jonesboro, Ga., under Gen. Sherman, being promoted to the position of corporal. After the war Mr. Gemperling was captain of "The Boys in Blue," a campaign organization in the first campaign of Gen. Grant for the presidency. After Gen. Grant's election the boys in blue were organized into two military companies, A and B, and attached to the National Guard of Pennsylvania, Mr. Gemperling being commissioned captain of Co. B, both companies taking part in the inauguration of Gen. Grant as President. Until 1879 he worked with his father at the tinsmith and plumbing trade, and then removed to Ephrata, where he engaged for himself in the same lines. There he remained until March 13, 1895, when he returned to Lancaster, to become a tip-staff in the court house, very shortly being made court crier for court No. 2, and in November, 1899, he was made court crier of the courts of Lancaster county, to fill a vacancy created by the death of Joseph C. Snyder, a position which he still holds.

While living in Ephrata, Mr. Gemperling bought and remodeled a fine property. For fifteen years he was deputy coroner of the district, for nine years he was a notary public, and was the first president of the Pioneer Steam Fire Engine and Hose Company, and was acting in that capacity, when he left the borough; he was commander of Post No. 524, G. A. R., of Ephrata, for three years, and was the second man to be elected burgess after Ephrata became a borough.

While a resident of Lancaster he served as a policeman during Mayor Stauffer's first term, and is remembered as one of the best police officers this city ever had. During his residence in Ephrata he twice arrested Abe Buzzard, the noted outlaw, "putting him behind the bars." This he did as a private citizen, his fellow townsmen calling on him because of his well-known fearlessness. When thieves broke into the store of Schaeffer & Reinhold, at Ephrata, Mr. Gemperling discovered one of the thieves, arrested him, and took him to jail. This same bravery was conspicuous all through his army experiences.

Mr. Gemperling was married Aug. 14, 1869, to Miss Susan Jacobs, daughter of William Adam Jacobs, a farmer living near Beartown, Lancaster county. From this union were born four children: Anna Maria, the wife of E. E. Royer, a farmer of Ephrata township; Martha Alpha, unmarried and at home; Daniel H., a paper hanger; and Henry Clay, Jr., now at school.

JACOB H. ZIEGLER. Among the prominent and successful business enterprises of Lancaster county, the Conoy Township Creamery has taken a leading place, under the efficient management of its owner, Jacob H. Ziegler, a resident of Rowenna.

The founder of the Ziegler family in East Donegal township was Conrad Ziegler, born in 1761, who married Magdalena Schock, born in 1758; his death occurred in 1831 and hers in 1826. Their remains lie with those of other old and honored pioneers in the ancient cemetery of East Donegal. The paternal grandparents of Jacob H. Ziegler were Conrad and Catherine (Schock) Ziegler, his birth occurring in 1801, his death in 1880, while she was born in 1799, and passed out of life in 1854. Conrad Ziegler was one of the most estimable men of his time and locality, a local preacher of the religious denomination known as Dunkards, a good, pious, charitable and upright man.

Jacob H. Ziegler, the subject of this biography, was born on the old homestead Jan. 6, 1857, a son of John and Barbara (Hertzler) Ziegler. The former moved to Elizabethtown, Pa., in the spring of 1887, where he built a comfortable home and there died, in November, 1894, at the age of sixty-six years. During life he had been a prominent and influential man, for many years a director in the First National Bank, of Marietta and was a consistent and valued member of the Dunkard Church.

Jacob H. Ziegler was reared on the homestead and educated in the best schools of the neighborhood, remaining at home until his legal majority, when he engaged in farming in Conoy township, remaining there for four years. Returning to East Donegal, he continued in agricultural operations until 1897, when he removed into Rowenna, having purchased the Conoy Township Creamery, in 1895. This business was established in 1885, by a stock company, and although, for some years it prospered, negligence had permitted it to run down, and in 1895 it was sold at public sale, Mr. Ziegler being the purchaser. His judgment told him that if properly handled, the business could be made a very paying one, and he has proven the truth of his belief.

The marriage of Jacob H. Ziegler occurred Dec. 17, 1878, in Pequea township, to Miss Barbara Hess, and to this union were born: John H., who operates the milk station for his father, in Harrisburg; Mary; Ivah; Barbara; Alice, deceased; Jacob; and Arthur. Mrs. Ziegler was born on the old homestead of her parents, May 25, 1858, a daughter of Jacob and Mary Ann (Herr) Hess; the father was a farmer of prominence and wealth, and was the treasurer of the New Danville and Lancaster Turnpike from the time it was proposed until his death, and he was one of its principal promoters. He was interested in all progressive movements in his section and was instrumental in the building of the United Zion Church, of which he was a member. His life ended in 1898, at the age of seventy years, his wife having passed away in 1879, and both of them were buried in the Pequea Church cemetery. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hess were: Martin H., residing on the old homestead; Barbara; Henry, a farmer of Conestoga township; Mary, who married John W. Eshleman, of Reading, Pa.; Jacob, a farmer of Lampeter; Fanny, who married Aaron B. Hess, the superintendent of the Chemical works in Lancaster; and Susan, who married Martin Rutt, of West Donegal. Mr. Ziegler lost his first wife, and was married again, on May 11, 1898, to Ella M. daughter of T. O. and Emma Fradeneck, of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania.

In politics, Mr. Ziegler votes independently. Without doubt, he is one of the most intelligent men of the township and is interested in every measure looking toward the development of his section. For six years he served as school director, and owns one of the most complete private libraries in Lancaster county. He well represents the best class of citizens of this part of the State.

DANIEL D. HERR is the eldest living representative of the male branch of the fifth generation of a family whose name has ever commanded respect throughout Lancaster county. He himself is a man of active brain and rare business ability, but of this more will be told in a subsequent paragraph. The old homestead in Lancaster township, near Millersville, has remained in the possession of the family for more than a century, and it was there that our subject was born Feb. 28, 1845.

His father, David S. Herr, whose mother's name was Anna Sherk, was born in the same house, June 14, 1816. He began farming for himself on a small parcel of land in Leacock township, purchased for him by his father. There he lived for four years, when he purchased—from the estate of his uncle, Christian Herr—the farm which is at present owned by his son, Daniel D., where the latter conducts the Fairview Nurseries. From 1843 until 1866 David S. Herr remained in this location, and in the latter year he removed to the house which is now occupied by his son John. He is now in his eighty-eighth year, but is still active and vigorous. While not able to do the day's work of fifty years ago, his inborn aversion to idleness renders it easy for him to find some out-door occupation, suited to his years and strength. On Oct. 6, 1840, he married Elizabeth Dentlinger, who was born Feb. 13, 1823, and died Aug. 12, 1867. The issue of this union was one daughter and three sons. Fannie, the eldest of the family, was born Dec. 12, 1841; she married John L.

Gamber, of Manor township, and is now a widow. Daniel D., was the second child and eldest son. David D., was born Oct. 27, 1848, and is a retired farmer, of Hempfield township. John D., the youngest of the family, was born May 26, 1852; he, too, is a farmer, and is also a tobacco dealer.

Daniel D. Herr, the subject of this necessarily brief sketch, is best known to the commercial world as the proprietor and manager of the Fairview Nurseries, to which reference has been already made. His farm, on which they are located, lies two miles west of the city of Lancaster. It embraces 134 acres, of which forty are devoted to uses indicated. He commenced general farming in 1866, but some inborn predilection inclined him toward fruit growing, and he read with avidity as well as shrewd insight and a retentive memory, all the literature bearing on that topic on which he could lay his hands. As a result, when in 1876 he started on his "new departure," it was with a mind theoretically well equipped. His beginning was modest, yet he succeeded from the first, and to-day he carries stock of the highest class, and finds a ready market in every quarter of the United States. Besides the farm on which his nurseries stand, he owns three others, in Manor, Fulton and Manheim townships, yet the care of his large and constantly growing business absorbs all his personal attention. He is also a large stockholder in various industrial and financial enterprises, among them the Manor Township Fire Insurance Co., and the Farmers' Fencing Association. As was the faith of his ancestors, so is his; he is an earnest member of the Mennonite Church. In politics he is a staunch Republican. He takes a deep interest in public affairs, and is ever ready to aid any well matured project promising the promotion of the general welfare. He takes especial interest in education, and has been a member of the school board for fifteen years.

On Nov. 27, 1866, Daniel D. Herr married Adeline Harnish, who was born Aug. 18, 1848, a daughter of Michael S. Harnish, of Manor. Their union has been blessed with four daughters; Fannie, Annie, Elizabeth and Emma. The youngest is unmarried and lives at home with her parents. Fannie married Isaac Neff; Annie is the wife of William R. Rutt, of East Hempfield township; and Elizabeth is Mrs. A. E. Binkley, of Manheim.

FRANK GERBER PENNELL, the efficient and popular postmaster of Mt. Joy, Pa., is also one of the city's prominent business men, and a highly esteemed citizen.

Mr. Pennell was born July 31, 1840, in Warwick township, near Rothsville, a son of Thomas Wilson and Christiann (Gerber) Pennell, the former of whom was a native of Chester county, and the latter of Lancaster. In 1830, the father, Thomas W. Pennell, came to Lancaster county and settled in Warwick township, where he followed milling and pump-making; and in 1888 came to Mt. Joy, in order to pass his last years with his son. Since 1852 his residence had been in Marietta, where he was well known and where he died in 1890, and many old friends remembered him with esteem and lamented his death, although he had far outlived the age allotted by the Psalmist. His wife died in 1843, at the early age of twenty-seven years. Although she had been reared in the Presbyterian Church, she became connected later with the Lutheran Church. The two children of this marriage were Frank and a little sister, Mary, who died at the age of four years.

The second marriage of Thomas Wilson Pennell was to Catherine Bear, who died in 1894, at the age of seventy-five. The children born of this union were: Amanda, who married S. N. Enswiler, a machinist of Marietta; Sarah, who married Samuel Fisher, of Columbia, Pa.; and John, of Mt. Joy, who is associated with Frank G. Pennell in the carriage and wagon-making business in Mt. Joy.

The paternal grandparents of Frank G. Pennell were Hon. Benjamin and Jane (Wilson) Pennell, of Chester county, who were leading members in the Presbyterian Church in that locality. They came to Lancaster county and located in Lancaster in 1830, and Mr. Pennell soon took a prominent part in public affairs. His trade was that of wool carder, but his appointment to the office of justice of the peace in Warwick township had absorbed much of his time. During 1841-3 he was a member of the Legislature, and his last days were spent in teaching school, as he was a man of superior attainments. His death was in Lancaster, in 1864, at the age of eighty, his wife having passed away in October, 1860, at the age of eighty-four. The maternal grandparents passed their lives in Lancaster, where Jacob Gerber was long held in respect.

When Frank Gerber Pennell was three years old his young mother passed away and he was taken to the home of his grandfather Pennell, who at that time was teaching school. Under the watchful care of his grandfather he was well instructed, and he remained with him until 1847, when his father married again, and Frank returned home. At the age of twelve, however, he entered the cotton mills in Lancaster, where he worked for the following four years and served an apprenticeship, covering three years, as a silver plater. His choice of work, however, was found in Mt. Joy, in a wagon and carriage-making shop, where he put in practice his knowledge of nickle plating.

About this time came the outbreak of the Civil war, and among those who quickly answered the call for troops was Frank G. Pennell, who connected himself with the U. S. Marines and was in continual service for four years. Until the fall of Vicksburg he served in the Mississippi squadron and then was sent to the Atlantic squadron, but later was transferred to the Pacific squadron, and was honorably discharged at Mare Island, Cal. He returned home, where he found his old situation awaiting him, and there Mr. Pennell remained until 1891, when he purchased his present place of business, where he conducts wagon and carriage-making in the most modern style of manufacture.

Although closely attending to his regular business, Mr. Pennell has found time to take much interest in the affairs of his city, and for three years served as clerk of the council; a justice of the peace for four years, he conducted the business pertaining to that office with efficiency, but resigned in the middle of his last term. In 1873 Gov. Hartranft appointed him a notary public and he continued to serve in that capacity until July, 1899, when he was made postmaster of Mt. Joy, by President McKinley. An ardent and active Republican, he has done valiant work for his party and takes an important position in its deliberations.

On Feb. 16, 1868, Frank G. Pennell and Charlotte Smaling were united in matrimony, and the children born to this marriage are: Thomas, who died in infancy; Emma, a young lady, at home; Catherine, who died in infancy; Frank, who is associated with his father in business; and Alberta, a young lady, at home. Mrs. Charlotte (Smaling) Pennell was born in Mt. Joy, May 6, 1840, a daughter of George and Catharine Smaling, of Lancaster county, the former of whom was a wagon maker of Mt. Joy.

Since the age of twenty-one Mr. Pennell has been connected with the I. O. O. F., and also belongs to the other social orders of Red Men, K. of P., and of the G. A. R., of Mt. Joy. As a public official he has given universal satisfaction, and is regarded as something of a leader, being a man of high character, who has proven his loyalty to both friends and party.

IKE FRANCE, whose careful study and practical experience in the line of insurance make him one of the best informed men on that subject in the State, was born at Heckmondwike, Yorkshire, England, in February, 1853, son of Mark France, an agricultural laborer.

The lad attended school until he was seven years old, when he was employed in a brickyard carrying bricks, and from that time to the age of thirteen he served as a stable and errand boy on the farm where his father was employed. He was then apprenticed to learn the currier's trade, so continuing until he was twenty-one. When he was nineteen, his father died. Continuing at his trade until he was twenty-three, Mr. France was compelled to seek a change of occupation on account of failing health. Entering the services of the Prudential Life Insurance Co., of London, he became a field agent in the Huddersfield District (Yorkshire) and devoted some years to the thorough canvass of his native town and surrounding villages. While employed there he was engaged among two hundred insurance agents to come to this country by the Metropolitan Life In-insurance Co., of New York City, and to introduce the system of Industrial Life Insurance amongst the working classes of the American people. Arriving in New York, July 26, 1880, he was sent as assistant superintendent to Lowell, Mass., thence to Haverhill, Mass., and Manchester, N. H., and finally to Boston, working in that end of the State for eight years. For three years he was superintendent in West Philadelphia, and was then called to Worcester, Mass., where after three years as superintendent in that district he was transferred back to Philadelphia, where he met with a severe trolley car accident while performing his duties, and this necessitated rest for about a year. When again able to resume work, he was sent to a smaller field of labor, spending a year in the Hudson, N. Y., district; and on Feb. 2, 1897, he came to Lancaster as superintendent for his company and which had not as yet had a satisfactory business from this city. Mr. France studied the local conditions, and determined to win a business for his company that would be in every way satisfactory. His earnest work wrought a great change. Instead of three assistant superintendents he had five, instead of fifteen agents he had twenty-nine; instead of collecting weekly $894.04, he had in (April, 1901) $1,483.49, in the same territory, in weekly collections, and on which, had been collected $2,929 of advance collections in premiums not then due from members. The intermediate policies—never less than $500, and as high as the applicant cares to go—were increased to $70,500 in four years, with a goodly number of $10,000 policies outstanding. Mr. France made a most admirable record in the four years he was the Metropolitan's superintendent here. In April, 1901, after a period of long continued sickness, and three months short of completing twenty-one years' service, he was placed on the retired list by the company he had so long represented, and was given a most liberal pension as a reward for faithful service.

In religious faith Mr. France is a Wesleyan, and in fraternal relations a Mason, and a member of the Commercial Traveling Men's Association. While as thorough an American as though he had been born here, he never forgets nor belittles the glorious country from which he sprang, and is a typical English-American. In the eastern suburbs of Lancaster he has invested in a beautiful home, and he has made himself honored and respected in this, the city of his adoption.

SAMUEL STONEROAD, a retired farmer of New Providence, is one of the leading men of Providence township, and its largest taxpayer. Mr. Stoneroad was born Feb. 2, 1828, in Lancaster county, son of Thomas Stoneroad, who was accidentally killed while engaged in digging a well.

Thomas Stoneroad, the grandfather of our subject, was one of the early settlers of Lancaster county, of German parentage, and during his life was considered one of the best millwrights in his locality. His son Thomas was born in 1790, became a millwright also and engaged in farming. He had seven children, four of whom grew to maturity, namely: John, Henry, Susan and Samuel, but all of them have passed away with the exception of Samuel.

Samuel Stoneroad was only seven years old when his father met with his tragic death, and soon after this event his mother also died. His education was very meagre, and was obtained with great difficulty, consisting of interrupted attendance during the winter seasons in the public schools of his locality, and from an early age he was obliged to care for himself. That he possessed unusual ability must be acknowledged, for from that unfavorable beginning Mr. Stoneroad worked as a farmer, saved his money, and now in advanced years is one of the most substantial men of that part of the county, owning two of the best farms in Providence township, one containing ninety-six acres and the other seventy-two acres, and paying a larger tax than any other citizen.

On Feb. 10, 1848, Mr. Stoneroad was married to Miss Annie Mower, daughter of George Mower, of Strasburg township, and two children were born to this union, namely: Thomas, born in 1849, who died at the age of seven years; and Franklin, born the year previously, who is the farmer for his father. He married Miss Emma Winters, and they have one son, Samuel, and one daughter, Anna. Mrs. Samuel Stoneroad died in 1882.

Mr. Stoneroad has always adhered to the principles of the Republican party. For many years he has been a consistent member of the Mennonite Church, and he is highly respected in his community for his honest and upright character.

JOHN R. BITNER, who passed away Aug. 29, 1897, was for an ordinary life time one of the most conspicuous figures in Lancaster, no man there being more prominent in banking and business circles. He was born in Lancaster Aug. 7, 1826, a son of Abraham Bitner.

Abraham Bitner, whose ancestors were of German origin and among the early settlers of Pennsylvania, was born in 1791 in York county. By trade he was a carpenter, but he was a chairmaker and flour merchant in Lancaster most of his active business life. Religiously he was a member of and officially connected with the German Reformed Church of the city. He married Elizabeth Porter (1799-1856), also a member of the same church. Their children who reached manhood and womanhood were: Anna R., wife of George Dietrich; Jacob; Sarah W.; John R.; Charles Augustus; Abraham; Benjamin F., of Trenton, N. J., who died Dec. 13, 1902; David P.; and Mary M. All have passed away except Abraham, of Lancaster.

John R. Bitner received his early education in the schools of Lancaster, and at the age of thirteen began learning the trade of cabinetmaking, at which he continued until 1846. For one year following he was in the employ of the State railroad. In 1847, in company with his brother, C. A. Bitner (trading as John R. Bitner & Bro.), he purchased a few cars and established a fast freight line between Lancaster and Philadelphia, the cars being run on the State railroad, and subsequently on the Pennsylvania railroad tracks. Their business increasing, additional cars were placed on the road from time to time, until they were the owners of some thirty cars, which they ran in transporting and forwarding merchandise over the railroads of this and other States. They were the leading firm in their line in this section of the State, and did a thriving business from 1857 until the dissolution of the partnership, in 1874. In the year 1848 they had also become engaged, in connection with their freighting business, in grain operations, and in shipping grain to different points in the East, which afterward developed into a prosperous trade. In 1854, with others, they were interested in building the Eden Paper Mills, and had large interests in the same. In 1855 they built a steam flouring-mill in Lancaster, which had a capacity of 150 barrels per day, and which they continued to operate until 1863, when, owing to the large demands made for supplies to the Union army, and a consequent need of storage room, they took down the mill to make room for an extensive warehouse on the same site.

John R. Bitner & Bro. were large contractors for the Government during the war, furnishing supplies to the army, and their transactions were so satisfactory that at the close of the conflict the Government applied to them for supplies for the old army stock until it could be disposed of. In 1865 they were members of the company that built the Fulton cotton mill, but they disposed of their interest in it four years later; they were also members of the company that built, the same year, the Printers' paper mills at Binkley's Bridge (which were burned in November, 1882), in which John R. Bitner retained a large interest for years. The firm of John R. Bitner & Bro. continued their freighting business until 1874, when Mr. Bitner purchased his brother's interest, continued it alone until 1882, and sold out the business to the Pennsylvania Railway Company.

Mr. Bitner was one of the original founders of the noted summer resort Ocean Beach, on the New Jersey coast; a director in the New Egypt, Farmingdale & Long Branch railroad, of New Jersey, for some time; and in 1865, in company with others, founded a forwarding and commission house at No. 811 Market street, Philadelphia, in which he retained a partnership until 1870. He was a member of both branches of the Lancaster city council for several terms; served for three years as prison inspector for Lancaster county; as director of the Lancaster County National Bank some seven years; as director of the Quarryville railroad; and in February, 1882, was one of the organizers of the Fulton National Bank of Lancaster, of which he was chosen president.

On April 26, 1852, Mr. Bitner married Fianna, daughter of David Wiedler, a farmer of Lancaster county, and they had the following children: Jacob S.; Lillie W., Mrs. J. C. Martin, who died June 30, 1881; William H.; D. Edwin; Anna M.; Abraham; Alfred F.; and Helen O. Mr. Bitner passed away universally beloved and most deeply regretted; but it is a source of satisfaction to his friends that his son, Abraham, now occupying a responsible position in the Fulton National Bank of Lancaster, should be so closely connected with a financial institution of which his father was one of the organizers, and, at the time of his death, the honored head.

HENRY E. MILLER. The family of Mr. Miller is an old and honored one in Lancaster county. His grandfather, who was also named Henry, was one of three brothers who settled near Salunga about the time of the war of the Revolution. He was a large land owner, successful farmer, and a member of the Old Mennonite Church. He lived to be nearly seventy years old, and at his death enjoyed the confidence and respect of the entire community. He married a Miss Shenk, whose father was one of the pioneer settlers in the valley of the Chickies, near Salunga. He pre-empted and patented several large tracts of land, and built two mills upon the stream named. One of these is still known as the Shenk Mill, the other as the Garber Mill. To Mr. and Mrs. Henry Miller six children were born. The eldest, John, was the father of Henry E., who is now the head of this branch of the Miller family. He was born Oct. 15, 1797, and died Sept. 23, 1850, a farmer and a man of influence. He was long a member of the school board, and served for many years as supervisor. He was a Whig in politics, and like his father, a Mennonite in religious faith. On March 22, 1825, he married Elizabeth Erb. She was born Nov. 9, 1804, and died Aug. 29, 1862. They were the parents of eleven children: Emanuel, born Jan. 11, 1826, who died in infancy; Daniel, born May 22, 1827, who died Oct. 23, 1895, at Elizabethtown, Pa., where he had been first a farmer and then for many years an innkeeper; Susanna, born Feb. 19, 1829, the wife of David Weaver, of Manheim; Henry E.; John E., born Aug. 22, 1833, who learned the trade of a tailor and is a cutter at Portsmouth, Ohio; Andrew, born April 8, 1836, who died at the age of one month; Elizabeth, born April 29, 1837, who died Feb. 16, 1839; Joseph E., a farmer of Columbia, Lancaster county, born Sept. 5, 1840; Reuben E., born Oct. 14, 1842, a day laborer at Salunga; Catherine, born Oct. 21, 1844, the wife of Levi B. Zug, a farmer living near Lititz; Elizabeth, the youngest child, born Feb. 7, 1847, who died Aug. 22, 1863.

Henry E. Miller was born Nov. 10, 1831. His early educational advantages were of the limited character at that time afforded by the common schools, and even of these he was deprived at the age of sixteen years by the failing health of his father, which compelled his supervision of affairs upon the farm. He was barely nineteen when his father died and the farm and personalty connected therewith were sold, and he, with his mother, erected another house, which was their home for eleven years. His filial devotion was constant and unshaken and its memory is one of his precious recollections as the fading hues of life's sunset begin to illumine his later years. On Dec. 23, 1862, he married Amelia K. Miller, daughter of Tobias and Elizabeth H. (Kauffman) Miller, and to her unselfish devotion and unwearied aid he attributes much of his success in life. She was born May 29, 1842. In the year succeeding his marriage he entered into partnership with his brother-in-law, Hiram K. Miller, in the conduct of a general store at Petersburg. At the end of two years the firm dissolved and Mr. Henry E. Miller removed to Salunga, where he opened a store of his own. He remained there for three years, engaged in trade and holding the office of postmaster, and at the expiration of that period returned to Petersburg, where he lived in retirement until 1871, when he removed to Lititz, and has since made his home there. Shortly after coming there, he erected a store at the intersection of Broad and Orange streets, which he stocked and personally conducted until 1882. In that year he disposed of his business, leasing the realty for four years. Still retaining his residence at Lititz, he opened and operated a store at Ephrata, which he successfully conducted for four years. In 1886 he sold this, and, returning to Lititz, resumed business in his old building, the lease of which had expired. After eight years, having concluded to retire from business, he once more disposed of his establishment and since 1894 has not been engaged in any active occupation. For three years he and his family lived in apartments above the store, which he retained for his own use, but in 1897 he erected a handsome, modern residence on Broad street, which is his domicile to-day. About the same time he sold the store property in which he had so long carried on business and which had been for so many years his dwelling place. In addition to conducting a general store, Mr. Miller was for two years largely interested in packing tobacco, and has been to a considerable extent engaged in buying and selling horses, being exceedingly fond of a good steed and an extremely good judge of equine excellence. He has, moreover, erected several buildings of his own, thereby gaining an experience which admirably qualified him for the supervision of the public buildings, a task which he has been frequently called upon to perform; for nine years he served upon the school board and for six years was a member of the municipal council, and in these capacities had charge of the construction of numerous edifices for public use. He was one of the organizers of the Lititz Bank and for years one of its directors. At present (1900) he is a member of the directorate of the Northern National Bank of Lancaster. Politically he is a Republican; he and his family are members of the Moravian Church.

To Mr. and Mrs. Miller two daughters have been born,—Mary Amanda and Bessie Maud. The elder was born June 28, 1866, and is the wife of Jacob G. Rinwold, the proprietor of the "Lancaster Hotel." She is the mother of four children, Grace, Henry, Chester and Frank. Bessie Maud, the younger daughter, was born June 12, 1869. She married Frank D. Leinbach, of Robesonia, Berks county, a coal and lumber merchant. They are the parents of one son, Louis.

Mrs. Henry E. Miller is the granddaughter of John and the daughter of Tobias M. Miller. Her grandfather was for many years proprietor of an inn at Marietta. He was born March 14, 1786, and died in his eighty-eighth year. Her father, Tobias M., was one of a family of seven children born to John and his wife, Susanna. Maria, the eldest, married a Mr. Zellers; Elizabeth died in childhood; John was a traveling salesman for a Philadelphia shoe house and died at Chicago; Samuel (commonly known as "Captain") was a retired hotel keeper and died in Marietta in 1897; Benjamin died at Newport, Pa.; Henry passed away at Medway, Ohio.

Tobias M. Miller, the youngest child of John, and the father of Mrs. Henry E. Miller, was born March 8, 1815. He was a merchant tailor of Petersburg, where he carried on business for twenty years. He died Nov. 27, 1856. His wife, Elizabeth H. Kauffman, whom he married on May 26, 1836, was born Feb. 16, 1816, near Petersburg. The last years of her life were spent with her daughter, Mrs. Henry E. Miller, at whose home she entered into rest Oct. 22, 1896, at the age of four score years. To Tobias M. Miller and his wife three children were born, Hiram K., Mary Amanda and Amelia K. Hiram K. was born Dec. 6, 1837; he was a farmer, merchant and tobacco packer of Petersburg, and died Feb. 11, 1896. Mary Amanda, born March 16, 1839, married on Dec. 6, 1856, Benjamin Metz, of Clarence Centre, Erie Co., N. Y. Amelia K., Mrs. Henry E. Miller, was born May 29, 1842.

JOHN F. LEECH, long and favorably identified with the agricultural interests of Bart township, Lancaster county, where he made an enviable reputation for himself as a practical and successful farmer, was born in Sadsbury township, Oct. 4, 1837, and is a son of John G. and Maria (Rockey) Leech. The father was born in Lancaster county, in 1797, where the mother also was born, in 1801. They were married in this county in 1820, and located in Sadsbury township, where the father followed the butcher business until he purchased the family home in Bart township in 1840. This farm he greatly improved, building him a stone house and a fine barn, and there he remained until his death in 1869. His widow made her home with her son, John F., until her death in 1890.

John G. Leech was the son of George and Elizabeth (Hastings) Leech, who were both born in Gap, Lancaster county. He was a son of Francis Leech, who came from Ireland before the Revolution, and settled at Gap, where he married Isabella Griffith, who belonged to a wealthy Quaker family of Lancaster county. They settled at Gap, where he owned a fine farm property. George, their son, and the grandfather of John F., built the hotel property, which is still in use in Gap; there he died, leaving five sons and two daughters. (1) William died a single man. (2) George, born at Gap, married a Miss Caldwell, of Curwensville, Clearfield county, where he lived and died. He was a prominent lumberman, and at one time served as sheriff of the county. He was father of the following children: George, Hiram, Hugh, James, Robert, Mary J., Amelia and Susan, all of whom are married and settled in Clearfield county, with the exception of Mary, who married and moved to the West. (3) Francis married and moved to Jefferson county, where he died. (4) Thomas married a Miss Rockey, a sister of the mother of John F., and settled on a farm in Sadsbury township, where he died, leaving a family, all of whom are now dead. (5) Anna Leech and (6) Elizabeth Leech were unmarried, and died at Gap, both at the advanced age of ninety years.

(7) John G. Leech, the father of John F., left a family of ten children. (1) William was born in 1821, married Mary Homsher, and settled in Philadelphia, where he was engaged in a contracting and building business for many years. Later in life he moved to Pomeroy, Pa., where he was engaged as a merchant and a general business man until his death in 1890. One of his sons is the agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Pomeroy. The children of this family were: John S., of Pomeroy; William H., of Philadelphia; Lewis, of Pomeroy; Emma, who died at Pomeroy, a young woman of character and culture.

(2) Jacob Leech, born in Sadsbury township in 1823, married a Miss Griffith, of Philadelphia, where they lived at the time of her death. His second wife was Miss Margaret Watson, of Chester county. They still reside in Philadelphia, where he is engaged in business. Their children are as follows: Susan, who married Harry Bailey; Anna, the wife of John Phenegar, of Philadelphia; Belle, the wife of Charles Stacey, residing in Philadelphia; Emily, who married Harry Kendrick, of Philadelphia; Thomas, married and living in Philadelphia, where his brother George also lives.

(3) George Leech, born in Sadsbury township in 1824, married a Miss Catherine Phenegar, of Bart township, who moved with him to Ohio during the Civil war, and there died, leaving the following family: Susan, Malinda, Mary, Sarah and George. Mr. Leech married for his second wife Miss Emily Powers, of this county, and returned to Ohio, where he still lives. Of the four children born to this union, Maggie is the only one living.

(4) Anna E. Leech, born in Sadsbury township in 1820, married Albert Rhea. They lived and died in Philadelphia. Their son, Sylvester, still lives in that city.

(5) Mary J. Leech, born in 1830, died in an early and promising young womanhood.

(6) Thomas J. Leech, born in 1832, married Miss Prudence Wilson, of Philadelphia, where he is now living a retired life, after a very successful career as a business man. They had four children; Jefferson, Frank, Louella and Gertrude.

(7) Catherine Leech, born in 1834, is the wife of William Ashby, of Chester, Delaware Co., Pa., and is the mother of Emma; Lillie, the wife of Caleb Cantnell; Ella, the wife of Robert Stainton; and Anna, all of Chester.

(8) Susan Leech, born in 1836, married Joseph Miller, of Russellville, Chester county; she has since died, leaving one son, Joseph Dewees.

(9) John F.

(10) Johanna Leech, born in Bart township in 1841, married Charles Wright, of Bart township where they now reside.

John F. Leech was reared in Bart township, where he secured his education in the home schools. Until 1859 he remained on the home farm, when he went to Columbus, Ohio, where he engaged in business. In 1860 he came back to the old home in Bart township, and in 1861 enlisted in the Union Army, as a member of Co. B, 79th P. V. I., at that time under the command of Col. Ham-bright, of Lancaster. The regiment was mustered into service at Camp Curtin, joined the Army of the Tennessee, at that time under Gen. Thomas, and later served under Gen. Sherman in his celebrated March to the Sea. Mr. Leech was engaged in the battle of Perryville and in a number of minor skirmishes. After Bragg's retreat from Kentucky, the 79th was in active service until it brought up at Nashville, after much heavy fighting all through that campaign. It fought seven days continuously at Murphreesboro, and was in the thickest of the battle at Chattanooga. In the first day's fight at this last battlefield, Mr. Leech was wounded in the groin by a minie ball. On account of this injury he was detained for a long time in the military hospital at Nashville. On rejoining his regiment Mr. Leech was again wounded at Bentonville by shell, and his recovery was regarded as little less than a miracle. Until the close of the war he was under treatment in the military hospital at Goldsboro, North Carolina, when he was sent to Washington in time to participate in the grand review with his regiment. Mr. Leech was mustered out in that city.

Mr. Leech returned to the old home, and took charge of the farming operations, caring for his aged parents as long as they lived. He was married Dec. 13, 1866, to Miss Rachel Davis, of Paradise township, a daughter of Walter and Rachel (Ferree) Davis. She was born in Sadsbury township, near Gap, Dec. 1, 1839, and was educated in the Bart schools. Her father, who was born in Ireland, came to this country when a young man, and married Miss Rachel Ferree, the daughter of Phillip and Elizabeth (Slaymaker) Ferree. These families may be traced back to the early days of the country. Walter Davis settled in Paradise township, where he spent the greater part of his life in farming. In his later years he moved to Bart township, where he resided at the time of his death in 1853. His widow lived until June, 1886. Five of their children are still living. Mrs. Leech is a descendant of one of the first white families to reach Lancaster county. Mrs. Mary Ferree was a widow who came from France with her children in 1704, and is supposed to have been the first white woman that settled in Paradise township. Of the children of the Davis family still living, Elizabeth is Mrs. Jacob Rife, of Bart township; Sarah Davis married William Hamer of Bart township, and removed to Harrisburg; Joseph F. Davis is now a resident of Paradise township; Rachel is Mrs. Leech; Susannah Davis is the wife of Daniel Sheesley, of Harrisburg, and has a family of five children.

After the marriage of John F. Leech he became the possessor of the old Leech homestead, where he and his wife have lived to the present time. They have a family of six children.

(1) Amy, born in Bart township, in January, 1868, was educated in the local schools, and graduated from the Millersville State Normal School. For eleven years she has been a successful teacher in the Lancaster county public schools.

(2) Ella, born in July, 1869, married Frank Trout, of Bart township. They now live in West Virginia, where he is engaged in business as a merchant. They have two children, Marian and William Ferree.

(3) William Ferree, born in April, 1872, became a machinist, and is now employed in the oil fields of California. (4) Jacob H. Leech died when nineteen years of age. He was born in 1874.

(5) Anna M., born in 1876, was educated in the home schools, and later was a student in the Philadelphia Shorthand University where she became adept in shorthand and type-writing. She has spent sometime as shorthand writer in different offices of Philadelphia.

(6) John M., born in 1879, was reared at home, and became a clerk in the Nickel Mines store for some time. Later he was a shipping clerk in Lancaster, and is now carrying on a store of his own at Buyerstown. He is unmarried.

Mr. and Mrs. Leech are members of the Methodist Church of Georgetown. In politics he has always been a Republican, and for seventeen years has been school director in Bart township. He was appointed by the Government to look after the interests of indigent soldiers in this district. Mr. Leech is regarded as a man of sterling worth and genuine character, and enjoys a host of friends.

JOHN A. BURGER has for many years been known as one of the most prominent contracting builders, not only in Lancaster and vicinity, but throughout the State. Although not actively engaged in business now, as in previous years, he is still interested in building as the head of the firm of J. A. Burger & son.

Mr. Burger is a native of Allendorf, Prussia, born Dec. 20, 1828. His father, Philip Adam Burger, whose birth occurred in the same province, was a farmer, and followed that occupation till called to his reward. He married Elizabeth Seelbach, who was born in the same locality, and to their union came five children. John A. Burger, the only member of the family now living, was reared in his native land, where he received a good education. At the age of thirteen and a half years he was apprenticed to learn the carpenter's trade, at which he served two and a half years, and later worked as a journeyman carpenter. He contrived to escape the military draft. For a year he was employed in Dusseldorf, on the Rhine, and in the spring of 1849 he embarked on a sailing vessel, leaving Bremen Feb. 24th, and landing in New York City on the 1st of May. For about three weeks he worked in the metropolis, and then came to Lancaster county, Pa., and engaged to work with B. B. Martin, in Millersville. In 1852 he became a contractor and builder, and for eighteen years was engaged in erecting barns and residences for the settlers of Manor township. He put up the largest barn in the county, a two-story building, 90x120 feet in size, on the farm belonging to Christian B. Herr. In 1869 Mr. Burger came to settle permanently in the city of Lancaster, and soon became recognized as the most prominent builder and contractor in the city. Among other buildings which he has erected in Lancaster are two of the largest school-houses, and six other school buildings; and four market houses, situated in the eastern, western, southern and central parts of the town, respectively. Two churches, and many ware-houses, store and office buildings, show marks of his handiwork. He erected the Trust Company's building and the People's Bank, both of which are as fine structures of their kind as are to be found in the State; and he also built a number of the residences of the leading citizens, among them those of the late John Keller, John D. Skiles, B. B. Martin, B. F. Fshleman, William D. Sprecher, D. P. Locher and George D. Sprecher. He also built the "Stevens House." Between the fall of 1875 and the following year Mr. Burger erected fifteen buildings for the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, besides which he put up the large Opera House on Broad street, Affenbach's garden and the dwelling of Mr. Lockard, superintendent of the Pennsylvania railroad. During that summer he had in his employ about five hundred men, and the superintendence of so many buildings in course of construction at the same time told severely on his health. He has since taken life more moderately, and has not engaged in works of such magnitude and importance. He built the place known as Burger's Block, in which he still owns five buildings, and also other property in different parts of the city. In 1889 Mr. Burger's son, Adam N., became a partner in the business. They have built an industrial school in Port Deposit; the Thome Institute; the Soldiers' Orphans' School at Scotland, Franklin Co., Pa.; the new Chester County Insane Asylum; and, during 1901, erected large buildings in Harrisburg and Coatesville.

John Adam Burger

In 1852 Mr. Burger was married, in Millersville, to Miss Elizabeth Neff, who was born in Baden, Germany, daughter of Christof Neff, who died in Lancaster. Mr. and Mrs. Burger had five children, of whom two are still living: Adam N. and Frances E. The former was educated in the State Normal School at Millersville, and at Franklin and Marshall College, where he was a student for two years. His marriage to Miss Anna C. Miller has been blessed by the birth of two sons, Robert and Charles. Frances E. was married Jan. 2, 1900, to Dr. Milton Ursinus Gerhard, of Lancaster. Mrs. Burger passed to her reward June 1, 1893.

In religious connection Mr. Burger is an active member of the First Reformed Church. Politically he is a Republican. He has been a director in the Lancaster Home Mutual Fire Insurance Co. for a number of years.

MILTON URSINUS GERHARD, M. D., who married Frances E., only daughter of John A. Burger, was born in Bucks county, Pa., where his father, the late Rev. W. T. Gerhard, was then stationed. He was educated in the public schools of Lancaster and Franklin and Marshall College, from which he was graduated in 1871. After teaching four years (two of them in Lancaster) he read medicine with the late Dr. John L. Atlee, Sr., he being that distinguished surgeon's last student. He was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1877. After acting as assistant in a private sanitarium at Canandaigua, N. Y., for three years, Dr. Gerhard became first assistant in the State Insane Asylum, at Harrisburg, remaining there ten years and then removing to Lancaster, where he permanently located in January, 1900. He makes a specialty of the treatment of nervous diseases and inebriety, in which he has had much experience, and in the relief of which he has been far more than ordinarily successful.

Dr. Gerhard and his wife make their home with Mr. Burger, at No. 43 South Prince street. Mrs. Gerhard has for some years taken her mother's place as the head of the home, which, as the wife of Dr. Gerhard, she still gladdens.

JOHN MECK. The pioneer of the Meck family, in Lancaster county, Pa., was Nicholas Meck, who left his home in the village of Beyrland, Germany, far back in 1755 and sought a new home among the fertile lands of the State of Pennsylvania, locating in Lancaster county, where he found the Lefever family already settled. Of them he purchased 103 acres of meadow and timber land and this property has been cultivated and improved for five succeeding generations and kept jealously in the hands of the family.

Nicholas Meck was the great-grandfather of the present representatives of the name, and followed farming through a long life. His son, Philip Meck, came into possession of the homestead, and added to the family property, at the time of his decease owning three of the best farms in the county, two of them situated in West Lampeter, and one near Petersburg. His standing was high in the Lutheran Church, and he had the respect of his fellow-citizens. He married Catherine Ament, and they reared a family of four children: John; Jacob, a farmer, who died at the age of fifty; George, the father of the present bearer of the name, a farmer, who lived to be eighty-eight years old; and Catherine, who married Jacob Lefever, of West Lampeter, and lived to be almost eighty years.

Grandfather Philip Meck was a soldier of the Continental army, during the Revolutionary war and suffered all the deprivations and trials incident to those stormy times, bearing himself gallantly all through the struggle. His son George, was born and reared in West Lampeter, and lived an honest, industrious life, the last twenty years of it in retirement. In his younger days he cut a great deal of wood and engaged in the manufacture and sale of wooden pipes for the conduct of water, these being much used in various ways on farms. His farming operations brought him ample returns, and at his death he was regarded as one of the township's most substantial men. A consistent member of the Lutheran Church for many years, he became attracted late in life to the pious and simple observances of the Mennonite Church.

George Meck married Martha Nuding, born in Germany, who came to this country with her father, John Nuding, and lived to the age of seventy-five years, becoming the good and devoted mother of nine children: Catherine, deceased, who married (first) Amos K. Raub, and (second) Frederick Neff; Mary, now a widow, who married John Furry, and moved to Ohio; Martha, married to Josiah Swinehardt, of Wayne county, Ohio; George, deceased; Philip, a resident of Lampeter; John, a resident of West Lampeter township; David, a farmer, who died at the age of sixty-one; Susan, the widow of Samuel Wycker, a resident of Bart township, and Lydia, the widow of Jacob Burkholder, of West Lampeter.

John Meck was born on the old homestead, Aug.

9, 1831, and grew up a farmer boy, receiving his education in the public schools of his district. At the age of twenty-two he decided to engage in farming operations for himself; and in 1860 he married Maria Houser, a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Brackbill) Houser, and then located on the farm which they so long occupied, this being pleasantly situated in West Lampeter township, four miles south-east of Lancaster City, and consisting of sixty-nine acres, where he successfully followed farming until the time of his death. Two sets of buildings are upon this place, one of these, the more modern, having been erected in 1885, by Mr. Meck.

Three children were born to John Meck and his worthy wife: George H., who is a farmer on his father's place, is married to Amanda Doner, and has four children, Ralph, Stella, Earl, and Paul; Jacob A., a farmer of East Lampeter, who married Mary Roher, and has three children, Edna, Ada and Roher; and Lydia E., living with her mother.

On March 25, 1901, John Meck passed away, at the age of sixty-eight years, and his influence, always in the direction of temperance, education and morality, is much missed in the community. He and his wife were both exemplary members of the Old Mennonite Church. Since his death his widow and her daughter have lived in the village of Lampeter.

MARTIN MILLER, for many years a prominent farmer citizen of Lititz, Lancaster county, where he was living retired at the time of his death, was born Aug. 20, 1823, on the home farm in Manheim township, and was educated in the district school.

John Miller, father of Martin, was born Jan. 16, 1797, and died Nov. 4, 1883. By his marriage in 1822 with Charlotte, daughter of John Weidler, of Manheim township, he became the father of the following named children: Martin; Mary Ann, widow of Jonas B. Nolt, residing on North Duke street, Lancaster; Andrew, who died in early childhood; Susan, who also died when a child; and Lavinia, wife of Aaron H. Summy, of Lancaster. The mother of these children died in February, 1882.

Martin Miller assisted on the home farm until he was twenty-three years old, then married, and two years later purchased a farm of 160 acres about one mile northwest of Lititz, which he made into a model place. He resided upon it until 1868, when he turned it over to his son, and retired to pass the remainder of his years in ease and comfort at Lititz.

Mr. Miller was four times married. His first wife, whom he wedded in 1846, was Miss Catherine Johnston, a daughter of Benjamin Johnston; she was born near Lancaster City, and died in 1868, at the age of forty-four years, leaving one child, Johnston Miller; he became one of the leading farmers in Warwick township, though later he removed to Lititz and followed the insurance business. He married Miss Emma Minnich, and became the father of three children, John M., Bessie and Emma. He died in 1891.

The second marriage of Mr. Miller took place in 1874, to Mrs. Ann (Wallace) Wise, widow of Christian Wise. She died in 1879, and in 1884, Mr. Miller chose for his third wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Shirk, widow of Isaac Shirk. Mrs. Elizabeth Miller passed away in 1896, and in the fall of 1897, Mr. Miller contracted his fourth marriage with Mrs. Elizabeth Minnich, widow of John Minnich, and daughter of James and Ellanor (Leslie) Stillwell. They lived in quiet contentment in Lititz, where his death took place Aug. 28, 1901. He was a member of the German Baptist Church, as is also his widow.

Mr. Miller was a stockholder in the Lancaster County Bank, and in the Farmers' National Bank of Lancaster, as well as in the Lancaster Trust Company, the Lancaster Electric Light Company, the Lititz National Bank, and the Ephrata & Lancaster Turnpike Company. He never failed to invest his means in any enterprise that gave promise to increase the benefits and prosperity of his township and county. In politics he was a Republican from the time the party was founded.

HOFFER. With the best development of Mt. Joy township the name of Hoffer has ever been connected; Lancaster and adjoining counties have had more than one occasion to be grateful to some representative of the family bearing that honored name.

Matthias Hoffer, from whom the Hoffers in this country are descended, was born in Klein Heunigen, Canton Basle, Switzerland, Aug. 24, 1718 (old style), and immigrated to America, landing at Philadelphia, Sept. 2, 1743. He married Maria Wohlweider, daughter of a farmer, and settled near Manheim. The wife died Jan. 25, 1778, leaving six sons and six daughters. Mr. Hoffer subsequently married a second wife, who bore him five sons and one daughter.

John Hoffer, fifth son of Matthias, married Barbara Long, and resided in Londonderry, now Conewago township, Dauphin county, where he died Dec. 4, 1837. He was the father of eight children, six sons and two daughters, of whom Samuel, George, John and Joshua, all settled in this locality and reared families. Their descendants are still living in this and adjoining counties.

John (2), fourth son of John, married Mary Reider, and resided in Conewago township, Dauphin county, where he died May 21, 1866. He had three children: Isaac, of Lebanon; Jacob R., of Mt. Joy; and Mary, widow of Rev. William Hertzer, residing in Elizabethtown. Isaac was the first mayor of Lebanon, Pa. He died Feb. 18, 1893, leaving three sons, Amos (since deceased), John and Allen, and one daughter, Mrs. George S. Bowman.

JACOB R. HOFFER was born on a farm in Dauphin county June 23, 1823. District schools in those days afforded but meagre opportunities for acquiring an education, but young Hoffer took every advantage of such as they were. He also attended Brown's School at Mt. Joy, and later James' Academy in Philadelphia. His early ambition turned toward the printer's trade, but circumstances compelled him to pass his young manhood on his father's farm. His uncle, Squire Samuel Hoffer, of Conewago township, Dauphin county, was a man of considerable learning and high reputation, who had established himself as a surveyor and scrivener; and having taken a fancy to his nephew Jacob, Squire Hoffer gave him a thorough understanding of the intricacies of his profession. This Mr. Hoffer continued to follow until 1864, when ill health compelled him to abandon a work that required such great physical endurance; he conducted a notion store to the time of his death, and also, true to his early predilection, he turned to the printing office, in 1864 becoming proprietor of the Mt. Joy Herald, which had been established by Mr. F. H. Stauffer in 1854. Although not a practical printer, Mr. Hoffer soon gained a thorough knowledge of the details of the business, and during his career as editor and proprietor of the Herald he greatly advanced the standard of journalism in his locality. He was broad and liberal in his views, and gave to the public a paper clean and wholesome; conservative in his expressions, he was a wise moulder of public opinion, and the farmers and business men all held him and his paper in high esteem. Since his death, his sons, John E. Hoffer and Uriah E. Hoffer, are conducting the paper for the estate.

Jacob R. Hoffer was united in marriage with Martha Engle. His death occurred April 15, 1892, and of his children two sons and five daughters survive: John E., Uriah E., Mary E., Rebecca and Hannah, all of Mt. Joy; Helen, of Philadelphia; and Annie A., wife of Dr. C. G. Gabel, of Lancaster.

HENRY S. RUTTER, a retired farmer and tobacco packer, is a director of the Gap National Bank, and has his home in Intercourse, Pa. He was born in Leacock township, Lancaster county, Oct. 15, 1836, and is a son of Eli and Elizabeth (Skyles) Rutter.

Eli and Elizabeth Rutter were married Oct. 25, 1832. They were of Leacock and Salisbury townships, respectively. Mr. Rutter operated a hotel in Leacock township, and was a farmer four years in Williamstown, where later he was a merchant for some fifteen years. At the expiration of that period he retired. He was born Sept. 17, 1806, and died Dec. 30, 1878; Mrs. Elizabeth Rutter was born Feb. 26, 1805, and died Aug. 21, 1884; both were buried in the cemetery of Christ Church at Intercourse, Pa. Mrs. Rutter was a member of Christ Church. To them came the following family: Harriet A., born May 20, 1834, who is the widow of John Hess, a farmer, and lives at Gap, Pa.; Henry S.; Hannah

E., born May 4, 1839, living at Intercourse, the widow of George Diller, at one time a hotel man and a drover; Jacob R., born Nov. 14, 1842, who married Maggie P. Lincoln, and is a farmer at Intercourse, Pennsylvania.

The paternal grandparents of Mr. Rutter were Jacob and Hannah (Trout) Rutter, and they were married Jan. 21, 1800. They were farming people, and also kept a hotel in Intercourse many years. Jacob Rutter was born April 24, 1769, and died April 10, 1845, while his wife was born Aug. 6, 1779, and died Oct. 9, 1860; both were buried in the Cemetery of Christ Church at Intercourse. They had the following family: Elizabeth, born Oct. 22, 1800, married to George Rutter; Mary, born May 25, 1802; Uriah, married to Eliza Baker; Eli, who died Dec. 30, 1878, in the seventy-third year of his age; Anna L., who died Feb. 14, 1865, in her fifty-sixth year, unmarried; Sarah, who died Oct. 29, 1883, at the age of seventy-one years, nine months and twelve days, the wife of John Miller; Rachel, born Sept. 24, 1816, married to John Varnes; Hannah V., who married Harvey Varnes, of Washington, D. C., and is now dead.

The maternal grandparents of Mr. Rutter were Henry and Rebecca (Dunlap) Skyles, of Salisbury township, where he was engaged in business, both as a farmer and a potter.

Henry S. Rutter was married March 7, 1865, in Williamstown, Pa., to Miss Sarah E. Eckert, by whom he has had the following family: Blanch, who died at the age of eight years; Laura J., an invalid, at home unmarried; Hannah, who married Adam Diller, a farmer and a drover at Intercourse, Pa., and who is the mother of four children; Elizabeth, who married Tobias Leaman, of Gordonville, Pa., and is the mother of one child; Sarah, married to Harry Weiler, a clerk in a store in White Horse, Pa.; Harry E., a merchant at New Holland, unmarried; Jacob P., a hardware clerk, living at home; Etta E., at home; Chauncey E., a druggist in Lancaster, Pa.; Howard L., at home.

Mrs. Sarah E. Rutter was born in Leacock township in 1842, and is a daughter of Jacob K. and Hannah (Varnes) Eckert. Mr. Eckert was a farmer, and died in 1863, at the age of sixty-four; his widow died in 1870, at the age of sixty-nine years; both were buried in the Rolands Cemetery in Earl township. They were the parents of the following family: Rev. John V., a Lutheran preacher, who died in 1898; George, living retired in Lancaster; Susannah, married to Jeremiah Selldomridge, a retired farmer of Leacock township; Lewis, now of Philadelphia; Henry, deceased; Mary A., late wife of Robert Hoar; Sarah E.; Jemimah, the widow of Henry Harsh, living in Lancaster; Evaline, deceased wife of Josiah Zook; Rebecca, married to Moses Hess, of Duncannon, Pennsylvania.

Henry S. Rutter remained on the paternal homestead until he was eighteen years old, when he went to White Horse, Pa., and was employed two years as a clerk by William Bunn; then he went to Williamstown, Pa., where he was engaged with Harry Worst two years in the mercantile business. At the expiration of that time, in company with his father, he bought out Mr. Worst, and operated the stand until 1865. That year his brother Jacob bought his father out, and the two were in partnership until 1871. That year Jacob retired from the firm, and Mr. Rutter was alone in the business for some two years, when he sold the store to Harry Brackbill. Moving to Leacock township, he bought a farm, where he remained until 1880, and in that year came to Intercourse and began business as a tobacco packer. At present Mr. Rutter has retired from both farming and the tobacco packing industries and is enjoying in his latter years a well-earned rest.

Mr. Rutter belongs to the Knights Templars; in politics is a Democrat, and holds a prominent position in the community. His personal qualities have won him friends, while his business abilities have made him wealthy.

ABRAHAM HAINES POWDEN, Esq., of No. 49 North Duke street, is one of the most promising young members of the Lancaster Bar, and is a striking illustration of what the American youth can accomplish even in the face of most adverse circumstances. He was born July 24, 1876, at Altoona, Pa., son of A. H. Powden and Margaret Young. His father was employed at the Pennsylvania Railroad shops at Altoona, and died there three months before his son's birth; his mother dying when her boy was only sixteen months old, the young orphan was brought to Lancaster by his grandfather, Isaac B. Powden, who is a wholesale dealer in cigars and at this time is still traveling about on business of his house, though over eighty-four years of age. His grandmother was Elizabeth Haines. He was kept by his paternal grandparents until he was four years of age, at which time, upon the death of his grandmother, he was placed in the care of a paternal uncle with whom he had his home until he was eight years of age, and at whose instance he was sentenced to the House of Refuge at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Poor, and almost friendless, young Powden was presented on the day of his sentence to the House of Refuge, with a silver dollar, by a gentleman of Lancaster, and encouraged by that kind act, he resolved to secure an education and become a lawyer. How bravely and successfully he clung to that resolution and purpose is now a matter of record. The silver dollar is carried by him to-day, and is treasured above all his other possessions, bearing an inscription from whom the coin came, to whom it was given, and under what circumstances.

Through the efforts of his new benefactor and other friends who took up his cause, he was released from the House of Refuge at the end of three weeks, and placed in the Children's Home at Lancaster, Pa., where he remained until ten years of age, at which time he went to live with Samuel O. Frantz, at Rohrerstown, where he worked on the farm during the summer and attended school in the winter, and remaining with this kind-hearted family until he was sixteen years of age. Striking out for himself at that age he secured a position in a general merchandise store at Mechanics Grove, where he remained one year, and then returned to Lancaster as a clerk for Ezra F. Bowman & Co., wholesale jewelers, with whom he spent four years. Clerking during the day, he pursued special studies by night, giving much attention to Latin, under the tutorship of a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College.

Upon the financial failure of the firm of Ezra F. Bowman & Co., young Powden entered the law office of C. Reese Eaby, Esq., and after faithful study passed his preliminary examination, Dec. 16, 1897, and was admitted to practice Sept. 15, 1900. He also holds a commission of Notary Public, and is a member of the Superior and Supreme Courts of this state.

Mr. Powden is a member of the First Presbyterian church of Lancaster, and also a trustee of White Cross Commandery No. 159, Ancient and Illustrious Order of Knights of Malta. In politics he is a staunch Republican and very active.

No man of his years has worked more industriously or systematically than this bright and progressive young member of the legal profession. Mr. Powden is a man of genial and courteous address, honest and upright as the day is long, and has won a host of friends, who justly prize his manly qualities and genuine work.

DAVID L. MILLER. Through its numerous descendants and by marriage and inter-marriage with leading families, the Miller name is well known all over Lancaster county. A worthy representative of this family, who resides in affluence in Mt. Joy, retired from active business life, is David L. Miller, a highly esteemed citizen, and one who for the past ten years has been a director of the Union National Bank of Mt. Joy.

Mr. Miller was born in Conoy township, July 16, 1834, a son of David and Anna (Longenecker) Miller, the former of whom was well known in the county and township, acting many years in the capacity of school director. He died in 1887, at the age of eighty-two, after several years of retirement; his widow survived until 1894, and both were buried in Donegal township, old and prominent members of the Mennonite Church.

The children of David and Anna Miller were: Elizabeth, who married Abraham Martin, a farmer of Conoy township; Fanny, who married Henry Metzgar, of Dauphin county; Anna, unmarried, a resident of Conoy township; Christian, a retired farmer of Alb H Powden.

Conoy township; David L.; John, who died young; Henry, a retired farmer of West Donegal township; Barbara, who married John Erb, a farmer of Dauphin county; Mary, who married Andrew Stoner, a farmer of Conoy township; Leah, who married Jacob Erb, a farmer in Kansas; Abraham, a farmer of West Donegal township; Martin, a farmer of Conoy township; Samuel, a farmer of Mt. Joy township; and Mattie, deceased, who married Amos Zimmerman. The paternal grandparents were Ernest and Elizabeth Miller, of Ephrata, and the maternal grandparents were Christian and Fanny (Breneman) Longenecker, of Lancaster county, all of these being old and leading families of the greatest financial stability, and of honorable standing in their several communities.

One of a large and happy family, David L. Miller grew up in his comfortable farm-house home, surrounded by the good influences which a pious father and mother brought into the household. His education was acquired in the public schools, and until he was twenty-two years old he remained under the parental roof. For some years he then operated a rented farm, but later, at the time of his second marriage, purchased a farm in Rapho township, and there became a prominent farmer and a leading factor in township affairs, for three years giving his services as school director and doing much for the encouragement of education.

The first marriage of Mr. Miller was in 1858, in Lancaster, to Fanny Garber, a daughter of John and Catherine (Seachrist) Garber. Mrs. Miller was born in West Donegal township, where she lies buried, having died on March 1, 1861, at the age of twenty-three. Her children were: John, who married Fanny Heaston, a retired farmer of Mt. Joy; and Fanny, who died young. The second marriage of Mr. Miller was in 1863, to Leah Nissley, and to this union has been born this family: Anna, who resides with her parents; Barbara, who married Amos Stauffer, a miller of East Donegal township; Mary, who married Harry Miller, of Mt. Joy; Milton, who resides on the old farm, in Rapho township; and Elizabeth, who married F. B. F. Hoffer, a hardware merchant in Christiana, Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Leah (Nissley) Miller was born in East Donegal township, Aug. 30, 1835, a daughter of Peter and Catherine (Krider) Nissley, the former of whom was a well-known preacher in the Mennonite Church, and also a farmer. His birth occurred July 22, 1802, and his death in 1893, after a long life full of good deeds. The beloved mother had preceded him many years before, her death taking place in 1851. Both were buried in the cemetery of the Donegal Mennonite Church, where he had ministered for forty years.

The children born to Rev. Peter and Catherine Nissley were: Mary, who married Rev. Solomon Swartz, a U. B. minister in Dauphin county; Esther, who died at the age of twenty-one; John K., deceased; Leah, who is the only survivor of her family; Christiann, who died unmarried; Barbara, who married C. F. Hostetter; Catherine, who died when but seventeen; and Annie, who died at the age of two.

The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Miller was Rev. Christian Nissley, of Donegal township, where he was for many years a Mennonite minister of prominence. He married a Miss Graybill and they had three sons, John, who became a deacon in the Mennonite Church; Hon. Jacob, a farmer, who also became an Assemblyman from this county; and Peter, the father of Mrs. Miller. On the maternal side the grandfather also was a minister, the Rev. John Krider, who married a member of the Denlinger family, of Lancaster county.

Mr. Miller is a staunch Republican, and is one of the leading members of the Mennonite Church, with which the family has so long been prominently connected.

CHARLES RYNEAR, now a retired farmer of Bart township, Lancaster county, was born in Upper Dublin, Montgomery county, Nov. 10, 1822, a son of William and Sarah (Spencer) Rynear, both of whom were born in Montgomery county, where they were married. For some years they lived in what was known as the Indian Settlement, near Rochester, N. Y., and then moved to Oxford, Chester county, to engage in a hotel business for several years. The last few months of his life, William Rynear spent at Dry Wells, in Eden township, Lancaster county. After his death, his widow with her four children moved to the "Old Trap Tavern" on the Newport road in Bart township. She later became the wife of Frederick Rogers, and made her home at Georgetown. There she died, leaving one daughter, by her second husband, Catherine, now the wife of Arthur Stewart, of Georgetown.

Charles Rynear is the oldest child born to his parents. Elizabeth, the oldest daughter, was born in New York. She married Peter Ibaugh, a machinist, who died several years ago. She lives in Christiana and has five children: Sarah, Spencer, George, Bruce and Louis. The second daughter, Harriett, married Isaac N. Lewis; both have passed away, Mr. Lewis on July 20, 1891, and his wife May 11, 1896. They had three children, Ellen and Jenette, deceased, and William E., of Harrisburg. The fourth child of William Rynear was Jonathan Rynear, who was born in Montgomery county, and became a soldier in the Civil war. He enlisted in a company formed in Juniata county, and made a good record, both as a gallant soldier, and a loyal and devoted citizen. After the war he married in Juniata county, where he still resides. They have three children; Sarah, Edwin and Charles.

Charles Rynear was reared to manhood in Lancaster county, and given a somewhat limited education. After the death of his father much of the care of his younger brother and sisters fell on him. Mr.

Rynear was married in January, 1849, to Rachel M., the daughter of Henry and Eliza A. (Swisher) Keylor, one of the prominent families of Bart township.

Henry Keylor was born in Germany in 1792, and his wife in Colerain township, in September, 1809. She was a daughter of John and Rachel (Woodrow) Swisher, who had their home in Colerain township, and came of Swiss parentage. Henry Keylor was married in 1827, and established his home on a farm in Bart township, where he lived until a few years before his death. He bought a home at Nine Points, where he died in 1875. His widow passed to her rest in 1891.

To Henry Keylor and his wife were born five children. (1) Rachel, who is Mrs. Rynear, was born in May, 1828, and was given a very fair education in the public schools of the day. (2) Martha E., born in 1830, the widow of Joseph Clark, lives in Chester county, near her four children, Henry, Harland, Jennie and Walter, Oscar and Samuel C. having died. (3) Elizabeth J., born in Bart township in December, 1832, is the widow of Robert A. Ferguson, and still lives at Nine Points with her two daughters, Nora and Ellen; Ellen is the wife of Samuel McComsey of Philadelphia. (4) John J., born in 1834, married Jane McClure, and has a home in Mechanicsburg. They have three children, Dr. Walter M., Lillie E. and William J. (5) Jacob K., born in 1837, married Rebecca Rutter, of Bart township, where they live on their farm. They have five children, Howard, Maggie J., Ella, Adam and Henry.

Mr. and Mrs. Rynear settled at their present home in 1849; on this place he has made extensive improvements, clearing over a hundred acres, erecting a good set of farm buildings, and developing one of the choice country homes of Bart township. To them have come two children.

William B. Rynear, who was born in 1851, married Anna M. Keylor, a daughter of Milton Keylor, of Colerain township. They reside in that township on their fine farm, with their two children: Rebecca A., and Spencer C.; Rebecca A. is a graduate of the Pennsylvania State Normal School at Millersville and is now teaching.

Margaret J. Rynear, the daughter, was born in 1854, and is the wife of William Hollis, a prosperous farmer of Bart township.

Mr. Rynear is associated with the Friends. He is a Democrat, and has held the position of school director for fifteen years, also serving one term as supervisor of Bart township. Mr. and Mrs. Rynear have lived to see Bart township grow from almost a wilderness to its present rich and prosperous condition, and their industrious and useful lives have contributed much to the welfare of the community.

ABRAM KLINE has for many years been one of the most prominent residents of Lancaster county, his active connection with numerous enterprises of interest and benefit to that section early bringing him into favorable notice, and he has throughout life sustained the highest reputation for honor and integrity in every association. No citizen of Manheim has shown a more progressive spirit, or more enterprise in undertaking and carrying on to completion whatever he thinks will promote the welfare of the town; and he is equally interested in the well being and prosperity of his friends and neighbors, a fact which accounts for the confidence displayed by them in intrusting him with public affairs.

Mr. Kline is a native of Lancaster county, born June 17, 1828, near Silver Spring, in East Hempfield township, where his father, Jacob Kline, was also born. Jacob Kline spent his early life in his native township, and at the time of his death was a resident of Schoeneck, this county. He was first engaged as a stone mason, later as a farmer, and acquired a comfortable competence. In religion he was a devout member of the Mennonite Church. Mr. Kline married Miss Susan Hiestand, who, like himself, was of German descent. She was the third in order of birth of the large family of John Hiestand. The later was an extensive land owner near Landisville, and one of the first distillers of his region.

Abram Kline passed his early years on the farm, remaining on the old homestead until he was fifteen years of age. His education was received in the local schools. He learned carpentering and cabinet-making, serving first with G. W. Peters, of Columbia, this county, and completing his apprenticeship, which covered a period of four years, with Rabe & Leib, in Philadelphia. On his return to Lancaster county, he was engaged at his trade by John Dyer, of Manheim, continuing this until he determined to try merchandising. Mr. Kline's first experience in this line was with P. & G. Arndt, and he subsequently was sent to Mt. Joy as the representative of Philip Arndt, of P. Arndt, Shaffner & Co., lumber dealers. Returning to Manheim in 1851, he purchased an interest in the business of P. & G. Arndt, and for four years was one of the most prominent business men in the place, finally disposing of his share in the concern to enter other fields in Philadelphia. There he remained over fifteen years, becoming a member of the firm of Stein, Wanner & Co., extensive importers and jobbers of china, glassware and queensware; from this he retired because the multiplicity of demands upon him was affecting his health. During this time he invented an improvement on a glass fruit jar, which brought him $21,000. In 1871 Mr. Kline returned to Manheim and embarked in the business which has since claimed his attention; his lumber yard has the reputation of being the best equipped along the Reading and Columbia Railway. A gentleman once remarked that it was the best organized yard in the State. The capacity for shedding lumber is half a million feet. The hardware store, located on the corner of Stiegel and South Charlotte streets, has a frontage of twenty-two feet on the latter, and extends to a depth of 100 feet. The store room extends forty feet along Charlotte street, the front being entirely of glass. A heavy stock, of all kinds of hardware, is carried, and the establishment enjoys a large patronage from Manheim and the surrounding country.

Mr. Kline is the largest real estate owner in Manheim, and he has erected a number of modern houses, all of them a credit to the owner and an improvement to the section of the town in which they are located. Thus Mr. Kline's enterprise has benefited the town, as well as brought him prosperity, for his undertakings have all been on an extensive scale. Though he has been wholly successful in business his reward has been well merited, for no man has carried a higher standing in financial circles. His ability and tact are manifest to all who have had dealings with him. For a number of years past Mr. Kline has been ably assisted by his son, Charles A. who has proved himself capable and energetic in every respect.

As a public-spirited citizen Abram Kline has long been recognized as one of the leaders in the town. His influence has always been on the side of progress, whether promoting new business enterprises or advocating public improvements, and his careful and judicious management of his own affairs inspired confidence in his ability to handle the affairs of the municipality. His alertness and quickness of perception have been evident on more than one occasion, and, being backed by good judgment, his opinion on all subjects is eagerly sought and valued. The part he has taken in borough affairs is well known. When he was burgess the streets were improved by being graded, curbed and macadamized. He is one of the originators and is president of the Manheim Building Association; one of the incorporators and president of the Manheim Fairview Cemetery Association; one of the original subscribers to the Manheim and Lititz turnpike, and likewise to the Manheim and Sporting Hill turnpike; one of the incorporators and directors of the Manheim Fire Insurance Association; president of the Manheim Water Company, an unusually successful enterprise which paid a dividend from the start, and the stock of which is now at a premium. While in Philadelphia Mr. Kline served four years as a member of the city council, representing the thirteenth ward; he was one of the most prominent members in that body, and his value was recognized by his appointment to positions on the committees of Finance, Schools, Water, and the Girard Estate, House of Correction and others. He always manifested a deep interest in the welfare of the city. One of the original Centennial committee, he went to Washington frequently with that body to have the exposition go where it went, New York City at the time having made a lively contest for the great enterprise. He has always been an active Republican in politics since the days of Fremont. In 1883 Mr. Kline thought it best for the party to vote for John Stewart for Governor, and accordingly took an active interest in that notable campaign.

Shortly after the war broke out Mr. Kline left Philadelphia with a militia company, and served in the command that was stationed at Hagerstown, guarding the government stores during the engagement at Antietam. In 1863 he was again mustered into the United States militia service for ninety days, and was with the command that guarded one of the South Mountain approaches near Funkstown. He is a member of Gen. Heintzelman Post, G. A. R.

In 1852 Mr. Kline was united in marriage with Miss Caroline E. Arndt, daughter of Philip Arndt, of Manheim, and three children blessed this union, namely: Mary E., wife of H. H. Gingrich, cashier of the Farmers' National Bank of Lititz; Ida A., wife of Wayne A. Ensminger; and Charles A. The family residence, in East High street, is one of the finest in the city, and Mr. Kline, who does not now attend so closely to business, passes many pleasant hours there among his books. From youth he has been an earnest member of the Reformed Church, in which he has served many years as elder, and he is one of the most active workers in the Sunday-school, having taught the Bible class for some years. All the religious and benevolent enterprises of the town receive his hearty approval and substantial encouragement. Indeed, there is nothing of interest or good to his fellow men which Mr. Kline does not uphold, and his approval is never passive, invariably manifesting itself in some practical way. He is a warm friend and is beloved by many in the city of his adoption.

REV. HENRY REED SMITH, who was, by marriage, a member of a family which had been very prominent in the Episcopal ministry for nearly a century in and about the eastern part of Pennsylvania, was for ten years pastor of St. John's Episcopal Church, at Compassville, Chester county, where he endeared himself to the people by his many noble traits of character, and by the fine ability which he displayed in the pulpit.

Rev. Henry R. Smith was a native of the town of Lancaster, where he was born Nov. 14, 1833. He suffered death while bathing at Beach Haven, N. J., Aug. 21, 1875, he at that time being a resident of Gwynedd, Montgomery county. Rev. Smith was the eldest child of Richard S. and Mary S. (Trissler) Smith, of Lancaster, the former of whom came to Lancaster when a young man, and engaged in the drug business. When the son, Henry, was but one year old the family removed to Philadelphia, where the father continued the drug business. They were members of the Episcopal Church, and were greatly respected. Their children were: Henry R.; William J., a professional nurse now living in Philadelphia; Mary D., who married Rev. Henry C. Pastorius, a Protestant Episcopal minister at Lansford, Pa.; and Sarah and W. Atlee, who died young.

Rev. Henry R. Smith was reared to manhood in the city of Philadelphia, where he was given a thorough education, and where he remained until 1862. He was not trained for the ministry in youth, but for a business career, which he entered early, and was for fifteen years with Horstmann & Sons, large manufacturers and importers. His qualifications and temperament were such, however, that his friends urged him to prepare for the ministry, and he, therefore, took a course in Theology, and was ordained to the ministry of the Episcopal Church. His first charge was St. John's Church, Compassville Chester Co., Pa., where he settled in 1862, and where he remained for the following ten years. Owing to failing health, he then retired from the active duties of the ministry and removed to Gwynedd, Pa., at which place he resided at the time of his death.

On April 24, 1862, Rev. Smith was married to Grace Clarkson, in the Epiphany Church, Philadelphia, just prior to settling in his ministerial work. Their children were Clarkson, born June 2, 1863; Henry R., born March 17, 1865; Emery S., born Dec. 26, 1867; and Isaac Diller, born Aug. 15, 1872. Of these Clarkson and Isaac Diller died in youth; and Henry R. and Emery S., both unmarried are electricians. Mrs. Smith removed to Lititz, Lancaster Co., Pa., just after the death of her husband, but in 1880 came to Lancaster, her native place, where she enjoys the society of old friends. She was born in Lancaster, a daughter of Gerardus and Susan (Trissler) Clarkson. Gerardus Clarkson was born in Wilmington, Del., while his father Rev. Joseph Clarkson, was minister of the Old Swedes Church, of that city. Mr. Clarkson was for a period of forty years connected with the Farmers' Bank of Lancaster, the latter part of which service was as cashier, and he was a man of fine business ability and held in high repute in the business circles of the city. He retired a few months prior to his decease. Both he and his wife lie buried in St. James Church cemetery, of which church they were leading and prominent members under Rev. William A. Muhlenberg, both of them being remembered as having been especially distinguished for their beautiful voices and which were for long years heard in the choir of St. James Church. Their children were: Joseph, deceased in 1889; Edward, retired and living in Northampton county; Gerardus, deceased in 1867; Robert deceased in 1879; Samuel, deceased in 1894; Mary, widow of Thomas W. Henderson, living near Parkesburg, Chester Co., Pa.; Grace (Mrs. H. R. Smith); Susan, residing in Washington, D. C., and the widow of Miles Roch, a renowned scientist and geologist who died in Guatemala City; and Michael, the youngest child, who died in 1890. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Smith were Rev. Joseph and Grace (Cook) Clarkson, the former a native of Philadelphia, the latter of New Brunswick, N. S. He was one of the early ministers of the Episcopal Church in Lancaster and was ordained by the eminent and scholarly Bishop William A. White on his return from England. Rev. Joseph was a son of Dr. Gerardus Clarkson, an eminent physician of Philadelphia in his day.

DAVID CHARLES HAVERSTICK, the veteran pressman in the city of Lancaster, and who for many years has been superintendent of the Examiner press rooms, is of the fourth generation of Haversticks in Lancaster county.

Col. Michael Haverstick, his great-grandfather, was a native of Germany, and came to America when twenty-three years old, making the voyage in the ship "Europa," Capt. Lunsdaine, from Rotterdam, and landing in Philadelphia Nov. 17, 1741. He came to Lancaster county and was naturalized in 1751. He located on the Conestoga creek, between Wabank and New Danville. He was the father of six sons and four daughters, viz.: William, Jacob, Michael, Rudolph, John, Matthias, Mary Elizabeth, Barbara, Catharine and Ann Mary. In 1775 he was chosen one of the committee of observation of Lancaster county. He served in the army of the Revolution, and rose to the rank of colonel. Himself and family were members of the Reformed Church. He died in 1793, when seventy-five years of age, leaving an estate (as per his will) valued at £7,000. He is buried in one of the private graveyards in the vicinity of his home.

Jacob Haverstick, the grandfather of David C., lived along the Conestoga creek, near Wabank, in this county, and there was born David Haverstick, the father of David Charles. David Haverstick married Sarah Ann Warfel, daughter of a farmer of New Danville, and eight children were born to them, five of whom are yet living: Lydia A., widow of Abraham Lind, of this county; Margaret, wife of George E. Zellers, master mechanic of cotton mills No. 2 and No. 3, Lancaster; David C., of whom we will more particularly write; Edward, a corporal in the 122d P. V. I., who died in the service in 1863; Cyrus, who died in early manhood; Benjamin, a soldier in the United States army, and now stationed in San Francisco; Rolandes, now deceased; and Mary Jane, widow of James Strachan, of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

David C. Haverstick was born in 1838, in Strasburg township, Lancaster Co., Pa., and received his education in the schools of his birthplace. At the age of thirteen years he came to Lancaster city, and in 1854 entered the old Express office as an apprentice to the printing business, and soon became an expert pressman. He has been superintendent of the press room of the Express (now merged in the Examiner) for more than forty years, his only absence from his work being when he was serving nine months as fifth sergeant in the 122d Regiment, P. V. I.

In 1865 Mr. Haverstick was married to Miss Anna St. John, a native of Baltimore, Md., and daughter of Taylor and Rebecca St. John, who came to Lancaster from Connecticut. To this union five children were born, as follows: Edward Linnaeus, who died in 1872 in early childhood; Myra St. John, a well known and talented teacher and elocutionist, a graduate of the State Normal School at Millersville, who died in 1892; Miss Bertha St. John, living at home; Aimee St. John, wife of Rev. H. S. Shelley, pastor of the Reformed Church at Willowstreet, Lancaster Co., Pa.; and Ernest Warfel, born June 1, 1878, now engaged in the jewelry department of the Hamilton Watch Co., Lancaster.

A Republican in politics, Mr. Haverstick, however, has never taken any active part in political affairs, although frequently urged to do so. Outside of the church he belongs to the Y. M. C. A., the City Bible Society, and the Mechanics' Library Society and G. A. R. He is a member of the St. Paul's Reformed Church, in which he has also been an elder, and secretary of the consistory of same for twenty or more years; and he was superintendent of the Sunday-school for a long time. He has been secretary of the Lancaster City Bible Society some eighteen years, vice-president of the Mechanics' Library Society, and was president of the Lancaster Y. M. C. A. for nine years, during which he did yeoman service in wiping out the debt of the old Association building. In all the walks of life—in social intercourse, in church, in newspaper circles, and among the community at large—no man commands and receives higher esteem than does David Charles Haverstick.

JONAS H. NOLT, a highly respected retired general farmer and tobacco raiser in West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, now residing in Columbia, was born on his present farm Jan. 4, 1840, his parents, Jacob and Elizabeth (Hoffman) Nolt being also natives of this township.

Jacob Nolt was reared as a farmer, and agriculture was the pursuit of his life. He died in West Hempfield township in 1880, when sixty-eight years old, but his wife survived until 1894, when she passed away at the age of seventy-two years, in the faith of the Dunkard Church, the remains of both being interred in Silver Spring Cemetery. Their children were but three in number, and they were born and named in the following order: Jonas H., whose name is mentioned above; Mary, who died unmarried in 1866; and Jacob, a farmer in West Hempfield township. The Nolt family for generations back, engaged in farming, and the present generation on both sides is no exception to the rule.

Jonas H. Nolt was united in marriage, in Lancaster, in 1866, with Miss Elizabeth Heise, a native of West Hempfield township, and a daughter of Harry and Hannah (Heidler) Heise; of whom more may be learned by referring to the sketch of B. Frank Heise, her brother, to be found elsewhere. This happy marriage of Jonas H. and Elizabeth Nolt has been blessed with four children, two of whom, however, died in infancy; Paris was called away at the early age of ten years; and Harvey, born Sept. 7, 1872, now making his home under the parental roof-tree, was married June 18, 1901, to Mary A. Grove, who was born near Mountville, in West Hempfield township, July 1, 1878, daughter of Abraham H. and Fannie (Garber) Grove.

Jonas H. Nolt has always been of domestic, as well as of industrious, habits, and he has ever been content to make his present farm his lifelong abiding place. He has not been neglectful, however, of the affairs of his township, but has been public-spirited and prompt to promote local progress with his time and means when called upon, having served nine years as school director, and having been a director in the Central National Bank of Columbia since its organization. In politics a Republican, he has been ardent in his support of the principles of his party and active in promoting its success at the polls, but he has remained satisfied with the consciousness of having done his part in this quiet way toward bringing about a victorious result, regardless of self or of reward through appointment to public office or other share of "party spoils."

Socially Mr. Nolt enjoys the friendship and respect of the best people in West Hempfield township, and is universally recognized as being honorable and upright in all transactions of a business character. He retired from farm life in the spring of 1902, and now resides in Columbia, leaving his son as his successor.

The Hoffman family, from which Mr. Nolt is descended in maternal lines, has long been well known in the county. His mother, Elizabeth (Hoffman) Nolt, was a daughter of Christ Hoffman, who was born and raised in West Hempfield township. He had a large tract of farming land near Ironville (now the property of the Jacob Hostetter family). He had two brothers, Daniel, of Indianapolis, Ind.; and Mike, who lived on a pretty farm in Stark county, Ohio, and who is survived by one son, Henry. Christ Hoffman married Betsy Haymaker, who bore him twelve children, as follows: Jacob, who died in 1889, aged seventy-seven, leaving children, Jacob, John, Martin and Fanny; John, who lives at Chestnut Hill, on a farm; Christly, who died unmarried; Joseph, who married and died; Fred, who is deceased; Maria; Elizabeth, who became Mrs. Nolt; Nancy, Mrs. Whitman, born in 1820, now living near Manheim, the only survivor of the family; Sarah, married and the mother of four sons and three daughters; Mollie, Mrs. Shannon; Bevia, who died at home; and Maria (2).

CHRISTIAN ERISMAN, a retired farmer, whose pleasant and attractive home is at Sporting Hill, Rapho township, Lancaster county, was born on the site of the Erisman's Meeting House, which formed a part of the family homestead in Rapho township, Feb. 2, 1816, a son of Jacob and Mary (Metz) Erisman. His parents were both born and reared in Rapho township, where they passed their lives, and when they died their remains were laid to rest in the cemetery connected with Erisman's Church. The father served as supervisor one year, and was an honorable and highly respected citizen and member of the community. Both he and his wife belonged to the Mennonite Church, and in that faith they reared their family. Their children were: Maria, who died at the age of thirteen years; Elizabeth, who died unmarried at the age of eighty-three years; Nancy, late wife of Christ. Hershey; Christian; Jacob, who died at the age of sixty-five years; Abraham, who died at the age of seventy-five years; Fanny, the widow of John Baker, who lives in East Hempfield township; Henry, unmarried; Mary, unmarried and living in Salunga, Pa.; John, a farmer on the old homestead in Rapho township.

The paternal grandfather of Christian Erisman was Abraham Erisman; he was a farmer, and spent his life in Lancaster county. The maternal grandparents were Christ. and Mary (Hackman) Metz, farming people of Lancaster county. Christ. Metz was a son of Ludwig Metz, who was born in Germany; coming later to America, in 1771 he built a stone house on a farm in Rapho township, where he spent his last years.

Christian Erisman was married March 17, 1840, in Lancaster, Pa., to Catherine Hostetter, by whom he had the following children: Susan, unmarried, and living with her parents; Elizabeth H., who married Joseph Kraybill, a farmer in Clay township; Metz J., a commission merchant in Philadelphia; Sarah A., who died unmarried; Albert, deceased, who married Lovina Stehman; Mary, who married Benjamin Miller, and lives in Masonville, Pa.; Elenora, who died young; Amelia G., who married Eli Baumberger, of Manheim, Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Catherine (Hostetter) Erisman was born in Warwick township, Lancaster county, April 27, 1818, a daughter of the Rev. Jacob and Elizabeth (Miller) Hostetter. Her father was born in Penn township, and her mother in East Hempfield. Both died on the old farm in Penn township, near Manheim. They were members of the Mennonite Church, of which he was a distinguished preacher for more than fifty-eight years, being a bishop of that church for thirty-four years. He died April 6, 1861, at the age of ninety years, seven months, and twenty-three days. His widow survived until 1868, when she too passed away, at the age of ninety-one years, three months and three days. Their remains rest in a private burying ground on their old homestead.

Born to the Rev. Jacob and Elizabeth Hostetter were the following children: John; Mary, who lived to be seventy years old; Anna, the wife of Christ. Wissler; Susan, the wife of John Shaffer; and Martha, the wife of John Stuffer, all five of whom are dead; Barbara, who married Joseph Hershey; Jacob, deceased; Catherine, noted above; Fanny, the late wife of David Hershey; David, deceased.

Christian Erisman remained with his parents until his marriage, when he located for himself in Rapho township, where he carried on the buying and selling of stock in connection with his farming operations until 1882. That year he retired, and is now enjoying the fruits of an industrious and well-spent life. He removed his home to Sporting Hill, where he has formed many pleasant associations, and is passing his last days in the serene enjoyment of the privileges and pleasures that should attend a well ripened life. At one time he was supervisor, and for six years acted as school director. He is a member of the Mennonite Church, and his life is honest and open to all the world. Politically he is a Republican, and is exceedingly well informed on all the current issues of the day.

JOHN CONRAD, the genial and popular proprietor of the Union Hotel, is one of the well-known and highly regarded citizens of Providence township. He was born Oct. 9, 1833, in Pequea township, son of Daniel and Mary (Erisman) Conrad.

Daniel Conrad was born in 1791, and came to America from Germany. He followed the blacksmith business through life and died in 1857. In his political convictions he was a staunch Democrat. His religious connection was with the German Reformed Church. He married Mary Erisman, who was born in 1798 and died Dec. 30, 1883, and they had a family of eleven children, as follows: Benjamin, deceased; Jacob, who resides in Refton, Pa.; Susan, who married Benjamin Yordy; Mary, who married Reuben Phautz; Barbara, Daniel and George, all deceased; John; Henry, who resides in New Danville, Pa.; Elizabeth, who married Jacob D. Landis; and Martha, who is the widow of John Mohn.

John Conrad grew up on the home farm and attended the common schools of his district. He followed farming until 1865, when he became a member of Co. D, 195th P. V. I., and served as a faithful soldier through the Virginia campaign in the Civil war, being mustered out of the service in 1866. He has long been prominently identified with Democratic politics, and was made the first postmaster of New Danville, in 1857, under President James Buchanan.

On Jan. 14, 1858, Mr. Conrad was married to Miss Mary Brenneman, born Oct. 6, 1837, daughter of Christian and Catherine (McFalls) Brenneman, of Providence township. This family is one of prominence in the county and more extended mention of it will be found in another part of this volume. A family of eleven children has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Conrad, viz.: Catherine P., born Feb. 14, 1859, who married Simon Gochenaur and has two children, Jenny and Mary; Mary E., born March 24, 1861, who married Jefferson Groff, of Providence township, and has two children, Charles and Walter; Christian F., born May 12, 1862, who died March 20, 1877; Naomi J., born Sept. 30, 1864, the wife of Joseph Long, of Providence township, and the mother of two children, John and Carrie; John F., born Jan. 3, 1867, who married Anna Engle and had one son, John, now deceased; Susan, born March 9, 1869, who is the wife of Robert Heisler and has a daughter, Clara; Abraham B., born May 25, 1871, a soldier in the Philippine Islands, married to Barbara Seaman, of Nebraska; Maggie B., born Feb. 13, 1873, who married Walter Evans and has five children, Oscar, Augusta, Estella, Mary and Clementine; Emma L., born Jan. 22, 1875, who is the wife of Aldus Book, of Drumore township and has had three children, Lawrence (deceased), Mary and John; Estella, born Dec. 4, 1876, who is the wife of George Lynes, of Drumore township and the mother of two children, Anna Mary and Grace; and Charles W., born Sept. 9, 1878, who married Mazie Reinhart and has had two children, Lawrence W. (deceased) and Dorothy. Jenny Gochenaur, the daughter of Catherine P., married Ira Book and has one child, Bessy, the great-grandchild of our subject.

Although in his early career Mr. Conrad was hampered to some extent by limited means, his energy and industry surmounted adverse circumstances, and he and his capable and estimable wife can now enjoy every comfort in their advancing years. He has been able to rear a large family and give them proper advantages, and he also has accumulated much more than a competency, owns a fine farm in Providence township and a paying hotel in the village of Union. He is known as a man of reliability and is considered one of the most honorable citizens of the township.

AARON WITMER, for forty years a veterinary surgeon of Lancaster county, was one of the old and respected residents of West Lampeter township, where he owned a fine farm of seventy-six acres, this being a part of the estate added by his father to the old homestead.

Aaron Witmer was born April 13, 1832, on the old home land and attended the public schools, but early in life manifested an interest in the proper rearing and care of stock, particularly horses, and, in order to fit himself with sufficient knowledge to make his own animals remain in the best condition, he began the scientific study of the horse. This resulted in an accurate knowledge that was increased and encouraged by a course of two years' reading under Dr. C. N. Shaub, when he was so proficient that he was made a life member of the Veterinary Association at Philadelphia.

Although Aaron Witmer continued to farm, his time soon became so filled with demands for the practice of his profession that he could not confine himself to agricultural pursuits, for all through Lancaster county, and into farther counties, he has been called upon in a professional way. At present his son, who read and studied under his supervision, has succeeded to the profession. There is no doubt but that every stockraiser should have a general knowledge of the veterinary art, but to master it requires quite as assiduous study as does the science of medicine.

In 1854 Aaron Witmer was married to Mary Herr, a daughter of Abraham Herr, of Pequea township, who was born there Dec. 19, 1831; and to this union three children were born: Frank E., born July 27, 1855, a farmer of West Lampeter township, living on a part of the father's old home, who married Mary Ann Herr, a daughter of Joseph Herr, and had five children, Ida, Jacob, Elmer, Frank and Esther; Abraham H., born June 10, 1857, a farmer, gardener and florist, residing on the adjoining farm, who married Mary A. Bachman, a daughter of Eli Bachman, of Lampeter, and has three sons, Eli, John and George; and J. Elam, born May 25, 1859, a farmer and veterinary surgeon of this township, who married Lizzie Bachman, a daughter of Eli Bachman, and had three children, Ross, Willis and Mary.

Aaron Witmer died Nov. 15, 1900. The family is prominently connected with the Mennonite Church, and all are well known through the township as honorable and esteemed citizens.

ABRAHAM B. SNAVELY (deceased) was during his active years one of the leading farmers of Pequea township, prominent and active in public affairs, and useful in the community as a neighbor, citizen and friend.

Mr. Snavely was born in December, 1823, near Wheatland Mills, Lampeter township, a son of Abraham B. and Elizabeth (Buckwalter) Snavely; the father was born in 1787, in what is now Pequea (then Conestoga) township, and the mother in 1789. They were plain, unassuming country people, engaged in farming during the greater part of their lives, and identified with the New or Reformed Mennonite Church, in which faith they reared their children. The father was a minister in that denomination. They were married in 1809, and the union was blessed with children as follows: Annie, Mrs. Weaver; Benjamin, who also married; Abraham B., who is referred to more fully farther on; Martha, unmarried, and now deceased; and Fannie, who married. The father of this family died in 1866, and the mother passed away the previous year.

Abraham B. Snavely was reared on his father's farm, passing his youth until he was twenty years of age alternately between work on the farm and attendance in winter at the neighborhood district school; under the direction of his father he became thoroughly acquainted with general farming operations. He remained at home until 1866, in which year he became the owner of the farm in Pequea township, upon which he lived for the next twenty-six or seven years, until his removal to New Danville, in 1893. Upon that farm were achieved the triumphs and successes of his life, and it was the scene of his toils and labors, his joys and his sorrows, in all of which his faithful helpmeet shared. That farm, the old homestead, is a fine property, very desirable in many respects; upon it are good and substantial buildings and other improvements, while its fields are fertile and productive, and from them Mr. Snavelly for only a little less than fifty years derived a good income, engaging in general farming and stock raising. From the spring of 1893 until his decease Mr. Snavelly lived in retirement at New Danville, he and his wife passing life's evening in a comfortable home, in the enjoyment of plenty. They united with the Reformed Mennonite Church April 22, 1900. Mr. Snavelly attained the age of almost four score, dying Nov. 20, 1901.

Mr. Snavelly's political affiliations were with the Republican party, to which he was most loyal. On four different occasions he was sent as a delegate to county conventions; he was active in party affairs and for three terms served as judge of elections, also the same length of time as inspector of elections; he served one term as school director and three terms as township assessor. In all these varied positions he was faithful and honorable, and his reputation as a public man was above reproach.

In December, 1856, Mr. Snavelly married Catherine Rohrer, a native of this county, and to them were born two children, Rohrer and Stoner.

BYRON GRISWOLD DODGE is a representative business man and citizen of Lancaster, where he is head of the Armstrong Cork Works, and sole owner of the Safety Buggy Works.

Mr. Dodge's first ancestors in this country were two brothers who landed at Old Salem, Mass., in 1629, both being gentleman of leisure and large fortune. His grandfather, John Dodge, was born in Claremont, N. H. His father, George W. Dodge, was a cork manufacturer, and in company with his son, Byron G., established large works in Lancaster. The father died in March, 1890. He married Miss Deborah E. Griswold, of Berlin, N. Y., and to this union came two children: Ella J., wife of Rev. Henry G. Appenzeler, of the M. E. Church, now a missionary in Corea; and Byron G., of Lancaster.

Byron Griswold Dodge was born in Berlin, N. Y., Sept. 16, 1851, and was educated there in the public schools, closing his studies at a boarding school in Vermont, a preparatory school for Williams College. After leaving school he worked on a farm until nineteen, when he learned the machinist's trade at Westerly, R. I., in a printing-press factory. He then went into the cork business with his father, at Berlin, and came to Lancaster in August, 1876. Their works were first located on Fulton street, the present site of Rose Brothers' umbrella factory, and they later built the excellent plant on the Pennsylvania railroad, near McGrann's Park, which with the Armstrong Cork Works does about three-fourths of the entire cork business of which it is a syndicate part, the Lancaster and the Pittsburg works being the two largest in the country. In the Lancaster works six hundred people are employed, and many thousand dollars are annually distributed by this institution through the various channels of trade in Lancaster. The Safety Buggy Works, which belong entirely to Mr. Dodge, rank among the most extensive industries of the place, employing some 150 men. Besides his interests in the foregoing, Mr. Dodge is president of the International Cream Separator Co., at Grant and Christian streets, a concern of rapidly increasing strength.

Mr. Dodge married Miss Anna Smart, daughter of Capt. Elisha Smart, who was killed while leading his company in an engagement of the Civil war; his regiment was formed at North Adams, Mass. Four children were born of this marriage: Leon G., now superintendent of his father's Safety Buggy Works; Miss Anna, at home; George, who graduated from the State College in June, 1901; and Arthur, attending Cornell University, class of 1904. Mr. Dodge is a member of the First M. E. Church. He lives in an elegant home near the corner of North Duke and Frederick streets, and his stable contains a string of thoroughbred horses, in which he finds one of his chief recreations. The entire family are lovers of horseflesh, and all have their especial equine pets. Mr. Dodge is a liberal, progressive and intelligent man of affairs, whose influence for good is often felt in Lancaster.

EMANUEL R. SHIRK belongs to one of the old and respected families of Lancaster county.

Emanuel H. Shirk, his father, was born in West Cocalico township Jan. 16, 1811. He was a farmer and gave his entire attention to agriculture until his death, which occurred in 1873. In politics he was a staunch Republican and a very active member in the ranks of his party, which he represented in many State and county conventions. Religiously he was a member of the German Baptist Church. He married Miss Catherine Rover, and they were the parents of ten children: Fianna, wife of Hiram Bollinger; Emanuel R.; Hiram, a farmer of Indiana; Salinda, wife of John Hagey; Lavina, wife of David Butzer; John, of Ephrata; Catherine, wife of Addison Longenecker; Leah, wife of Albert Mumma; Edward, a cigar maker; and Ementize, who died in childhood.

Emanuel R. Shirk was born May 28, 1838, on the same farm where his father first saw the light, in West Cocalico township. He lived at home with his parents until he was twenty-three years of age, and during his earlier years attended the common schools. He began farming for himself on the old homestead, where he remained four years, and thence moved to Schoeneck, for three years, during which time he followed droving. His next removal was to Warwick township, where he commenced farming again, and he has continued it to the present time, meeting with substantial success. Mr. Shirk is one of the enterprising farmers of his locality, and one of its most public-spirited citizens. He has served his fellow townsmen faithfully in various offices, having been supervisor, assessor and for twelve years member of the school board. In 1893 he was prison inspector, and held that office for six years. In politics he has always been an active member of the Republican party.

Mr. Shirk married for his first wife Miss Sarah Bucher, and to this union were born five children: Fannie, who died unmarried; Mary, wife of Samuel Zwally; Emma, wife of Franklin Leeking; Katie, wife of William Cuninghame; and Sarah, wife of John Wolfskill. The mother of the above named children died June 26, 1875, and Mr. Shirk later married Miss Elizabeth Heffley, who died Oct. 19, 1899.

JACOB R. WITMER. Looking backward to the year 1716, the family records of the Witmer family tell of one Benjamin Witmer, who, in company with his son, Abraham, left Switzerland with the intention of founding a new home in the United States. His final location was made in Lancaster county, where Abraham purchased lands which have never passed out of the possession of the Witmer family. In 1739 both Benjamin and his son were naturalized, so that their descendants are not Swiss, but represent a portion of the best American citizens of the State of Pennsylvania.

In 1719 there was another son born to Benjamin Witmer, named John. This John married Frances Roland and reared a family of seven children: Anna, wife of John Kendig; John, who married Mary Harmen; Henry, who married Fanny Musser; David, married to Esther Kendig; Benjamin, who married Anna Brubaker; Abraham, married to Molly Herr; and Daniel, married to Anna Newcomer. Abraham, the fifth son of this family, in 1798 built a stone bridge across the Conestoga creek, about one mile east of Lancaster, called Witmer's bridge, which is in good condition at the present day.

The lands purchased by Abraham, son of the original Benjamin, descended by will at his death, in 1783, to his nephew, Benjamin Witmer. This nephew Benjamin had two children: Elizabeth, married to John Buckwalter; and Benjamin, who married Esther Buckwalter, and inherited his father's farm in 1822. Benjamin and Esther (Buckwalter) Witmer reared these children: Nancy, who married Abram Buchwalter; Polly, who married Abram Landis; David; Elizabeth, who married Abram Huntzberger; Lydia, who married Jacob Brubaker; and Benjamin, Esq. All of these lie buried in the old Mellinger graveyard, and all of them through life consistently lived up to the Old Mennonite faith.

David Witmer was born in 1800, and until the time of his death, in 1875, devoted his life to agricultural pursuits. At the age of thirty-three he was ordained a minister in the Old Mennonite Church and he faithfully performed the duties attaching to the Mellinger and Stumptown stations. The Witmer lands, now owned by his son, were purchased by David, at an appraisement made by his brothers and sisters, although he had but little ready money, and the assumed debt occasioned, at the time, considerable anxiety. His character was of such excellence, and he was so beloved by his congregations that aid was immediately tendered him in order to clear the debt, but these kind offers were declined, and he labored harder on the land, and not only cleared it off, but at the time of his death left an estate valued at $40,000.

David Witmer married Annie Rutt, who was born in 1798 and died in 1867, having been the devoted mother of nine children: Elizabeth, who died at the age of sixty-nine years, unmarried; Abram, who lives retired at Mountville and married Mary Kendig, deceased; Esther; Annie, the widow of Christian Kendig; David; Jacob R.; Barbara, who married Christian Frey, of Lancaster; Mary, deceased, who married Emanuel Herr; and Benjamin, deceased, who married Mary Kreider.

Jacob R. Witmer was born Feb. 19, 1833, on the farm which he now occupies. His education was received in the common schools of his district and his life has been passed in farming, his tastes lying in this direction. Immediately after marriage he took charge of the farm of his father-in-law, as manager, and profitably operated it until 1867, when he bought his present home of the other heirs. These lands are known through the township as very desirable, and the improvements made by the present occupant have been of the most substantial character.

The marriage of Jacob R. Witmer occurred on Dec. 2, 1856, when he was united to Esther Ranck, a daughter of Samuel Ranck, a well-known miller of the locality. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Witmer are: Samuel, deceased, who married Annie Groff and was the father of two children, Jacob G. and Amelia, who make their home with their beloved grandfather; Annie, who died at the early age of nineteen; Susan, at home; and Aaron, who married Ida Eby, superintends the home farm and has two children, Enos and Ada.

No family possesses the esteem of the community in a higher degree than does the Witmer family of East Lampeter township, and none are more valued as consistent members of the Old Mennonite Church.

WILLIAM DAGUE. One of the emphatically self-made retired farmers of Salisbury township, Lancaster county, Pa., is William Dague, who was born Sept. 18, 1830, near Cains post-office, in Salisbury township, and has there passed his life in the pursuit of agriculture with unvarying and marked success.

His parents, David and Margaret (Ranck) Dague, were natives of Salisbury and Conestoga Valley, respectively, were agricultural people, and descended from a long line of farmers who had lived in the Keystone State for several generations. David Dague was a son of Andrew and Annie (Good) Dague, and his wife was a daughter of Peter and Margaret (Eckholtz) Ranck. David Dague and his wife had eight children, viz.: William; Margaret A., widow of John Glendenning, and a resident of Philadelphia; Mary E., wife of Lorenzo Hackett, of Chester county; Lydia S., married to W. W. Lindville, a farmer of Salisbury township; David R., who died young; Catherine O., wife of Evan Bustler, a farmer in East Earl township; Susan R., deceased wife of John M. Schultz; and Peter A., a farmer at McGovernville, Pa. David Dague, the father of this family, was an extensive drover as well as farmer, and was well known in the former capacity throughout the country districts of Lancaster and adjoining counties. He lost his wife in 1878, when she was seventy-two years of age. She died in the faith of the Lutheran Church, and her remains were interred in the Pequea Church cemetery. David Dague died in 1881.

William Dague early started out to make his way in the world. He was but fourteen years of age when, much against the wishes of his parents, he began to work for the farmers of his neighborhood; he was of an independent spirit, and was desirous of earning something he could call his own and do with as he pleased. He was industrious, persistent and indefatigable, and soon won the approbation, encouragement and admiration of the farmers round about him and was never at a loss for employment at remunerative wages. He thus worked as a farm hand for eight years, then teamed for a year, and then, through his frugality and industry having saved some funds, rented and stocked land for seven years. At the end of this period he found himself prepared for embarking more extensively in agriculture, and he purchased a forty-five-acre farm in Salisbury township, to which he afterward added an eighty-acre tract along the foot hills.

In March, 1852, Mr. Dague married Miss Susanna Warner, who was born in Salisbury township in May, 1833, daughter of David and Susanna (Garber) Warner, the former of whom was a farmer and died in 1861, when seventy-seven years old; the latter died in 1864, at the same age, and their remains were interred in the Old Mennonite cemetery at Salisbury. They had six children, as follows: John, Jacob, Isaac, Eliza, Susanna (Mrs. Dague) and David, all now deceased. David and Eliza died unmarried. William and Susanna (Warner) Dague had children as follows: Anna M., who is married to Coleman Kurtz, a farmer of Salisbury township; George N., a farmer of Salisbury township, and married to Mary Mast; Ella, wife of Diller Hoover, who is a farmer in Salisbury township; and Isaac W., who is married to Lillie Grist, and with his wife lives on the old homestead with his father. Mrs. Susanna (Warner) Dague was called from earth in March, 1894, deeply mourned by her husband and children. She was a devout Presbyterian and her remains were interred in the Pequea Church cemetery.

In 1890, having acquired a competency, through his persevering industry, skillful management and unaided personal efforts, Mr. Dague retired from the activities of life and sought the well-deserved rest he is now enjoying, surrounded by many warm-hearted friends and genial companions, as well as by his loving children who live in close proximity. Mr. Dague is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, to which he is a liberal contributor, and he is an ardent friend of free education, having served six years as a school director. He then resigned, feeling that he had fully done his duty in that direction. In politics he is a Republican, but has never been ambitious for holding office, preferring that others should shoulder the responsibilities and share in the vainglorious honors attached to official position. Nevertheless, Mr. Dague is a very public-spirited citizen and at all times ready to aid financially such measures as will redound to the public welfare and comfort in the way of public improvements. His walk through life has been such as to win the approbation of his fellow citizens, and too much credit cannot be awarded him for the upright and useful course he has so unswervingly followed.

DAVID L. PAULES, a retired farmer, was born in East Donegal township, Lancaster county, Dec. 12, 1832, son of John and Catherine (Leber) Paules, natives of York county, in this State.

John Paules was a cooper by trade. In 1816 he came to Marietta, where he resided three years and then removed to East Donegal township, where he engaged in tobacco growing in conjunction with coopering. He was a member of the Reformed Church, and quite prominent as a citizen, serving as supervisor of his township several years, and also at different times holding various minor offices. His wife passed away in 1882, when eighty-two years old, and his own death took place in December, 1887, at the advanced age of ninety-four years, eleven months, one day; the remains of both were interred in the Marietta cemetery. To John Paules and his wife were born ten children, namely: Elizabeth, wife of George Ebbert; Henry, who died after marriage; Sarah, widow of Simon F. Albright, a blacksmith of Maytown, Pa.; Jacob, who was drowned when young, in the Susquehanna river; John, who died young; George, deceased; Mary J., who died in 1900, the wife of John Herchelroth; Franklin, who died in East Donegal township in January, 1896; John, a tobacco farmer in Cumberland county; and David L., of East Donegal township. The paternal grandfather of these children was Michael Paules, a farmer of York county, and the maternal grandfather was Jacob Leber, a native of Germany.

David L. Paules attended school and worked on the home farm until twenty-one years old, and at twenty-two entered a cooper shop, where he worked for some years during the winter season. In the meantime he rented farms, at one time leasing one of 250 acres, and cultivated land until 1897, when he retired, although he still does a little tobacco raising and vegetable growing near the borough of Marietta.

Mr. Paules was united in marriage in Maytown, Feb. 28, 1852, with Miss Anna Eliza Rumbaugh, and to this union the following children have been born: J. Lizzie, wife of George S. Bauchman, clerk for the Hazelton Iron & Coal Company; Ada M. and Sarah A., at home; Harry P., who married Ore Housegal and lives in Marietta; Elmer E., who married Matilda A. Grady and also resides in Marietta, engaged in the livery business; Dr. William R., now of Danville, Pa., who married Florence Pieffer; John L., a druggist in Homestead, Pa., married to Ida Bertheisel; and David L., unmarried, who carries on a livery business in Marietta and lives with his parents.

Mrs. Anna E. (Rumbaugh) Paules is a native of Newville, Lancaster county, born May 9, 1832, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Davis) Rumbaugh, the former of whom was born in Perry county, Pa., and the latter on the Atlantic ocean, when her parents were on the voyage from Ireland to America. They were married in Maytown, Pa., where John Rumbaugh carried on his trade of wheelwright. He was assessor of East Donegal township and was honored with other positions of trust. His wife died in Maytown in 1863, aged fifty-eight years and fourteen days, and Mr. Rumbaugh's death took place at the home of his son-in-law, David L. Paules, June 28, 1888, at the age of seventy-nine years. Both were members of the Lutheran Church. Of the four children born to Mr. and Mrs. Rumbaugh Anna E., Mrs. D. L. Paules, is the eldest; Mary J. is the widow of H. S. Book; Amanda L. is the wife of Solon V. Landis, a retired farmer; and Benjamin F., the youngest, a carpenter, died in 1887. The survivors live in Maytown. John Rumbaugh, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Paules, was a native of Germany, was a farmer and an early settler of Perry county, Pa. Her maternal grandparents, Michael and Bridget Davis, came from Ireland to America in 1805 and settled in Maytown, Pa.; he was a plasterer by trade.

In politics Mr. Paules is a Republican, and he has served his fellow townsmen as school director nine consecutive years. He and his family are members of the Lutheran Church, and socially they mingle with the best people of the township. Mr. Paules has been a remarkably successful farmer, has acquired a competence and is now enjoying at his ease the fruits of his early industry.

HENRY LEAMAN, of Strasburg township, is one of the representative men of Lancaster county, and belongs to one of the old and esteemed families, which established itself here through grandfather Abraham Leaman, who was a prominent farmer of his day. He married Mary Bowman, by whom he had one son, Benjamin, who was born May 26, 1787, and died June 2, 1857.

Benjamin Leaman adopted farming as his profession, made his home in East Lampeter township and there became the owner of a large acreage of land, one farm comprising 110 acres, and an adjoining one seventy-five acres, both of which he operated himself, at one time. As time passed on and his family grew up around him, he purchased a farm for each son, all of these lying in East Lampeter and Leacock townships. His friends through the community were many, and such was the confidence which they placed in him that all his spare time was occupied in the settlement of estates and caring for those who were placed in his charge as wards.

On May 19, 1807, Benjamin Leaman married as his first wife Catherine Cryder, born March 15, 1789, who died Dec. 30, 1838, the children born to this union being: Abraham, born in 1808, died in 1839, a farmer, who had married Barbara Buckwalter; John, born in 1810, died in 1882, a farmer in Leacock township, who married two sisters by the name of Landis; Barbara, who died in infancy; Benjamin, born in 1813, died in 1891, a farmer of Leacock township; Susannah, born in 1815, the wife of Jacob Ranck, of Strasburg township; Tobias, born in 1817, died in 1859, a farmer of East Lampeter township; Jacob, born in 1819, died in 1889, a farmer of Leacock township; Henry, born in 1822, who resides in Strasburg township; Isaac, born in 1824, a farmer of East Lampeter; Joseph, born in 1828, died in 1857, a farmer of East Lampeter; the last of this large family being an infant son, born in 1830, who died early. The second marriage of Benjamin Leaman was on Sept. 6, 1842, to Mrs. Elizabeth (Heller) Rohrer, a widow. The parents were members of the Old Mennonite Church and the children adhered to the same faith.

Henry Leaman was reared on the farm, in East Lampeter township, and received his education in the public schools of his district. On Dec. 3, 1844, he was married to Sarah Buckwalter, a daughter of Martin and Nancy (Lefever) Buckwalter, who was born Feb. 5, 1823. After marriage the young couple located on a farm in Strasburg township and two years later purchased a farm of 102 acres near Refton, which Mr. Leaman operated from 1847 until he retired from the cares of active life. At that time he erected a comfortable home in Refton, remaining there until 1892, when he removed to his present home, which is located one-half mile north-east of Strasburg and contains sixty acres, one of the best improved places in the county, and now managed by his son, Reuben.

Henry Leaman has been one of the successful agriculturists of the county and has always been known as an upright, honorable man, worthy of the confidence and respect which he receives, and a consistent member of the Old Mennonite Church. The children born to Henry Leaman and his wife were: Eliza, born in Oct., 1845, who was the wife of Elias Herr, a lime-burner and merchant of Warren county, Va., and who died Dec. 9, 1901, aged fifty-six years, leaving five children, Harry, Francis, Addie, Reuben and Ira : Susan, born in January, 1847, who married Peter Esbenschade, of Manheim township, and has three children, Frank, Elmer and Cora; Emma, born in July, 1848, who resides with her parents; Sarah Ann, born in January, 1851, who married John P. Rohrer, of Strasburg, and had seven children, Lillie, Frank, Emma, John, Charles, Harry and Clair; Martin, who died young; Henry B., born in November, 1856, who married Emma Groff, resides in Paradise township and has two children, Ross and Mary; Franklin, born in November, 1858, who married Amanda Schaffer, resides in Sadsbury township and has four children, Roy, John, Clair and Edna; Mary, born in October, 1861, who died the same year; and Reuben B., born Nov. 23, 1863, who married Alice Stoner and has four children, Anna, Lizzie, Mary and Harry. Mrs. Sarah (Buckwalter) Leaman died Sept. 20, 1901, aged seventy-eight years.

Reuben B. Leaman is a progressive farmer and successful dairyman of this county, as well as one of the most solid and substantial of its citizens. The family is held in the highest respect through the whole township and can justly be regarded as representative.

JAMES LAW, who has been for a long time known to the literary world as James D. Law, poet, is a native of Scotland, having been born in Lumsden village, West Aberdeenshire, on April 5, 1865. To distinguish him from an uncle of the same name, for a time Mr. Law adopted the middle initial D., but in recent years he has gone back to the original form of his name; and, while he is still known to the business world as James D. Law, his literary work is often autographed as shown underneath the annexed portrait specially prepared for this work.

On his father's side, Mr. Law's ancestors have been purely Celtic for countless generations. His mother dying before he was a year old, he was left to the care of his uncle, John Law, an excellent type of the sturdy, well informed and enterprising Scotsman. Our poet attended a "Dame's school" for a time, and is perhaps one of the youngest men living, who learned his letters from "the brods." He remembers carrying a peat to school every morning, as his daily contribution to the school fire-fund of the village Dominie. In due course he passed through the various stages of schooling, filling in his Saturdays and holidays "herding kye," and at other work on his uncle's small farm, thus becoming familiar with all kinds of rural activities. A voracious reader, he soon exhausted the little public libraries and the more pretentious private collections of the district. He served four years as a pupil teacher, and at the age of eighteen secured a position as assistant to the factor of the Durriss estate, Deeside, County of Kincardine. There he remained three years, when he decided to emigrate to America. Before sailing he was united in marriage to Miss Agnes Duff, daughter of Robert Duff, Esq., of New Noth and Old Noth, on Bogieside. Mrs. Law, a lady of high culture and fine personal attainments, was a successful teacher in Scotland, holding a first-class government certificate. In May, 1886, the young couple landed in Boston, and at once proceeded to Philadelphia. Being without either friends or acquaintances, after a rather trying probation Mr. Law secured a position as bookkeeper to an oil-cloth manufacturer in Camden, N. J., and soon after took up his residence there. In 1890 he connected himself with the J. F. Portuondo Cigar Manufacturing Company, of Philadelphia, having been its first Secretary and attached to it for a year after the death of Mr. Portuondo. In October, 1898, he came to Lancaster to take charge of the Havana Cigar Company and the other Lancaster interests of Mrs. A. B. Bloomer, a wealthy and accomplished resident of Cincinnati, Ohio, but allied to Lancaster county by hereditary relations, her father, Martin Bare, Esq., having been born in the Bareville her grandfather founded. Mr. and Mrs. Law have been blessed with seven children, viz.: (1) Duff Christie; (2) Nanette Margaret (deceased); (3) Estella Maria; (4) John James (deceased); (5) America Portuondo; (6) Russell Gordon; (7) Evelyn Agnes.

Mr. Law's predilection for rhyming and his irrepressible wit and humor were soon asserted, some of his effusions appearing in the Aberdeen newspapers before he left school; and even as early as 1883, in Edward's Fifth Series of "Modern Scottish Poets," Mr. Law although then only eighteen years of age, received a lengthy and flattering editorial notice, accompanied by several pages devoted to specimens of his verses. He never allows the muse to interfere with business, and, to his credit be it said, he has not missed a day's work since he first got a foothold in the New World. He is a man of the strictest temperate habits, not even being a smoker, although for many years intimately connected with the great cigar industry. Essentially a home man, the only club that can claim him is the St. Andrew's Society of Philadelphia. At the same time, there is nothing sour or ascetic in his composition; no one better enjoys a social chat than he does, and wherever he goes he is a welcome and honored guest in the best houses and establishments in the land. In his business trips all over the States, he has cemented by personal contact many friendships begun through the medium of the mails. Perhaps no one in the Commonwealth has a finer collection of holograph letters from modern celebrities, not "purchased with a price," as such valued rarities generally are, but received by Mr. Law himself in the ordinary course of his correspondence. In a hurried glance through a partial list are noted specimens of Gladstone and Lord Rosebery among statesmen; Whittier, Holmes, Riley and Austin among poets; Blackie and Furness among critics; Collyer and Ingersoll among orators; Allan, M. P., jostled Brosius, M. C.; Brewer, of the Supreme Bench, rested beside Dewar among scientists, while DePeyster and Carnegie among philanthropists "led all the rest." To have come so intimately in touch with such men of light and leading is in itself no mean tribute to Mr. Law's ability and versatility. A lover of books from his earliest years, he has naturally collected a fine library, which has been enriched by many gifts from admiring friends and fellow-authors. One half of the collection, numbering 5,000 volumes or more, is made up of books relating exclusively to Scotland and Scottish literature, which still remains Mr. Law's first choice. Books, indeed, seem to be in very nook of his beautiful home in East Clay street, a well-stocked case in his dining room being considered as essential to the welfare and happiness of the family as the clock upon the mantel. Raised in such an atmosphere, and with such surroundings, it is easy to understand why Mr. Law's children attending school are pronounced by their teachers to be "the best all around scholars" in their respective departments.

Mr. Law is the author of several books which have been widely circulated and received with unqualified approbation by the first critics of the age. It would take a volume to quote the press notices evoked from all quarters of the globe on his "Dreams O' Hame" and other poems, Scottish and American, published in 1893 by Gardner, of Paisley and London. The very handsome general appearance of the book was the subject of much favorable comment, and bearing the imprint of the Queen's publisher was in itself a high compliment to an American citizen. Mr. Law's latest volume, entitled "The Sea-Shore of Bohemia," is his most ambitious effort, and deals with some little-known episodes in the life of William Shakespeare, special attention being given to the Scotch friends and experiences that unquestionably influenced the Great Dramatist's life and writings. Mr. Law's poem is in dramatic form, with lyrical interludes, and historical data can be furnished for all the interesting incidents introduced into his brilliant "Conversations." Says a recent critic:

"A remarkable fact about Mr. Law's Muse is that he is at home in every style of the poetic art, turning out dramas, epics, elegies, odes, lyrics and satires with equal facility, and excelling in all. He is complete master of every known form of rhyme and rhythm, and has even invented some new measures, which is not a small poetic feat at this late day in the history of prosody. He personally claims that he can only write well in Scotch, his native tongue; English, as he says, being a foreign language to him; but the truth is that he gains much of his power from the fact that his harp is a two-keyed instrument. He has, it is plain to be seen, a natural gift for writing, and we have it from the best authority that his poems are entirely extemporaneous, which may account to a large extent for the charming spontaneity of his style."

Mr. Law has been a welcome contributor to the leading metropolitan journals, and his popularity here is, if anything, exceeded by his reputation in the old country. The leading Scottish critics have long since admitted that the best Scotch in the world is written in America, and Mr. Law is considered by many to be the foremost poetical exponent of the Scottish dialect. Several years ago he was awarded the N. A. U. C. A. prize for the best original Scotch poem, the competition being open to Canada and the United States. He is also a fine conversationalist and debater, and is philosopher enough to understand that a good listener is not unappreciated. All the local newspapers have had their pages enriched by Mr. Law's musings, one of the most admired of his recent effusions having been the following Sonnet on the sudden death of the highly honored Congressman, Hon. Marriott C. Brosius. We cull it from the New Era of March 18, 1901:

MARRIOTT BROSIUS.

"Native here and to the manner born."

But yesterday we saw and hailed our friend,
As, full of life, he passed along the street;
Ere dawn to-day his heart had ceased to beat,
So swiftly did the fatal stroke descend,
The knell that none could fail to comprehend,
The certain summons that we all must meet;
And now the glory of a higher seat
Succeeds the term that here has reached its end.

A soldier-statesman; in his chosen field
We honored him as our repeated choice
Until his name was to the nation known;
And at the last, with all his worth revealed,
While we lament we also can rejoice
That brilliant Brosius was our very own!

We regret that space will not permit us to give a better representation of Mr. Law's poetry, but we cannot refrain from adding to the value of this meager sketch by inserting his "Columbia-Caledonia." This Scottish-American song has already been accepted on both sides of the Atlantic as a sort of International Anthem, beautifully blending as it does the love for the Old Country with the love for the New, in an exalted strain of the purest patriotism:

COLUMBIA—CALEDONIA.

THE LAND WE LEFT—aye, to us dear!
We've sung it lood and lang;
But hae we nae a country HERE
As worthy o' a sang?
While Scotland's name and Scotland's fame
Wi' us can never dee,
COLUMBIA noo we've made oor hame,
And praise to her we'll gie!
The Mither Land! The Mither Land!
Let's couple wi' her name
The Independentither land
We noo hae made oor hame!

Shak' oot the Starry Banner's fauld,
 And let the Thistle wave;
 The Rampant Lion's nae mair bauld
 Than is the Eagle brave!
 The land we're in's a peerless land,
 As big as Scotia's wee;
 Weel worthy by her side to stand
 And aye oor hame to be!
 We'll ne'er forget the Mither Land,
 Nor need a Scot think shame
 To sing with pride the ither land
 We noo hae made oor hame!

The hame we had—the hame we hae!
 O, lang and far ye'll ca'
 Afore ye meet, if e'er ye may,
 Wi' sic anither twa!
 Auld Caledonia's first and best
 O' lands across the sea!
 And here's the glory of the West,
 The country o' the free!
 God's blessing on the Mither Land,
 And a' within the same,
 And also on the ITHIR LAND
 We noo hae made oor Hame!

Shortly before his death Col. Robert G. Ingersoll wrote to Mr. Law as follows:

"Your beautiful poems have given me real pleasure. They are full of good feeling—comradeship. They are genial and social and human. Besides they are perfectly natural. They come from the heart as springs from the ground. Versification is easy for you and many of the verses are worthy of Burns. The comic, the pathetic, smiles and tears are side by side, and in nearly all the poems I find the pulse of joyous life. Nothing cynical, and nothing morose, nothing of night; appreciation, admiration, morning everywhere. Good health in every line—nothing morbid, diseased or deformed, but all wholesome, natural and true. I congratulate you."

From the eminent Shakespearean scholar, Dr. Furness, Mr. Law recently received the following flattering acknowledgement relating to his poem on "Shakespeare's Gloves":

"My Dear Mr. Law:—The copy of your delightful verses duly reached me, and I have read, and re-read and re-read them with ever increasing pleasure. They are charming. I think Burns himself would have chuckled over the humor, appreciated the sentiment and would have been glad to acknowledge the lines as his own. Can one hair's breadth be added to this towering praise? If it be possible, it does not lie in the power of

"Yours very cordially,
 "HORACE HOWARD FURNESS."

The words of a distinguished Scottish-American critic we have pleasure in reproducing:

"We advise Mr. Law to continue to exercise his poetic powers. He has accomplished much in the past, but he is still a young man, and his countrymen both at home and abroad believe that he will yet produce something that will send his name ringing through all parts of the civilized world where the English language is known. The Scotch portions of the Globe already know of him, and in the words of their leading journals have repeatedly declared, 'among living Scottish poets, Mr. Law is unquestionably entitled to a foremost place.' May he never have cause to regret having sung:

Columbia treats her strangers weel,
 The langer kent she grows mair dear,
 And, aff the heath, nae Scot can feel
 So much at hame as here!

In July, 1902, Mr. Law made a long contemplated trip to Europe, where his family had preceded him, revisiting his native land after an absence of over sixteen years. He saw everything and everybody worth seeing, from the cot to the castle, and from the King to the Commoner, covering Scotland and England very thoroughly, and also looking in on Ireland. Wherever he went he was well received, and made the recipient of many honors and high compliments. Amidst all he found time to share his pleasures by penning many delightful "Letters of Travel" for American papers, and contributed various articles in prose and verse to the Scottish press. He returned to Lancaster in February, 1903, and received a hearty welcome from all his friends and acquaintances. He has been officially requested to write the college poem, song and chorus for the Franklin and Marshall Golden Jubilee to be celebrated in June, 1903.

DAVID K. GRUBE, a retired farmer and one of the most highly respected and influential men of East Hempfield township, was born April 1, 1839, a son of Christian and Rebecca (Kurtz) Grube.

The founder of the Grube family in America was Casper, a native of Switzerland, who located in the vicinity of Kissel Hill, in Lancaster county, and was the great-grandfather of David. This worthy man had two sons, of whom record has been kept: Christian, the grandfather of David, and a son (name unknown) who died at Kissel Hill. Christian, the grandfather, a farmer of Neffsville, who owned and operated two fine farms, is supposed to have been a member of the Lutheran Church, and lived to the advanced age of eighty-five, his death occurring in 1845. His family consisted of fourteen children: George, a farmer, who lived and died in Lancaster county; Christian, father of David; Casper, a farmer, whose whole life was spent in Lancaster county; David, a farmer and cattle raiser of Lancaster county, Samuel, a butcher, who went west to Indiana, where he died; Joseph, also a butcher, who lived and died in Lancaster county; John, a farmer, who went west to Ohio; Jacob; Sally, who married Henry Hotenstine; Susan, who was the second wife of Mr. Hotenstine; Elizabeth, who married Jacob Stoner; three other daughters, names unknown.

Christian Grube, the father of David, was born at Neffsville, in March, 1795, and died near that town in 1880. Early in life he learned the carpenter trade, which he followed for many years, but about 1850 he turned his attention to farming. The maiden name of his estimable wife was Rebecca Kurtz, a daughter of John Kurtz. Her birth occurred at Roseville, Lancaster county, in the fall of 1795, and she died in 1867. To her husband she bore seven children: John, first a carpenter, later a butcher, and a resident of Perry county, Pa.; Margaretta, wife of Reuben Bird, of Neffsville; Christian, a carpenter, a resident of Lebanon, Pa.; Edward, a cigar manufacturer, who is a resident of Neffsville; Lydia; Jacob, a resident of southern Missouri; and David K.

David K. Grube spent his boyhood upon his father's farm and received his education in the public schools. At the age of eighteen he commenced to learn the trade of a carpenter, and followed it successfully until his marriage, when he embarked in farming, to which he gave his attention, in conjunction with burning lime, until he retired, in 1896. The property owned by him, and upon which he resides, is a fine one, consisting of ninety-nine acres, one mile south of Petersburg, and upon it he has made many desirable improvements. Nearly all of the excellent buildings were erected by him, and the entire farm speaks well for his thrifty management.

In 1867 David Grube was married to Amelia Kauffman, a daughter of Christian and Martha (Miller) Kauffman, who was born Oct. 19, 1840, and died Nov. 26, 1894, after having borne her husband four children: Alice, wife of Christian Hoover; Morris, unmarried, who resides in the West; David, unmarried, who operates a portion of his father's farm; Jacob, at home.

David K. Grube is a consistent member of the German Baptist Church, in which he takes a prominent part, and he is highly respected throughout the community for his integrity and honesty.

JOHN C. FORREY, a retired farmer of West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Pa., was born on his present farm of 125 acres Aug. 30, 1838, and is a son of Jacob and Mary (Cophenheffer) Forrey, of whom Jacob was also born on this farm and Mary elsewhere in the township. Jacob was a successful agriculturist and passed his entire life on the home place, dying in November, 1871, when seventy-one years old; in 1843 he had lost his wife, who died when but twenty-five years of age. They were members of the Mennonite Church, and their mortal remains were buried in the private or family burial ground on the home farm. The only children born to Jacob and Mary Forrey were John C. and Jacob.

The paternal grandparents of John C. Forrey were John and Veronica (Seitz) Forrey, the former of whom was also born on the present homestead, and the latter in Manor township, but both died on the farm. Mrs. Forrey lived to the great age of 103 years, eleven months, sixteen days. The John last mentioned was a son of Daniel, who was also born on this same West Hempfield farm, and Daniel was a son of John, the founder of the Forrey family in America, who came from Switzerland and secured the grant of the farm from the William Penn estate in 1746.

In November, 1878, in Lancaster City, John C. Forrey married Anna Moore, and to this union were born two children, John M. and Jacob M., both of whom died young and were interred in the family burying ground on the farm. Mrs. Anna (Moore) Forrey was born in West Hempfield township and is a daughter of Henry and Mary Moore, who were natives of York county, but who settled in Lancaster county early in life.

John C. Forrey has always been a good manager, and has succeeded admirably in all his undertakings and well deserves his reward for his early industry and economy. He has always been active and public-spirited, is a director in the Columbia Trust Company and was one of its first stockholders, and has been a school director for six years as the choice of the Republican party, of which he has been a lifelong member. He still continues the cultivation of the home farm, but hires help to do the work.

JACOB J. BYERS, a retired farmer of East Drumore township, was born in Pequea township Dec. 13, 1836, his parents being John and Catherine (Johnston) Byers, both natives of Lancaster county, where he was born March 16, 1807, and his wife Dec. 9, 1815.

John Byers was the son of Henry and Barbara (Crider) Byers, both of whom were born in this county, and whose parents came from Germany about 1730. Henry Byers, the grandfather of Jacob J., first settled in Martic township, and different members of the Byers family sustained an honored part in the Revolutionary struggle. They took up a tract of government land in Pequea and Martic townships, where they lived and reared large families. Henry Byers and his wife had nine children: Henry Byers, of Ohio; Jacob, of Lancaster county; Michael, of Indiana; Daniel, who died in Lancaster; John; Sarah, the wife of David Eshleman, of Pequea township; Mary, the wife of Benjamin Longenecker, of Illinois; Nancy, the wife of Michael Crider, of Lancaster; and Barbara, who married Christian Warfel, of Lancaster.

John Byers, noted above, married Mary Johnston in 1833 and settled on the farm of her father, Jacob Johnston, in Pequea township, where he remained until 1848, when he moved to his own farm in the same township. Still later he bought a farm in Lampeter township, where he died Jan. 5, 1856, his widow passing to her reward in May, 1877. Both himself and his wife were members of the Mennonite Church. Mr. Byers was one of the old line Whigs, and became a Republican on the organization of that party. They had a family of eleven children, six of whom are now living: Barbara, born in 1834, who married Samuel Minnie, both deceased (four of their children are living); Henry Byers, who died in Lampeter, unmarried; Jacob J., our subject; Mary A., born in February, 1840, widow of Peter Sithert, with three children, John, Benjamin and Lizzie; Sarah, born in March, 1842, who married Henry Barr, of Pequea township, and is the mother of six children; Michael, who died in childhood; John, who died in Sterling, Ill., leaving two children; David, born in March, 1848, who married Miss Margaret Hoover, and is engaged in farming near Sterling, Ill., where they have a family of six children; Anna, born in September, 1850, who married John Huber and resides in Lampeter township, where they have one son, Elmer; Benjamin, born July 9, 1853, a butcher, who married Lillie Eshleman and lives in Lampeter township, where they have three children; Amaziah, born Feb. 21, 1856, who died when a young man.

Jacob J. Byers was reared to manhood under the parental roof, and secured his education in the local schools. His father died when he was eighteen years old, and he began for himself as a hired man among the neighboring farmers. He continued at this occupation for five years. For a time he was working at the carpenter trade, and then enlisted in the Union army, becoming a member of Company E, 79th P. V. I., in the Western Army, under the command of General Sherman. In the battles of Chattanooga and Perryville he bore himself well, and was then attached to the Pioneer Corps, with which he was connected for eighteen months, fighting, as well as building pontoon bridges and sharing in other dangerous labors. In the fierce and bloody battle of Stone River he was a participant, as he was in other battles of Sherman's campaigns in the fall of 1863, and he fought at Chickamauga. He re-enlisted in February, 1864, and remained in the army until its brilliant achievements became a matter of history, and the grand review at Washington declared to the world that the war had ended. Mr. Byers fought at Buzzard Roost and Kenesaw Mountain. Three times was he wounded, at Peach Tree Creek, Jonesboro and at Benton. Mr. Byers was in the hospital in North Carolina, and survived his wounds, escaping from the hospital to join his command and share the glory of Pennsylvania Avenue on the second day of the grand review.

Mr. Byers was married in 1866 to Miss Lizzie Meck, who was born in Lampeter township in 1843, a daughter of John and Elizabeth Meck. Her father is still living on the home of his great-grandfather, Nicholas Meck, who was a Revolutionary soldier.

Mr. and Mrs. Byers were farming people in Lampeter township until 1875, when they removed to a farm he had bought in East Drumore township. There Mr. Byers built a barn 110 feet long, remodelled the house and made many improvements. Mr. Byers now owns 500 acres of land, on which are seven sets of farm buildings, all but one occupied by his family. The nine children of Mr. and Mrs. Byers are all living: (1) Anna E., born in November, 1868, who married Clayton Alexander, has one son, Jacob, and occupies one of the farm homes referred to above; (2) John M., born in January, 1870, and married to Susan Groff, of East Drumore, where he lives on a farm; (3) Henry S., born in 1871, who married Emma Yost, resides in Pequea township and is the father of four children, Lizzie, Harry, Benjamin and Sue; (4) Jacob, born in August, 1872, who married Lizzie Groff, lives in East Drumore township and has three children, Stella, David and Wanie; (5) Amos N., born in March, 1874, who married Miss Nancy Waltman, and resides on his father's home farm, his only son being Roy; (6) Martin, born in August, 1875, who married Miss Sarah Lefever, has one daughter, Emma E., and resides at the home of his father; (7) Enos, born in March, 1879, unmarried; (8) Uriah S., born in February, 1881, unmarried; (9) Noah M., born in March, 1889.

Mr. Byers bought his present home in 1896. It is a mile south of Quarryville, and there he has been living a retired life. Always a Republican, for nine years he held the office of auditor in East Drumore township. Mr. and Mrs. Byers are members of the Old Mennonite Church at Mechanics Grove.

CHARLES G. SCHUBERTH, proprietor of the Lancaster Steam Laundry, has one of the finest plants of the kind in Pennsylvania. He is the pioneer of the steam laundry business in Lancaster, having established his present place in July, 1886, and enjoys a fine patronage, employing four delivery wagons in Lancaster and six in Philadelphia, in which city he has a heavy custom.

Mr. Schubert comes from fine German stock on both sides. His father's uncle, Henry Schubert, was honored by the Emperor of Russia, and his maternal grandfather, William Kahler, was decorated with the Iron Cross by the Emperor of Germany for distinguished military services. Most of Mr. Schubert's relatives in Europe are professional men—teachers and ministers of the Lutheran faith.

William Schubert, father of Charles G., was born in 1814 in Berlin, Germany, and lived in his native country until he reached middle age. He received a thorough education, becoming especially well known as a scholar in the Latin, Greek and German languages, and was engaged as professor in a college at Guben, Germany, for a number of years. During his young manhood he gave the regular service as a soldier. In the early fifties he brought his family to America, the voyage occupying thirteen weeks, and located first in the western part of Pennsylvania, remaining there some four years. They then moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, where the family home was for some years, and Mr. Schubert spent his latter years with his children, dying in 1900 at New Brighton, Pa. He returned to the fatherland twice, during the sixties. After coming to America he was engaged at cabinet-making. Mr. Schuberth was an accomplished performer on both the violin and piano, and took great delight in music. He was a member of and active worker in the M. E. Church. In Germany Mr. Schuberth married Katherine Kahler, who was born in 1820, in Hamburg, and their family consisted of nine children, four sons—all born in Germany and five daughters—all born in America: William is one of the leading contractors of Cincinnati, Ohio, and makes his home at Wyoming, that State. Henry C. is a tobacco dealer at Miamisburg, Ohio. August C. is in the cigar business at Falmouth, Ky. Charles G. is mentioned below. Three of the daughters died in infancy. Emma is Mrs. Burns. May is the wife of John F. Snider. The mother died in 1877. She was one of a large family, and her brothers were all professional men, either teachers or ministers.

Charles G. Schuberth was born June 13, 1851, in Hamburg, Germany, and was a mere child when he came with the family to this country. His educational advantages were such as the common schools afforded. He remained with his parents until he was fifteen years old, in 1867 going to Cincinnati, where he learned the carpenter's trade with his brother, following same three years. In 1870 he engaged in the tobacco business with another brother, continuing in that line some sixteen years. In November, 1872, he came to Lancaster, Pa., where he has ever since made his home, remaining in the tobacco business until 1886, when he bought the business to which he now devotes his principal attention, and which had been established one year. The laundry is located at No. 146½ East King street. Under his able management the concern has grown until he now has fifty-three employes on his pay-roll and there is no indication that the limit has been reached, by any means. His energy and strict attention to the increasing demands on his plant have not only brought him success and substantial rewards, but have won him the favorable notice of business men in Lancaster generally, among whom he occupies high standing. He is ever on the alert for possible and practical improvements, keeping fully abreast of the times, and may always be depended upon to have the best in his line, for he is a progressive man in every respect. He is a prominent member of the Lancaster Board of Trade.

In 1876 Mr. Schuberth married Miss Clara B. Arnold, daughter of the late Thomas Arnold, the pioneer slating contractor of Lancaster, and up to the time of his death a prominent citizen. Mr. and Mrs. Schuberth have had three children: William died at the age of four. Paul was killed by an electric accident Nov. 8, 1900, at the age of nineteen; he had been employed by the Westinghouse Company in an important position, having forty men under his control. Karl Arnold, the youngest, is a graduate of Franklin and Marshall Academy, and now occupies the position of manager of his father's extensive business.

Fraternally Mr. Schuberth is a member of the Royal Arcanum. He is a director of the Lancaster General Hospital, though he takes little active interest in outside affairs. In religious connection he is a member of Grace Lutheran Church, for eighteen years was one of its vestrymen, and for six years its treasurer. He is deeply interested in the welfare of the Y. M. C. A. in Lancaster, of which he is a member, and took a prominent part in the erection of their fine building in the city. The hammer used to tear off the first board of the house which formerly occupied the site was sold at public auction and Mr. Schuberth bought it, paying the sum of $108.

CHRISTIAN H. KENDIG. The ties that bind the native-born sons of Lancaster county to the place of their birth seem to be peculiarly strong, for, while from other counties a large proportion of the young men drift westward, here there are many who prefer to cling to the associations of youth. Legion is the name of those who have spent long and useful years in the locality where they were born. Mr. Kendig was one of those to whom the love of home and native soil appealed with especial strength. Born on a farm in East Lampeter township, Lancaster county, Dec. 22, 1829, reared to agricultural pursuits, a farmer by training and by choice, following the occupation through all of his life, he finally entered into rest Jan. 4, 1886, and from his old homestead was taken to the Mennonite cemetery in Strasburg township, where his body was interred in the midst of scenes long loved by him.

John G. Kendig, father of Christian H. Kendig, was a son of Henry and Maria (Groff) Kendig, farmers of Strasburg township, Lancaster county. The occupation to which he was reared he selected for his life calling; after the marriage of his son, Christian H., he retired from active labor, but continued to live at the old homestead until his death, July 31, 1876, at seventy years of age. He was laid to rest in the Mennonite cemetery at Strasburg, by the side of his wife, Susan, who had passed away in August, 1865, at the age of fifty-seven years. From childhood both had been earnest members of the Mennonite Church, and in its doctrines they carefully trained their children, Christian H., Mary A., Henry, Susan and John. None of them are now living except Susan, who is unmarried and makes her home in Lancaster. Mrs. Susan Kendig was a daughter of Jacob and Susan (Lefever) Hartman, and grew to womanhood upon the home farm in this county.

When ready to establish a home of his own Christian H. Kendig was united in marriage with Anna Witmer, the ceremony being solemnized in Lancaster Oct. 25, 1855. Four children were born of their union, viz.: Witmer J., of Lancaster; David H., of Reading, Pa.; Susan E. and Anna M., who reside with their mother in Lancaster, the family having in 1892 removed to that city from the old homestead farm. Having been reared in the Mennonite faith, Mrs. Kendig retains membership in that denomination, and is a sincere exponent of its doctrines of self-sacrifice and kindness. Her children attend the Reformed Church and are active in various of its societies.

The ancestry of Mrs. Kendig is traced back to Benjamin Witmer, a native of Switzerland, who in 1716 sought the larger possibilities of America, settling in Lancaster county. Three years later his son, John, was born in this county, of which he remained a lifelong resident. By the marriage of John Witmer to Frances Roland a son was born whom they named Benjamin; this son became a farmer and married a Miss Brubaker, of an old family in the county. Next in line of descent was another Benjamin Witmer, a farmer of East Lampeter township; by his marriage to Esther Buckwalter a son, David, was born. Like his ancestors, he never cared to remove from his native county, preferring to cling to the associations dear to him from his earliest recollections. Nor did he seek a new and strange calling, but continued to till the soil of the homestead acres. At the time of his death, Jan. 9, 1876, he was seventy-five years of age. His wife, who was Anna Rutt, died in 1868, aged sixty-nine years. Both were interred in Mellinger's cemetery connected with the Mennonite Church, of which denomination they were conscientious members. In their family were the following-named sons and daughters: Abraham R., of Mountville, Pa.; Elizabeth, deceased; Hettie, of East Lampeter township; Anna, Mrs. Kendig, of Lancaster; David and Jacob, farmers of East Lampeter township; Barbara, Mrs. Christ Frey, deceased; Mary, Mrs. Emanuel Herr, deceased; Benjamin and Joshua, who are also deceased.

Though a considerable period has elapsed since the death of Mr. Kendig, he is not forgotten by those to whom the associations of a lifetime had endeared him. His memory is still green in the hearts of family and friends. Among his old associates it is often called to mind that he contributed generously to the maintenance of his church, the Mennonite, as well as to the expansion of its missionary movements; nor has it been forgotten that for many years he served faithfully and well as school director, often leaving his farm to do some work in connection with promoting the welfare of the schools. Indeed, as citizen, husband, father and friend, his life was exemplary and his example worthy of emulation.

GEORGE S. LAMBORN. The Lamborn family of Lancaster county, Pa., has not only been one of responsibility and respectability in this locality for many generations, but it is one of the oldest, also, tracing an ancestral line far back in the past, reaching even a date as ancient as A. D. 871 English history has many records of members of this family who became conspicuous in various circles of life, during the years that intervened between the date mentioned and 1659, in which year occurred the birth of the direct ancestor of George S. Lamborn, of Lancaster county.

Josiah Lamborn was born in Easthamstead, Berkshire, England, in 1659, ten years after the beheading of the great English king, Charles I. The marriage of Josiah Lamborn to his wife Ann resulted in the birth of six children: Thomas, Mariah, Robert, John, William and Sarah. Josiah Lamborn died Dec. 12, 1749, and his wife passed away Aug. 11, 1722.

Robert Lamborn, son of Josiah, was born in 1697, and according to the records, his parents were of the Episcopal faith. At the age of seventeen years he formed an attachment for the daughter of Francis Swayne, of Berkshire, England, but this youthful intimacy was discouraged by the parents on both sides, and in order to separate the young people the Swayne family resolved on so stringent a measure as emigration to America, which was accomplished in 1711. When young Robert learned of the shattering of his hopes he was stricken with sorrow, as the location of the Swayne family in the great and unknown land beyond the sea was totally unknown to him. Had Robert been of faint heart this pretty but authentic romance might have been closed then, but he evidently possessed many of those attributes which, both earlier and later, brought prominence and success to his kindred. With a firm resolve to find the lady of his affections Robert bade farewell to his family and also set sail for America, safely reaching these shores in 1713. After visiting various locations of English people in Pennsylvania, the most of whom had settled near Philadelphia, it was in the city of Brotherly Love that the weary swain met with a reward of his search. It must be remembered that at that date the present beautiful city covered much less extent, and thus it was not so wonderful a happening for Robert to meet his desired father-in-law on the street. It is not recorded why the latter greeted the young man kindly and invited him to be his guest, but it is quite possible that in the perseverance of the wooer he recognized a stability that augured well for the future.

The home of Francis Swayne was in Chester county, and Mr. Swayne and his willing visitor made the trip on horseback, taking turns at riding. It was the kind father who reached the farm first, and with a consideration which was doubtless appreciated he sent his daughter, Sarah, out to meet the guest. Love found its way, in those far off days as successfully as now, and doubtless Mr. Swayne thought that the young man had won his bride, for all parental objections seem to have been removed, and the marriage of Robert Lamborn and Sarah Swayne was celebrated, by Friends ceremony, Sept. 5, 1722.

Evidently Robert Lamborn found the farming lands in this locality to his liking, for he remained here all his life, dying on the land he had brought to a high state of cultivation Nov. 22, 1775, and he was laid away in the burying ground at London Grove, in Chester county. His association with the Indians, who still roamed over a portion of the State, seems to have been amicable, as there is an interesting family record of an occasion upon which an Indian besought Robert to accompany him to a certain locality where was situated some of the best land in the country. This spot, which Robert found fair, indeed, was the site of the present city of Lancaster. However, it at that time was too far from any means of transportation to make it a desirable home in which to raise produce for market, and Mr. Lamborn was obliged to give up the idea of locating so far from Philadelphia. It was on the site of the present Center Square monument that Robert Lamborn mounted the stump of an old tree and, after viewing the goodly heritage, the beautiful prospect, he involuntarily exclaimed, "this would be such a beautiful spot upon which to found a city," his thought having been realized by the upbuilding of the city of Lancaster, in which his descendants have been so well known. His friendly relations with the Redmen have given color to many a pretty story, well authenticated. After a day's hunt for venison they would often come to his house and sleep on the kitchen floor, with their feet to the old-fashioned log fire place. When "Lobert," as they called him, would awaken them in the morning they would quietly and peaceably leave the house, first telling him where he could find a deer shot the day before; occasionally they would carry the game to him. The children born to Robert and his wife Sarah were: Robert (2), William, Ann, Elizabeth, Francis, John, Thomas, Josiah and Sarah.

Robert Lamborn (2), son of Robert, was born June 3, 1723, and died Dec. 8, 1781. By Friends' ceremony he was married to Ann (Morris) Bourne Sept. 19, 1746; she died June 6, 1790. By trade he was a blacksmith, and he followed this industry near London Grove, or Lamborntown, his burial taking place there also. By nature he was a kind and charitable man, of whom his neighbors cherished pleasant recollections. The children born to Robert (2) and Ann Lamborn were: Jesse, Susanna, Robert, Thomas, Mary, John, Joseph, Sarah, David, Ann, George, Lydia (who died in infancy) and Lydia (2). All of these were born in Chester county, and all were united in marriage by the simple and beautiful formula of the Society of Friends.

George Lamborn, son of Robert (2), was born near Chadds Ford, Chester county, Dec. 23, 1768, and died Sept. 19, 1856. His first marriage was Feb. 12, 1790, to Martha Marshall and his second marriage was March 14, 1806, to Mary Smedley, who died on Jan. 10, 1857. By occupation he was both farmer and blacksmith, following his trade in the vicinity of his birth until 1806, when he moved to Lancaster county, buying at that time a farm near Wentz's Mill, in Martic township. In the estimation of his neighbors he was a prosperous man, and that he was kind-hearted may be inferred when it is stated that a signing of a note in order to relieve a friend from financial difficulties resulted in his own ruination, making it necessary for him to resume his laborious trade again. Removing after this disaster to Drumore township, he located near Friends Drumore Particular Meeting, and there continued for a time in the blacksmith business, but in 1828 he emigrated to Jefferson county, Ohio, and rented a farm near Steubenville. Nine years later he removed to Knox county, Ohio, where he bought a farm, upon which he remained until the time of his death, his burial being in Millwood cemetery, in the same county. While George Lamborn was still a young man and living at Chadds Ford, he accidentally discovered a vein of fine anthracite coal, while on a hunting tour. On account of the parsimony of the owner of the land upon which it was found the vein was never worked, the exact location of the find being at present known only to two persons, George S. Lamborn, of Liberty Square, Lancaster county, and his cousin, Harvey Baker, of Pittsburg, the former of whom owns the original draft. The children born to the first marriage of George Lamborn were: Lewis, Benjamin, Thomas, Ann, Marshall and Lydia, all of whom were married by the Friends' ceremony. The children of the second marriage were: Smedley; Susanna; John; Esther; Robert; Mary; Philena; Jacob; Lindley; and Martha. Changes came into this family, some of the members marrying into other religious societies, the result being that Smedley, the direct ancestor of George S. Lamborn, was the only one who adhered to the simple ceremony of the Friends, which had united his ancestors.

Smedley Lamborn, son of George and Mary Lamborn, was born in Chester county Jan. 6, 1807, and died Sept. 26, 1851. On Dec. 22, 1830, he was united in wedlock to Margaret Bolton, who was born Aug. 26, 1810, a daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth Bolton; she died on Nov. 21, 1855. Her parents were formerly residents of Bucks county, Pa., where he carried on a business of chair and spinning wheel maker, engaging in farming after locating in Lancaster county. Smedley Lamborn was a man of excellent morals and religious habits of thought, being also a man of liberal ideas and one much interested in all reform movements. As an ardent anti-slavery man he took an interested part in the workings of the Underground Railroad, and was as active in the cause of temperance. By trade he was a blacksmith, having been a pupil of Edward Green, but at the age of twenty-three years he bought the farm in Martic township on which his son George now resides. After his marriage he opened up a smithy on his farm near Wentz's Mill, and there, with excellent machinery adapted to his purpose, he did a good business.

It was in that place that George S. Lamborn, of Lancaster county, was born, and it is recalled in his mind by several incidents of early childhood, they probably being the very earliest events impressed upon his mind, and particularly interesting on that account. Mr. Lamborn recalls an occasion when his beloved mother tenderly put him to sleep in his little bed, and then started to the mill in order to get some flour. On her return she was surprised to meet her little son on the road, coming to meet her. What took place then Mr. Lamborn does not recall, but it was of enough importance to fix the incident upon his memory. He also recalls a visit which he made to the smithy and return home through the dark night, in the arms of one of the apprentices, the change from the glow of the forge to the blackness of the outside world probably accounting for the impress made upon the childish imagination.

Smedley Lamborn continued his trade in that vicinity until the spring of 1837, at which time he moved to a tenant house on Elijah Worlls' farm, which was one-half mile northeast of Liberty Square, and from this place he went back and forth to do a little farming on his Martic township tract, the residence being occupied at this time by Jacob Paxton. In the spring of 1839 he moved to that place and commenced the heavy work of clearing up a farm, the first business being the removal of scattered trees, bushes, stones and rocks and the draining of swamps, preliminary to fencing, as none of the latter had been finished, with the exception of fourteen acres. The buildings consisted of an old log house and barn, and a stone spring-house, the latter being still a stanch relic of days prior to the time of Smedley Lamborn. The old barn was roofed with straw and was almost in a swamp, while the dwelling was also old and uncomfortable, being the second one on this place. Although things had a rather discouraging outlook Smedley hired help, and being a man of untiring energy he instilled a part of it into his assistants, and in a few years brought a fine farm out of the seeming chaos. The dwelling was repaired, a wagon house and other shelters were built, and in 1847 a substantial barn was erected. These were years of unrelenting toil, and although there was never a pause in the industry of the father, he was ably assisted by the efforts of his sons, George S. and Aquilla B., the labors of the latter including the clearing of the land, the sawing of logs and the hauling of limestone and lime, and aside from these duties, the necessary farm work and chores came also within their line.

Mr. Lamborn recalls the occasion of his first experience in hay loading. This was in the summer of 1839. His father was taking in a load of sweet meadow hay, and, probably being short of help, placed his son George S. on the load to trample it down as he pitched it in great forkfulls from the ground. Although but a lad of eight years, his wholesome bringing up had made him sturdy and strong, and he recalls with satisfaction that from that first successful experience during the sixty-three years that have passed since then he has never missed the enjoyment and exhilaration of participating in a hay or wheat harvest, and still further, he has never had a single load to play him the scurvy trick of falling off.

From 1847 to 1851 prosperity smiled on the efforts of Smedley Lamborn in his farming operations, although the dear and sympathetic mother was often seen to be sorrowful that her family had to be content with such plain food, through the struggling years. She was a woman of the most elevated character, and was beloved by all who knew her. In the fall of 1851, Smedley died, and his widow and the noble sons carried on the work of the farm for some time. The children born to Smedley Lamborn and wife were: George S., Aquilla B., Emeline, Elwood, William Lewis, Elizabeth, Sarah E., Priscilla S., Alice Ann, Lucinda and Lydia. All of these married, six of them adhering to the principles of Friends to the degree of using the simple and expressive marriage ceremony, these being George S., William Lewis, Sarah, Alice Ann, Lucinda and Lydia, while the others were married by the mayor of the city of Lancaster.

George S. Lamborn, of Liberty Square, Lancaster county, was born Nov. 24, 1831, the eldest child of his parents. In the fall of 1853 he attended Benjamin Hoops's Boarding School, near Avondale, Chester county, and remained there through that winter. In the spring of 1854, he hired with his uncle, Jacob Baker, as clerk, and for other work, the uncle being engaged in the business of lime burning in Chester county, and Mr. Lamborn remained with this relative until the fall, at which time he returned to his home, and with his brother Aquilla B., took charge of the farm, and in the summer of 1855 they built a new house. The family still remained together at this time, with the exception of Emeline, and great were the anticipations and preparations for the occupancy of the new and comfortable residence. The pleasant plans were forgotten, however, in the sudden illness of the beloved mother, who was taken ill with pneumonia, and died Nov. 21, 1855. Elizabeth then took charge of the home, but with the beloved mother gone, the others gradually left, and the family became scattered.

On May 8, 1856, George S. Lamborn was united by Friends' ceremony to Sarah W. Coates, who was born Feb. 7, 1831, a daughter of Ellis and Abigail Coates, of Homeville, Chester county. Then George S. and Aquilla B. took charge of the farm, in partnership; Elwood went to work at the blacksmith's trade; William embarked in an agency business, also taught school; and the younger girls found homes in neighboring families. In the school year of 1866-7, George S. taught school, the fall term being in an old stone schoolhouse situated in a swamp, near the Buck hotel, that being in the days prior to the discovery of the germs, which in later years we are disposed to think lurk in every marshy spot. The winter school was at Oregon schoolhouse, which was situated in the forest, south of the Hugh Penny farm in Drumore township.

In 1861, George S. bought out his brother's interest in the farm, or rather, a division was made, by which George S. took the old homestead, and Aquilla B. the southern portion of the place, which had been bought and added to the original. This farm had been taken up in 1754, and it has been the home of George S. Lamborn for sixty-three years. In 1856 he became especially interested in mineralogy, his curiosity being awakened by his first find, when a boy, of a cubic specimen of "fool's gold," or iron pyrites, and during succeeding years he has continued collecting, until now he has one of the most interesting as well as valuable assortments of minerals, Indian relics, fossils, shells and other curiosities, in the locality, well worth a position in some public museum. Mr. Lamborn through study of Mineralogy, Geology, Archaeology and Paleontology has become thoroughly acquainted with his collections, and a study of Philately has also in some degree, occupied his attention, as he has become the owner of a valuable assortment of stamps. Although naturally this collection is very precious to Mr. Lamborn, and has cost time, money and effort, in its acquirement, he is very unselfish about it, and has endeavored to make practical use of it in the instruction of the school children of his locality.

In 1862 Mr. Lamborn accepted a position as school director, being peculiarly well qualified for its duties. As secretary of the board, when making his monthly visits, it was his custom to take with him some of the minerals, and when the children became interested in looking at these, he would instruct them concerning these things, and thus endeavor to awaken a love for the wonders of a world which too often was but as a sealed book to them. It was also the commendable custom of Mr. Lamborn to carry with him his galvanic battery, and make merry with the children, while explaining to them its powers and use. These visits were welcomed by the children, and the occasions were never forgotten. After closing his relations with the school board, after a period of fifteen years, Mr. Lamborn was elected to the office of district auditor, faithfully performing the duties pertaining to it until the present time, having also efficiently served during the intervening years as county juryman and road and bridge-viewer.

Perhaps in no way has Mr. Lamborn been more conspicuous in his locality, than in his unswerving allegiance to the cause of temperance. The disastrous effects of strong drink were so realized by him in early life, that at the age of eleven years he induced eleven other youths to join him in taking the pledge of the Washingtonian Temperance Society, this organization then being prominently before the public, the occasion being at a meeting at the old Silver Spring schoolhouse, near Liberty Square. Mr. Lamborn has been consistent in his attitude on this question, having never handled or tasted intoxicating liquor, and has been the only voter of the Temperance ticket in his district.

It was not strange that when Mr. Lamborn reached the age of mature reflection he should become a strong anti-slavery man, his feeling of right making him the advocate of all men, without regard to color. While still a lad in the public school, he testified his faith in a schoolmate of another race, the occasion being related by Mr. Lamborn. A colored lad had been subjected to punishment for some infraction of the rules, and the teacher decided to exact the "pound of flesh" unless the offender could find some one to offer to be security for him. Doubtless, if the lad had been white, many excusers would have been found, but George S. Lamborn was the only fellow-student who was willing to show that much confidence in him. When the week of trial was ended, the colored boy had fully satisfied his bond. As a testimonial of his gratitude, he presented his bondsman with a musical instrument, this being one of his own most valued possessions.

Reared in the Society of Friends, the simplicity and peacefulness of their religious belief, has always been of the greatest moment to George S. Lamborn. To the Bible he has given much study, and he is inclined to fall in with many of the leading religious thinkers of the day, that very much of it must be taken in a spiritual sense, and that many of the incidents related therein must have been written by different authors, from their own point of view. It would be his wish to have it so eliminated that its history has no contradictions and all impure sentiments should give way to the lofty imagery which in that sense makes it the Book of Books.

Through long years of study and reflection, Mr. Lamborn has done his best to exert an influence against impurity in politics, believing that many machine manipulations tend not only to breed, but to foster tendencies toward the vile tyrant, Anarchy. In the true sense of the word, he has been a member of the Republican party, although at times he has felt called upon to vote for the man he judged best, irrespective of party tie.

Possessing a mechanical and inventive turn of mind, Mr. Lamborn has produced many articles well worthy the time consumed in their construction. In connection with his other business, he bought the agency for farm and other machinery, his judgment enabling him to select the best and most satisfactory kinds. As a farmer, he was always considered one of the most successful and progressive, having at all times had an eye to convenience and improvement, both in farm and in farm buildings. Although Mr. Lamborn has never given any attention to the mechanical part of music, his ear is one attuned to sweet sounds, the blowing winds, the rolling billows as well as the singing birds and the whisperings of the forests, producing harmonies for him. In all her aspects, Nature presents to him an attractive face.

Few men in this locality have seen more of their own land than Mr. Lamborn, his enjoyment of travel being both physical and mental. From the time he made his first trip, from Strasburg to Philadelphia, in 1851, until the date of the last one, from McCalls Ferry to Bedford, Pa., he has covered 14,425 miles by railroad, 270 miles by steam-boat, this not inclusive of the long trips made on foot and by carriage. In his pleasant wanderings, Mr. Lamborn has made three trips to Monroe, Iowa, the first in 1879, the second in 1884, and the third in 1893; to the World's Fair, in Chicago; three visits to Niagara Falls; the Provincial Fair, in Toronto, Canada; the Centennial, in Philadelphia, to sea shore and through mountains, and all over several counties of the Keystone State. The time and money which Mr. Lamborn has expended on these visits, he considers more remunerative in every way, than if he had used the same for either questionable enjoyments or for the purchase of strong drink, or tobacco, having such an antipathy to the latter as to refuse even to grow it.

Mr. Lamborn is most highly esteemed in his neighborhood, where his kindly, charitable nature is so well known. His hand is ever extended in manly friendship to those who deserve it, while many have been the cases when he has quietly assisted those who did not always deserve his charity. Social by nature, his travel and study have made him a very delightful host, and one of the many reunions of various kinds, well remembered, is one which took place on Feb. 22, 1897, the gathering being composed of his brothers and sisters, in his hospitable home. At this time, Mr. Lamborn addressed the company in these words:

Brothers and sisters, relatives and friends: We are happy once more to welcome you back to the old homestead, where memory loves to linger, and where, in childhood's unconcern, we children gathered wild flowers in wood and vale, and fished beside the laughing stream, chased the butterfly in yonder meadow, or in wintry sport, sliding down the icy hills, little realizing the care and anxiety that filled our parents' hearts for our comfort and support, for it is but little that children know of the trials and privations parents undergo for them, only as the experience in after years proves it.

Yes, when I wander back, in mind, I hear the sweet voice of our dear mother singing a lullaby to the infant in its cradle, or hear her merry song as she goes about her daily work, busy with the spinning wheel in the kitchen at one end of the apartment, or, as the two were one, adjusting her little parlor at the other, while the old clock upon the wall ticks away the fleeting moments. I imagine, too, I hear the voice of our dear father, humming a favorite song, while about the duties of the farm, or whistling a lively march, as with his brawny arm he forges the heated iron on the anvil.

I also see that old, old house from within whose walls came many merry voices, and where were shed many bitter tears of sorrow; and through whose roof sifted the driving snow, spreading its icy mantle upon the humble couch beneath; and the beating rains came relentlessly through the walls and ran in little streams across the warped and uncarpeted floor. As tradition has it, it was used by former occupants as an inn, dealing over its bar that which brings to the human family untold misery, woe and want. And seemingly to make amends for the evil, the old house was so arranged that religious meetings might be held therein. Then in their turn came the clank of the loom and the humming of the spinning wheel, which now are hushed. Nothing now remains to mark the spot where the old house stood but that bunch of roses planted by our mother's hand. The old shop is gone; the ring of the anvil is heard no more; and the old barn, where we frolicked and played upon the straw, and fought the wasps in the old thatched roof, leaves no trace behind. All have gone, except the old spring-house, which, too, is following the inevitable law, passing away, passing away, and then all will be gone save that spring of pure and sparkling water, at whose brink many weary travelers have been refreshed, and in whose waters were many baptisms. It alone will remain as a living monument of the past.

This same law is carrying us down the stream of time; and in a few short years will land us on the brink of Eternity. There, standing by the waters of the river of Death, piercing through the over-hanging mist, listening to the sweet voices from the other shore, beckoning us to come hither, away from a cold and selfish world into a state of everlasting bliss—yes, the voices of our parents, sisters and brothers.

Dear ones, let not this review of the past, or thoughts of the future, discourage us, for the time will soon come when all knowledge and trace of our existence here will have passed into oblivion. For such is the law of Nature, that one generation passes away and another comes. Now many of us are parents, and our children look to us for support, counsel and influence. Do we fully realize our responsibility? Can we stand firm for the right? Let not the light remark or the impertinent reply, coming from the lips of the little ones we love, permit us to lose our control in our management of them, for, most assuredly it will lead to disobedience, first to parent and friend, next to country, and then to God.

Disobedience to known law leads to ruin, and obedience to greatness. This is strikingly exemplified in the life of the illustrious man whose birthday we now celebrate, and whose obedience to the guarded care and influence of a wise and devoted mother, placed him at the head of our nation, and through his untiring efforts, hardships and trials, in connection with other patriots of his time, succeeded in establishing the best form of government the world has ever seen. Although corruption steals in, yet the people have the power to rectify all mistakes or grievances that may arise, by exercising their judgment at the ballot-box. This power can be greatly strengthened by extending to both sexes alike the right of suffrage, under certain educational qualifications. When this is done, the fell monster, Intemperance, with all its ruinous consequences, would soon lose its power and be banished from our midst. Would not this be progress? Would not this be adding to the great work commenced by the Father of the Republic? The labor they commenced we must shoulder, and with the battle-axe of right hew down the forests of evil that exist or may rise before us; and as each succeeding celebration of the birthday of the Father of his Country comes upon us, let us see that the portals are guarded and the governmental apartments are cleanly swept.

Also, let it be a reminder that not only this day but every day should be celebrated unto Him who has seen fit to place us in this world to work out our own destiny, for good or for evil. Then let us look on all earthly trials as lessons given us in the school of adversity, lessons which, if rightly understood, will teach us to enjoy the persent; and let that enjoyment be of such a character that it will leave no sting behind, but will lead us, step by step, into the paths of purity and peace.

The children born to George S. Lamborn were: Margaret Coates; Mary Miller; Priscilla S., John Comley; Anna Mary; Charles Linnaeus; and Lucretia Mott. Mr. Lamborn is now retired from business activity. It has never been an object with him to accumulate large means, although his standing is one of substantiality and responsibility in the neighborhood. Few men have crossed the stage of affairs in Lancaster county who have left a more indelible impress upon the locality in which circumstances placed them than George S. Lamborn, standing as he always has for the highest standards of living and ever working to promote those influences which work for the progress and development of the best interests of his section. By example, by tongue and pen, he has lived as he has preached, and represents in every way the highest type of representative citizen.

Since the above was written, and as if to verify it, George S. Lamborn appeared as an advocate for rural free delivery. He was the first in the neighborhood to make a move for the establishment of a route—a privilege almost unheard, or unthought, of by most of the inhabitants of his vicinity. He commenced his work for it Jan. 13, 1902, and regardless of the filed protests against it in the Postoffice Department, the jeers and scoffings by the country postmasters and their henchmen, he succeeded by the kind efforts of Congressman H. Burd Cassel, and the just considerations of the Postoffice Department, in establishing the route on Nov. 1, 1902, which he feels to be a crowning effort of his life work, and a cherished boon to his fellow patrons of the Bonview Route No. 1. This new departure is quite a contrast, and Mr. Lamborn has bridged a period of time in mail facilities almost unequaled by any other nation of the world. He well remembers being sent for mail, when a boy, several miles from home, to be rewarded by receiving a letter for his father, from the latter's father in Ohio, which had been on the road about ninety days at a cost of twenty-five cents. Now a letter can be had from the same place in two days, at a cost of two cents, and delivered at the yard gate. Rapid strides have been made in improvements, economy, extravagance, and selfishness in the last fifty years of the country's history.

REV. CHARLES LIVINGSTON FRY, long-time pastor (1881-1901) of the historic old Lutheran Church of the Holy Trinity in Lancaster, founded in 1730, has left a monument to his zeal and devotion in this great congregation, which is numerically the strongest in Lancaster, having 1,040 communicants.

Mr. Fry is descended from a family that for generations has been prominent in Pennsylvania, both in church and State. His grandfather was familiarly known, during his official life at Harrisburg, as Auditor General of the State, as "Honest Jacob Fry." His father, who for thirty-two years was pastor of Old Trinity Church at Reading, Pa., is now the Professor of Homiletics and Practical Theology at the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Mount Airy, Philadelphia, and one of the leading spirits in the venerable Ministerium of Pennsylvania. He is the author of a work on the Science of Homiletics, now in general use as a text-book in Lutheran Seminaries throughout the country.

The first ancestor to come to this country, from the Palatinate, Germany, was Henry Fry, who arrived in America in the year 1680, having been driven from his home by religious bigotry and persecution. He was one of the founders of Germantown, where his son Jacob, and his grandson, Henry, spent their lives on the paternal estate. It is a matter worthy of note, that in this family for generations the names of Jacob and Henry alternated.

Dr. Jacob Fry, the distinguished Professor at Mount Airy, was ordained to the ministry at the age of nineteen years. Eliza Jane Wattles, his wife, was born in New England, a daughter of Harvey Wattles, afterwards a resident of Gettysburg. To this union were born the following children: Rev. Charles Livingston; Miss Mary Gross; Miss Kate Wattles; Annie Gillespie, wife of Philip S. Zieber, a lawyer of Reading; Rev. Franklin Foster, for eleven years pastor of Grace Lutheran Church, of Bethlehem, Pa., and now of the Church of the Reformation, Rochester, N. Y.; Josephine Cassady, wife of William Benbow, church organist and musician, at Reading; and Miss Jennie, unmarried.

Rev. Charles Livingston Fry graduated from the Reading High School in 1875; from Muhlenberg College, at Allentown, in 1878, and from the Theological Seminary, at Philadelphia, in 1881. Immediately after his entrance upon the work of the gospel ministry, he was called to Lancaster, as an associate of Dr. Emanuel Greenwald, the pastor of Holy Trinity Church, who was then a very aged man, and upon his death in 1885 succeeded to the pastorate by unanimous vote of the congregation.

Mr. Fry has lectured before many institutions of learning, and educational conventions. While in charge of Trinity Church, his constant effort was to develop the religious life of the young people. His labor was unceasing to bring the Church close to the hearts of the people, and in this he was eminently successful. Mr. Fry has been a frequent contributor to the press, was associate editor for some years of Christian Culture, and a member of the board of trustees of the Pennsylvania Chautauqua. He was president of the Lancaster Center of University Extension from its inception in the city until his removal to his present metropolitan field of labor, which occurred Jan. 1, 1901, when he became pastor of St. Luke's Lutheran Church, in Philadelphia, one of the most important churches in his denomination in the State. He is also the Literature Secretary of the Luther League of America, having entire charge of mapping out its various reading courses and student efforts. The Sunday school of Trinity Church is one of its principal features, and Mr. Fry devoted much of his time to its interests. The singing of oratorio anthems by the young people, and the music on great festivals, was proverbial as the standard of comparison in the community.

On June 9, 1891, Rev. Mr. Fry was married, the tenth anniversary of his ordination, to Miss Laura F., only daughter of Henry M. Housekeeper, a retired architect and builder in Philadelphia. The summer of that year they spent on a bridal tour in Europe visiting Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, France and England. On their return they were extended a public reception in which all denominations participated. Mr. Fry was the prime mover in the refined entertainments that were given every month in the court house during the winter of 1890-91, free of cost to the laboring classes, and was for years an active worker in a number of literary societies of the city.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Fry has been blessed by the birth of two children: Henry Jacob, born May 2, 1892; and Charles Luther, March 16, 1894. A more ideal family relation can hardly be found than that which exists in their home, Mr. Fry is as devoted to his family as to the Church, and to the great reforming and uplifting agencies of life. He is a friend of the poor and a helper to the needy. The descendant of a long line of Lutheran ancestors from the early days in the Palatinate, he wears worthily the mantle of his fathers.

VERY REV. ANTHONY F. KAUL, V. F., the founder and present popular rector of St. Anthony's Roman Catholic Church, of Lancaster, is also Dean of York and Lancaster counties, the bishop of the diocese having conferred the title of Dean upon him in July, 1893. On June 13, 1894, the feast of the Patron Saint of the church, occurred his silver jubilee, commemorating the twenty-five years that had elapsed since his ordination, an event of surpassing and memorable interest to the congregation of St. Anthony and to the community in general.

Father Kaul was born in Sinsheim, Baden, Germany, June 8, 1846, and his father, Pirmin Kaul, was born in the same locality May 20, 1808, a son of John Kaul, of French descent. Pirmin Kaul was a tailor by occupation, and he was also engaged in the manufacture of epaulets and military regalia. He was married, Nov. 28, 1830, to Miss Magdelene, daughter of George Philip Dick, Burgo-master of Grumbach, Baden; she was born Feb. 20, 1804, in Grumbach. Early in 1847 Mr. and Mrs. Kaul embarked on an English sailing vessel at Antwerp, and after a stormy voyage of forty-seven days landed in New York city, July 7th. Going to Philadelphia, they remained there a short time, and then went to Reading, where they resided for about six months. In April, 1848, Pirmin Kaul located on a farm two miles from Adamstown, Lancaster county, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits until Aug. 15, 1852. From that time until 1862 he was engaged in the hotel business in Reading, after which he retired to private life. In 1877 he came to Lancaster, where he made his home until his death, which occurred June 5, 1883, at the ripe age of seventy-five years. Politically Pirmin Kaul was a Democrat, and in religious belief he was a Roman Catholic. Mrs. Kaul made her home with Father Kaul until a few years ago, when she was called to her reward. In her will she left a bequest for the erection of a clock in the tower of the beloved St. Anthony's church, and this clock has come to be regarded as a veritable public blessing, particularly to the people of the eastern side of the city. Of the seven children of Pirmin and Magdelene (Dick) Kaul, all but one reached adult age, and are still living: (1) Annette became the wife of Christian Burger, of Reading, Pa.; (2) John H., a retired merchant, lives in this city; (3) Joseph, now known as Brother Leopold, is professor of music in Notre Dame University, South Bend, Ind.; (4) Mary W., housekeeper for Father Kaul, teaches painting and kindred branches at the Sacred Heart Academy; (5) Elizabeth, now sister M. Stanislaus, a sister of the Holy Cross and an adept in music, is Superior of the Sacred Heart Academy, Lancaster; (6) the Very Rev. Anthony F. Kaul, of Lancaster, is the youngest of the family.

Father Kaul passed his early years in the public and parochial schools at Reading, Pa. In 1862 he became a student in St. Charles Preparatory Seminary, Glen Riddle, Pa., which school was then under the direction of the late Bishop Shanahan. After completing the classical course Father Kaul entered St. Charles Theological Seminary, on Eighteenth and Race streets, Philadelphia, where he pursued his philosophical and theological course, and was ordained Aug. 22, 1869, at Harrisburg, by Bishop Shanahan, first bishop of that diocese. The young priest was sent to Lancaster as assistant to the late Father F. L. Newfeld, of St. Joseph's church, arriving Sept. 24, 1869. In the spring of the following year it was decided to form a new parish from St. Joseph's congregation, the boundary lines being set by the bishop. This comprised all east of North Water, South Queen and Strawberry streets. The church, which is located at the corner of Ann and Orange streets, was founded in April, 1870, by Father Kaul, who worked indefatigably to achieve this end. The lot on which the structure stands is 245x340 feet, and was purchased for $3,500; at the time it was used as a cornfield. The cornerstone was laid Aug. 14, 1870, in the presence of a large concourse, Rev. Father McGinnis, of Danville, Pa., being deputed by the late Very Rev. Bernard Keenan, administrator of the diocese during the absence of the bishop at the Vatican Council at Rome, to take charge of the ceremony. For the first four years the basement was used for church services, this portion being dedicated April 9, 1871, by Rt. Rev. Bishop Shanahan. The edifice was completed and dedicated May 17, 1875. The church, which is 142 feet in length and 65 feet in width, is built of brick, and ornamented with brown stone; the buttresses are capped with the same kind of stone. The height of the walls above the foundation is 38 feet, while the height of the cone of the roof is about 80 feet. In the front of the church is a tower of brick about 115 feet in height, which makes the steeple the highest in the city. The building stands back some distance from and faces on Orange street, and is entered by three massive doors of solid walnut, which lead into a roomy and well-arranged vestibule. From the vestibule are doors that lead into the church, and a stairway that leads into the gallery. The audience room is decidedly the handsomest in the city; it is about 100 feet long, 63 feet wide and 50 feet high from the floor to the top of the arched ceiling. The wainscoting, pews and other woodwork are finished in walnut and ash. The chancel, which is raised four steps, is enclosed with a heavy walnut railing and carpeted with fine brussels. The ceiling is formed by a Gothic arch springing from the side walls and flattened at the top. Between the windows are heavy Gothic ribs resting in brackets and reaching to the flattened part of the ceiling. From each end of these massive ribs, which are beautifully frescoed, depend large drops, two feet or more in length, of handsome pattern and finished in gold. The gas fixtures comprise ten pedestal lights, being of gold and bronze, and of new and handsome design, placed in two rows, equi-distant from the middle and side aisles. On either side of the altar are scroll brackets with five burners each, and suspended from the ceiling in front of the altar hangs a large sanctuary lamp, which is kept constantly burning. This is surmounted by a very beautiful glass globe, rose red in color. Immediately behind the principal altar is a life-size and very excellent picture of the crucifixion, painted by the late Louis Reingruber, the well known artist of Lancaster. On either side are paintings of equal size, representing the Nativity of Christ and the Adoration of the Magi. On the east and west slopes of the ceiling are portraits of all the apostles. The fourteen large oil paintings representing the stations are framed in walnut; they are copies of De Schwanden, the famous Munich artist. On either side of the sanctuary arch is an angel with outspread wings and folded hands, and above the arch is an angel holding a scroll bearing the words Ecce tabernaculum Dei. The shading of the ground work is stone color, so handsomely intermingled with brighter shades and hues, however, as to be difficult of description. Nearly every panel contains the picture of a saint, and around these are twined a perfect wilderness of arches, columns, ribs, scrolls, etc. Besides the main altar there are two other altars in the main audience room. The main altar stands within a large arched recess, at the extreme end of the church, and it is painted pure white, tipped with gold. It is eighteen feet in height from the top of the "exposition" to the base. The figure of an adoring angel stands on a pedestal on either side of the altar, while upon the top of the altar are placed six candlesticks, each nine feet three inches in height. On both sides of the main altar, and a little farther to the front, are two smaller altars, also placed within handsomely frescoed arches. One is St. Mary's and the other St. Joseph's. They are of handsome design, and on them are placed respectively statues of the Blessed Virgin and St. Joseph. The lofty windows of the church are of beautiful design, and set with stained glass of many brilliant colors. The upper sash of each window contains two figures of saints. All the windows and paintings have been presented by members or friends of the parish. The three small windows above the sanctuary contain pictures of the blessed sacrament, and adoring angels are represented on either side. The gallery is in the south end of the audience room and extends entirely across it. It is supported by handsome columns and is reached by a stairway built in the vestibule of the church. The stairway and the gallery are wainscoted in solid walnut. The church has a seating capacity of 1,200 people, and cost over $60,000. The grand pipe organ is valued at $5,000, and the gold embroidered vestments were purchased at a cost of $2,000.

In the fall of 1871 a parochial school was opened in the basement of the church, with two lay teachers, and two years later the present teachers, Sisters of the Holy Cross, Notre Dame, Ind., took charge, and also opened an academy and boarding school for young ladies, known as the Sacred Heart Academy. In the spring of 1876 Father Kaul purchased a lot opposite the church, on the southeast corner of Ann and Orange streets, for $4,300, on which was erected the academy, a three-story and basement brick building, fitted out with all modern improvements. Every facility is afforded in this high-class and widely-known institution for the education of young ladies, the curriculum embracing not only the various branches of elementary studies, but deportment, physical culture and everything that goes to the making of perfect womanhood. Special attention is given to music and art, and every attention is paid to the comfort and training of pupils—the place being noted for its homelike and elevating environments.

In the year 1872 a temporary parochial residence was built to the east of the church, and in 1873 five acres of land for cemetery purposes were purchased in the extension of Orange street. In 1892 a like number of acres, adjoining the old cemetery, were bought, and this is now known as St.

Anthony's cemetery. In 1896, for the benefit of the young men of the parish, a commodious and finely appointed brick building of three stories and basement was erected, the first floor being used as a school, the second for library purposes and the third for a hall, while the basement is devoted to a gymnasium.

The handsomest rectory in all Lancaster has been erected on the lot west of the church and connected with the church by a gallery. The various societies of the church are in a flourishing condition, the most prominent of these being St. Anthony's Beneficial Society and the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin and of the Guardian Angel. The congregation now numbers about three hundred families.

In 1881 Father Kaul went to Europe, traveling extensively in Ireland, Scotland, England, France, Germany and Italy. While in Rome he had an interview with Pope Leo XIII, from whom he received the papal blessing, and upon his return to his congregation conferred it upon them. In 1886 he made a second trip to Europe, passing most of his time in Germany; and in 1900, his eyesight having become seriously impaired, he again made a voyage to Europe, this time to consult specialists.

Such is a brief and necessarily imperfect glimpse of Father Kaul, his ancestry, and the parish which he founded, and which he has nourished into its present grand proportions. To tell the complete story of his noble life and work would in itself fill a volume. He has been interested in the general welfare of Lancaster also, and was one of the active promoters of the Eastern Market—of such great benefit to the eastern part of the city. The appreciation of his work—as well as of Father Kaul personally—was fully attested when, in 1900, he made the trip to Europe to consult noted oculists; prayers were uttered by every lip for a safe return and a full restoration of health and eyesight, and this alone showed how deep a hold he had on the hearts of the people, regardless of denomination.

JOHN ROLAND, formerly both a stationary engineer and a farmer, with his residence in West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Pa., was born in the Rhine province of Prussia, June 19, 1833, to Adolph and Gertrude (Steimel) Roland.

The Roland family came to America in 1852 and for two months lived in New Jersey, whence with only two dollars among them they came to Lancaster county and located at Chestnut Hill, in West Hempfield township, where they remained until 1862, when, with the exception of John, they moved to Columbia, near which city the father was employed in farming. The father, Adolph Roland, died in Columbia in May, 1864, when seventy years old, and the mother, Gertrude (Steimel) Roland, died in 1850, aged seventy-one years, and the remains of both were interred in the Catholic cemetery at Columbia, as they had been devout members of that church during the entire period of their earthly pilgrimage. Their marriage was blessed with the following children: Margaret, deceased wife of John Baker; Christina, wife of Harmon Wegand, of Columbia; John; Theodore, a coal merchant in Columbia; Helen, deceased wife of W. J. Shaffer, a druggist of Philadelphia; Rev. Frank, who was studying for the priesthood, but died at Vincent College; and Feronigal, who died young in New York.

John Roland began working for himself in 1853, in the ore banks in West Hempfield township for the New York Iron Ore Company and continued with this company until April, 1884, when he purchased his present farm of thirty-seven acres.

On April 27, 1863, John Roland married Agnes Sheit in Lancaster and to this union there were born twelve children, in the following order: Theodore, a stationary engineer at Columbia; John, who died young; Peter, a music dealer in Columbia; Elizabeth, in Lancaster; Andrew, who died at the age of twenty years; Joseph, who died young; Mary, in Lancaster; Agnes and Barbara, at home; William, in Columbia; Clara, at home; and Charles, who died young.

Mrs. Agnes (Sheit) Roland, like her husband, was born in the Rhine province of Prussia, her birth occurring May 5, 1840, and her parents being Peter and Elizabeth (Caber) Sheit, who came to America in 1850, and settled in Lancaster county, Pa., where the father died in 1872, and the mother in 1888, the latter at the age of seventy-eight. To Peter and Elizabeth Sheit were born four children, viz: Agnes, named above; Catherine, deceased; Anna, deceased, and Barbara, wife of John Kirch, of Lancaster.

Mr. Roland has made a success of life and by strict integrity and industrious habits has secured a competency. Besides his farm he owns other property in West Hempfield township, and prosperity attends his every effort. He and his family are devoted members of the Catholic Church, to the support of which they ever contribute most liberally; in politics Mr. Roland is a Republican, but has never been willing to accept public office.

ALFRED H. WORREST, son of Henry W. and Hannah (Sweigart) Worrest, was born July 28, 1855, in Salisbury township, Lancaster county, Pa. Henry W. Worrest, a son of Peter and Margaret (Fierree) Worrest, the former a farmer, was born at Parkesburg, Chester Co., Pa., in 1822, and died in 1884. Hannah (Sweigart) Worrest, daughter of Isaac and Leah (Reidenbaugh) Sweigart, farming people, was born near New Holland, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1825, and died in 1898. Alfred H. Worrest comes of two of the old families of this section, both his grandfathers having operated teams between Philadelphia and Pittsburg, Pa., before the days of railroads. Some of the family have dropped the "re" and spell the name Worst.

C. H. Worrest

Henry W. Worrest, father of Alfred H., was well and favorably known in the district in which he lived. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, his wife was a Lutheran; both are buried in St. John's cemetery, Compassville, Chester Co., Pa. Their children were as follows: Alfred H., living in Lancaster, Pa.; Harry, deceased; Charles S., a farmer, living in Nebraska; Miss Lizzie L. and Miss Annie M., of Pequea, Lancaster Co., Pennsylvania.

Until he was twenty-one years of age Mr. Worrest remained with his father, assisting on the farm, and receiving remuneration in board and clothes. Any time that he could get off from the farm work was spent in selling agricultural implements to the farmers of the neighborhood. The following year he was employed by his uncle, John P. Sweigart, at the "Mansion House" at Gap, Lancaster Co., Pa. The succeeding two years he spent in raising tobacco and selling agricultural implements, having associated himself the second year with his cousin, T. K. Sweigart, under the firm name of Worrest & Sweigart, Pequea, Pa. They then sold a full line of these implements. This firm was dissolved in 1882, by mutual consent, Mr. Worrest having accepted a position with the Genesee Valley Manufacturing Company, of Mt. Morris, N. Y., to represent them as general agent for eastern Pennsylvania and adjoining States. This position he held for eight years, during which time he invented what is known as the Royal Fertilizer Feeder for grain drills, and which is used by this company on their drills, they having a license under the patents to manufacture it. After severing his connection with the above mentioned company Mr. Worrest settled on a farm in Glenloch, Chester Co., Pa. During that year he sold the farm to Henry Geisse, and the following spring returned to Lancaster, accepting a position with the Deering Harvester Company, of Chicago, Ill., and remaining with them one season, representing them in Lancaster, Chester and Delaware counties, Pa. In this year (1891) he invented the safety buggy, which he had manufactured for him by D. A. Altick's Son, of Lancaster, under the name of the Safety Buggy Works, and which he sold for three years. During this period he had been several times approached on the subject of forming a stock company to manufacture the Safety Buggy on a larger scale, which proposition he accepted in 1894, and the Safety Buggy Company, of Lancaster, Pa., was organized. The concern has one of the largest, if not the largest, carriage works in Lancaster county: for five years Mr. Worrest was manager of and a director in the company, when the business was sold to B. G. Dodge, who has continued in its management.

After this Mr. Worrest invented the Standard Shaft and Pole Coupler, and the Standard Body Loop, both of which are for use in the construction of carriages. The Coupler he manufactured and sold under the name of the Standard Coupler Works, Lancaster, Pa. The Body Loop is made by the Keystone Forging Company, of Northumberland, Pa., who manufacture it under the patents and a license from Mr. Worrest. In 1900 the Coupler business having grown beyond the expectation of the inventor, it was bought by the Metal Stamping Company, of New York City, for a cash consideration and a royalty on the future sales during the term of the patents. Both of these inventions are well known to the carriage trade and have very large sales. At this writing Mr. Worrest is busily engaged in introducing his latest, and what he considers his best, invention, "The Standard Ball Axle," for carriages and all other vehicles.

At the parsonage of St. John's Episcopal Church, of Compassville, Pa., by Rev. Mr. Tullidge, Alfred H. Worrest was united in marriage with Katherine F. Wanner, who was born July 17, 1859, in Salisbury township, Lancaster county, Pa., daughter of Martin and Martha (Mast) Wanner, farming people of Salisbury township. Children as follows have been born to this union: Minnie E., Grace E. (deceased), Elsie M., Edgar W., Harry (who died in infancy), Warren W. and Howard A.

Mr. Worrest was reared in the faith of the Episcopal Church, of which his daughters are communicants, and of which he is a supporter. His political affiliations are with the Republican party, while fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Malta; I. O. O. F.; Jr. O. U. A. M.; and K. of P. His genius has made him known to the manufacturing world over a large territory. At his home he is still the quiet, studious man, whom his friends have known for years as the good neighbor and first-class citizen, ever anxious for the welfare of family, city and State.

DAVID GRAEFF, an eminently respected citizen of Columbia, is a retired machinist. Born Feb. 18, 1821, he has reached the venerable age of four score and two years, and is passing the evening of his well-spent life in ease and contentment. His father, who died in 1825, at the early age of twenty-six, was likewise named David, and was a descendant of a family of Swiss emigrants, who formed a portion of a colony of thirteen families that settled in Pequea Valley as early as 1702. His mother, whose maiden name was Catherine Pratt, was a daughter of James and Stabina (Stauffer) Pratt; she passed away in 1878, in her eighty-third year. James Pratt was an Englishman by birth, while his wife was a native of Lancaster.

After the death of his father young David, who was an only child, was apprenticed when a boy of fifteen years by his guardian, Daniel Zahn, to Michael Ehrman, a brass founder of Lancaster. Mr. Graeff yet has the articles of indenture, which he prizes highly. His term of apprenticeship covers a period of five years, two months and twenty-six days, and in consideration of his services he received the sum of ten pounds, and was given the privilege of attending school for sixteen months. After the expiration of his term, the young man's love of adventure led him to enlist in the United States navy, and he shipped from Philadelphia as a landsman, being later transferred to the "North Carolina," then lying in the port of New York. After fourteen months he met with an accident which so disabled him that he was compelled to leave the service on Jan. 29, 1843. Returning to Lancaster, he began working at his trade, which he followed as a journeyman for about five years, and then spent another year in charge of the city water works. On April 1, 1850, he removed to Columbia, and established a brass foundry which he conducted for four years, when he disposed of it and began working as a machinist. In 1864 he entered the machine shop of the Pennsylvania railroad, but left this position after five years to become an engineer in a furnace. Three years later he accepted a position in the machine shop of Supplee & Bro., but within a few years returned to the employ of the railroad company. He continued in that service until Jan. 1, 1900, when his long years of faithful service were rewarded by retirement upon a pension. He is a communicant in the Episcopal Church, and independent in politics.

At Lancaster, Pa., David Graeff married Christiana Lorentz, who bore him three children: Mary C., John H. and Emma E. The oldest daughter, now deceased, married the late Cyrus G. Hinkle, an engineer on the Pennsylvania railroad, who lost his life in an accident. John H., the only son, is also a railroad engineer, and a brief sketch of his life may be found below. Emma E., the youngest daughter, is unmarried, and lives with her parents.

Mrs. Graeff was born in Lancaster, Pa., Jan. 1, 1829, a daughter of John and Magdeline (Metzgar) Lorentz, and a granddaughter of John Lorentz, Sr. John Lorentz, her father, died in Lancaster in 1834, at the age of fifty, and the mother survived him until 1855, when, at Columbia, she, too, entered into rest, having lived to pass the seventy-fifth anniversary of her birth. They were members of the Reformed and Lutheran Churches, respectively. Twenty-one children were born of their union, but owing to imperfections in the family records, the names of only a few of them can be given: Sarah, Jacob, John (all deceased), Harry, William, Mary, Leah, Eva and Christiana. Mrs. Graeff's maternal grandfather, Jacob Metzgar, accompanied his parents from Germany to America when a boy of ten years.

John H. Graeff, the only son of David and Christiana (Lorentz) Graeff, was born in Columbia, Jan. 25, 1852. He attended school until eighteen years old, and then began work in the shops of the railroad company. After two years thus spent he took a position as locomotive fireman, and in less than four years was promoted to fill the hazardous and responsible position of engineer. He yet remains in the company's employ, honored and trusted by his superiors, beloved by his fellowmen, popular in the community in which he was reared, and universally esteemed because of his manly traits of character. He is a member of the Masonic Order and is a Knight Templar, as well as a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. His political sympathies are with the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the Episcopal Church.

On Jan. 23, 1879, John H. Graeff was married at Columbia, to Miss Louisa Kistler, who was born in Lancaster, Sept. 9, 1858. Her father, John J. Kistler, was a native of Switzerland, and her mother, nee Sophia Mythaler, was born in Baden. They came with their respective brothers and sisters to Lancaster in 1847-48, and there they were married, their parents remaining in the old world. Mr. Kistler was born in 1823, was by trade a carpenter and died Sept. 15, 1885. Mrs. Kistler was born May 15, 1827, and is yet living, making her home with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Graeff. Mrs. Graeff is one of six children born to her parents, the others, in order of birth, being Emma, who married Charles Evans, an iron worker; Mary, the wife of Edward Edwards, a retired business man of New York; William, a stationary engineer of Steelton, Pa.; Albert, a carpenter and builder residing in Brooklyn, N. Y.; and John, a telegraph operator in New York City. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Graeff has been blessed with five children, namely: Stella, George D., William L., John H. and Margaret C.

PIERCE LESHER was born in the village of Reamstown, Lancaster county, May 9, 1853, and spent his early life upon the farm. He received his education in the public schools of his native town and in the State Normal School at Millersville. For four years he engaged in teaching school, and then began the manufacture of cigars. He left that business to enter the United States Internal Revenue service on July 4, 1885, becoming a deputy collector under Hon. John T. MacGonigle, collector of the 9th District, at Lancaster, taking charge of the distilled spirits accounts, and held that position under Collectors MacGonigle and Hensel until March 11, 1889, when he resigned to become assistant cashier of the Conestoga National Bank at Lancaster. His connection with that institution lasted until Aug. 1, 1889, at which time he re-entered the Revenue service as cashier under Collector Hensel, filling the office until the end of Mr. Hensel's term. He continued in the Revenue service, as deputy under Collector Sam Matt. Fridy, Esq., the successor of Mr. Hensel, and as chief deputy under Collectors Shearer and Hershey. On Jan. 1, 1900, he resigned from the Revenue service to take the position of treasurer of The Lancaster Trust Co. During the last three years of Mr. Leshner's connection with the Revenue service he was chairman of the examining committee on the Revenue and Post Office civil service boards, which position he filled with much ability. On April 1, 1903, he resigned as Treasurer of The Lancaster Trust Co. to accept the position of General Superintendent and Treasurer of the knitting mills of the Leshner-Raig Knitting Co., Limited, located at Reamstown, Pa., in which industry he is largely interested.

While in the Revenue service Mr. Leshner was called upon to pass through the most trying ordeal of his life, having been in confidential relations with the United States secret service men from June, 1898, until April, 1899, no other people in Lancaster dreaming of what was going on in their midst in the way of counterfeiting money and revenue stamps, in what is known as the Jacobs-Kendig counterfeiting cases. The secret service men made Mr. Leshner's home on West Chestnut street a place of meeting, usually calling there at dead of night. Ladders and tools of all sorts were stored there, and Mr. Leshner never knew when he retired for the night, but that he might be called to join some midnight or early morning raid. These expeditions put him to his wits' end to smooth over matters to inquiring neighbors, so as to conceal the real object of these nightly errands. His high character and unimpeachable standing, however, carried the matter over successfully. When it became necessary to acquaint his superior officer with what was going on, he wired the authorities at Washington, and the whole matter was carried through to a successful conclusion. All parties connected with this scheme were arrested, their goods, counterfeit plates, printing presses and a large quantity of counterfeit cigar stamps being seized and forfeited to the Government. In connection with this case, twelve persons were arrested, convicted and sentenced to terms of imprisonment, it having been the most gigantic scheme ever attempted at counterfeiting in the United States. In the part taken by Mr. Leshner, in assisting to bring the guilty parties to justice, he displayed great coolness, shrewdness and courage, for which he received the highest praise from those under whom he served and the public at large.

On Nov. 25, 1885, Mr. Leshner was married to Kate P. McGinnis, daughter of the late Thomas J. and Sarah (Powell) McGinnis, the latter of whom died when the daughter was but three years old, from which time she made her home with her uncle, the late Mitchell J. Weaver, whose home she and her husband, with their two children, Mary Helen and Clara Elizabeth, now occupy. Mr. Leshner is a vestryman of St. John's Episcopal Church, and fraternally is prominent in Masonic circles. He was one of the organizers of the Home Building & Loan Association and served on its board of directors. He was also one of the chief promoters in the organization of the Ephrata & Adamstown Railway Company and the building of their road, and he is a member of their board of directors. Mr. Leshner always took a great interest in matters pertaining to his native town and was the first to agitate the building of this line through the same, and it was owing to his efforts, mainly, that this was accomplished. He is also a director of the Adamstown & Mohnsville Railway Co. Apart from this, Mr. Leshner has made a good record as a citizen and business man, by the intelligence, fidelity and ability he has brought to bear alike on his private and public labors, and he is much respected at home and abroad for his manly qualities and his genial and companionable spirit.

Nicholas and Dorothy Leshner, remote ancestors of Pierce Leshner, came to America from the Palatinate prior to 1730, and made their home in Lancaster county. Here they had three sons, Nicholas, Abraham and John. John married Elizabeth Binkley, and had one son, whom he also named John, and who married Catherine Miller. To John and Catherine (Miller) Leshner were born three sons, Henry, John and William, of whom John was the father of Pierce Leshner.

John Leshner married Rebecca Matz, of Spring township, Berks Co., Pa., daughter of George and Elizabeth Matz, and a granddaughter of Lawrence Matz, who was of German descent. By this union there were two children, Pierce Leshner and Mrs. Clara L. Evans, the latter a widow, and living at Reading, Pa. Mr. Leshner's great-grandfather, John Leshner, bought a farm at Reamstown, Lancaster county, which has been in the possession of the Leshner family ever since, and is now owned by Pierce Leshner, whose name opens this sketch.

WILLIAM CONNARD HOAR. This gentleman has been fortunate enough to acquire a knowledge of the mysteries of two callings, one being that of a blacksmith and the other that of a farmer, but the latter seems best to please him, as he has relinquished the former, and is still engaged in his pursuit of the latter in Salisbury township, Lancaster county.

William C. Hoar was born in Buyerstown, Salisbury township, Lancaster county, March 12, 1835, a son of James and Mary (Evetts) Hoar, natives of Salisbury township, who were married Aug. 5, 1819. James Hoar, the father, was born May 28, 1796, was a blacksmith all his days, and died in Buyerstown, Jan. 1, 1863. His wife, who was born July 9, 1797, had been called away Aug. 31, 1840. Their remains rest in the old Friends churchyard in Sadsbury, among those of their ancestors of generations gone by for years. Ten children graced the union of this highly respected couple, and in order of birth were as follows: Ann E., who was married to Michael Beam but is now deceased, her surviving husband being a retired farmer of Eden township; John B., also deceased; Robert, a retired farmer living in Leacock township; Rachel, widow of John Whiteside, a former veterinary surgeon in Parkersburg, Chester county, where she still has her residence; Sarah, deceased wife of William Hasson; Mary C., living in Paradise township, the widow of William Shaffer; James, deceased; Margaret, who died when young; William C., whose name heads this biographical notice; and Letitia L., deceased. The paternal grandparents of William C. Hoar were James and Anna (Chamberlain) Hoar, of Chester county, early settled in Salisbury township, Lancaster county, and were of the most wealthy and respected Quaker families of this part of the State. Great grandfather Chamberlain was a man of means, and primarily a farmer in Sadsbury township, Lancaster county, but he was also a sea captain and was eventually lost while making one of his voyages.

In Leacock township, in 1873, William C. Hoar was united in marriage with Miss Christiana E. Slack, who was born in Leacock township Oct. 27, 1847, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Brower) Slack. To this union have been born three children, viz: Mary E., who died when but fifteen years old; and J. Willard and Anna J., both still under the parental roof.

William C. Hoar began his business life at the age of sixteen years in his father's blacksmith shop, or in about 1851. In 1855 the father retired, and William C. continued on with the business until 1882, when he sold out and purchased his present farm, in connection with which he conducted a blacksmith shop for two years, and then abandoned blacksmithing altogether. As a farmer Mr. Hoar has met with abundant success, and is classed among the best in the county. In fact, he follows the lines which inevitably lead to a victory over all opposition, and to the triumphant subjection of all obstacles that impede the way, those lines being sound judgment, unceasing industry and conscientious performance of the duties pertaining to his calling.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoar are devout members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which Mr. Hoar has been a trustee for many years, and to the support of which they are constant and liberal contributors. In politics Mr. Hoar is a Republican, but has never manifested any desire to hold public office.

JOSHUA BRINTON, deceased, son of Moses and Hannah (Chamberlain) Brinton, of Leacock and Sadsbury townships, respectively, was born Feb. 28, 1811, and died Aug. 4, 1892, and was buried in the Society of Friends cemetery in Salisbury township. Moses Brinton was born in 1761, and died Nov. 23, 1846; his wife, who had remarried, survived until June 17, 1860. They were both consistent members of the Society of Friends and were buried in the Sadsbury cemetery.

In November, 1848, Joshua Brinton married in Philadelphia, Miss Mary E. Passmore, of whom further mention will be shortly made. To this union were born five children, viz: Phoebe, who is married to M. P. Cooper, a coal merchant in Christiana, Pa., and has one child; Clara E., who is the wife of Robert U. Knox, a cattle dealer at Gap, Pa., and has borne one child, which is now deceased; Mary and Joshua H., both of whom died young; and J. Howard, still with his mother.

Mrs. Mary E. (Passmore) Brinton was a daughter of Enoch and Phoebe (Hollis) Passmore, who were married in Salisbury township in October, 1822. Enoch Passmore was a substantial business man and brewer and was conspicuous as a township official. He was born March 16, 1785, and died June 6, 1858; his wife died at the age of thirty-nine. They were members of the Society of Friends and their remains were interred in the Sadsbury meeting-house cemetery. To Enoch and Phoebe Passmore were born eight children, viz: John, who died in infancy; Sarah, who was born Sept. 19, 1824, who married Benjamin Hershey, and died; Mary E., born Feb. 3, 1827; Seneca, born Nov. 12, 1828, and who died young; Emeline, born July 21, 1830, who died unmarried at the age of fifty; Enoch, born Oct. 19, 1831, now retired from the activities of business as ticket agent and lives at Kinzers, Lancaster county; George W., born Feb. 11, 1833, and died in infancy; Horace, born Sept. 15, 1834, and died in the army. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Mary E. Brinton were John and Diana (Davis) Passmore, and were farming people of some considerable prominence in Chester county.

The late Joshua Brinton was an excellent farmer but not an excellent manager for the reason that his too generous nature induced him too often to expend his means in aiding his friends when he should have applied them to use nearer at home. Lacking only a wise economy, he was a consistent member of the Society of Friends and an unusually warm upholder of its principles and methods. In politics he was a Republican.

I. CLINTON ARNOLD, who stands among the prominent members of the Lancaster County Bar, is descended from one of the oldest and best Quaker families in Pennsylvania. Henry Brosius, his maternal great-grandfather, is the same as that of the late Hon. Marriott Brosius, whose family history is very fully given elsewhere.

His maternal grandfather was Abner Brosius, who married Letitia Wilkinson about 1828. They were both natives of southern Chester county, Pa., but soon after their marriage they purchased a farm near Bethesda, Martic township, Lancaster county, where they resided until about the year 1864, when they removed to Lincoln University, Chester county, where Mr. Brosius died in 1876. Mrs. Brosius died in 1897, aged eighty-seven years, at the home of our subject's parents. They were both actively interested in the anti-slavery cause, and on one occasion they concealed Fred Douglas, who had been a slave and was afterward widely known as a benefactor of his race, in their home, that he might escape the violence of a mob who tried to break up an anti-slavery meeting held in the neighborhood, by throwing rotten eggs, hooting and jeering the speakers, and threatening to ride them on rails. They were ever ready to reach out a helping hand to the needy and oppressed.

William Arnold, his paternal grandfather, conducted a store, and at the same time engaged in the quarrying of slate, at Peach Bottom, Lancaster county, in the early days of the development of that industry in that section. He died in 1852.

William John Arnold, the father of I. Clinton, now resides on a farm near Peach Bottom, York county, Pa., where he has resided many years and has served several terms as justice of the peace, and was a member of the school board for twelve years, having been one of the promoters of the township high school of that section—a pioneer school of the higher grade. He married Amanda P. Brosius, in 1858. Five children were born to them, all of whom are living, as follows: I. Clinton, member of the Lancaster Bar; E. Willard, in the Northern Pacific Railway service, at Portland, Ore.; Alice W., wife of Henry W. Evans, a farmer at Peach Bottom, Pa.; Clarence E., a member of the Bar in San Francisco, Cal.; and Mabel B., unmarried and engaged in teaching school. Four of these, I. Clinton, Alice, Clarence and Mabel, are graduates of the State Normal School, at Millersville, Pa.; the mother was a student there at the first session of the school, when it was founded by the late Hon. J. P. Wickersham, and she was a member of the first teachers' institute held in Lancaster county.

I. Clinton Arnold was born Sept. 7, 1859, in Mar-tic township, Lancaster county, but spent his boy-hood days on his father's farm, near Peach Bottom, York county. There the life he led resembled that of other boys on farms in that day, before railroads were common, and while the telegraph and tele-phone were as yet unheard of; but it was unlike that of many farmer boys, in that at home he was encour-aged to work not only at farm work, but in the great field of learning. His mother was never too tired or too busy to give help when he wanted it whether the matter was a hard spelling lesson or something else. So he learned the great lesson of work and application, which finally enabled him to do well in the field of labor which he chose. He got all he could from the district school, and then did the same at the Delta High school, traveling over three miles each morning to reach the school. Before he was quite seventeen years old, he began to teach, his cer-tificate being granted by B. F. Shaub, then superin-tendent of Lancaster county. He began his work at Post Tree school, in the village of Fairfield, Dru-more township, where he taught two years, and the following three years taught Harmony school, in the adjoining district, and a summer term at Home-ville, Chester county, Pa. In the meantime he had attended the Millersville State Normal School, and in 1882 graduated from that institution. After graduating he taught the Willow Grove school, in West Lampeter township, Lancaster Co., and the following year resigned that school to become prin-cipal of the Friends Select School, at Oxford, Ches-ter county. When about eight years of age, he de-cided that he would be a lawyer, when he was a man, and steadily kept that aim in view. Shortly after his graduation, he passed the preliminary examina-tion, and was registered as a law student of the Hon. Marriott Brosius, and in 1885, was admitted to practice in the several courts of Lancaster coun-ty, and later to the Supreme and Superior courts of Pennsylvania. He remembers with pleasure and gratitude his student days, and the early years of his practice, the interest and friendship extended to him by H. B. Swarr, a prominent member of the Bar and one time legal adviser, and afterward one of the executors of President Buchanan. Later Mr. Arnold and Mr. Swarr were closely associated in the practice of law, and continued so up to the death of the latter. In 1885 he was appointed notary pub-lic by Governor Pattison, notwithstanding he was a Republican, and he has held a commission as Notary ever since, with the exception of a few months, when he resigned, to act as special agent to investigate the mortgage indebtedness of Lancaster county in the census of 1890. He has always been regarded as a reliable counsellor and would always rather keep his clients out of litigation than to get them into it when it can be done without sacrificing their in-terests.

On Jan. 26, 1897, Mr. Arnold was married by Friends ceremony to Lucy Harris, daughter of Quinton P. and Mary B. Harris, of Salem, N. J., where Mr. Harris was engaged in farming, but is now living retired. One child, Harris Clinton, was born of this union in 1900. Mr. Arnold resides at No. 434 North Lime street, Lancaster, Pa. Relig-iously he inclines to the Friends or Quakers, from which he descended. Politically he is a Republican, and has taken an active part in all Republican cam-paigns ever since he became a law student. He be-longs to the Young Men's Republican Club. That he should take a keen interest in that political party is not to be wondered at, when the fact is recalled that his ancestors were among the earliest and stanchest Abolitionists of the country, and among the founders of the Republican party.

GEORGE BENKERT, whose School of Music is located at No. 147 East King street, has done much to improve and cultivate the taste for classical music in Lancaster, and is an artist of rare gifts in the study and teaching of his art.

William Benkert, the father of George, was born in Carlshafen, Germany. He completed his musical training in a noted school in Homberg under Dr. W. Volckmar, and then became a teacher in the school and an organist in various places in Germany for a period of fifty years. Matilda Moeller, his wife, was a native of Kirchberg, Germany, and a daughter of Jacob Moeller, an organist and pianist of more than ordinary merit for a period of fifty-two years, and an intimate associate of Louis Spohr, the celebrated composer. Thus it is seen that not only has Mr. Benkert, of Lancaster, made himself by hard work what he is, but that there is in his blood a sensibility to the attraction of musical art that would demand expression.

George Benkert was born in Hessen-Cassel, Germany, April 14, 1864, and accomplished his education in the Fatherland, studying music under the instructions of his father and grandfather, at the Homberg Seminary, then becoming a pupil of Prof. Dr. W. Volckmar and G. Zanger, the latter famous as an instructor on the violin and in choral training. The effect of Mr. Zanger's instruction is seen in the great amount of choral and oratorio work which Mr. Benkert has successfully and brilliantly accomplished in Lancaster.

Mr. Benkert entered the Seminary at the age of seventeen years, and was graduated with the honors of his class conferred by Prof. Dr. Volckmar, in organ and piano music. Leaving his native land in 1883, he landed at New York, and stopping for a short period with Julius Stern, of Brooklyn, an old schoolmate of his father, he afterward made his way to Lancaster, this city remaining his home to the present time. From 1883 to 1896 he was the organist and choir-master of Zion's Lutheran Church; for seven years he has been choir master and organist of the First Presbyterian Church, and the musical service in that church has become noted. He brought Sieveking, the great pianist, to Lancaster, and with his associates barely escaped a financial loss, but he was satisfied in the impulse the music of this great master of the piano gave to the higher musical culture of the city. Adele Aus Der Ohe was brought by him from New York on another occasion, and the interpretation of the piano rendered by this celebrated figure in modern music was a rich treat to all who love music. Mr. Benkert's musical pupils have presented numerous recitals to their friends in Lancaster, and their brilliant and finished work attests the thoroughness of his instruction.

Mr. Benkert was married in 1890 to Clara A., daughter of August J. Riske, a merchant tailor in Lancaster. This union has resulted in the birth of three children, two of whom, Catherine Olga and Anna Marguerite, are living, and one, William Augustus, is now dead, having passed away at the age of seven years.

Mr. Benkert has assisted in many charitable concerts, and organized the Mendelssohn Society, which has given the oratorios of St. Paul and Christus, both by Mendelssohn, and many choruses from the best masters. Great indeed have been the results of the constant efforts of Mr. Benkert to cultivate a love for music in this community, and no man among us holds a deeper place in the affections of the people, than does this quiet and unassuming, but accomplished gentleman, an artistic pianist and organist of rare merit and genuine worth.

CHARLES H. SMITH, successor to G. Harry Reed, at the Old Lakeland Stables, No. 153 North Queen street, Lancaster, is conducting the largest livery business in the city, and has been in charge of same since March 20, 1902. No better equipped establishment supplies the needs of a cosmopolitan community anywhere in the country. All manner of turnouts of modern construction are kept on hand, and a specialty is made of funeral and wedding rigs, equipages for pleasure parties and general driving, as well as busses and commercial wagons. About forty well groomed horses are kept in constant readiness, several of which present a dashing and spirited appearance before the tally-ho.

A native of Kinzers Station, Lancaster Co., Pa., Mr. Smith was born Feb. 11, 1872, son of John S. and Mary E. (Slaymaker) Smith, of Williamstown, this county. John S. Smith was a hotel man in early life, and conducted the "Kinzers Hotel" for eleven years, previous to which he had been connected with the "Williamstown Hotel" for six years. He was one of the first to raise tobacco in Lancaster county, and was the very first to bring seed tobacco here. People would come for miles around to see the plant grow, and so successful was Mr. Smith that he became the largest tobacco packer in the county, and made a fair fortune in that line. He also manufactured cigars, and dealt extensively in coal, lumber and grain. He was a man of force and determination, and possessed personal characteristics which kept him in the front of public affairs as long as he lived. Before entering the hotel business he had been a teacher, and he invariably kept abreast of the times, and was unusually well informed. Politics entered largely into his active life, and he held many important positions at the request of his Republican allies, being active in promoting the interests of his party. He was justice of the peace for many years in Williamstown, and while at Kinzers was postmaster and ticket, freight and express agent. He was a member of the Presbyterian church, and contributed generously toward its maintenance. Mr. Smith died in 1885, at the age of fifty-five years, while yet at the height of his energetic and useful career. His wife died in 1879, at the age of forty-seven. They were the parents of the following children: Clara S., of Harrisburg, Pa., married Ezra W. Frantz, a railroad engineer; Sarah E. is the widow of John M. Eckert, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Mary S. is the wife of H. S. Armstrong, a railroad engineer of Philadelphia; Emma L. is the wife of Clem A. Hoar, clerk of Trego county, Kans.; Addie V. is the wife of Nimrod Smith, railroad postal clerk at Harrisburg, Pa.; Lizzie H. is the wife of A. Newton Hoar, station master at Huntington, Oregon; Charles H. is mentioned below. The paternal grandparents, John and Mary Smith, were natives of Lancaster county, where he engaged in the manufacture of harness and collars, and retired in later life.

For the first six years of his life Charles H. Smith lived with his parents in the hotel at Kinzers, where he was born. Then his father retired from the hotel business and moved his family to Lancaster for one year, during which time he erected a new home at Kinzers, whither he again removed his family, and where Charles lived until 1885, when his father died. He was then thirteen years of age, and went to live with his sister, Mrs. Eckert, at Christiansiana, Pa., where he attended the high school for two years. Later he worked in a livery stable at Gap, Pa., for two years. In 1889, at the age of seventeen he returned to Lancaster, and held the position of mail messenger for two years, his employer being John F. Brimmer, at Brimmer's Livery. During this time he took a night course in Weidler's Business College, after which Mr. Brimmer took him into his office, where he held the position of clerk and bookkeeper for all three branches of Mr. Brimmer's extensive business—livery, leaf tobacco business and manufacture of cigars. In 1898, when Mr. Brimmer sold out his livery business to G. Harry Reed, Mr. Smith became associated with the latter in the capacity of manager and as partner of the new owner, and on March 20, 1902, himself purchased the entire business from Mr. Reed. Mr. Smith is a Republican in politics, and is fraternally connected with the Elks, Artisans and Royal Arcanum. He was married Aug. 28, 1891, to Miss Eva B. Marrow, daughter of John W. Marrow, and of this union there is one son, Wilbur Grant.

LINDEN HALL SEMINARY. Probably the best, and at the same time the briefest, descriptive account of Linden Hall Seminary is that to be found in the opening paragraph of the annual circular. It is as follows:

"This institution for the education of young ladies, founded in the year 1794, came into existence at the request of parents living in Pennsylvania and Maryland, who desired to have their daughters instructed in the elements of a polite education—the opportunities for which were in that day very limited—whilst their physical and religious well-being should at the same time be specially considered and fostered. The recognition of the original demand upon it, and of the trust that was placed in it, has remained the aim and motive of the school. It exists only for the sake of its scholars. In their welfare it finds its mission."

As a school, however, the Seminary has had a continuous existence for more than a century and a half. From the very beginning of the Moravian Church in 1457, its history has been a history of education, and wherever Moravian emigrants found a home in this country the church and the school house grew up side by side. This was what took place when a settlement was effected in Warwick township, Lancaster county. In 1748 a congregation of the Moravian Church was organized, and the next year, 1749, a log house was built a little north of the creek, on "Lititz Springs." This house was used as a chapel, parsonage and school house. In 1754, George Klein, the owner of a large tract of land, all of which he gave to the Moravian Church, built a two-story stone house, on the south side of the creek, on the site now occupied by the property of Peter S. Reist, Esq., on Main street, to which the chapel, parsonage and school were removed. The settlement was called Lititz by Count Zinzendorf in memory of the barony of Lititz in Bohemia, where the followers of John Huss found a refuge on the estate of King George of Podiebrad, and organized themselves in 1457 into the Church of the Moravian and Bohemian Brethren.

The corner-stone of the Sister's House, now "The Castle" part of Linden Hall, was laid June 7, 1758. After its completion and dedication, May 18, 1762, the parochial school for girls was conducted in that building. In 1769 that part of the present "Hall" occupied by the Principal's study and the school dining room was built, and was known as the "Kinder Haus" (children's house). This was enlarged in 1804, and the boarding school was moved into it after the building had been dedicated on Aug. 26th, of that year. Previous to 1794, however, the school had existed simply as a parochial or day school, but in that year Mrs. Marvel, of Baltimore, who was visiting Lititz, insisted that the Sisters should take charge of her little daughter Margaret, then nine years of age, in order that she might attend the regular parochial school. Little "Peggy" Marvel, as she was called, then became the first boarding scholar on Sept. 7, 1794, and the founding of the "Lititz Boarding School," as it was first called, dates from that time. As a school for girls there is probably none older in this country, and as a distinctively Boarding School for the higher education of girls and young women it is recognized as the second oldest, having an uninterrupted history of 109 years (1903).

During this interval upwards of 4,000 young women have gone forth from its walls prepared for the serious duties of life. Drawing as it did, its first pupil from Baltimore, the names of many of the early and well known families of Maryland and Virginia are to be found on its rolls, and prominent names of families high in the councils of the nation, particularly before the war of the Rebellion, are well represented. The names, too, and nearly all the mothers, of the old and well established families of Lancaster city and county, are to be found somewhere among the early records of the institution. Unfortunately many of these records have been either lost or destroyed, and though referred to in private or church diaries have not been found. A partial list of pupils between 1794 and 1804 reveals such well known Lancaster names as Steinman, Henry, Gundaker, Clark, Watson, Carpenter, Fahnestock, Ellmaker, Forney, Lightner and Wilson.

Time and modern ideas have wrought many changes in this venerable institution. The changes from wood fires and tallow dips, to steam heat, electric light, and other modern conveniences, have been very great. But high ideals of womanly culture and conduct have ever animated the spirit of the school life, and if the reminiscences left upon record by the pupils of a century ago are trustworthy, life at Linden Hall has always been peculiarly happy and productive of excellent results.

A list of the former principals is appended to this article, beginning with John Herbst, in 1794, to the present incumbent Charles D. Kreider, who entered upon his service of the school as assistant principal in 1897, and as principal in 1898. The two men who served the school for the longest time, and who, therefore, probably impressed their personality to a greater extent upon its work, were Eugene A. Frueauff and Herman A. Brickenstein; the former was principal from 1838 to 1855, and again from 1868 to 1873. To him the school owes not only its name "Linden Hall," but the loyal devotion of many alumnae. It was he who planted the first linden trees, and gave the best energies of his life to the work of the institution which he loved. Following immediately in his footstep was the second, Herman A. Brickenstein, principal from 1873 to 1892. Many are the women today who rise up to call him blessed. His life, like that of his predecessor, was devoted to education and was an example and inspiration to all who knew him.

PRINCIPALS OF LINDEN HALL SEMINARY: John Herbst, 1794-1802; John Meder, 1802-1805; John F. Frueauff, 1805-1815; Andrew Benade, 1815-1822; Christian Bechler, 1822-1824; Samuel Reinke, 1824-1826; John G. Kummer, 1826-1830; Charles F. Kluge, 1830-1836; Peter Wolle, 1836-1838; Eugene A. Frueauff, 1838-1855; Julius T. Beckler, 1855-1862; William C. Reichel, 1862-1868; Eugene A. Frueauff, 1868-1873; Herman A. Brickenstein, 1873-1892; Charles B. Shultz, 1892-1897; Charles L. Moench, 1897-1898; and Charles D. Kreider, 1898.

CHARLES D. KREIDER, the present principal (1903), came to his work well equipped to maintain both the standard and reputation of Linden Hall. He was born and spent his boyhood in Lancaster city, receiving his preliminary education in the Lancaster schools. After graduating at the Moravian College, he served six years as teacher at Nazareth Hall, the Moravian School for Boys at Nazareth, Pa., and for a year as instructor at the Moravian College. Imbued with the spirit of Moravian educational ideas, and familiar with modern method and practice, his work promises to preserve the well earned and established reputation of Linden Hall Seminary as Lancaster county's oldest and most widely known school for girls and young women.

JOHN SCHOCK, a prominent resident of Mt. Joy, now living in retirement, was for many years closely identified with the agricultural and commercial interests of Lancaster county in various lines, and enjoys the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens for his many sterling traits of character.

Mr. Schock was born Jan. 7, 1825, in East Donegal township, three miles west of Marietta, and comes of a family that has been well known in Lancaster county for several generations. His great grandfather, John Schock, a native of Germany, was the pioneer in Lancaster county, where in 1734, he settled for life in Manor township, near Creswell, on land now occupied by one of his great-grandsons, John Schock, a farmer. It was included in what is now known as Turkey Hill, and as he gradually added to his possessions, at the time of his death he owned a large tract. His home was a rude house of hewed locust logs. Of the family of eight children born to John Schock and his wife, we have mention of John, Jacob, Henry and Abraham.

Abraham Schock, the grandfather of John, of this sketch, was born in Manor township, where he married and remained until 1785, removing then to East Donegal township and locating at what is known as Schock's Mills. Here he engaged in farming and also conducted a gristmill. His death occurred in 1820. By his first wife, Anna Grove, he had four children: Jacob, Henry, Abraham and Anna, the wife of Thomas Bradley, all of these now deceased. His second union was with Anna Treichler, of York county, Pa., and the two children of this marriage, John and Fanny, died young.

Henry Schock was born in 1793, in East Donegal township, and was a successful farmer, beginning his agricultural life, on his own account, on a farm of sixty-five acres, in East Donegal township; as time passed, he added to the same, until he owned 115 acres, which has since been sold to different parties. Two gristmills stood on his original place, and he had them operated for him and cultivated his land, and thus by thrift and energy accumulated a comfortable competence.

Henry Schock was united in marriage to Anna Greider, of Conoy township, who was born in 1800, and died in 1841. His death occurred in 1836, and both are buried in a private burying ground in East Donegal township, located on a farm adjoining their own, which was formerly owned by Mr. Schock's grandmother Grove. Mr. and Mrs. Schock did not belong to any church but leaned toward the German Baptist faith. Their family consisted of seven children: Abraham, who died in Lancaster county; Henry, who died in Lancaster county; John of this biography; Jacob, who died in Lancaster county; Anna, the widow of Sylvester Crout, of East Donegal township; Martha, who married B. F. Hiestand, of this township, president of the Marietta Casting Company; and Mary, who died in infancy.

John Schock was reared on the old homestead in East Donegal township, where he remained until he was sixteen years old, and had obtained his education in the neighboring public schools. For the six years following he was engaged as clerk in a store in Marietta, in which town he also engaged in the lumber business for seven years; during the next seven years he carried on milling, on the old homestead, in partnership with his brother Abraham. In 1861, he came to Mt. Joy, where he has since resided, and took up the business of his father-in-law, John Patterson, dealing in coal, lumber, flour and grain, and later adding the oil business. Until 1895 he continued in these lines, but since then he has lived retired, his son Clarence now conducting the business.

Mr. Schock's career has been one of successful activity in the mercantile world, and he has never given much time to public affairs, although he has served two terms as school director, in Mt. Joy borough, with satisfaction to all concerned. His record as a business man is one of which he may well be proud, for besides acquiring a substantial competence in his active years, he gained and maintained the highest reputation for integrity and probity, as well as thrifty management. His political support is given to the Republican party.

On Feb. 10, 1852, Mr. Schock was married to Miss Mary Ann Patterson, and four children have blessed this union: Percy P., editor of the Marietta Register, of Marietta, who married Sue B. Lindemuth, and has four children, Marguerite, John P., Lewis L., and Mary; Harry C., a prominent citizen of Mt. Joy, where he is connected with various important enterprises, being president of the Mt. Joy Malting Company, president of the Union National Bank, and a member of the Council for three years, who married Fredrica C. Frank, and has four children, Mary B., P. Frank, Caroline F., and Arthur P.; Clarence, who still resides with his parents and carries on his father's business; and John L., whose death occurred in 1885, after a brilliant career through the United States Naval Academy, from which he graduated at the head of his class, of 120 members, taking all the honors. He entered the Academy in 1877 and was graduated in 1881, following which came his appointment as naval constructor, with the rank of first lieutenant.

Mrs. Schock comes of an old and distinguished family of Lancaster county, and was born in Rapho township, a daughter of John and Barbara Anna (Coffman) Patterson, the former of whom was, in his day, a prominent and well-to-do merchant.

ALEXANDER PATTERSON, deceased. Many of the beautiful homes of Lancaster county have been bereft of those who for many years were not only esteemed and revered as heads of households but possessed the respect of the community in which their lives had been spent. Such in marked degree was the case of Alexander Patterson, who passed out of life Oct. 28, 1887, at the age of sixty-nine years. While sorrow fell upon the neighborhood, it most deeply touched the devoted wife.

Alexander Patterson was born at Big Chickies, Pa., in 1818, a son of Arthur and Catherine (Oberlin) Patterson, whose family consisted of: William, who married Elizabeth Wisler; Jane, who married Peter Lindemuth; Alexander and Elizabeth, twins, the former of whom married Elizabeth Hollinger, and the latter married Rev. John Arthur, of the M.

E. Church; Douglas, who died single; and Arthur, who became a physician and married Emily A. Hooper. The pioneer of this family in America was Arthur Patterson, who came from Ireland, in 1724, and settled on Chiquesalunga creek, in this county, married Ann Scott, who was a daughter of Abraham Scott, of Ireland, and became the father of Samuel Scott Patterson, who was also the father of a son Samuel, of this county.

Alexander Patterson was reared on the farm and in his youth attended the best schools of the district. At the death of his father he went into the business of drover, one which at that day was most necessary and remunerative. As he was very successful, he continued on the road until about one year after his marriage, but in January, 1851, he moved to Mt. Joy borough where he resided for the rest of his life. For some time previous to his death, he did little more than trucking in a small way. For many years he filled the position of school director, as he always took a deep interest in educational matters. His political affiliations were with the Republican party, and in every way he fulfilled the duties of a good citizen.

Alexander Patterson was married Jan. 7, 1850, in Philadelphia, to Elizabeth Hollinger, who was born in Elizabeth township in 1828, a daughter of Jacob and Barbara (Zortman) Hollinger, of Elizabeth township, this county. The former died at the old home where they lived in Mt. Joy township, at the age of sixty-five, the widow surviving until 1885, when she passed away at the age of eighty-one at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Patterson, and was buried in the beautiful cemetery of Mt. Joy. Both parents were consistent members of the Lutheran Church. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hollinger were: Elizabeth, the widow of Alexander Patterson; Jacob, a farmer, near Paris, Ill.; Eli, who died on the old farm in 1880; and Mary A., the wife of Frederick A. Ricker. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Patterson were Adam and Barbara Hollinger, the former of whom was a farmer of Lancaster county. Adam was the son of Jacob Hollinger, who came to this country in 1736, and later took part in the Revolutionary war. The maternal grandparents, Alexander and Catherine Zortman, came to this country from Germany.

Mrs. Patterson has passed through some very sad experiences. It has been her lot to smooth the brow and calm the dying hours of her beloved husband, her mother, her brother Eli and his two children, and also of Douglas Patterson, her brother-in-law, and to see them pass out of her home, never to return. Mrs. Patterson is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, where she gives liberally to advance every benevolent enterprise.

GEORGE O. ROLAND. It is only within the last few years that the people generally have come to realize how very closely the general prosperity of the country is connected with the careful management of the banking institutions of the land, and with this knowledge has come a demand for men of ability to stand at the head of the banks of the present day. New Holland has been and is at the present time peculiarly happy in the character of the men to whom its financial interests are committed, and among them we find our subject.

George O. Roland, the able and genial assistant cashier of the local bank, was born in Earl township, Sept. 13, 1850, is a son of Hon. Jonathan H. and Elizabeth G. (James) Roland, and a grandson of Henry and Margaret (Seeger) Roland. The grandfather was a native of Earl township, and in his time a very successful farmer. His wife was born in New Holland.

Hon. Jonathan H. Roland was a native of Earl township, a successful farmer, and a broad-minded gentleman of the old school, being so well informed on men and affairs, that he was often consulted by his neighbors on various intricate and complicated questions. His integrity was unquestioned, and his loyalty to his convictions supreme. In 1857 he was a member of the State Legislature, and his name is associated with several noted bills that passed that body in his term. Elizabeth G. James, his wife, was a native of Honeybrook, Chester Co., Pa., and died Feb. 19, 1869. Her remains are resting in the New Holland cemetery. The Hon. Jonathan Roland, who was born in June, 1812, passed away Dec. 18, 1864, at the age of fifty-three. Both husband and wife were members of the Lutheran Church. Of their children Henry died at the age of twenty-eight; John is a cattle dealer in New Holland; Anna M. is the wife of E. C. Diller, of New Holland; Mary married Theodore A. Kinzer, of Lancaster, Pa.; Elizabeth J. resides in New Holland; George O.; William S. was killed in a railroad accident, was superintendent of a surveying corps, and was a man of more than ordinary ability and prominence.

The first four years of the life of George O. Roland were passed on a farm, and he was then brought to New Holland, where he acquired his literary education in the public schools. At the age of eighteen, he took a place as a clerk in a drug store, which he held for three years. He was then variously employed until he was twenty-six years of age, when he and E. C. Diller engaged in the dry goods business, which they conducted successfully for some years. During this period Mr. Roland had secured a practical business training and had made a thorough study of finance. In 1882 he saw the first opening to gratify his tastes, and he accepted a position in the Bank of New Holland, soon rising to his present responsible position of assistant cashier. With his personal affairs well in hand, Mr. Roland has yet found time to devote to public affairs, taking an active part in politics and holding strongly to the principles of the Republican party. Mr. Roland has held the office of school director in the borough, but cannot be said to be an office-seeker.

Mr. Roland was united in marriage in December, 1877, with Miss Katie B. Hull, a native of Lititz, and a daughter of Dr. Levi and Catherine (Kauffman) Hull, both deceased. This happy home has been brightened by the birth of two children: Seeger, now a clerk in the railway mail service; and Ralph, who is connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Philadelphia. Mr. Roland is prominently identified with the Masonic fraternity, and belongs to the Philadelphia Consistory; he is also a member of the Knights of the Golden Eagle.

GIDEON W. ARNOLD, who was the pioneer in the establishment of the cotton mill industry in Lancaster county, came of old Rhode Island stock.

Charles Arnold, his father, was born in West Greenwich, R. I., and died at the early age of forty-four years. He married Eunice B. Waite, who was born in 1804, and who was a daughter of Gideon and Martha Waite, and through this connection Gideon W. Arnold was a first cousin of Morrison R. Waite, a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and a nephew of Gen. Charles G. James, who was a representative in Congress from Rhode Island for sixteen years. Five children were born of the union of Charles and Eunice B. (Waite) Arnold, and of these only one survives, Ira W. Arnold, now living at Woonsocket, R. I. Those who have passed away were Gideon W., John A., Nathaniel P. and Anna E. Mrs. Eunice B. Arnold died Jan. 11, 1902, aged ninety-seven years and nine months. She was a remarkably well-preserved old lady, and often discussed the days of the war of 1812, the historic gale of 1815, and the Mexican war. During the progress of the latter, her home was in Moosup, Conn., and she often spoke of the excitement then being less than during the war of 1812. She was present at the celebration of the fiftieth wedding anniversary of her son, Ira W. Arnold, on Jan. 14, 1894.

Gideon W. Arnold, son of Charles, was born in West Greenwich, R. I., but in his early manhood removed to Lancaster, Pa., where as previously stated, he was the pioneer, with his uncle, Charles G. James, of Rhode Island, in establishing the cotton mill industry, an industry that grew to immense proportions under the firm name of F. Schroeder & Co., of which Mr. Arnold was the "Co." Mr. Arnold's name will be held in cherished memory by thousands of people in the county, as thousands were benefited by the remunerative employment he gave during a long and busy career. Quiet and unassuming in manner, Mr. Arnold was possessed of far more than ordinary intelligence, and he was a past master in the business of manufacturing cotton goods. His was a successful career, and yet, in all his successes he was ever mindful of the interests of those who so largely contributed to those successes—his employes; and these, we know, hold him in grateful memory. He had the interests of all his people at heart, and no one, rich or poor, ever approached him in the proper spirit without receiving a kindly smile and a word of encouragement.

Mr. Arnold was married, on Dec. 16, 1850, to Miss Margaret, daughter of the late Jacob Gable, and the ancestors on this side lived for generations in Lancaster. Five children were born of this union: Ada Eunice, wife of Pressley E. Chambers, a prominent clothing manufacturer of Philadelphia; Charles Jacob, who died in early childhood; Walter J., who entered into rest May 27, 1902; and Frank W. and Ira W., of Lancaster.

Mrs. Arnold, the widow of Gideon W., lives in the fine and commodious home which her husband erected thirty-seven years ago, at the corner of South Queen and German streets—a home that bears ample testimony to the liberality and enterprise of one of the best citizens Lancaster has ever known—Gideon Waite Arnold.

SAMUEL E. GROSH, a prominent carriage manufacturer of Lititz, Pa., was born in that place Oct. 10, 1833, and is descended from one of the old and highly respected families of Lancaster county. His paternal great grandfather, Valentine Grosch (as the name was originally spelled), emigrated from Germany to this country and took up his residence in Lancaster county, Pa. The grandfather, Peter Grosch, a farmer of what is now Mechanicsville, married Catherine Conrad, and they became the parents of eight children, as follows: Joseph, a farmer of Ohio; Charles, father of Samuel E.; Timothy, a butcher; Abraham, a cabinet-maker; John, a shoe-maker; Andrew, a teamster; Elizabeth, and Sophia.

Charles Grosh was born and reared in Manheim township, Lancaster county, and in early life learned the blacksmith's trade at Kissel Hill. On his removal to Lititz, he erected a shop at that place and engaged in business there until called to his final rest at the age of eighty years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Susan Shober, died at the same age. They were both connected with the Moravian Church. Of their fourteen children eight grew to years of maturity, namely: Maria, wife of Elias Buch, of Lititz, who died in March, 1900; Sarah, deceased, the wife of James Wolle, of Bethlehem, Pa.; Caroline, the widow of Francis Lawall, residing at Bethlehem, Pa.; Samuel E.; Henry Harrison, a veteran of the Civil war, who was a coachmaker and partner of Samuel E. from 1857 until his death in 1892; Herman, a confectioner of Bethlehem, Pa.; Augustus, a blacksmith by trade, and a soldier of the Civil war, is now deceased; and Agnes, who died in 1897.

Samuel E. Grosh was reared in Lititz and educated in a private school conducted by John Beck. During his vacations he worked on a farm and at the age of sixteen commenced learning the blacksmith's trade with his father. After mastering that occupation he learned the trade of coachmaking at Allentown, Pa., and then worked as a journeyman two years. Forming a partnership with his brother in 1857, they erected a shop in Lititz, and engaged in the manufacture of coaches, carriages, etc., for many years, doing a large and profitable business which is still carried on by Samuel E., who has given his entire time and attention to this work. The plant was enlarged in 1884 by the erection of a large frame building used as salesrooms and finishing department. The company keep on hand a good supply of finished work, and the vehicles turned out by them are among the best in the market. Mr. Grosh is a Republican in his political views, is an intelligent and progressive man, and has efficiently served as a member of the school board of Lititz for eighteen years.

On Feb. 4, 1858, Mr. Grosh married Miss Amanda C. Kramer, who was born on Pine Hill, Lancaster county, in 1832, a daughter of William Kramer, and of this union seven children were born, namely: Horace E. and Charles William, both mentioned more fully below; Lawrence K.; Bertha, wife of Walter Souders, of Lititz; Ruth, at home; and two deceased. The family are members of the Moravian Church, of which Mr. Grosh has been a member of the board of trustees for eighteen years.

Horace E. Grosh, the oldest son of Samuel E., was born Jan. 17, 1859, and was educated in the public schools and the Lititz Academy. At the age of fifteen years he entered the mercantile establishment of H. H. Tschudy, in whose employ he remained a short time, and then spent four years with his father, learning the blacksmith's trade. In the fall of 1881, he went to New Haven, Conn., where he followed the latter occupation for two years, and from there went to Charleston, S. C., and Savannah, Ga., returning to Pennsylvania overland through Virginia. From 1883 to 1884 he was a traveling salesman for the firm of B. F. Johnston & Co.; book publishers. In the fall of 1884 he was elected superintendent of correspondence of the publishing concern and turned his attention to the discharge of its duties. The following spring he was made a member of the firm of B. F. Johnston & Co., with which he was connected until 1889, when he retired from the book business. He has since followed mechanical pursuits, organized the Richmond Brass & Machine Works, at Richmond, Va., and became the secretary and treasurer. His next venture was with the Burton Electric Company in the manufacture of Burton electric heaters for street cars, but in the fall of 1895 he returned to Lititz, where he now resides, and in 1896 was made keeper of the Lititz Springs grounds, which position he now holds. 1885 he married Miss Lizzie Huber, a daughter of John Huber, living near Lititz, and four children were born to them, all of whom are living, viz; Mary Esther, Francis Edmund, Robert Samuel and Anna Elizabeth.

Charles William Grosh, the second son of Samuel E., was born Aug. 11, 1860, and also attended the public schools and Lititz Academy. At the age of fifteen he commenced clerking in the mercantile establishment of H. H. Tschudy, and was in his employ two years, after which he learned the trade of body making in the carriage establishment of his father and uncle. He subsequently spent almost two years in William Lee's body establishment at Easton, Pa., and then went to Omaha, Nebr., where he was employed by A. J. Simpson, a carriage manufacturer, for five years and by other concerns for two years. He has traveled extensively over the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific and as far south as Mexico. Returning to Lititz in 1891, he took a position in his father's manufactory, and in 1899 became a member of the firm, which is known as S. E. Grosh & Co. He is not only an experienced body maker, but a painter and finisher as well, and now has charge of the woodwork and finishing departments of the factory. He was married, Nov. 8, 1893, to Miss May Siegfried, of Easton, Pa., daughter of Neander and Emma Siegfried, and they have three children living, Emma, Mary and Alice; one died in infancy, Charles W., Jr. Like the other members of the Grosh family they are connected with the Moravian Church and take a prominent part in its work. For a number of years Charles W. Grosh has taken an active interest in Y. M. C. A. work, was the first president of the organization in Lititz, and is now serving as recording secretary. He is also secretary and treasurer of the Lititz Springs Association. He is a Republican in politics.

Lawrence K. was born Sept. 13, 1862, and on Nov. 22, 1893, married Catherine Brandt, of Lititz. They have two children, Earl B. and James Theodore. He worked in Lititz both as a blacksmith and a cigar-maker, but since 1900 has been engaged in the insurance business, with his office in the postoffice building, Main Street, Lititz.

HENRY NEFF KEHLER has for four-fifths of a century resided in his present home at Locust Grove, in West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, having been born there April 17, 1821.

The family is of Swiss descent, the paternal grandparents, Joshua and Maria Kehler, having emigrated from Switzerland in early life. The father of Henry Neff Kehler, who was also named Joshua, was born at Strasburg, this county, but took up his residence at Locust Grove in 1814. There he successfully cultivated a farm, devoting especial attention to the raising of cattle, and at the same time conducted the "Locust Grove Inn." Joshua Kehler married Anna Neff, daughter of Henry and Anna (Oberholser) Neff, of West Hempfield, and granddaughter of Daniel Neff, who was descended from Francis Neff, the earliest American progenitor of the family, who emigrated from Switzerland in 1717, because of religious persecution, and settled in Manor township, Lancaster county. Joshua Kehler was a Mennonite, his wife a member of the German Reformed Church. He died in November, 1850, aged sixty-eight, she Jan. 19, 1874, in her eighty-sixth year. Henry N. was their only son, and they had five daughters, Maria, Ann, Elizabeth, Matilda and Sarah. Ann and Elizabeth both died unmarried. Maria is the wife of Samuel Caldwell, of Williamsport. Matilda has been twice married, her first husband being J. S. Clarkson, and her second James Marshall, of Allegheny City, Pa. Sarah became the wife of B. F. Spangler, of Columbia, and died in 1859.

Henry Neff Kehler is a substantial and influential citizen. His farm comprises 140 acres, and is one of the best in Lancaster county, as his house is also one of the handsomest. His title to this property may be traced back to William Penn, and he has, as a treasured heirloom, the original conveyance from that great apostle of the doctrines of George Fox. Mr. Kehler has been a director in the First National Bank of Columbia for thirty-five years, and is held in high esteem for his keen intelligence, sound judgment and business integrity. Prior to the outbreak of the Civil war, his political affiliation was with the Democratic party, but since that epoch he has been a Republican. He is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church.

On Feb. 23, 1871, in Luzerne county, Mr. Kehler married Miss Catherine Stewart Knox, and they had one child, Henry N., Jr., at present teller for the Columbia Trust Company.

Mrs. Kehler was born at Jersey Shore, Lycoming county, Pa. The first American progenitor of her father's family was her great-grandfather, John Knox, who came to this country in 1785 from Ballymoney, County Antrim, Ireland, and located near Taneytown, Md. He had married Jane Robinson, who came to America in 1785, with her family of several children. At that time John, the grandfather of Mrs. Kehler, was but twelve years of age. He married Catharine Stewart, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (Hunter) Stewart, the latter a daughter of Capt. Samuel and Catherine (Chambers) Hunter. John Hunter Knox, Mrs. Kehler's father, was a man of superior education, having graduated from both Milton Academy and Dickinson College. He was by profession a civil engineer, but also dealt extensively in lumber. He was a Republican, and prominent in politics, though he never craved office and persistently declined all offers to place him in nomination; however, he consented for a time to serve as justice of the peace. He held a captain's commission in Co. D, 11th Pa. Regiment, commanded by Col. Coulter, but his untimely death, on Feb. 28, 1862, at the age of forty-seven, cut short a career which bade fair to be as distinguished as it was useful. Few men in his county were more generally popular or more sincerely mourned. He married Ann E. Moran, who survived him until March 28, 1885, when she too passed away at Hazleton, in her sixty-ninth year. Mr. Knox was a member of the Methodist Church, his wife of the Presbyterian. Mrs. Kehler was their first-born child and only daughter. She has three brothers, all of whom are married: John M., a wholesale grocer of Hazleton; Robert S., a farmer of Manor township, this county; and James R., a machinist of Richmond, Virginia.

On her mother's side, Mrs. Kehler is a great-granddaughter of Patrick and Arie (Ruggles) Moran, of Annapolis, Md., and a granddaughter of John and Mary (Penny) Moran, the former of whom died in early life. The latter was a daughter of William and Jane (McGowan) Penny, Scottish people of Drumore township, Lancaster county.

JACOB HERSHEY HERSHEY. From both paternal and maternal lines of ancestry this venerable and cultured resident of West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, inherits the name of one of the old families of the county. He is the son of Abraham and Nancy (Hershey) Hershey, and on the paternal side the grandson of Christian and Elizabeth (Deal) Hershey and the great grandson of Christian Hershey, a pioneer settler and farmer of Warwick, now Penn. township, who in partnership with John Brubaker purchased a tract of 1,000 acres of land, upon a portion of which the village of Petersburg now stands, the land being divided between the two men. Christian, the grandfather, was a farmer of East Hempfield township, where he lived to a good old age.

Abraham Hershey, the father of Jacob H., was born in East Hempfield township, Feb. 4, 1790, and was reared on the old homestead, but in 1817 moved to Rapho township. He married Nancy Hershey, who was born in Warwick township, Feb. 12, 1798, daughter of Christian and Anna (Fox) Hershey, and the granddaughter of Jacob Hershey, of Warwick, now Penn. township. Her father was a miller by occupation and he built the first structure at what is now known as Cassell's Mills. Nancy was a devout member of the Old Mennonite Church and Abraham, while not holding membership in any religious society, exemplified in his life the virtues and principles of Christianity. He was supervisor of what is now Columbia, East Hempfield and West Hempfield townships, and was prominent in local affairs. In 1840 he retired from the farm to the village in Sporting Hill, in Rapho township, where he continued to live until his death, which occurred Feb. 24, 1869, at the age of seventy-nine years. His wife died May 28, 1875, aged seventy-seven years. A family of ten children was born to Abraham and Nancy Hershey, namely: Christian, born Sept. 5, 1814, died in November, 1879; Isaac H., born March 25, 1816, died May 18, 1854; Jacob H., born Oct. 4, 1817; John H., born Jan. 15, 1820, died Feb. 17, 1890; Daniel H., born March 11, 1822, died June 30, 1872; Abraham H., born April 3, 1824, died Jan. 24, 1896; Harriet H., born March 11, 1826, married to Henry N. Brubaker, of Freeport, Ill.;

Anna H., born Oct. 4, 1828, died Feb. 1, 1862; Solomon H., born April 19, 1831, who lived retired at Buffalo, N. Y., and died in September, 1900; Tobias H., born Oct. 2, 1833, a hotel proprietor at Columbia, Pennsylvania.

The third child, Jacob H., was reared on his father's farm in Rapho township and received the education which the common schools afforded early in the past century. At the age of eighteen years he began an apprenticeship to the saddlery trade, which he completed, continuing to work at his trade in Lancaster county until 1838, when he moved to eastern Ohio and was there employed at his trade for two years. Then returning to Pennsylvania, he continued the same vocation for two years more, devoting in all seven years to it. He then began his life work on the farm.

His marriage to Miss Susan L. Long occurred Nov. 14, 1841, in Lancaster. She was born in East Hempfield township, Aug. 21, 1821, daughter of Abraham and Anne (Kauffman) Long, and the granddaughter of Christian and Anna (Miller) Kauffman. Abraham Long was a farmer and to himself and his wife were born the following children: Abraham, deceased; Christian, deceased; Maria, who died young; Anna, deceased; John, deceased; Susan L.; Anna, who married Samuel Nissley and is now deceased; Benjamin, of Lancaster; Fanny, now Mrs. Landis, a widow in Landisville; Solomon, deceased; and Maria, who married Abraham Perry, of Lancaster. Seven children were born to Jacob H. and Susan (Long) Hershey, namely: Amelia, who married Rev. Levy H. Shenk, a Reformed Mennonite minister, and is now deceased; Washington, of Marietta, Pa.; Abraham, justice of the peace in West Hempfield township; Webster, a farmer of East Hempfield township; Benjamin, who lives with his father on the farm; Horace and Franklin, both deceased.

Soon after his marriage Jacob H. Hershey began the active life of a farmer in West Hempfield township and soon became one of its most prominent citizens. He served as school director for three years and for thirty-five years was president of the Penn Mutual Insurance Company. In politics he is a Republican and his first presidential vote was cast for General Harrison. While years ago surrendering the active burden of farm life, Jacob Hershey still supervises the work on his broad acres; though over eighty-five years of age he retains the vigor and bright mentality of a younger generation, his faculties being unimpaired by the weight of years. He has always been a student and affords a splendid example of the truth that men of active minds have the greater promise of longevity and a serene old age. Forty years ago he was a school director and was so advanced in his ideas and so much ahead of his time that he introduced short-hand writing into the schools. He was also the first man to start underdraining wet land. He was also one of the organizers of an Agricultural and Horticultural Society, the only one of its founders still living. For thirty-five years he was the president of the Penn Township Fire Insurance Company and is at present connected with a Fire and Storm Insurance Company. He has been deeply interested in the genealogy and the early struggles of the pioneer families of Lancaster county and there has perhaps been no better local authority on matters of history than he. His investigation along many lines of research has been thorough and satisfying, so that his conversation gleams with the ripe and trenchant wisdom of well-spent years, and his fame as an original and sound thinker has gone beyond the immediate circle of his friends and acquaintances. In brief, Jacob H. Hershey is of that stanch, sturdy type of enlightened humanity which blesses and honors the community where its influence exists.

ELWOOD SHOLLENBERGER SNYDER, M. D., whose elegant home and cozy offices are located at No. 425 North Queen street, Lancaster, is one of the most prominent and eminently successful physicians and surgeons of that city.

Grandfather Peter Snyder was a prominent contracting carpenter and builder in Hamburg, Pa. Henry Snyder, his son, and the father of Dr. Snyder, married Miss Catherine Shollenberger, daughter of Thomas and Susan Shollenberger, the former of whom was a merchant tailor of Berks county. Five children were born to Henry Snyder and his wife: Walter, Ettie, Susan, Bertie L. and Dr. Elwood S.

Elwood Shollenberger Snyder was born in Lenhartsville, Berks Co., Pa. He entered Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, from which he was graduated in May, 1896, coming to Lancaster and locating here in July of the same year. Purchasing the home of the late David Evans, county superintendent of public schools, Dr. Snyder at once proceeded to remodel and enlarge the building, putting in a yellow pressed brick front and erecting an elegant entrance to his offices, on the south of the building—creating one of the handsomest private residences in that part of the city. The offices are connected with both telephones, and no physician or surgeon in Lancaster is better equipped with instruments and apparatus for the successful pursuit of his noble profession. Professionally he belongs to the American Institute of Homeopathy, the Homeopathic State Medical Society of Pennsylvania, and the Goodno Medical Society (which is composed of Homeopathic physicians of the counties of York, Dauphin and Lancaster).

Dr. Snyder is a man of prominence in many lines, and seems equally at home in both business and professional life. His public-spirited attitude and his liberal ideas have made him a valued stockholder and director in the Union Trust Company. He represents the "Co." in the E. N. Johnson & Co. planing-mill business, one of the leading industries in that line in the State. The Doctor is gifted by nature with a capacity for intense and concentrated application, and he has always been found with the ability to meet the demands of any situation.

Dr. Snyder has never ceased being a student, and he has continually advanced in his profession along with the progress made in his beloved science and has kept pace with its wonderful discoveries. In him is found that rare combination of keen business sagacity with open-hearted, open-handed generosity which is seldom discovered, while his urbanity and pleasant and genial personality render him a real physician, a popular comrade and a most agreeable and trusted friend. Being the personification of energy and industry, he has made rapid strides both in business and in professional life, and has out-distanced many of his older competitors. His private life is an exemplary one and his home a center of refined social life. Yet in the prime of life, having accomplished so much, his friends are inclined to believe that more laurels await him in the future.

MARTIN D. SHEAFFER was in his day a prosperous agriculturist of Upper Leacock township, and though he passed away when comparatively a young man, he had made his way to a place in the front rank in his community.

Mr. Sheaffer was born in 1842, a son of Isaiah and Joanna (Diller) Sheaffer, farming people of Upper Leacock township, this county. Their family consisted of the following named children: Rachel, Mrs. Samuel Myers, deceased; Diller, who died young; Martin D.; John, a resident of Lampeter township, this county; Isaac, living in Kansas; Mary, Mrs. Isaac Kochel, deceased; Cyrus, of Bareville, Lancaster county; Adam, deceased; and Joanna, Mrs. John Good, of Bareville.

In 1860 Martin D. Sheaffer was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Ann Sheibly, who was born Feb. 16, 1836, and of whose family more extended mention is given below. To this union were born three children: Susanna, who died when seven months old; Alice, now the wife of John J. High, a farmer of East Earl township; and Diller S., who is mentioned farther on. Mr. Sheaffer followed farming successfully up to the time of his death, which occurred in Upper Leacock township, Dec. 18, 1882, when he was forty years old. His remains rest in the Groffdale cemetery. He was a devout member of the Mennonite Church, with which his widow also unites. She now makes her home in Leacock township.

DILLER S. SHEAFFER was born May 9, 1871, in Earl township, was reared in Upper Leacock township, receiving his education in the public schools there. He remained with his mother until 1886, spent the next five years at the home of his sister, and afterward resided on the fine farm in Leacock township, where he carried on general agricultural pursuits and stock raising. Mr. Sheaffer inherited the thrifty traits of his ancestors, as the results of his work showed. In political faith he was a Republican, but was not particularly active in public affairs. In Sept., 1893, in Lancaster, Mr. Sheaffer married Miss Emma Burkholder, a native of West Earl township, and daughter of Isaac and Maria (Rupp) Burkholder. Her father was engaged in farming in West Earl township until his death, in 1881, and the mother still resides there. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sheaffer, James B. and Carl I., the latter deceased. Mr. Sheaffer's death Nov. 14, 1901, at the age of thirty years, five months and twenty-five days, was most untimely and cut short a very promising career.

The Sheibly family, to which Mrs. Sarah A. Sheaffer belongs, has long been prominent in this county. Henry Sheibly, her grandfather, came to America with his parents when but seven years of age, and passed the remainder of his life in Lancaster county. A man of great industry, he accumulated considerable property, and cultivated his lands, on which he made improvements which still remain to testify to his excellent judgment. In 1797 he built the stone residence still occupied by his grandson, Mrs. Sheaffer's brother, and in 1800 he erected a large barn which is still in use, and, like the dwelling, in a good state of preservation. In 1817 he built a large brick house on the farm, which is now occupied by his great-grandson. He passed away in 1817, at the age of seventy-two. Henry Sheibly first married a Miss Wenger, who died in 1794, and his second wife, Elizabeth (Miller), was the grandmother of Mrs. Sheaffer. She died in 1840, at the age of seventy-four.

Henry and Susanna (Groff) Sheibly, Mrs. Sheaffer's parents, were both natives of Lancaster county, the former born April 11, 1797, at Groffdale, the latter on June 11, 1802, in West Earl township. They were married March 12, 1822, and children as follows blessed this union: Anna, who died young; Abram G., of Upper Leacock township; Elmira, Henry and Martin, who all died young; Maria, who married John B. Landis; Susannah, late wife of Isaac Reif; Sarah Ann, who is the widow of Martin D. Sheaffer; Caroline, widow of Isaac Shaef-fer, of West Earl township; and Adam, who died young. The mother of these died in April, 1877, after a long life of usefulness, filled with kindly actions and neighborly deeds. Mr. Sheibly survived until Jan., 1885, passing away at the home of his daughter Caroline, in Farmersville. He was buried from his old home, and laid to rest in the family burying ground. For many years he was one of the prominent farmers of his town, active in local public affairs and in the work of the Reformed Church, in which he served as elder. He retired in 1859.

GEORGE W. HACKENBERGER, a druggist and retired teacher in Bainbridge, Lancaster county, was born in that borough Dec. 9, 1835, son of Samuel and Mary (Custer) Hackenberger.

Samuel Hackenberger was born in Conoy township, and his wife in East Donegal township; both died in Bainbridge, to which point they removed shortly after their marriage. They lived in Bainbridge the greater part of their lives, with the exception of six years spent at Maytown, and two years at Rowenna. Mr. Hackenberger began life as a farmer, and then became a manufacturer of cigars in Maytown. In 1847 he moved back to Bainbridge, and three years later entered the drug business, in which he continued until his death which occurred in 1887, when he was aged seventy-nine years. Mrs. Mary Hackenberger died in 1881, at the age of seventy-one years. They were members of the Lutheran Church. He was a Democrat except during the war period, when he voted the Republican ticket. Of their children, John died at the age of fifty-four years; George W. is mentioned below; Mary A., who died in 1899, was twice married, first to John Groff, later to Philip Shaffer; Lavina became the wife of Lieut. Mullin, of Topeka, Kan.; Samuel, Jacob, Elizabeth and Catherine died young; Samuel (2) is a life insurance agent of Philadelphia.

The paternal grandparents of George W. Hackenberger were George and Mary (Hollinger) Hackenberger, the grandfather born in Germany, and the grandmother in Lancaster county. They settled in that county, where they were farming people. When a very young man he took part in the Revolutionary war. The maternal grandparents of George W. Hackenberger were George and Elizabeth Custer, who came from Germany and settled in East Donegal township at an early day, engaging in farming. He died while still a young man, but his wife lived to be seventy-five years old.

George W. Hackenberger was married, in Elizabethtown, in September, 1861, to Miss Mary A. Pence, and to this union came the following children: Walter, who died young; Iva N., who married N. R. Hoffman, lives with her father, and is a drug clerk; Lewis S., a coach builder and painter in Lancaster, married to Amanda Manning; George W., manager of two drug stores in New York City; Harry F., chief clerk in a drug house in New York City, who was with Gen. Miles in the Porto Rican campaign, as telegraph operator, 9th N. Y. Signal Corps. Mrs. Mary A. Hackenberger was born in Conoy township in 1842, daughter of William and Hettie (Snyder) Pence. Her father was born in Maytown, and her mother in Conoy township, and they were farming people all their lives.

George W. Hackenberger spent the first eight years of his life in Bainbridge and Maytown, going to school, and then began stripping tobacco and making cigars for four years at or near Rowenna. Then coming back to Bainbridge, he continued in the same work till he was twenty-six years old. At that age he began teaching school. In 1873 he received a teacher's permanent certificate from the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, the late Hon. J. P. Wickersham. He followed this calling for thirty-four sessions, thirty sessions in one and the same school. He retired from teaching in 1897, to take entire charge of his drug store, in which his daughter Iva had been clerk, while he was teaching in the school room. Mr. Hackenberger became a druggist in 1878 and is now (1902) still engaged in that business. He was elected twelve times as auditor of Conoy township, for three years each. He is a man of ability, highly respected in the community, and holding to a marked degree the confidence of the general public. Mr. Hackenberger is a member of the G. A. R. and of the O. U. A. M. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and in religious belief a devout member of the Lutheran Church. He is one of the solid and substantial men of his community, and well deserves a prominent place among the leading men of Conoy township, Lancaster county.

Mr. Hackenberger had a somewhat brief but valuable military experience, enlisting in Co. H, 195th P. V. I., in February, 1865; he was discharged in January, 1866. He was made clerk in a general court martial, Department of Washington, where he was on duty for six months. While on picket duty during the closing days of the war, he participated in the picket line firing against the noted Col. Mosby's forces. His regiment was in the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Division, Army of the Shenandoah, under Gen. Phil. H. Sheridan.

JACOB HILDEBRAND. Among the well-known and respected citizens of Strasburg is Jacob Hildebrand, who has won the esteem and respect of the community through a long life, during which he has faithfully served his borough in a number of public capacities.

Jacob Hildebrand was born Nov. 16, 1822, of German and French ancestry, a son of Jacob and Mary. (Heiney) Hildebrand, the former of whom passed the greater portion of his business life in Soudersburg and Paradise. In those days there were no free schools in the locality in which they lived, and as the parents were limited in means, young Jacob had few educational advantages, and was early thrown upon his own resources.

The first attempt of the lad to make an honest living for himself was in 1832, when he engaged to drive a butcher wagon and deliver meat to the workmen building the Pennsylvania Railroad, between Ronk's Station and Leaman Place. Between the ages of thirteen and twenty years, the youth worked for Benjamin Herr, a farmer who lived about one mile east of Strasburg, laboring for his board and clothes, and it was through the kindness of Mr. Herr that he derived the little education which became his, as well as gaining the habits of study and investigation which proved useful in all his subsequent career. While living here he was permitted to attend the district school for several sessions, about four days out of each week, his benefactor paying the expense.

At the age of twenty, Jacob entered the cabinet-making shop of Joel Rice, of Strasburg, remained in his employ for two years, and at the expiration of this apprenticeship, he started into business for himself, making furniture and working in carpentry, until 1852. At this date he purchased from W. S. Warren a stock of merchandise and entered into this business, remaining in the mercantile line until 1855, when he sold his stock and again resumed his former trade, engaging extensively in building and contracting; in 1856 he was a member of the building committee in the erection of the town hall.

In 1854, Jacob Hildebrand was elected by his fellow-citizens as chief burgess of the borough of Strasburg, and for thirty years held other borough offices, but retired to private life at last, declining to serve longer. In 1860 he was elected justice of the peace and immediately began to familiarize himself with the higher duties of this office, applying himself assiduously to the studying of surveying, conveyancing, the drafting of wills, and other legal papers upon which he would have to pass judgment, and until 1898 he was continued in the office, so efficiently serving that many of the difficulties of the neighborhood were amicably settled according to his judgment, without litigation. In the spring of 1898, he declined a re-election, and his son, J. Ross, was elected in his place. During one year he also filled the office of a notary public.

From 1863 to 1871, he owned and operated a job printing office in the borough, the purchase being made in order to keep this industry in town, circumstances being such that otherwise it would have been removed, and thus he made a permanent business which long flourished.

In 1871, Jacob Hildebrand was elected county surveyor, of Lancaster county, on the Republican ticket, and held the office for nearly four years; during that time he prepared with great labor and careful research connected drafts of the land originally granted by patent deeds in the townships of Strasburg, Paradise, Bart, Eden, and the greater part of East and West Lampeter.

Jacob Hildebrand was married Nov. 16, 1847, to Eliza Spiehlman, who died in 1865, leaving ten children: Elizabeth and Mary, deceased; William W., Millard F.; Ella S., the widow of Samuel Dougherty; John R.; O. J., the wife of D. M. Aument; Laura K., the wife of Charles Kemerly; Sallie B., widow of J. W. Goodman; and J. Ross. In November, 1866, he married Elizabeth Kendig, the widow of John Pennell. Two of his sons are engaged in the leaf tobacco business, under the firm name of Hildebrand Bros., of Strasburg.

'Squire Hildebrand, as he is familiarly known, is recognized as one of the most useful citizens of Strasburg; from a small beginning, with almost no educational advantages, but by patient industry and study, he has advanced to a position of honor and trust in the community, and has transacted a large amount of important business, acting very frequently as administrator, assignee and executor, in the settling of many estates.

Fraternally, Mr. Hildebrand is a member of Strasburg Lodge, No. 361, I. O. O. F., having been a member since 1849, has passed through all of the offices of the subordinate lodge, has been secretary of his own lodge for forty years and has served as representative to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. Mr. Hildebrand is also a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society in which he is much valued, and is one of the official members of the M. E. Church, having served in the capacity of trustee since 1862. In his long business and public career, he has amassed a competency, but what is better, he has secured for himself a reputation as a high-minded, honorable man.

AMOS S. MOWRER, one of the old and most respected citizens of West Lampeter township, Lancaster county, Pa., belongs to one of the oldest families in that part of the State, settlement having been made here by his ancestors as early as 1700.

Through change and accident many of the old records of the pioneer families became mislaid, and beyond the fact that one of the early settlers of Lancaster county, coming here about the beginning of the eighteenth century, established the Mowrer family in this region, we have no authentic information until the time of great-grandfather Balsser Mowrer, a well-known wheelwright, who industriously pursued his trade and accumulated property. His farm was in the locality now included in Eden township, but his remains lie in the Strasburg cemetery, near Providence, where the Reformed Church has a burial ground. His first wife was the mother of Adam, who was the grandfather of Amos S.

Adam Mowrer was born, reared and spent his whole life in this county, where he followed agriculture very successfully. He married the widow of John Shaffner, and from this union seven children were born: John, who became a successful farmer and engaged extensively in the lime business near Quarryville, living to be about ninety years old; Adam, who became a farmer of Providence township, where he died at the age of eighty; Jacob, the father of Amos S.; David, who became a farmer of Eden township, where he died at the age of eighty-seven; Margaret, who married John Templeton; Mary, who married Elijah Keene, and lived to the age of eighty-five; and Julia, who married Henry Keene. The longevity of this family was most remarkable, almost all of them filling out more than the four-score of the Psalmist, and all of them reared families noted for vigor of body as well as strength of intellect.

Jacob Mowrer, the father, was born in Strasburg township, July 9, 1803, and died July 4, 1892. After his marriage he settled in West Lampeter township where he engaged extensively in farming, operating a farm of 100 acres, becoming well known as a man of estimable character, and prominent in public affairs. For many years he was a staunch Whig, and when that party was merged into the Republican party, he found himself in harmony with the change.

Jacob Mowrer was married to Mary Strohm, the daughter of Henry and Mary (Lefever) Strohm. Mrs. Mowrer was born in 1799, her life extending to 1891, when she passed away at the unusual age of ninety-one years and nineteen days. Both the father and mother belonged to the Old Mennonite Church. The following children survived at the death of these worthy people. The brothers and sisters of Amos Mowrer, who was the eldest, were: Elizabeth, who resides in West Lampeter township; Martin, who is a miller in Dayton, Ohio, and has become well known through various inventions, one of these being the machine used in the manufacture of corn grits; Adam, a farmer of West Lampeter; Isaac, a resident of Xenia, Ohio, a traveling salesman; and Mary, who is the widow of Abraham Eshleman, of Strasburg township.

Amos S. Mowrer was born Feb. 15, 1828, in West Lampeter township, in the locality of Big Springs, and was reared on the farm, where, according to the custom of the day boys were expected to have many duties. Being the eldest in a large and growing family, his schooling was frequently interrupted, and although he was apt and studious, he was not able to accomplish as much as he desired. In later life, a steady course of general reading, and a naturally quick comprehension have enabled him to supply all deficiencies. Being a man of progress, he has identified himself with public affairs, and has given his influence toward religious and social advancement, gaining the confidence of his fellow-citizens to such an extent that he has been called upon to serve in many of the local offices, including that of county commissioner.

Formerly he was a Whig and later became a Republican, and has so efficiently served on the school board that he has been elected five terms, and was once appointed to fill a vacancy; for fifteen years he has been the capable auditor of the West Lampeter township board; he has also served as the auditor of the Penn Township Fire Insurance Company. In fact, Amos S. Mowrer is one of the citizens of his township who possesses the esteem of almost all within its borders, who have unbounded confidence in his integrity.

Amos S. Mowrer was married Jan. 10, 1857, to Annie Harnish, a daughter of Michael G. and Elizabeth (Warful) Harnish, who was born Feb. 15, 1836, and died June 11, 1881. To them were born eleven children: Mary Elizabeth, who died in childhood; Barbara, Serenus, and Harnish, all deceased; Emma, who married B. Frank Gontner, of West Lampeter township; Anna, who married David H. Huber, of his township; Jacob H., a resident and implement dealer of Lancaster City, married to Mary B. Kready; Mary and Elizabeth, twins, the former at home, the latter, the wife of Jacob L. Hess, of West Lampeter township; Ella, who married Jacob F.

Charles of that township; and Adda, who resides in Lancaster City.

Since 1896 Amos S. Mowrer has lived retired from active life, and with his daughters, Mary and Adda, makes his home in Lancaster City, at No. 547 West Walnut street. During her lifetime, his wife was one of the most devout of women, and a consistent member of the Reformed Mennonite Church, where she was valued and beloved for her many traits of Christian character. Mr. Mowrer is passing his advancing years among his old surroundings, beloved by a great circle of friends, who remember how cheerfully and generously he has ever devoted time and means to the advancement of his family and neighborhood.

MRS. MARTHA SHIREMAN. Among the well-known and most highly esteemed residents of East Donegal township, Lancaster county, was Mrs. Martha Shireman.

The first marriage of Mrs. Shireman was with Christian Heisey, who was born in East Donegal township, and died upon his farm there, in 1846, at the age of forty-one; he was buried in Reich's cemetery. His parents were Joseph and Elizabeth (Kauffman) Heisey, well-known citizens of the township. The occupation of Mr. Heisey was farming, in which he was very extensively engaged. To his marriage with Martha Zeigler were born: Eli, who died at the age of fifty-two, married to Anna Reicht; Barbara, deceased; Zeigler, deceased; and Jacob B., born in East Donegal township, on Nov. 3, 1853, who resides in Maytown, married Barbara Welchans, a daughter of William and Anna (Drebenstadt) Welchans, and had four children, William, Martha Z., deceased, Anna and Mary. The parents of Mrs. Jacob B. Heisey had these children: Clara; Joseph, a carpenter in Harrisburg; Amra, who married Jeff. Shireman, of Maytown; Samuel; Barbara; Anna, who married William Staum; George; and May, who married a Mr. Stewart, a cigar-maker of Lancaster.

The second marriage of Mrs. Shireman was to Dr. William J. Shireman, in Maytown, whose death occurred in October, 1894, at the age of sixty-five; he was a man of means and prominence, and a consistent member of the Reformed Church. For a number of years he successfully practiced dentistry in Maytown, and at his death, left many who felt deeply bereaved.

Joseph W. Shireman, the brother of Dr. William J. Shireman, was born in East Donegal township, died in Maytown, March 15, 1900, at the age of seventy-four, and was buried in the burying ground of the Reformed Church. His parents were Frederick and Lydia (Welchans) Shireman, of East Donegal and York counties, respectively; shortly after their marriage they settled in Maytown, where the former carried on a business of cabinet-making. The children born to Frederick and Lydia Shireman were: Aaron, who died in 1894; Samuel, a farmer of Dauphin county; Jacob, who died at the age of fifty; Joseph W., deceased; Anna, who was Mrs. Michael Eazle, deceased; and Dr. William J., who died in 1894.

Mrs. Shireman was born in East Donegal township, Feb. 5, 1815, and died in September, 1902. She had had a long residence in the township, and was universally esteemed. She had been an interested witness of the growth and development of the country and in spite of advancing years remained to the last one of the most active, intelligent and entertaining ladies of the vicinity.

CALVIN COOPER, of Bird-in-Hand, East Lampeter township, Lancaster county, now in his seventieth year, was born there and still lives within 150 yards of his birthplace, having bought a part of the original tract on which his father first located when he came to that vicinity in 1827. Mr. Cooper was the third child in the family of nine born to Mark P. and Sidney (Conard) Cooper; is a grandson of Calvin Cooper, who was a noted carpenter by trade, and one of the principal mechanics who erected the first bridge across the Susquehanna river at Columbia; and a great-grandson of John Cooper, who was among the first settlers who came to this part of the country from Wales, and settled in the neighborhood of Christiana.

The ancestors of Sidney (Conard) Cooper came from Germany; she was a daughter of Abraham Conard, who married Catharine Evans, March 24, 1796. Calvin Cooper is therefore a descendant of Everard Conard, whose parents were among the first settlers to locate in the vicinity of New Garden, Chester county, and among the offspring of one "Thomas Kunders," who emigrated from Germany through the influence of William Penn, and located, with others, who accompanied him, upon 500 acres of land in Germantown, Philadelphia, about the year 1683.

Calvin Cooper, whose name introduces this notice, received his education in the private schools then common, before the passage of the public school laws of the State, and also had one term of four months at a private boarding school at Jennersville, Chester county, and one term at a similar school of a higher grade in Wilmington, Del. After this his attention was directed to guiding the plow and to the methods then used for growing field crops. His farm consisted of about ninety acres, and he well remembers the arduous duties of a farmer's life before the introduction of the labor saving implements now so common on every well equipped place. To handle the sickle deftly, swing a scythe close to the ground and roll up a good swath, and to swing a cradle gracefully were accomplishments which all good farmers sought after and paid good wages for.

In the fall of 1858 Mr. Cooper married the eldest daughter of Peter and Lydia Hunsecker, of Mannheim township, the former of whom was of German descent, and the latter of Welsh.

During the Civil war Mr. Cooper twice joined the emergency troops and went forward as first non-commissioned officer to meet the invading Rebel forces who threatened a raid upon that fertile region. He was elected for three terms as a member of the Pennsylvania Board of Agriculture, serving eight years, and he has served three terms of five years each as one of the justices of the peace of his township, the duties of which office, with surveying, conveyancing and scrivening, and the growing of nursery trees have occupied his time fully. With the help of a loving and industrious wife he has raised a family of three sons and two daughters, who are now fighting the battles of life, each in his own chosen life pursuit; these children are: Harry H., post-master of Nacogdoches, Texas; Elmer E., traveling salesman for the Moline Implement Work, Dallas, Texas; Milton C., supervising principal of the Asa Packer school, Philadelphia; Mena May, wife of W. Ross Esbenschade, of Leaman Place, Pa.; and Ella Sidney, wife of Harry W. Barnard, of Collamer, Chester Co., Pennsylvania.

CHARLES C. BRINTON, a general farmer, was born Sept. 5, 1838, in Salisbury township, on the farm where he still resides and where agriculture has been the pursuit of his life. His parents, Caleb and Ann (Richards) Brinton, were respectively born on a farm adjoining the one just mentioned, and on another just across the boundary line in Chester county, near Kennett Square.

Caleb Brinton was reared a farmer, settled on the present farm in Salisbury township in 1830, and there passed the remainder of his life, dying Dec. 18, 1851, at the age of sixty-four years; his widow survived until Nov. 6, 1888, when she expired at the advanced age of eighty-eight. Both were bright lights in the Society of Friends, and their mortal remains were laid to rest in the Salisbury meeting house cemetery. Caleb Brinton had been twice married, the first time to Eliza Fox, who bore him seven children, as follows: Moses, of Nebraska, now deceased; Rebecca, widow of Joseph Hood, of Philadelphia; George, a retired merchant in West Chester; Letitia, deceased wife of Robert Swisher; Mary A., of Landstown, Pa., widow of Clarkson Brosius, the father of Hon. M. Brosius (deceased); Hannah, widow of John Carter, of Emporia, Kans.; Elizabeth, who died unmarried. To Caleb and Ann (Richards) Brinton were born four children, viz: Phoebe, who died in 1861; Isaac, who died in Andersonville prison, a member of the 57th P. V. I.; Charles C.; Sergt. Channing Brinton, of Co. K, 97th P. V. I., who was killed in front of Petersburg, Va., and whose remains were brought home for interment in the Sadsbury cemetery.

The paternal grandparents of Charles C. Brinton were Moses and Hannah Brinton, of Salisbury township, and the maternal grandparents were Isaac and Mary Richards, of Chester county, whose farm was deeded to their forefathers from William Penn direct.

Charles C. Brinton began his education in Hunsecker's Academy at Trappe, Montgomery Co., Pa., and next at the age of sixteen entered the Millersville Academy; the remainder of his life has been passed on the farm with the exception of three months in 1861, when he was in the Union army, but he had no part in any battle.

Charles C. Brinton has been twice married: first, on Oct. 28, 1875, he was united in matrimony at his present home by the mayor of Lancaster, Captain Stauffer, with Anna Baker, daughter of Elisha and Ruth Baker and a native of Chester county; she was called away in April, 1883, at the age of thirty-six years, leaving one child, Channing, born June 19, 1879, who died April 15, 1883. Their remains found repose in the Sadsbury meeting house cemetery.

The second marriage of Mr. Brinton took place in Philadelphia, March 12, 1890, to Anna Dickinson, and this union has been graced with four children, Charles, Caleb, Anna and John M. Mrs. Anna (Dickinson) Brinton was born in Salisbury township, Dec. 13, 1857, and is a daughter of Henry and Anna (Baldwin) Dickinson, of Lancaster and Chester counties respectively. Henry Dickinson was a farmer by calling, but also conducted a general store at Roseneath, Salisbury township. He was also a justice of the peace for many years. Somewhat late in life he retired to private life, his death occurring in 1896, at the age of seventy-five years, and that of his wife in 1898, at seventy-four; the remains of both being interred in Sadsbury meeting house cemetery. The children born to Henry and Anna Dickinson were eight in number and named as follows: Lorenzo; Lydia, deceased; Phebe, of Reading, Pa.; Henry, deceased; Hayes, employed on the railroad at Reading; James, foreman in the steel works at Steelton; Bayard, of Steelton, a doctor; and Anna, now Mrs. Brinton.

The Brinton family, one of the oldest in the State, has always been prominent in the management of local affairs, has been influential in the Society of Friends, and after the organization of the Republican party was largely instrumental in securing the abolition of slavery.

ABNER PEOPLES, a retired farmer and esteemed citizen of Strasburg township, was born Feb. 27, 1825, in New Providence, Pa., son of John and Susan (Miller) Peoples, both deceased.

John Peoples was a son of Francis Peoples, a farmer of Lancaster county, who had a family of five children, namely: William, Francis, Samuel, John and Sarah, all of whom have passed out of life. John Peoples, the father of Abner, was born Dec. 10, 1793, died in New Providence, Dec. 28, 1862, and was a merchant, farmer and lime-burner and one of the leading citizens of his community. About 1818 he married Susan Miller, of Lancaster, and seven children were born to them: Mary, born Dec. 6, 1820, deceased; Anna, born Jan. 16, 1823, deceased; Abner; Amanda, born Nov. 6, 1827; Leah, a widow, born Oct. 14, 1829, who lives in New Providence, Pa.; Hiram, born in Feb. 1835, a retired farmer of New Providence; John, born July 29, 1837, who resides in Lock Haven, Pennsylvania.

Abner Peoples was reared on a farm and received his education in the schools of his township. When he started out in life for himself it was as a poor boy, and his present financial position has been secured by the exercise of industry, perseverance and economy. His fine farm of 127 acres, with its excellent improvements, attests his success, and he is fully justified in passing his declining years in rest and retirement. In his earlier years he was a Whig, but has been an active Republican since the formation of that party. Both he and his wife are valued members of the Mennonite Church.

On Nov. 9, 1848, Mr. Peoples was united in marriage to Miss Martha Hess, of Pequea township, born Sept. 28, 1823, and daughter of John Hess. A family of four children has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Peoples, as follows: Lettie, born June 29, 1849, married to Henry Groff, of Providence township, a farmer; Mary, born in 1852, the wife of Frank Gachnour, a carpenter of Providence township; Susan, the wife of Dr. L. M. Bryson, of Paradise township; and Thaddeus, who died at the age of fourteen years.

Mr. Peoples has an ancestry of which he may well feel proud, both the Peoples and Miller families being among the leading ones of the county. Great-grandfather Miller was one of the oldest settlers of that part of Lancaster county, was born in 1713, and married Mary Brubaker, born in 1719. Their son David, the grandfather of Abner Peoples, was born in 1754, married Mary Souder, born in 1753, and they had a family of nine children: Jacob M., born in 1776; Annie M., 1778; David, 1781; Elizabeth, 1784; Mary, 1786; Catherine, 1788; Daniel, 1790; Isaac, 1793, and Susan, the mother of Abner Peoples, was born in 1797. All these good people lived worthy lives and at death were mourned with respect and affection. Since the days of the Revolutionary war the families of Peoples and Miller have been identified with the most of the progress and advancement in educational and religious lines in this vicinity. Abner Peoples is a most worthy representative of this combined ancestry.

NISSLY. The pioneer of the Nissly family in America was Jacob, who emigrated from Switzerland in 1719, and settled in Mt. Joy township, Lancaster county, Pa., where he took up a large section of land, purchased from William Penn. The land remained in the Nissly family for about 150 years, when it was bought by David Wolgemuth, who still owns it. Jacob Nissly was naturalized in 1729. Of his children, (1) Jacob Jr. married and became the father of three sons, Henry, Jacob and Martin; (2) John (Hans) married a Miss Sechrist, and had six sons, Michael, John, Jacob, Abraham, Samuel and Martin; (3) Martin married a Miss Snyder; (4) Henry is mentioned below; and the daughters, three in number, married respectively, into the Buhrman, Ebersole and Steward families.

Henry Nissly, son of the pioneer, Jacob, was born in 1722, and made his home on a mill property, with 160 acres of land, on Chickies Creek in Rapho township. His descendants now live in Clay township. He married a Miss Reif and they became the parents of eight children: Barbara, who married Michael Brandt; Anna, who married Jabez Shuey; Henry; Martin; Catherine, who married Dr. Michael Kaufman, of Manheim borough; Jacob; Maria and Abraham, who both died in infancy.

Martin Nissly, son of Henry above mentioned, was born Jan. 16, 1759, and located in what is now known as Clay township about 1787, on a farm of nearly 175 acres. He married Elizabeth Hallock, and had two children: Catherine, who married Benjamin Bollinger; and Henry, married to Catherine Martin.

Henry Nissly, son of Martin, and great-grandson of the pioneer Jacob, was born July 12, 1783, became a prominent farmer of Clay township, and passed away in 1869, at an advanced age. He married Catherine Martin, daughter of Peter and Catherine (Flickinger) Martin, the former of whom had located in Clay township in 1804. To Henry and Catherine (Martin) Nissly were born nine children: Peter, who married a Miss Pfoutz, and has a son Jacob, residing near Richland, Lebanon county; Martin and Henry, deceased; Samuel; Elizabeth; John, deceased; Catherine and Anna, deceased; and Isaac, who married a Miss Bryson, and died in 1862, leaving one child, Ida V., now living in Reading.

Samuel Nissly, son of Henry and Catherine (Martin) Nissly, was born May 29, 1815. He was reared upon his father's farm, and received his education in the common schools of the neighborhood. At the age of eighteen he went to Lititz to learn the cabinet maker's trade, and served his apprenticeship of two years, after which he worked there for three years and then returned to the home farm, where he carried on his trade for the following two years. In 1840 his uncle, Peter Martin, instructed him in the mysteries of land surveying, and this Mr. Nissly has since followed. In politics, Mr. Nissly is a Republican, but originally was an old-time Whig, casting his first presidential ballot for William Henry Harrison in 1840. In 1850 he was elected justice of the peace, and has been re-elected every five years since. He is president of the Lincoln National Bank, and has been a director of the Northern Mutual Life Insurance Company since its organization in 1844. He has served as secretary, treasurer and president of the company in that time. Mr. Nissly is unmarried.

HENRY P. BRENEMAN, a retired farmer now living in Florin, Pa., was born in Conestoga township, Lancaster county, Pa., March 14, 1831, and is a son of Benjamin and Nancy (Peters) Breneman, natives of Conestoga and Manor townships, respectively. They settled in the township of Mt. Joy in April, 1831, and spent their lives on the farm which they settled upon at that time. The father was a prominent man in the community, settled many estates, had been supervisor and school director, and was living a retired life at the time of his death. Largely instrumental in the organization of the Mt. Joy Fire Insurance Company, he exerted a wide influence in its behalf. In 1865 he died at the age of seventy-one years, and his widow, who survived until 1879, reached the age of seventy years. They were both buried in the Kraybill cemetery in East Donegal township. They attended the Mennonite Church, though she was baptized in the Reformed Church. To them were born: Mary, who married David Brandt, a farmer in East Donegal township; Nancy, deceased; Henry P.; George, deceased, who became mute at the age of seven years, from scarlet fever; Aaron, a retired farmer of Florin; Kitty, the widow of Jacob Gish, of Chester county, Pa., living with her daughter; Fanny, the widow of George Hambright, of Florin; Isaac, a retired farmer, who died at Elizabethtown and was buried in the Mt. Tunnel cemetery, leaving one son, Benjamin.

Henry P. Breneman has been twice married. In 1857 he was married in Lancaster county to Catherine Flory, by whom he became father of the following children: Henry, who married Anna Baker, and is now a retired farmer in Florin; Jacob, who married Malinda Hoffer. He has since died and is buried in Elizabethtown cemetery.

Mrs. Catherine (Flory) Breneman was born in Rapho township, and died in 1873 at the age of forty-two years, and was buried in the Kraybills cemetery. She was a daughter of Peter and Catherine (Gantz) Flory, of Lancaster county, both excellent people.

Mr. Breneman was married in Mt. Joy township, Nov. 18, 1873, to his second wife, Mrs. Mary (Hambright) Barnhart. Mrs. Breneman was born in Rapho township, and is a daughter of George and Catherine (Baker) Hambright, born in Rapho and Mt. Joy townships, respectively. They came to Florin in 1868, where the father died at the age of seventy-four. The mother died in 1871, at the age of forty-nine. They were buried in the Florin cemetery, and both were members of the United Brethren Church. Mary was their only child. The father was married a second time to Fanny Breneman, by whom he had the following children: Benjamin, who married Alice Caslow, and is a farmer in Florin, Pa.; Amos, who married Elizabeth Yetter, and is an operator in Florin; George, who died in 1900, an operator, unmarried; John, now attending Annville College at Annville, Lebanon Co., Pennsylvania.

The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Breneman were Adam and Mary (Hosler) Hambright, of Conestoga and Rapho townships, respectively. Both died in Rapho township, where he was a farmer and carpenter, and they were buried in Hossler's cemetery in East Donegal township. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Breneman were George and Anna (Hoffman) Baker, who lived in Mt. Joy township, and were buried in Lebanon county, in the old Lutheran cemetery, which is just on the line. Martin Baker, the father of George, came from Germany.

Mrs. Mary (Barnhart) Breneman, was twice married. Her first marriage was on June 4, 1856, when she was united to Henry K. Barnhart, in Annville, Pa., by whom she became the mother of two children: Katie Ann, who married John C. Zug, of Rapho township, where he is engaged in a mercantile business; and Emma M., of Lebanon, Pa., who married S. S. Zug, justice of the peace, and whose children, Elsie B., Roswell H. and Daisy B., are all at home. Mr. Barnhart followed farming and also operated a hotel at Milton Grove. He died in 1872 at the age of thirty-six years, and was buried in the cemetery at Mt. Joy.

Henry P. Breneman remained with his parents until he was twenty-six years of age, and then began a career for himself as a renter of one of his father's farms in Mt. Joy township, where he spent a number of years, and then removed to a second farm belonging to his father. On this he remained until 1880, when he came to Florin, to spend his declining years in the enjoyment of that peace and comfort to which his industrious years were well entitled.

Mrs. Breneman is a member of the German Baptist Church, and her husband belongs to the Republican party. They are both excellent people and are deservedly popular among their neighbors.

LEVI S. GROSS. The great family of the name of Gross, members of which may be found all over the United States, was founded in Lancaster county, Pa., by Johannes Gross, who was born in Germany about 1736, came to America while still a youth, and located in Penn township, where he engaged in farming and thrived until he owned some 532 acres of the fertile land of Lancaster county, extending through both Penn and East Hempfield townships. His religious connection was with the Lutheran Church and all records go to show that he was a most industrious and respected man, who left a large family behind him, one of whom, Martin Gross, was the grandfather of Levi S. Gross.

Martin Gross (1) was born in 1768, lived a quiet, agricultural life, and died in April, 1837. He was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church. His wife was Elizabeth Weidler and a family of two sons and six daughters was born to them: George, who migrated to Dayton, Ohio, where he died; Martin, the father of Levi S.; Elizabeth, who married George Getz; Charlotte, who married George Sahn; Sarah, who married A. Shindle; Mary, who married John Getz; Susan, who died single; and Anna, who married Jacob Kimel. The parents were most worthy people, who were kind neighbors and lived in peace with their fellow-men.

Martin Gross (2) was a farmer by occupation, but died in 1847 at the early age of thirty-six years; his wife, who had been Mary Stetman, still survives, at the age of eighty-four, a beloved resident of her son's household. To them were born: John S., who resides with his brother Levi; Salinda, who married Levi H. Hess, of Manheim; Harriet, who married Isaac B. Espanshader, of Manheim township; and Levi S.

Levi S. Gross was born on the farm he now occupies, located two miles northwest of Petersburg, on Aug. 8, 1836, a son of Martin and Mary (Stetman) Gross; he was reared a farmer boy, and educated in the excellent public schools of his district. On Dec. 2, 1858, he was married to Miss Elizabeth B. Espenshader, a daughter of Jacob Espenshader, and settled down to domestic life on the old homestead, where he continues to reside. This farm consists of eighty-one acres, and Mr. Gross has made many valuable improvements and has attended to the cultivation of the land in such a manner that its yield is enormous.

However, although much interested in his agricultural life, Mr. Gross has found time to take note of the needs and wants of his community and was one of the organizers of the Northern National Bank, of Lancaster City and is one of its directors; for several years, he has been president of the Northern market, in Lancaster; is also a stockholder and director in the Lancaster and Manheim Traction Company, and a director in the Northern Trust and Savings Company. In addition to the responsibilities attaching to these positions, he has served on the school board for a period of nine years and has ever been most active in the ranks of the Republican party, representing his township as a delegate to the county conventions and has most efficiently served on the county committee.

Seven children have been born to Levi Gross and his wife: Amelia, who resides at home; Lillie, who married Martin L. Nissley, of West Donegal township; Ida, who resides at home; Martin, who married Miss Lizzie Hershey, and resides in Penn township; Annie, who married John H. Stetman, of Penn township; Emma, who married Phares S. Moore, of West Hempfield; and Clara, who resides at home.

Mr. Gross is one of the representative men of East Hempfield township and possesses the confidence and esteem of the community where he has so long made his home.

DAVID H. BRANDT, late a retired farmer of East Donegal township, Lancaster county, was born in Mt. Joy township, Jan. 5, 1827, a son of John H. and Katie (Hosler) Brandt, of East Donegal and Mt. Joy townships, respectively. The father died in East Donegal near Maytown, in 1853, at the age of fifty-four years; the mother died in 1863, at the age of seventy-five years, and their remains are now resting in the cemetery at Mt. Joy, to which they were removed from the cemetery in Maytown. Both were members of the German Baptist Church.

John H. Brandt was actively engaged in farming to within six years of his death, and was a man of much character and standing in the community, upright, honorable, straightforward and honest. John H. and Katie Brandt were the parents of the following family: John H., a miller in East Donegal township, who died in 1889; Michael H., a retired mason in Mt. Joy; David H.; Fanny H., who died unmarried; Joseph H., who died in Middletown, Pa., in April, 1899. Of the parents of John H. Brandt it is now remembered only that their names were John and Fanny Brandt.

David H. Brandt was twice married. In 1853 he was united with his first wife, Elizabeth Longenecker, in Dauphin county, Pa. Born to this union were: Simon L., who married Lizzie S. Eshleman, and is now living in Marietta, Pa.; Alphas L., who married Alice Shenk, and is living with his parents; John L., who died young; Tillie L., at home. Mrs. Elizabeth Brandt was born in Conewago, Dauphin county, and died Sept. 6, 1865, at the age of thirty-seven years. Her remains were interred in the Hoffer Church cemetery in Conewago township. John and Barbara (Hoffer) Longenecker, her parents, were natives and residents of Dauphin county, where her father engaged in farming, and in his younger life was a teacher.

The second marriage of David H. Brandt occurred in January, 1868, when he was united with Mary P. Breneman, of Mt. Joy. Mrs. Mary Brandt was born in Millersville, Manor township, in July, 1824, and is a daughter of Benjamin and Anna (Peters) Breneman, both natives of Manor township. They died in Mt. Joy, to which point they had removed in 1832. Her father died in 1872, at the age of seventy-one years; her mother died Nov. 15, 1879, at the age of seventy-eight years, and both were buried in the Kraybills Meeting House cemetery. They were the parents of the following children: Mary; Lizzie, who died young; George, deceased; Henry P., of Florin, Pa.; Katie, the widow of Jacob Gish, now living in Chester county, Pa.; Aaron, a retired farmer near Florin; Isaac, deceased; Fanny, the widow of George Hambright, who lives in Florin.

David H. Brandt remained with his parents until his marriage, when he worked his father-in-law's farm in Dauphin county until his wife's death. Following that sad event he removed to Mt. Joy township, where he remained until 1872, when he came to his present farm, a fertile and well cultivated place of 103 acres. He was an honored member of the Mennonite Church, and stood high in the esteem of his neighbors. In his politics he was a Democrat, and took a broad and enlightened view of the affairs of the town and the nation, seeking to do the full duty of the citizen on all occasions. His death on April 9, 1902, at the age of seventy-five years, was a distinct loss to the community.

SIMON SEITZ MANN, M. D., enjoys a large general practice in Columbia, where he has been actively engaged in the duties of his profession for several years. Though yet a young man, he has the confidence and high regard of his patrons and fellow citizens in an enviable degree, and he is a worthy representative of a family whose members have long been among the most respected citizens of Manor township, Lancaster county.

Bernard Mann, the grandfather of Simon Seitz, was born in Manor township, where his grandfather, Bernhart Mann, who emigrated from Huiffenhart, Germany, in 1748, made his home. He always followed farming, and became one of the leading agriculturists of his section, owning 106 acres of valuable land, which he cultivated profitably all his active life and which is now owned and cultivated by his grandson, Jacob S. Mann. His neighbors and fellow citizens held him in the highest esteem, and his counsel and advice were frequently sought by them; noted no less for his business ability than for strict honesty, he was often called upon to assist them in their business affairs, and he settled up and administered over fifty estates. He was also active in public affairs, and served his township as supervisor. Mr. Mann was a Democrat in political faith. He married Anna Wertz, also a native of Manor township, and a member of one of its old families, and they became the parents of eight children, one of whom died in childhood. John is a farmer in Cumberland county, this State. Henry W. is mentioned below. Elizabeth is the wife of Eli Shuman, of Cumberland county. Margaret is the wife of John Sherick, of Manor township, this county. Annie is the wife of Levi Mann, of Manor township. Simon is engaged in farming in Manor township. Carrie is the wife of Henry Hershey, of Lancaster county. The father was a member of the German Baptist Church.

Henry W. Mann was born June 14, 1820, in Manor township, was reared on the old home farm, and received his education in the neighboring public schools. He remained with his parents up to the age of twenty-seven years, when he removed to the present family home, a 120-acre farm located one mile east of Washington borough, in Manor township. He made the place one of the first in the locality, provided with all modern improvements, and managed in the most business-like manner, careful attention being given to all the many details necessary to the successful conduct of an up-to-date farm. Mr. Mann fully sustained the reputation borne by his ancestors for honesty and sterling integrity. He and his family united with the Menonite Church. Henry W. Mann passed away Dec. 24, 1901. His son, Henry S., resides on and has taken the home farm.

In 1856 Henry W. Mann married Miss Anna C. Seitz, who was born in 1833 in Manor township, daughter of Jacob and Annie Seitz, and eight children blessed their union. Amos died in early childhood. Jacob S. married Emma Herr; Eli S. married Annie Rohrer; George W. S. married Annie Kauffman; Henry S. married Maggie Sherick; these four sons are engaged in farming in Manor township, the last named on the home farm. Enos S. married Mary A. Fulton, of York county; he received a good common school education, engaged in teaching for a time, and was also employed three years as clerk of the Columbia National Bank, and two years in the Lancaster County Bank; studying medicine, he was graduated from the medical department the University of Pennsylvania in 1896, and has since practiced medicine, being now located in Dallas town, York Co., Pa. Simon S. is our subject proper. Hiram died in infancy.

Simon Seitz Mann was born Oct. 28, 1867, in Manor township, where he grew to manhood on the home farm. His early education was acquired in the local public schools, and he also attended the Millersville Normal, from which he was graduated in 1890. His medical education he received at the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, from which institution he was graduated in 1894, and he has since been engaged in the active practice of his profession, first as resident physician in the Children's Homeopathic Hospital of Philadelphia, then for three years at Honey Brook, Chester Co., Pa., whence he went to Columbia. Dr. Mann has gained ground rapidly since locating in that town, and now has a lucrative and still increasing practice. While preparing for his life work he engaged in teaching for some time, and met with gratifying success in that line also. He is a director of the Columbia National Bank and the Columbia Telephone Company. Socially Dr. Mann is a Mason (sixth degree) and a member of the Knights of Pythias. His political support is given to the Democratic party.

WILLIAM H. BUNN. It is seldom that there is found a United States official whose faithfulness, integrity and capability have enabled him to retain his position for more than forty-two years, yet such is the case with William H. Bunn, postmaster and merchant at South Hermitage, Lancaster county, Pa., where, under the firm name of William H. Bunn & Son, he is conducting a general store at the same place where he started in the fall of 1860.

William H. Bunn was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 23, 1828, the eldest of the nine children that constituted the family of David and Catherine (Martin) Bunn, natives respectively of Chester and Lancaster counties. David Bunn was a carpenter by trade, as was his father before him, but the latter was also a farmer. David died in Cochranville, Chester county, in 1892, at the age of eighty-five years, while his wife had passed away in 1871, when sixty-two years old. They were members of the Presbyterian Church and their remains were laid to rest in Brandywine Manor. Their children were named as follows: William H.; Martin A., who died in Illinois; Mary J., who died at the age of four; Martha, at the age of three; Mary F., at two; Emma, deceased wife of J. C. Buchanan; Elizabeth, married to Park Rutherford, of Highland, Pa.; Benjamin, a farmer of Highland township, Chester county; and Hugh W., in the grocery business at Rockford, Ill. The paternal grandparents of these children were Benjamin and Mary (Beerbrower) Bunn, natives respectively of Pottstown, Pa., and Bucks county.

William H. Bunn until sixteen years of age lived with his parents in Moscow, Chester county, where he was employed as a clerk for two years; then he went to Philadelphia, where he was employed in a wholesale dry-goods store two years, and then located in Rockville, Chester county, and opened a general store, which he conducted one year. In 1851 Mr. Bunn came to Salisbury and for one year was engaged in general merchandising; thence he went to Pequea, where for four years he was occupied in the same line of trade, and then sold out and purchased a farm in Salisbury township, on which he resided four years. But the mercantile instinct was strong within him, and he was ever on the alert for an opportunity to re-embark in the business which had engaged his early attention, and which his tastes and keen insight into its methods had so eminently qualified him to pursue. Accordingly, seizing an opportunity of profitably disposing of his farm, in the fall of 1860 he opened up business at his present stand in South Hermitage and was the same year appointed postmaster, having first been elected supervisor of the township for one term, and subsequently town auditor.

William H. Bunn was united in marriage April 21, 1853, in Bellemonte, Lancaster county, with Miss Sarah R. Flemming, and this congenial union has been blessed with seven children, born in the following order: James R., who died at the age of three years; Ada C., who is married to William T. Irwin, a clerk, resides in Chester, Pa., and is the mother of two children; Olivia, who is the wife of C. W. Dampenan, a clerk, resides at Point Pleasant, N. J., and is the mother of three children; Jeney C. Bunn, living at home with her parents; Thesia, residing at Gap, Lancaster Co., Pa., who is the wife of John D. Knox, a farmer, and has three children; David, living with his father, and married to Mary C. Corbett, who has borne him one son, Robert O.; and Charles, a farmer in Eagle, Lancaster Co., Pa., married to Lena Mast, who has borne him two children.

Mrs. Sarah R. (Flemming) Bunn was born in Salisbury township, Dec. 31, 1826, a daughter of James and Olivia (Cowan) Flemming, natives of Chester and Lancaster counties, respectively, and parents of the following named family: Sarah R., wife of William H. Bunn; Margarette C., widow of John Wilson and residing in Chicago, Ill.; William R., who died at the age of forty years; Joseph O., a resident of Lincoln, Neb.; Anna W., deceased wife of a Mr. Garrett; James P., who died in Cincinnati, Ohio, when nineteen years old; Mary E., married to Davis Roseboro, a manufacturer of wagons at Wagontown, Chester Co., Pa.; Susan P., of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., wife of Frank Woule; and Thomas P., deceased.

James Flemming, the father of Mrs. Bunn, was for years manager of the iron plants owned by the Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, one of the early Free-Soil members of Congress from Pennsylvania and a strong anti-slavery man; Mr. Flemming was also the manager of the plants of James P. Paxton. The death of Mr. Flemming occurred in Salisbury township in 1843, at the early age of forty years, and that of his widow in March, 1895, at the advanced age of eighty-eight. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Bunn, James and Rebecca (Oglebie) Flemming, were highly respected farming people of Chester county; and the maternal grandparents, William and Mary (Rutter) Cowan, stood equally high in the same vocation in Lancaster county.

William H. Bunn has been a Republican ever since the organization of the party and an earnest worker in its ranks as well as a sagacious adviser in its councils. The long tenure of his present position shows him to hold the confidence not only of the party's managers but that of the public in general. He has always taken a leading part in the promotion of the public welfare of Salisbury township, being public-spirited to an extreme degree and willing at all times to sacrifice his time and means for the benefit of the community of which he has so long been a member, and in which his name will be revered as long as Salisbury township shall endure. For twelve years he was treasurer of the Pequea Presbyterian Church, the teachings of which he has followed throughout his long and useful life.

ISAAC MURR, was born in East Earl township and died in Intercourse, Pa., March 25, 1898, having spent his seventy years in Lancaster county in a most honorable and commendable industry. His remains rest in the cemetery connected with Roland's church.

Isaac Murr was a son of Jacob and Katie (Shaffer) Murr. His father was born in Germany, and his mother in Lancaster county; both are now dead. They had the following children: Caroline, now living in East Earl township, at the venerable age of ninety-five years, who has been twice married, to Jacob Usner and to Michael King; Henry, a resident of Paradise, Lancaster county; John, George, Jacob, Michael, Louis, Isaac and Daniel, all deceased.

Isaac Murr was married in July, 1883, to Catharine Kurtz, who was born in Salisbury township, a daughter of Henry and Mary (Kurtz) Kurtz. Her parents removed in 1854 to East Earl township, where they spent the rest of their lives. Her father died in 1883 at the age of seventy years; and the mother, in 1889, at the age of seventy-nine; both were buried in Rancks' Church cemetery. They were members of the United Brethren Church. Born to this union were the following children: Catharine, who is Mrs. Murr; Sylvester, who is a farmer and phosphate manufacturer in East Earl township; Sarah J., who married E. J. Stunkard, of East Earl township; Mary A., who died young; Emuna C., who married Martin L. Hummond, a farmer of East Earl township.

Abraham and Magdelina (Martin) Kurtz, the paternal grandparents of Mrs. Murr, were born in Salisbury township. Her great-grandfather, Jacob Kurtz, was also a resident of Lancaster county. Her maternal grandparents, John and Katie (Sho-walder) Kurtz, were natives of Salisbury and Cone-stoga townships, respectively. John Kurtz was a son of Christian Kurtz, of Salisbury township.

Isaac Murr followed the blacksmith trade the greater part of his active life. In East Earl township he worked with Daniel Geist, and while still a boy, came to Intercourse in 1858. In his later years he dealt extensively in horses and cattle, and became very prominent in the community. In his politics he was a Republican, and took a most intelligent and active interest in political affairs. He was a good citizen, an honest man, and a genuine gentleman.

CHRISTIAN E. GOSS, a farmer and teacher of Conoy township, and a man respected alike for his character, learning and industry, was born in the township of West Donegal, Aug. 29, 1857, a son of Joseph H. and Mary (Erb) Goss.

The father was born in Londonderry township, Dauphin county, and the mother in Conoy township. The senior Goss died in Conoy township in April, 1899, at the age of seventy-four years. He was a farmer, and in every way a most estimable man. For a year he served on the board of supervisors. His widow who was born in 1832, is now a resident of Elizabethtown, and is the mother of the following children: Amos, who died at the age of eight years; Lizzie, the wife of Abraham H. Meckley, of Columbia; Christian E.; Joseph H., a farmer, of Elizabethtown; Mary, who died at the age of two years; Anna, the wife of David Gable, a merchant of Mt. Joy; Ella, the wife of J. W. Shireman, a farmer of Conoy township; Emily, the wife of Prof. H. S. Irinser, of Bainbridge; Myra, the wife of Joseph Martin, a teacher of Middletown.

The paternal grandparents of Christian E. Goss were John and Lizzie (Haldeman) Goss, residents of Dauphin county, but in later years they removed to West Donegal township, Lancaster county, where they died. They were devoted to a farming life, and were honest and industrious to the last degree. Mr. Goss's maternal grandparents were Christ and Lizzie (Kraybill) Erb, natives of Lancaster county, and lifelong residents of Columbia.

Christian E. Goss and Miss Martha Lindemuth were married in West Donegal township, Dec. 25, 1884, and are the parents of the following children: Irene; Clarence, deceased; Mary, who is now living with her aunt; Christian; Helen; Joseph, deceased; Raymond; Sarah; Paul; John. Mrs. Martha Goss was born in West Donegal township, Feb. 3, 1857, and was a daughter of Martin and Elizabeth (Engle) Lindemuth, both natives of Lancaster county. Her father was a farmer, and died in 1884, at the age of sixty-five years. Her mother now resides in Elizabethtown.

Christian E. Goss remained at home with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-seven years. When he was nineteen he began teaching, and for twenty-seven years he has taught school in the same township, nine at Stevens, sixteen at Wickersham, and two at Bainbridge. For two terms he was auditor, and for ten years has occupied the position of justice of the peace; in the spring of 1900 he was appointed census enumerator for his district. In his politics he is Republican, and in his religion a member of the Church of God, of which he is now an elder in the local church.

Mr. Goss is a man of fine character, much intelligence and is greatly esteemed in the community where he has spent his industrious and useful life.

JACOB C. McCONNELL, M. D., a popular citizen of Terre Hill, Lancaster county, is a native of Chester county, where he was born April 13, 1848, a son of Jacob and Abigail (McCamant) McConnell, both of Scotch extraction, but of American birth. The family is an old one in Chester county, where its various representatives have been prominent in both farming and trade.

Dr. J. C. McConnell was reared on the farm, and had his general school training in the public schools, and at the Millersville Normal, where he spent two years. At the end of that time he took up the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Ring-wolt, of Churchtown, and entered Jefferson Medical College in the fall of 1868, from which institution he received his degree in 1870. He pitched his tent at Terre Hill, where he has remained to the present time, winning many friends, and building up a good practice. His footing in the community is unquestioned, and his success is complimentary in the highest degree.

PLANK IRWIN, a retired miller at New Holland, Pa., was born at Honeybrook, Chester county, Dec. 5, 1819, a son of William and Christina (Plank) Irwin. His father was born in Chester county, and his mother in Lancaster county.

William Irwin was a miller in Honeybrook, and during the war of 1812 was a member of the Light Horse. His death occurred in 1876, at the age of seventy-six. His wife died in the same year at the age of seventy-four. The husband and father was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and the mother was associated with the Amish church. To William Irwin and his wife were born: James, William and John, all of whom are dead; Martha, the widow of Louis Emory, living in Coatesville, Pa.; Plank.

The parents of William Irwin were Mr. and Mrs. James Irwin. This family came from Scotland, and James Irwin was a farmer. The parents of Mrs. Christina Irwin were John Plank and his wife, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

Plank Irwin was married Dec. 5, 1866, to Lydia A. Kurtz, who was born in Salisbury, and died May 19, 1889, at the age of sixty years. She was a daughter of Isaac and Julia (Rhodes) Kurtz, of Salisbury township, Lancaster county, where the father was engaged in farming and held a very conspicuous station in the esteem of the people of his community.

Plank Irwin remained at home with his parents until his marriage, when he engaged in the milling business, in which he worked for twenty-three years. In 1884 he retired from active labors, and made his home on a two-acre tract in New Holland. Mr. Irwin belongs to the Lutheran Church. In his politics he is a Republican. Notwithstanding his advanced age, he is still hale and vigorous, and in the fall of 1901, cut and shocked his own corn. His industry and integrity have won him a fair share of this world's goods, and he is very comfortably situated.

JOHN HERTZLER, president of The Lancaster Trust Company, bears a name that has been honored in this State for generations. His grandfather, John Hertzler, a prominent farmer, lived and died in Rapho township, Lancaster county, leaving both his estate and his name to his son, who also lived a useful and quiet life there, dying at the age of fifty-seven.

The Hertzler family originated in Holland, and the several generations residing in America have been principally engaged in agriculture, its members becoming extensive land owners, excellent farmers, and most worthy and reputable citizens.

John Hertzler, father of the gentleman whose name opens this sketch, married Miss Fanny Eshleman, who was a daughter of John Eshleman, a retired farmer of Elizabethtown, and a descendant of one of the leading families of the State. They had three children: John, the third of his name, president of The Lancaster Trust Company; Mary A., widow of Jacob Hertzler, a banker of Elizabethtown; and Elizabeth, wife of A. F. Murray.

John Hertzler was born in the old homestead in Rapho township, Dec. 16, 1856, and was educated in the public schools of his district. At the age of sixteen years he entered into the banking business in Elizabethtown, remaining there until 1880, and in the next year, at the organization of the Fulton National Bank, he became paying teller. From this position he was promoted to that of cashier, remaining with the institution until 1887, when he resigned and went to Minneapolis, Minn., there becoming treasurer of the Northwestern Milling Company. At the end of two years he closed his business interests in the West, and returned to Lancaster to accept the position of treasurer of The Lancaster Trust Company, which position he filled with great acceptability to both the officers and patrons of the institution. Mr. Hertzler continued in that office from 1889, the date of the company's organization, until the death of John I. Hartman, on Dec. 26, 1899, at which time he was promoted to the presidency of this stable and popular financial concern.

It is generally conceded that no two men have contributed in a more marked degree to the success of The Lancaster Trust Company than John Hertzler and his predecessor. The careful, conservative course adopted by Mr. Hertzler is supported by the other officers of the institution, and his field of usefulness in this connection seems to extend far into the future. Although so much of his time and energy is necessarily given to the affairs of this company, he is interested in numerous other enterprises, and serves as president of the Hubley Manufacturing Company, treasurer of the Star Ball Retainer Company, secretary of the American Guard Rail Fastener Company of Philadelphia, and a director of the Lancaster County Railway & Light Company (which controls all the lighting and trolley systems of Lancaster county), as well as a director in a number of the railway lines controlled by the Conestoga Traction Company. Mr. Hertzler has developed an ability to meet important business problems that has made his influence felt in all these various undertakings. He is also a trustee of the Reformed Theological Seminary, and the Lancaster Cemetery Company, and treasurer of the board of education of the Reformed Church of the Eastern Synod of the United States. In addition to the above he is an active member of the first Reformed Church, and one of its most liberal supporters. In politics Mr. Hertzler has always been a staunch Republican, but he has never taken an active part in political affairs.

Through his marriage with Miss Emma Groff, Mr. Hertzler became connected with one of the oldest and most substantial families of the county. He was married in October, 1880, his wife being a daughter of the late Samuel Groff, who died in November, 1895. Mr. and Mrs. Hertzler's three children are John Walter, a student of the Lehigh University; Arthur Groff, also a student at Lehigh; and Emma A.

BENJAMIN F. HOOKEY, of Conestoga Center, Lancaster county, descends from Benedict Hucky, as the name was then spelled, who came to the United States from Berne, Switzerland.

Benedict Hucky was a farmer by occupation. He first settled in Berks county, Pa., but in time migrated to Springfield, Ill., where he died at the age of eighty. He was a man of powerful physique, six feet in height and of massive frame, a fine specimen of manhood. His family consisted of five children. Samuel, deceased, who was a foreman on railroad construction; Christian, father of Benjamin F.; Rudolph, a retired merchant of Springfield, Ill., now (1902) eighty-six years old; Mary, who became the wife of a Mr. Yelk, of Springfield, Ill., both deceased; and John, deceased, who was a carpenter at Paradise, this county, where he made his home and died.

Christian Hookey was born Nov. 7, 1812, and died in June, 1898. He was a carpenter and followed that trade throughout his life. He married Christianna Trissler, who was born March 7, 1818, and still survives; they had a family of ten children, as follows: John, who died when two years old; Mary, who died in 1899, the wife of George W. Nagle, of York, Pa., deceased in June, 1901; Benjamin F.; Elizabeth, who died when fourteen months old; Ellen, the wife of Frederick Wettig, a retired butcher of Lancaster; Harriet, the wife of Aaron Fulmer, of Lancaster; Emma, who died when nineteen years old; Anna, the wife of John Beyerly, of Lancaster; Margie, the widow of James P. Plucker, of Lancaster; Samuel, who died when thirty-five years of age. The children of John and Mary (Huber) Trissler, maternal grandparents of our subject, all except Mrs. Hookey now deceased, were: Mary, wife of Henry Steigerwalt, both now deceased; Michael, a butcher of Lancaster; John, a butcher of Lancaster; Sophia, wife of William Hubbard, of Lancaster, both deceased; Catherine, wife of William Hensel, both deceased; Christianna, mother of Mr. Hookey; David, a butcher of Conestoga Center; and Harriet, wife of Henry Stauffer, of Philadelphia, both deceased. The father of this family was a butcher by trade.

Benjamin F. Hookey was born at No. 231 East Chestnut street, Lancaster, April 29, 1841. He was reared and educated in that city up to the age of ten years and then removed to Conestoga Center, where his education was finished. At the age of ten he went to work for his uncle David and after eleven years in his employ bought out the business, butchering, which he has since conducted on his own account. He has a well-appointed establishment, and does a wholesale as well as retail trade, slaughtering all his own stock. Mr. Hookey is a leader in his line in the county. He stands for everything which is to the advantage of the community, and is ever ready to lend his support to this end.

On Dec. 6, 1863, Mr. Hookey married Barbara A. Groff, daughter of Mr. A. Groff, ex-coroner of the county, and they have had a family of eight children, as follows: Anna L., wife of Henry M. Heibeck, of Strasburg; B. Frank, Charles Edgar, Mamie, and Esther E., all deceased; John Arthur, resident of Mellenville, N. Y., a mixer in the chemical department in the Atlas Match Company; Wilber P., at home; and Emily, at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Hookey have been members of the M. E. Church of Conestoga Center since 1860. He has long been a member of the board of trustees and for thirty-two years its secretary, having always been a regular attendant. He is a member of Conestoga Lodge, No. 334 I. O. O. F., and represented the lodge to the grand lodge several times since 1862, the last time in 1902; a charter member of Kishacaquillas Tribe, No. 65, I. O. R. M., of which he has been chief of records for thirty years; a member of Mt. Nebo Castle, No. 158, K. of M. C.; of the Order of the Golden Eagle, A. Herr Smith Castle, No. 158; and White Cross Commandery, No. 159, K. of M. He also belongs to Capt. George H. Hess Post, No. 571, G. A. R., Safe Harbor, and is the present commander, having filled that office two different times, and been its delegate to the state encampment at a number of sessions of the body. Mr. Hookey served in Co. A, 18th Pa. militia, having been mustered into the service Sept. 10, 1862, as a musician; he was mustered out after a short term of service. He also has the proud record of settling up more estates as executor, administrator, assignee, trustee under wills, etc., than any other man in the community in which he resides, in all cases without any solicitation on his part; he is held in high esteem by his neighbors for honesty and uprightness and is a man whose services, advice and support in legal matters are sought after, and accepted. He has also been honored by the different orders of which he is a member, by his election for quite a number of years in succession as their representative to the grand bodies, which meet in annual session.

Mr. Hookey is a Republican in politics, has voted that ticket for forty years, and been an active worker in his district for more than thirty; he has represented his district many times in the county conventions as committeeman, and has been return judge of the election board. He has been a candidate several times for the office of county commissioner and expects to be again at the coming election in 1905, with the prospect of being elected.

JOHN H. PARTHEMER, an honored veteran of the Civil war and an old and respected resident of Elizabethtown, was born at Middletown, Pa., Oct. 15, 1835, a son of John and Anna (Hotts) Parthemer, natives of Dauphin and Lancaster counties, respectively. The father, a farmer, was born in 1799, and died in 1864 at the "White House Hotel." His widow survived him many years, dying in Highspire, Pa., in February, 1882, at the age of eighty-two years; they were both members of the Church of God. They were parents of the following family: Jacob, who died at the age of nineteen; Mary, who married A. Petral, and died at the age of seventy-two years; Anna, who lived to be ten years old; Lizzie, who died in infancy; Henry, who lived to be seventy-one; Elizabeth, who died young; John H.; George W., who lives at Highspire.

The paternal grandparents of John H. Parthemer, Jacob and Elizabeth (Alleman) Parthemer, were residents of Middletown; his grandfather on the maternal side, John Hotts, lived in Lancaster county.

John H. Parthemer was married in Harrisburg, Pa., Nov. 23, 1865, to Miss Anna E. Parthemer, and the children of this union were: Grant A., a telegraph operator of Parkesburg, Pa.; Lillie F., who died at the age of thirteen months; William F., a telegraph operator in Lancaster; Frances M., who died at the age of twenty-two years; Clarence E., who died in infancy; Carrie E., at home; Wallace C., at home, who for the past year has been billing clerk in the freight depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Elizabethtown.

Mrs. Anna E. (Parthemer) Parthemer was born near Hummelstown, Pa., Nov. 5, 1842, a daughter of William and Catherine (Sener) Parthemer, of Dauphin county. Her father was a prominent and very successful business man and farmer in his community, holding the office of tax collector, and dealing extensively in real estate for many years. He died in 1885 at the age of seventy-six years, his wife having passed away thirteen years before at the age of fifty-seven. They were members of the United Brethren Church, and were much esteemed in their own community by those who were the best acquainted with them. Mr. and Mrs. Parthemer had the following family: Sarah, who is living unmarried at Annville, Pa.; Mary, who died in infancy; Anna E., who is married to John H. Parthemer; Samuel, a farmer in Kansas; Fanny, the wife of Samuel H. Gramm, of Grafton, W. Va., who has been State Senator, and is a lumber merchant, and the vice-president of the First National Bank of Grafton; Kate, the wife of George L. Hanschue, of Wrightsville.

Mr. Parthemer began working on the farm at the very early age of seven years, and continued there until he was twenty-four years old, when he removed to Highspire, where he was engaged in farming for fifteen years. For three years he was engaged in farming at Duffy's Island, and two years in tobacco farming at Falmouth, Lancaster county. For a year he was on a rented farm in Dauphin county, and then came back to Falmouth, where he continued tobacco farming until 1876. For four years he was engaged in the same business in Elizabethtown, and then in 1880 retired from active business.

The military experiences of Mr. Parthemer were creditable both to his manhood and patriotic devotion. Oct. 9, 1861, he enlisted as a member of Co. I, 93d P. V. I. When his term of three years had expired he re-enlisted in January, 1864, and served throughout the war. He was seriously wounded three times. In the battle of Winchester he received his first wound while engaged in that conflict under command of Gen. Sheridan, but he remained with his company. His second wound was received in the battle of Cedar Creek, and though severely wounded in the foot, he remained on the line of battle and did his full duty as a soldier. His third and most serious injury was received in the trenches in front of Petersburg, March 25, 1865, when the bone of his right leg was splintered by a bullet, and three pieces of the bone were removed at City Point Hospital. When he was able to travel he went home and was treated by his family physician. Mr. Parthemer entered the service as a private and was mustered out as a lieutenant, June 27, 1865.

Mr. Parthemer at once applied himself to the arts of peaceful life on his return from the army. For a year or more he ran individual cars between Harrisburg and Elizabethport, N. J., and was employed in a stone quarry two years, and then began farming on Duffy's Island, as noted above. Mr. Parthemer has been school director three years, and was president of the board one year. In 1895 he was elected to the town council, and has been re-elected to that position. In the spring of 1901 he was chosen a member of the United States jury, and sat in that body at Philadelphia for three weeks. He is a member of the Church of God, and is a Republican in his politics. An honorable and straightforward man, he has achieved a fair measure of success in life, and richly deserves whatever good fortune has come to him.

SAMUEL ELLIOTT, wholesale and retail ice dealer in Lancaster, is one of the city's prominent and prosperous business men. He was born in Lancaster, Dec. 23, 1847, son of James and Elizabeth (Ewing) Elliott.

James Elliott, the father, born Oct. 16, 1808, was a successful agriculturist and operated a number of excellent farms in Lancaster county, one of these being that belonging to President James Buchanan, in Lancaster township. He died in 1854, at the age of forty-seven years, his widow surviving until 1893, when she had reached the age of eighty-two years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Elliott were members of the Presbyterian Church. They were buried among the beautiful surroundings of Woodward Hill cemetery. Their children were: Jane, died unmarried; Margaret, who married Sheaffer Metzgar, of Lancaster; Rebecca, who is the widow of Henry Shultz; Findly, who was married to Elizabeth Hildebrand, of Strasburg, who later died, and he then married Catherine Mathiot, of Strasburg, Lancaster county; Maria, deceased, wife of Thomas Scott; and Samuel.

Mr. Elliott spent his boyhood in his native city and was instructed in her excellent schools. He was engaged in teaming from the age of twenty-three years until 1872, when he embarked in the ice business which he has conducted with excellent judgment and good success ever since, carrying on both wholesale and retail lines. He is progressive in his methods and has fine accommodations to meet the demands of the public.

On Sept. 16, 1878, Mr. Elliott was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Myers, born in New York City, Sept. 9, 1847, daughter of John and Catherine (Bream) Myers, of Germany. Mr. Myers made a trip to America alone, soon after his marriage, to benefit his health, and finding the climate agreeable, he returned to Germany and came back with his wife, locating in New York City where he carried on the business of a shoe merchant. In 1851 he removed to Lancaster and after the death of his wife Jan. 21, 1878, at the age of sixty-four years. he took a trip to the West, remaining for a period of three years. His death took place in 1890, at the age of seventy-nine years, and both he and his wife were buried in the Lancaster cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Myers had three children, namely: George G., who is a justice of the peace, in Coatesville, Pa.; Gustavius, who conducts a barber business in Lancaster; and Josephine, who became Mrs. Elliott.

Mr. and Mrs. Elliott have had a family of three children, namely: John F., born Oct. 28, 1879, who died in 1895, at the age of fifteen years, eleven months and twelve days; Samuel G., born Nov. 12, 1881, who married Miss Hazel Rote and is engaged in the ice business in Lancaster; and Florence E., born Nov. 20, 1883, at home. The religious connection of the family is with the Trinity Lutheran Church, to which Mrs. Elliott is a liberal contributor. In politics Mr. Elliott is a staunch Democrat, but no office seeker, attending to the demands of his increasing business with such close attention that he finds little time for the political field. However, Mr. Elliott takes a great interest in the progress and development of his city and her resources, and favors those enterprises which prove to be worthy.

WILLIAM C. ARMSTRONG, the popular and successful proprietor of the "Quarryville Hotel," at Quarryville, Lancaster county, was born in West Ontario, Canada, May 26, 1843, and is a son of John and Jane Armstrong, natives of the North of Ireland and of Scotland, respectively. They were married in Ireland, and came to Canada in 1836, and began their career in the New World on a farm where their industry, thrift and integrity soon brought them to the front, bringing them into wide recognition as prosperous and successful. The father died in 1884, and his widow two years later. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, and his wife of the Methodist.

To Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong were born the following children: Robert, now of California; John J., of Canada; David, a lumberman in Canada; George, deceased; William C.; Johnston, deceased; Margaret J., the wife of Mr. Pierce, of Canada; Irwin, of Canada; two who died in infancy.

William C. Armstrong received a somewhat limited education when a boy, and began life as a blacksmith in London, Canada. After working a while there and in other Canadian cities, in 1861 he sought work in Rochester, N. Y.; for some time he worked in that city and in New York, and then went to Nashville, Tenn., where he followed his trade. In 1864 he came to York county, Pa., where he worked at his trade until 1868. There he married Sallie E., the estimable daughter of Squire James Johnston, of York. Mrs. Armstrong was born in 1843, in York county, and was educated in the home schools.

She was one of eight children born to her parents: Nancy Johnston, the widow of Thomas McMasters; York county; Mary, the wife of James Maxton, of York county; James, a veteran of the Civil war, and now a resident of Lebanon, Pa.; Sallie E.; Samuel, a farmer on the old homestead; John, a farmer in York county; William, deceased; Hugh, a farmer of York county.

William C. Armstrong settled at Oxford, Chester county, where he engaged in work as a blacksmith some eight years, and in addition took charge of a livery stable there which he purchased, for some eight years, doing a profitable business in horses also. In 1886 he purchased the large hotel in Oxford, where he engaged as a hotel man until 1897. Then he spent about a year on his farm in Russellville. In 1898 he became the proprietor of the "Quarryville Hotel," where he is still carrying on what has proved a very profitable hotel venture. To him and his good wife have come five children, two of whom died young. Those living are: William, who is married and has one daughter, Violet, born in Chester county in 1896; Ross is unmarried and at home; Florence, the only daughter, is a young woman of much culture and refinement, and is greatly loved and admired for her many good qualities, her generous disposition and kindly nature having made her many friends among the guests of the hotel as well as among the people of the town. Mrs. Armstrong and her daughter Florence, belong to the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Armstrong and both his sons are Republicans and take an active interest in party politics. Aside from his very successful career as a hotel man, Mr. Armstrong has given much thought and care to fine horses, and he has handled some of the finest track horses in the State. "Gordon H.," the noted stallion, with a national reputation, is owned by him, as well as several other noted flyers on the speedway.

BENJAMIN K. LONG. Connected with the agricultural life of Lancaster county, Pa., since 1729, the Long family have the right to be termed one of the oldest and best known in this part of the State of Pennsylvania.

The great-grandfather of Benjamin K. Long was Herman Long, the founder of the family in America, who came to this country from Switzerland, and located in Lancaster county, where he purchased a large tract of land, in East Hempfield township, a part of this now being contained in the town of Landisville. Just east of this property lay the old Long homestead, which was purchased in 1737, consisting of 350 acres, and the greater portion of this valuable land is still in the possession of the Long family, Benjamin K. being the fortunate owner of ninety-four acres, and Herman H. Long, son of John K. Long, deceased, the owner of seventy-one acres.

John Long, grandfather of Benjamin K., succeeded to this large estate, and left part of it to his son Abraham, who was born April 20, 1778, and here he conducted a distillery in connection with his farming operations. He married Anna Kauffman, a daughter of Christian Kauffman, Feb. 14, 1811, who was born Dec. 4, 1792, and who died Dec. 18, 1870. The father died Dec. 28, 1846. Abraham Long and wife reared the following children: (1) Abraham K. married, Jan. 20, 1838, Susan Huber, and died Jan. 14, 1843, leaving no children. (2) Christian K. married, Nov. 25, 1847, Anna Hiestand, and died Aug. 30, 1896, the father of six children, as follows: Mary, deceased; Matilda, who married Christian Nissley, and lives in Rapho township; Abraham H., who married Emma Meyers, and lives in East Hempfield township; Lizzie, who married Elias Herr, of Manor township; Christian H., of Landisville, Pa.; and Hiram, deceased. (3) John K. married, Jan. 9, 1849, Elizabeth Miller, and died May 11, 1897, the father of two children: Herman H., who married Lillie Hoarr, and lives in East Hempfield township; and Fannie P., of Landisville. (4) Benjamin K. is the subject proper of this sketch. (5) Susan married, Nov. 11, 1841, Jacob H. Hershey, and died Oct. 18, 1898, the mother of six children: Emillia, deceased wife of Levi H. Shenk, of Rapho township; Washington, who married Sarah Detweiler at Marietta, Lancaster county; Abraham, who married Fannie Mellinger, and resides at Silver Spring, West Hempfield township; Webster, who married Catharine Zoog, and lives in East Hempfield township; Benjamin, who married Lizzie Gamber, and resides at Silver Spring; and Horace, deceased. (6) Anna was married Nov. 11, 1841, to Samuel Nissley, and she died Nov. 15, 1863. Ten children were born of this union: Harriet, wife of Jacob Hostetter, of Penn township; Jonas, who married Anna Charles, and makes his home in Manor township; Abraham, who wedded a Miss Smith, and now lives in East Hempfield township; Samuel, of Drumore township, who married Ellen Hershey; Herman, of Harrisburg, who wedded a lady from Mechanicsburg, Pa.; Benjamin, who married Anna Hostetter, and now lives in East Hempfield township; Frank, who married Lillie Hoffman, and also lives in East Hempfield township; Henry Lincoln, a resident of Illinois, who married a Miss Johnson, a French Canadian from Montreal, Canada; and Ellen and John, both deceased. (7) Fannie was married Dec. 20, 1849, to Jacob B. Landis (a business man of Mt. Joy, who died in July, 1863), and became the mother of seven children, as follows: Benjamin, residing at Erie, Pa., who married Emma Busser; Ellen; Aaron, Abraham, Wesley and Jacob, all four deceased; and Lemuel, a resident of Lancaster city, who married Susan Swartly. (8) Maria married Abraham Perry, of Lancaster, and has one daughter, Anna.

Benjamin K. Long has always followed farming, continuing to be actively engaged until 1880 when he retired, and since then has lived in the quiet enjoyment of a sufficient competency. Benjamin Long has never married, but his sister, Mrs. Landis, makes her home with him, as her surviving children have homes of their own.

Before taking up religion Benjamin Long was an active Republican, and the principles of that party he has always considered the best. The religious connection of himself and sister is with the Reformed Mennonite Church, where both are highly esteemed.

LEVI ELLMAKER, Esq., one of the best known members of the Lancaster Bar, belongs to one of Lancaster's oldest and most prominent families, and their history is given in the sketches of Mr. Ellmaker's father and his brothers, the late Nathaniel Ellmaker, Esq., and Dr. Thomas Ellmaker, elsewhere in these annals.

Levi Ellmaker was born in the old Ellmaker home on North Duke street (where John D. Skiles' tobacco warehouse now stands) Feb. 22, 1836. After attending private and public schools in Lancaster, in his boyhood, he was sent to the West Chester Academy, spending three years there, and three years at the College of St. James, in Maryland. He then went for a time to Yale. After leaving college Mr. Ellmaker went to Colebrook Furnace, Lebanon county, with the Colemans, remaining there three years, then spent two years in Kansas, and returned to Lancaster, arriving here in December, 1858. In February, 1859, he engaged in the coal business at Prince and Lemon streets, continuing there until April, 1866. His next business enterprise was the purchase of an interest in the Susquehanna Rolling Mill, at Columbia, and after that he read law with his brother, the late Nathaniel Ellmaker, and was admitted to practice in April, 1876. After being engaged in active practice with his brother for some years, failing eyesight compelled him to abandon general practice, and to confine himself to Orphans' Court practice, in which he is engaged at present.

Although an ardent Republican since 1856, Mr. Ellmaker has never accepted—and certainly never sought—public office, although political preferment has been within easy reach of himself and his brother, Nathaniel. Neither would accept political office because, at the death of their father, a paper was left by him in which he admonished his sons never to seek nor accept political office, and they respected the admonition. In his earlier manhood Mr. Ellmaker was active in Masonry, having belonged to Lodge No. 43, and Commandery No. 13. Religiously he affiliates with the First Presbyterian Church, having been a pew holder there for an ordinary life time.

Mr. Ellmaker was married, Jan. 13, 1859, to Miss Elizabeth, third daughter of the late Robert D. Carson, who was cashier of the Lancaster County Bank. Four children were born of this union, Mary, Elizabeth Elder, Susan Carson, and Amos,

L. Ellmaker

Mary and Amos entering into rest in early childhood.

Possessed of fine conversational powers, fond of reminiscence, and withal of a most genial, kindly nature, Mr. Ellmaker naturally has hosts of friends, and is as popular professionally as he is socially.

JOSIAH HERSHEY, a well-known retired farmer of Salisbury township, is a worthy representative of a highly esteemed family that has been known to Pennsylvania since 1719, when three brothers came to America from their home in Switzerland, and located in Lancaster county.

Joseph Hershey, the grandfather of Josiah Hershey, was for many years a prominent bishop in the Mennonite Church, and in his life faithfully endeavored to follow the rules of the faith he professed. He made his home in Salisbury township, and when he died in 1855, at the age of sixty-four, his remains were laid to rest on a part of his farm, set aside as the Hershey burying ground. His wife, who in her maidenhood was Magdalena Roop, lived to the advanced age of ninety years, and was laid to rest at her husband's side. Their children were as follows: Jacob R., mentioned below; Christian, who died at the age of eighteen years; John, who died young; Abraham; Barbara, who became the wife of David Hoover, and is now deceased, and Anna, who died young.

Jacob R. Hershey grew to manhood on his father's farm, and made farming his occupation through life. Brought up in a Christian home, he early professed his faith, and became a preacher in the Mennonite Church. For forty-two years he has been an expounder of the doctrines of that sect, and has lived so as to lead his flock by example as well as by precept. He is greatly beloved in the community where he is so well known, and his advice is ever followed with unfailing fidelity. He married Margaret Eby, daughter of Peter Eby, whose wife was a member of the Weaver family. (For sketch of Eby family, see sketch of Bishop Peter Eby elsewhere). To their union were born nine children, of whom we have the following record: Josiah, our subject; Magdalena, wife of John R. Buckwalder, of Kinzers, Pa.; Peter, who went West, and has not since been heard from; Ephraim, a farmer of Salisbury township; Mary, who married Christian Metzler, a farmer of Paradise township; Jacob, a farmer in Salisbury township; Susan, wife of John S. Rohrer, a farmer of Salisbury township; Lizzie, who died young; and Margaret, deceased.

Josiah Hershey was born Oct. 24, 1839, and he remained with his parents on the farm in Salisbury until his marriage, when he moved to a farm about one mile distant, and there resided about twenty-five years. He then removed to Chester county, Pa., and engaged in farming there for nine years, after which he passed three years at Gap, Lancaster county, and two years more in Chester county. The years passed in Lancaster county in his youth and early manhood had formed ties time could not break, and when he retired from active work in 1900, he returned to his native town and purchased forty-five acres of land, still, however, retaining his Chester county farm of 154 acres.

On Aug. 2, 1859, Mr. Hershey was married, at Reading, Pa., to Mary A. Hershey, and this union has been blessed with children, as follows: Abby, who married Francis Lennox, and died at the age of thirty-one, leaving seven children; Magdalena, who married Isaac S. Rohrer, of Kinzers, Pa., and has four children; Elizabeth, who married Addison M. Groff, of Lancaster, and has four children (he is engaged in the poultry business); Margaret, who fell into a tank of water and was drowned at the age of twenty months; Joseph I., at home; Maggie, who died at the age of eighteen months; Peter E., a farmer of Chester county, who married Theresa Derringer, and has three children; Josiah W., who is engaged in the hardware business at Gap, and who married Gertrude Townsend, by whom he has two children; Dr. George B., of Salisbury, mentioned elsewhere in this volume; and Naomi, Ruth and Samuel, who all three died in infancy. Mrs. Mary A. (Hershey) Hershey was born in Upper Leacock township, Nov. 14, 1840, a daughter of Jacob F. and Christina (Bair) Hershey, the former a farmer and miller, who entered into rest Oct. 1, 1896, aged seventy-nine years, and the latter of whom died in April, 1896, at the same age. They were both buried in Hershey's cemetery in Salisbury township. Their children were: John B., a farmer of Salisbury township; Mary A., Mrs. Hershey; Emanuel, a farmer and miller of Chester county, Pa.; Amanda, wife of J. B. Cadwell, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Jacob H., of Philadelphia; and Ada E., wife of Taylor Worst, of Philadelphia. The family were brought up in the Mennonite faith.

Jacob F. Hershey, father of Mrs. Mary A. (Hershey) Hershey was a son of John and Elizabeth (Frantz) Hershey, farming people of Lancaster county. Mrs. Christina (Bair) Hershey was a daughter of Joel and Mary (Wolf) Bair, farmers and slave owners of considerable prominence.

Josiah Hershey, our subject, has been a man active in public affairs wherever he lived. During his residence in Chester county, he efficiently served as supervisor, and for three years was a school director. In politics he is a staunch Republican. Like his father and grandfather before him, he is a Mennonite in religious faith. Upright and honorable in all his dealings, charitable in his judgments, he is highly esteemed by all who know him.

ANDREW HERR. Among the prominent and substantial farmer citizens of Strasburg township, who for many years has been one of the progressive and successful men of this locality, is Andrew Herr, who resides upon a fine estate one mile north of Refton, Pennsylvania.

Andrew Herr was born in West Lampeter township, on a farm which adjoins the one he now occupies, March 10, 1841, a son of Elias and Elizabeth (Hershey) Herr, the former of whom was a son of Rev. Christian Herr, who, in turn, was a son of Rev. Christian Herr, the family being an old one in this county. Elias Herr was born in May, 1804, and died Oct. 11, 1881. He started on his business career on the farm in West Lampeter township where our present subject was born, where he became the owner of a farm of 100 acres, upon which he erected a distillery, which he conducted for many years, later opening up and operating two other distilleries in Strasburg township. This business proved very remunerative and as time went on he increased his landed possessions until he had four fine farms in West Lampeter and in Strasburg townships, and wood lands in Martic township, aggregating many hundreds of acres. In addition to this property he bought land both in the South and West. Elias Herr was a man of more than ordinary business ability, and while others were willing to quietly cultivate the soil and enjoy its yield, he was ever on the alert to develop every part of his land, and to make it just as productive as the farming portion. Hence, when he found a deposit of lime on his property he engaged in lime burning, which business grew to large dimensions, and for many years yielded considerable income. The lime proved to be of a fine white quality, and readily sold over a great extent of territory. This business is still carried on by his sons, and is handled by the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad. As a man of known probity he was called upon to administer many estates, and was known far beyond his own county. His connection with the Mennonite Church had been of many years standing.

The first marriage of Elias Herr was to Elizabeth Hershey, who died in 1848, leaving five children: Jeremiah, who resides in West Lampeter township; Mary Ann, who married Rev. Elias Groff, of Strasburg township; Andrew, of this biography; Elias, who resides in Limeton, Warren Co., Va., engaged in the lime business; and Benjamin F., of Lancaster, who is the agent for the Ephrata Mineral Springs water. The second marriage of Elias Herr was to Catherine Hershey, a sister of his former wife, but she, too, passed away, her death occurring in 1862. His third union was with Margaret Weaver, who died in 1893.

Andrew Herr was reared on the farm and attended the district schools of West Lampeter, and remained at home, assisting his father, until his marriage, in 1863, when he located upon the farm which he still occupies. This land required much improvement and ever since locating upon Mr. Herr has been adding to its value. In 1864 he erected the residence which at that time was considered to be both commodious and convenient, but times have changed, and now Mr. Herr has one of the most comfortable and attractive residences in the county, the remodeling having been done in 1900. Modern improvements have been introduced and now there is no more agreeable country home in the county. After Mr. Herr located on this place he turned his attention entirely to farming, and until 1889 engaged in no other business, but at that time took charge of the lime kilns which had been operated by his brother, Benjamin F. Herr, and since that time has carried on both lines of business. The lime kilns are valuable property, the output since 1867 having been about 50,000 bushels, and all of it is of the highest quality, being burned exclusively with wood. The home farm of Mr. Herr contains 140 acres and he also owns the one adjoining on the west, of 152 acres, and recently purchasing twenty more acres, he has divided his whole property into three farms. He has erected new buildings on the third farm, and has builded the house of brick, as are the houses on the other two farms. Andrew Herr is also the owner of a tract of seventy acres of wood land in Martic township, and thirty-eight acres in Providence township and also two small tenant properties, all of these combined, with his other interests, making him one of the most substantial men in the township. Although a man of wealth and prominence, he is of quiet and unassuming manner, and is valued as a good neighbor and kind friend.

On Oct. 27, 1863, Andrew Herr was united in marriage with Susan Hess, who was born near Lampeter, in West Lampeter township, Feb. 28, 1842, a daughter of Harry and Elizabeth (Herr) Hess. They have had a family of eight children: Elizabeth F., born Dec. 30, 1864, married Jacob E. Witmer, a farmer of Strasburg township; Milton, born in 1866, died in infancy; Lucina V., born Dec. 22, 1867, died Sept. 28, 1870; Annie W., born April 10, 1870, died March 19, 1871; Susan E., born Jan. 2, 1872, married Benjamin Shaub, of Strasburg township; Harry H., born July 22, 1874, died Sept. 26, 1882; Mary E., born Sept. 2, 1876, married Jacob W. Brenneman, of Strasburg township; and Amos A., born Nov. 28, 1880, died Dec. 4, 1880. Mr. and Mrs. Herr are happy in their children and rejoice in their five grandchildren, Claire, Susan, Arthur and Anna Witmer and Myrtle Shaub. Their religious connection is with the Old Mennonite Church, with which the family name is associated through the State.

JACOB B. MECKLEY, a retired farmer and carpenter of Elizabethtown, Pa., was born in Mt. Joy township, Sept. 25, 1822, a son of Jacob and Mary (Brandt) Meckley, of Dauphin, and Lancaster counties, respectively. The father was a farmer, and was killed by a tree falling on him before his son Jacob B., was born. He was the father of two children: Anna, who married Henry Sharrer, and is now deceased; and Jacob B. The widowed mother married for her second husband, Leonard Bender, by whom she had the following children: Leonard, deceased; Christian, who is in the West; John, also in the West; Mary is married and lives at Marysville, Pa.; Fanny, who died unmarried in 1880; and William, in the West. Mrs. Bender died in Cumberland county, Pa., in 1880.

The paternal grandfather of Jacob B. Meckley, Melchior Meckley, came from Germany with his wife. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Meckley was Christian Brandt, a native of Lancaster county, where he lived and died.

Jacob B. Meckley was married in 1847 in Harrisburg, to Elizabeth Sherer, and to this union were born the following children: Isaac, who married Mary Kob, is deceased; Simon, deceased; Fanny, who married Joshua Kaylor, a farmer of Conoy township; Mary A., deceased; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Miller Metzgar, of Dauphin county. Mrs. Elizabeth (Sherer) Meckley was born in Dauphin county, Aug. 15, 1828, a daughter of John B. and Christiana (Brill) Sherer, farmer people of Dauphin county, where their entire lives were passed.

Jacob B. Meckley remained with his mother until he was four years of age, when he was put into the care of an uncle, Joshua Hoffer, who lived in Dauphin county, and the ensuing ten years of his life were spent with him. At fourteen he began working for himself among the neighboring farmers, and after ten years of farm work rented a place for himself, which he cultivated one year, and then went on a second farm, where he remained until he was thirty-five years old. It was near the river in Dauphin county, and when its owner died, the estate was sold. Mr. Meckley and his brother-in-law purchased the farm, which consisted of 187 acres. They cultivated this place until 1866, when Mr. Meckley sold out his interest, and bought a second farm, engaging in its cultivation until 1880. That year he removed to Elizabethtown, and gave up active farming operations.

Mr. Meckley is an enterprising and progressive citizen of the community, and has taken an active and intelligent interest in local affairs. For many years he was treasurer of the town council, and served in that capacity until 1898. Both he and his wife are members of the Brinzerites Church, and in political affairs he is a Republican. Mr. Meckley is a stockholder in the Axle Works, and was instrumental in securing their location. He is a prosperous and much respected citizen of the community, and richly deserves whatever respect and good fortune have come to him in his latter days.

CHRISTIAN HUBER, one of the prominent and well-known farmers of West Lampeter township, belongs to an old and respected family of Lancaster county. The farm occupied by Christian Huber is one of the model ones of the township, located one mile southeast of Lampeter, and contains ninety-one acres of some of the best land in this section.

Christian Huber is a son of Christian and Annie (Hornish) Huber, both of these names being well and favorably known throughout this part of the State, and was born Feb. 27, 1858. His education was received in the excellent public schools, after which he remained on the home farm until his marriage, in 1884, at which time he removed to his present place. At that time it consisted of eighty-eight acres, and was in need of many improvements, all of which our subject has taken no little pains and expense to remedy, and now, with an additional three acres and the erection of good buildings and capacious tobacco warehouses, he has one of the finest farms to be found in this locality. A general line of farming is carried on, and modern methods have been introduced to a larger degree than by any other farmer of this neighborhood. In 1900 he had a complete system of electric lighting introduced into all the buildings connected with his place, this being an innovation that certainly will result in advantage to its progressive owner.

Christian Huber was married Jan. 20, 1884, to Elizabeth Lefever, a daughter of Adam and Catherine (Kendig) Lefever, who was born in Lampeter, May 24, 1860, and to this union four children have been born: Katie, Annie, Daisy and Henry. In his political connection Christian Huber has been a staunch Republican, but has never sought or consented to hold office. In the Old Mennonite Church he has ever been a member of good standing, and has reared his family in the same pious way. The family is of the highest respectability and possesses the esteem of all.

HON. DAVID McMULLEN, ex-judge of the courts of Lancaster county, is one of the most popular counsellors in the county, where his distinguished legal abilities have long since commanded a wide and generous recognition.

William McMullen, the grandfather of David, came to America from Belfast, Ireland, and made his home in Earl township, Lancaster county. A weaver by occupation, he found his work popular, for the farmers were then great growers of flax. After a time he removed to Pennville, Elizabeth township, where he continued his weaving until his death.

James McMullen, the father of the Judge, was a contracting carpenter, and he married Elizabeth Sheetz, a daughter of Jacob Sheetz, then living at what is now known as Halfville, Elizabeth township, Lancaster county. Three of the four children born to this union are now living: Susan, wife of William Yeagley, a farmer of Cornwall township, Lebanon county; Hon. David, of Lancaster; and Edward, a farmer of Penn township. Catherine, the oldest child, married Abraham Kauffman, of Penn township, and is deceased.

Hon. David McMullen was born near Mt. Hope, Lancaster county, Oct. 20, 1844, and had his education in the public schools of the county, in Yeates Institute, in the Vermont Episcopal School at Burlington, Vt., and at the State Normal School at Millersville, from which he was graduated in 1868. For two years, after his graduation he taught school, and then began the study of law, reading under the supervision of Hugh C. Graham, of Oil City, where he was engaged as a teacher until the fall of 1869. The following spring he entered the office of the late S. H. Reynolds, of Lancaster, and there continued his studies until he was admitted to the Bar in December, 1871, being admitted to the supreme court in due time, and he at once entered upon a lucrative and growing business.

A Democrat in political faith, Judge McMullen was elected to the common branch of the city councils, from the second ward, and has been a member of the school board since 1889. In 1890 he was elected its president, and has since been re-elected to the chair. Mr. McMullen was appointed by Gov. Pattison in March, 1892, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Patterson, the term expiring the following year. Judge McMullen was nominated by the Democrats, and supported by a leading Republican paper of Lancaster, made a magnificent run in this the "banner Republican county" of the State. It was the most remarkable vote ever polled by a Democrat in Lancaster county.

Judge McMullen is a member of St. James Episcopal Church, where he has been a vestryman for a number of years, and he has acted as treasurer of the parish since 1877. He is a trustee of Yeates Institute, and a member of the board of trustees of the State Normal School at Millersville. Since the inception of the General Hospital of Lancaster, he has been president of its board of trustees. Mr. McMullen belongs to the Royal Arcanum, and the A. O. U. W. He was favorite counsel to the late Miss Catherine Long, who gave $300,000 for a home for indigent unmarried women and the establishment of a city park, and he is counsel for the executors of her will.

Judge McMullen was married to Miss Susan E., a daughter of the late Peter E. Lightner, a farmer, whose fine country home was just beyond the western limits of Lancaster. To this marriage were born two children: Mary R., wife of T. William Benner, of Lancaster; and Emily S., the wife of Dr. Samuel Heller, a practicing physician of this city. Judge McMullen occupies a prominent place in the legal profession, and his kindly nature and magnetic personality make him welcome in all circles, regardless of political bias.

RUDOLPH S. HERR. The Herr family is one of the old and most respected ones of Lancaster county, and members have been long prominent both in the religious as well as the agricultural affairs of this part of the Keystone State.

David Herr, the father of Rudolph S. Herr, was born in this county where he passed his whole life, quietly pursuing the avocations of a husbandman, and by precept and example demonstrating his fitness for the position of deacon in the Old Mennonite Church, which honorable office he held for a long period. David Herr married Miss Susan Schenk, and they became the parents of nine children, these being Rev. Christian, a good and holy man, now deceased, a faithful minister in the faith of the Old Mennonite Church; Susan, deceased, who was the wife of John Charles; David, who is a retired farmer of Manor township; Henry, deceased, who was a farmer of Lancaster township; Annie, deceased, who was the wife of Jacob Landis, a miller of Manor township; Rudolph S., the subject of this biography; Daniel, who is a retired farmer of Penn township; Abram, who is a farmer on the old homestead, in Lancaster township; and Mary, who is the widow of Philip Bausman.

Rudolph S. Herr was born in Lancaster township Feb. 17, 1827, and he was reared a farmer boy. His education was acquired in the common schools of his locality, and later, with his manly strength and energy, he began his farming operations, his field of work being the estate upon which he has ever since resided. In 1899 he permitted the management to fall upon younger shoulders, living somewhat retired since that date. Although a very thorough agriculturist, Mr. Herr had time and ability to enter into other enterprises, also. In 1890 Mr. Herr established a large ice plant on his farm, and very soon, with the assistance of his sons, a large business was built up in this desirable commodity, but in 1900 it was bought by the ice trust. Mr. Herr has also engaged considerably in the handling of real estate, and is probably better posted on the values of country property through this State than any other citizen. In politics he has always been a member of the Republican party, and has served for an extended period as school director.

The marriage of Mr. Herr was to Miss Magdelaine Landis, who was a daughter of John and Annie Landis, and to this union were born twelve children, six of whom died in childhood, the survivors being: Lizzie L., at home; John, a farmer; Rudolph L., a farmer in Manor township; Christian, a farmer of Lancaster township; Jacob, one of the partners in the ice business; and Magdelaine, the wife of Henry Harnish, of Pequea township. The farm at the old homestead is managed by Mr. Herr's son, John, a very capable and reliable young man.

Mr. Herr is widely known and universally respected. Few men in this locality have been more prominently identified with progressive enterprises beneficial to the community. His membership in the Old Mennonite Church has existed since his early days. As citizen, friend and neighbor Mr. Herr enjoys the respect of every one.

THOMAS BENTON HAMBLETON. Prominent among the honorable and thrifty citizens of Drumore township, few are more highly esteemed than Thomas Benton Hambleton, who is a merchant and the popular postmaster at Fernglan. He was born Jan. 4, 1836, in Fulton township, a son of Elias and Martha (Kinsey) Hambleton, the latter being a native of Drumore township.

James Hambleton, the great-grandfather of Thomas B. Hambleton, came to America from England and settled in early days in Bucks county, Pa., and his son, James, became the progenitor of a numerous family which has settled in many States.

Elias Hambleton, the father of Thomas B., was a son of James and Hannah Hambleton, of Drumore township, born in 1801. He died in Drumore township, in 1872. On Oct. 29, 1829, he was married to Miss Martha Kinsey, of McConnellsville, Morgan Co., Ohio, who was born May 12, 1805, a daughter of Benjamin and Margaret Kinsey; she died Sept. 5, 1880. The children born to this marriage numbered eleven, as follows: Joseph P., who was a farmer of Drumore township; Margaret Ann, widow of William McLaughlin, of Martic township, now of Drumore township; Benjamin K., a carpenter in Martic township; Thomas Benton, subject of this sketch; Walter F., deceased; Miss Mary E., who resided at Fairfield, Pa., until her death, Oct. 20, 1901; James, who died young; Hannah, who is also deceased; Elias H., of Drumore township; Rankin G., of Fulton township; and Albert, of Kansas.

Thomas Benton Hambleton was reared on his father's farm and received exceptional educational advantages, beginning in the common schools of his district, then entered the Chestnut Level Academy and later the Millersville Normal School, after which he entered upon the profession of teaching, and very successfully followed it for a period covering several years.

Among the earliest of the enthusiastic and loyal citizens who responded in 1861 to the call for defenders of the country was Thomas B. Hambleton, who volunteered on Sept. 30th of that year, becoming a member of Co. E, 79th P. V. I., under Capt. M. D. Wickersham and Col. H. A. Hambricht. They were assigned to the 14th Army Corps, which was under the command of the venerated Gen. George H. Thomas. Mr. Hambleton saw much hard service, taking part in many engagements. On May 29, 1862, Gen. James S. Negley commanded an expedition in front of Chattanooga, Tenn., of which Col. H. A. Hambricht, of the 79th P. V. I., had command of the troops immediately in front of the city on June 7 and 8. The expedition started from Columbia, Tenn., May 29th, and after a march of over 192 miles reached the heights opposite Chattanooga—the first Union troops ever in front of the city—in the afternoon of June 7, 1862. This feat preceded the battle of Perryville, Ky., Oct. 8, 1862, in which the 79th Pennsylvania lost thirty-seven per cent. of those engaged. Other engagements in which Mr. Hambleton participated with his regiment were: the battle of Stone River; Hoover's Gap, Tenn.; Tallahoma; Chickamauga; in the skirmishes around Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge; then on toward Atlanta, where the troops were continually exposed; with Gen. Sherman in his march to the sea. Later his regiment went up through the Carolinas, thence on to Richmond, and to Washington, where Mr. Hambleton took part in that memorable review, which still stirs the hearts of all who witnessed it and felt its significance. In that city our subject was honorably discharged July 12, 1865. Although not entirely disabled, Mr. Hambleton did not escape all injury, having been badly wounded at Hoover's Gap, Tenn., and was also slightly wounded in the knee at Chickamauga.

After the close of the war Mr. Hambleton returned home and as soon as he could rearrange his life to peaceful pursuits again he found his old patrons awaiting him, and he took up his old profession. In 1871 he came to Fernglen and opened up a mercantile business which has proved eminently successful, owing to his upright business methods and his willingness to cater to the reasonable wishes of his patrons. In 1891 he was appointed postmaster, and is the only one ever located in Fernglen, giving perfect satisfaction to all concerned.

On Oct. 19, 1871, Thomas B. Hambleton was married to Miss Mary E. Lamborn, of Martic township, who was born June 22, 1840, daughter of Smedley and Margaret (Bolton) Lamborn, the former of whom was a son of George Lamborn, who reared a large family in Chester county, and was a leading member of the Society of Friends. Mrs. Hambleton was one of a family of eleven children, namely: George S., who is a farmer of Martic township; Aquilla B., of Little Britain township; Emeline, who was the wife of Joseph Shoemaker, deceased; Elwood; William Lewis; Mary Elizabeth, wife of our subject; Sarah Ellen, wife of Jacob K. Brown, a farmer of Fulton township, of whom more extended mention can be found elsewhere; Alice A., wife of William L. Shoemaker, a thrifty farmer, of whom more extended notice is given elsewhere; Friscilla, who died young; Lucinda, wife of B. F. Tennis, of Drumore township; and Lydia, wife of Amos P. Smith, of whom extended mention is made in another place.

Mr. Hambleton is one of the leading citizens of this locality, and is especially noted for his uprightness of life and most estimable character. He has been a life-long Republican and carries out in his life the simplicity of the Quaker belief. In his business he is alert and energetic, but thoroughly honest and reliable. He owns a most comfortable dwelling, a fine stock of goods, with large warehouse, and considerable property, all of which has been acquired by legitimate methods. Mr. Hambleton is a member of Post No. 566, G. A. R., and is the secretary of Co. E, 79th P. V. I., which meets annually for a three-days encampment. He has in his possession a most interesting diary which he kept of his life during the Civil war, giving an account of each day's proceedings during his nearly four years of continuous service. He is also the possessor of a very large library; many books of very valuable research, among them being fifteen volumes of The Encyclopedia of Universal Knowledge. He has revisited many of the sanguinary battlefields in Tennessee and Georgia since the war, and has in his possession many relics of those hard-fought contests.

MICHAEL B. MUSSER, a retired farmer of the township of East Donegal, and a man whose character and standing are the very highest among those who know him best, was born in West Donegal township, Aug. 15, 1831, a son of Benjamin E. and Elizabeth (Brenner) Musser, born in East Donegal and Mt. Joy townships, respectively.

Benjamin E. Musser was born Aug. 14, 1810, and was accidentally killed in Herington, Kan., Sept. 23, 1884. He was in Kansas buying property, and was accompanied by his sons, Henry and Michael B. They had driven into the country to complete the purchase of a section of land, had accomplished their purpose, and were returning to town, when they drove through a ravine, and the occupants were thrown out of the wagon, Michael B., falling first but escaping serious injury. The father received such injuries that he died very shortly after being taken up. The body was brought back to Pennsylvania, and was buried in the Brethren in Christ Cemetery in East Donegal township. Mr. Musser belonged to the River Brethren Church, and possessed considerable property in his old age, being able to retire from active work in 1862. His wife, Elizabeth Brenner, died May 25, 1880, at the age of sixty-eight years. To Benjamin E. and Elizabeth (Brenner) Musser were born the following children: Mary, who married Jacob Flory, and lives in Ohio; Michael B.; John, who died in Kansas; Susie, who married Jacob Musser, now deceased; Benjamin, a minister in Franklin county, Pa.; Henry, of Florin; Martha, wife of Daniel Heisey; Annie, who married Rev. John Kuntz, of Union Deposit; and Amos, of Harrisburg, Pa., a deacon in the Messiah Home, which he helped to organize.

The paternal grandparents of Michael B. Musser were Henry and Mary (Engle) Musser, both natives of Donegal township, where they were honest farming people. Mr. Musser died a young man, and his widow married Jacob Hershey for her second husband, by whom she had no children. To her first husband she bore the following children: Benjamin; Susannah, who married John Gish, who was a Bishop of the River Brethren Church; Martha, wife of Michael Hoffman; and Anna M., the wife of Jacob Engle.

The maternal grandparents of Michael B. Musser were Philip and Anna M. (Singhaus) Brenner. Mr. Brenner was born Nov. 11, 1752, and died July 1, 1836. Both he and his wife were natives of Lancaster county, and were buried in the Cross Roads Cemetery, township of East Donegal. The maternal great-grandparents of Mr. Musser were Michael and Susannah (Hoffman) Brenner, who lived and died in Lancaster county, and were buried in the Kraybill Meeting House Cemetery, in East Donegal township.

Michael B. Musser was married in West Hempfield township, to Catharine Musser, and there were born to this union four children, Elizabeth M., wife of Rev. A. Z. Hess, of the township of East Donegal; Eli M.; Anna, wife of Benjamin Nissley; and Martha, wife of Hiram Wolgemuth, of East Donegal township.

Mrs. Catharine Musser was born in West Hempfield township, Nov. 13, 1832, a daughter of Christ and Catherine (Newcomer) Musser. Her father was a farmer of Lancaster county, and lived to be eighty-eight years old. Her mother reached the same age, and both were buried on the farm. They were members of the York Brethren Church. Their children were: Anna, widow of Christ Sheetz, of Rapho township; Miss Barbara, living on the old farm, as does also her sister, Miss Mary; Catharine; Christ, a farmer in West Hempfield township; John, also a West Hempfield farmer; Tobias, a farmer in Rapho township; Joseph, a farmer in the township of Rapho; and Martha, deceased.

Mr. Musser has been on the farm where he is now living since the age of eleven years, and is a man of most industrious and exemplary habits. As a member of the Cross Roads River Brethren Church, his life is squared by his faith to an uncommon extent, and the esteem in which his associates hold him is attested by the fact that he has been deacon of the church for twenty years. In local affairs he is a very prominent man, and may be fairly called one of the representative men of the township.

ELI M. MUSSER (deceased), only son of Michael B. Musser, was born July 29, 1859, on the farm where he died in December, 1896. His remains were buried in the Cross Roads River Brethren Church Cemetery. He was married in Nov., 1880, in Mt. Joy township, to Mary Wolgemuth, by whom he became the father of the following children: Irvin W., who remains at home and cultivates the family estate with a skilled and workmanlike manner, rarely found in so young a man; and Anna W., Katie W., Mary W., Barbara W., and Martha W., all at home. Mrs. Mary (Wolgemuth) Musser was born in Mt. Joy township, a daughter of Rev. Joseph and Barbara (Nissley) Wolgemuth, both of whom died in Mt. Joy township, the father in December, 1884, at the age of sixty-two years, and the mother in March, 1892, at the age of seventy-two years. Both were members of the River Brethren Church, of which he was a preacher fifteen years. Born to this union were: Daniel, a farmer in the township of Mt. Joy; Martin, a retired farmer of West Donegal township; Anna, wife of Levi Mumma, living on the old homestead; Aaron who died young; and Mary. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Eli Musser were Daniel and Barbara (Witmer) Wolgemuth, both natives of Lancaster county, who lived and died in the township of Mt. Joy. Her maternal grandparents were Martin and Lizzie (Hershey) Nissley, who spent their lives in Lancaster county.

Eli M. Musser was a member of the River Brethren Church, and had served as a deacon in that communion two years at the time of his death. Mr. Musser was one of the prominent people of the township, and displayed those manly qualities so well worthy of commemoration.

JOHN N. WOODS. The Woods and the McCausland families, from whom descended John N. Woods, of Salisbury township, were among the early settlers of Lancaster county. Two brothers, Thomas and Adam Woods, emigrated to America and located in Lancaster county, Pa., in Leacock township, near Intercourse, about 1743, the McCausland emigrants having come some time early in the eighteenth century. Thomas married Mary Scott, from near Conestoga Creek, and Adam married Margaret Montgomery. The latter had no children, but Thomas reared nine of the twelve born to him. All of his daughters married in other localities. One son, Adam, left home and located in Kentucky where he amassed a fortune, but never married. David, the eldest son of Thomas Woods, married Ann McCausland, and they became the grandparents of John N. Woods.

William McCausland, grandfather of the wife of David Woods, married Jane Burney, a native of Ireland who inherited land in the northern part of that country, and they emigrated to America on account of religious persecution. They brought with them six of their children, leaving the eldest son, John, to finish his apprenticeship to the wheelwright trade. The second son was Alexander, and soon after reaching this country, he was placed by his parents in the classical school kept by Dr. Allison, who was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, located on Washington Square. Later Alexander McCausland became a well-known physician, and married Dr. Allison's daughter.

John N. Woods, a retired farmer and highly esteemed citizen of Gap, Pa., is a worthy representative of these fine, sturdy, self-respecting old families. He was born Oct. 15, 1839, in Leacock township, a son of T. Scott and Caroline (Cooper) Woods, the latter of whom was born on the farm now occupied by Scott Woods, Jr., but owned by our subject. This farm was bought in 1741 from William Penn, by John Cooper, and inherited from him by his son Col. John Cooper, who at his death left it to his son, also named John, who was the father of Mrs. Caroline (Cooper) Woods. Upon the death of John Cooper, in 1844, the farm passed out of the name of Cooper through its inheritance by Mrs. Woods. From Mrs. Woods it came into the possession of her son, John N. Woods, whose desire is to have it remain in the family through his sons and their descendants. By marriage Mr. Woods' family is connected with Colonel David Watson, a Revolutionary soldier of distinction, through whom Miss Grace, daughter of our subject, is a member of Donegal Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution.

T. Scott Woods, the father of John N., was not only a well-known and substantial farmer in Paradise township, but was one of the leading citizens of the county. He was one of the founders and also a director of the First National Bank of Lancaster, held all of the township offices of note, and for two terms was the efficient director of the County Poor Farm. He died in 1874, at the age of sixty-nine years. His wife, Caroline Cooper, had preceded him, in 1843, at the age of forty-three years, and both were buried in the cemetery attached to the old Leacock Presbyterian Church, of which religious body they had been consistent members. Their children were as follows: David, who was killed in 1875, in a railroad wreck; John N., of this sketch; and N. Milton, who is a resident of Paradise township and president of the First National Bank, of Lancaster.

John N. Woods was raised on his father's farm, and like all farmers' sons of that day and generation was taught that labor was as honorable as it was necessary. He attended the district schools in his neighborhood for a time, and was then sent to a school in Lititz taught by Mr. John Beck. This was followed by a course in the Mt. Joy Academy, after which he finished his education in Benjamin Hallowell's Academy, in Alexandria, Va. After his marriage he continued to engage in farming, following an agricultural life until 1899, when he retired from business activity and removed to his pleasant home in Gap. Mr. Woods has very efficiently filled a number of important township and county positions. For one term he was Prison Inspector, and has served a long period as school director. For thirty years he has been a director in the Lancaster Mutual Fire Insurance Co., and for ten years has been its president. In politics he has been a life-long Republican.

In January, 1862, Mr. Woods was united in marriage to Miss Susan Eckert, in Paradise township, and a family of seven children has been born to them: George M., a farmer in Leacock township, married Jane Kinzer, and they have children as follows, Jean K., Esther, Catherine, John and George B.; Caroline C. married Herbert Brinton, now retired and residing in Elwyn, Delaware county, and they have two children, Charles W. and Helen W.; Mary married Samuel McCausland, a commission merchant in Chicago, Ill., and they have two children, John W. and Catherine; Sarah died at the age of five years; Miss Elizabeth E. and Miss Grace reside at home; and T. Scott, who resides in Leacock township, married Mabel Showalter, and they have one child, Elizabeth. Both Mr. Woods and wife are valued members of the Presbyterian Church in which he has been a trustee for many years.

Mrs. Susan (Eckert) Woods was born in Paradise township, in March, 1838, daughter of Lewis and Sarah J. (Slaymaker) Eckert, the former of whom was a miller who lived on Pequea Creek, in Paradise township. He died in 1868, at the age of sixty-two years, a highly respected man and a leading member of the Presbyterian Church. The mother of Mrs. Woods died in 1874, in Lancaster, aged sixty-five years, and both parents were buried in the old Leacock Church cemetery. They had the following children: George, deceased; Mary J., married to William Holtzworth; John Howard, a commission merchant in Cincinnati, Ohio; Susan C., wife of John N. Woods; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Albert Carpenter, an attorney; Albert, Nathan and Lovinia, deceased; and Charles W., a merchant in Lancaster. Mr. and Mrs. Woods belong to a pleasant social circle in Gap, where they are most highly esteemed. Time has dealt very kindly with them, and they still enjoy offering a generous hospitality to relatives and friends, of whom they have a great number.

JOSEPH HAEFNER, proprietor of the Empire Brewery, one of the largest enterprises of the kind in Lancaster, is a native of Germany, born in Ganstadt bei Bamberg, Sept. 3, 1848, son of John B. and Barbara (Stall) Haefner.

John B. Haefner, father of Joseph Haefner, was also a native of Germany, and for twenty years conducted a brewery in his native country, doing a large business and performing the duties of a prominent citizen. His death took place in 1899, when he was aged seventy-eight years. His wife died in 1893, at the age of seventy-two years. Both were worthy members of the Catholic Church. Mr. and Mrs. Haefner had the following children: John B. (deceased) also followed the brewing business; Peter resides in Germany and follows the butcher business; Joseph is mentioned below; Lizzie married Gottlieb Smith, a farmer in Montgomery county, Pa.; Anna married William Kurtz, who conducts a hotel in Lancaster; Lena married Lawrence Rateline, a farmer in Germany.

Joseph Haefner learned his trade in Germany with his father, with whom he remained until he was sixteen years of age, then securing work in other breweries, where he continued until coming to America, in 1872. For two years he was employed in Rupert's brewery, in New York, going then to Union Hill, N. J., where he remained one year. Coming to Lancaster, he served one year in Henry Frank's brewery, and then went to Reading, where his knowledge of the business secured him a good position with Fred. Lauer, with whom he remained six years. Mr. Haefner then went to Pottsville, and in partnership with Peter Lauer and Lawrence Smith operated the Archard brewery for two years, and then for about five years was in Philadelphia. In 1886 Mr. Haefner returned to Lancaster and bought of Florence Knapp his present plant, which he has enlarged to thrice its original dimensions, and has more than trebled its producing capacity. This immense plant covers at present a half acre of ground and gives employment to twenty men. It is fitted with all modern improvements and is the only brewery in the locality which manufactures its own ice. This business was established in 1868 by Lawrence Knapp, and since Mr. Haefner became its proprietor has grown in importance until it ranks with the leading industries of the city.

Mr. Haefner is independent in politics. He takes a deep interest in everything looking to the advancement of the community, and votes for those whom he deems will best carry out his ideas. Fraternally he belongs to the B. P. O. E. and the Brewers' Association. In person Mr. Haefner exemplifies the best class of prosperous German-American citizens. Genial, pleasant, liberal in his benefactions and charitable to the poor, he has many in Lancaster who delight to call him friend. He has won his way to success through his own efforts, and well deserves the good fortune which has attended him.

In 1874, in Lancaster, Mr. Haefner was united in marriage to Margaret Fisher, daughter of Raphael Fisher, who operated a hotel in Lancaster for a number of years. He died in 1893, at the age of seventy-four years, and his wife died in 1884. They were members of the Catholic Church, and were interred in the Catholic cemetery.

The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Haefner: Mary, who died at the age of four years; Miss Elizabeth, at home; and Anna, Joseph, Catherine, Lauer and Margaret. Mr. Haefner built his present fine home, opposite his place of business, in 1890.

LEVI HAVERSTICK, of Washington borough, Lancaster Co., Pa., was born Jan. 13, 1824, and descends from one of the oldest German families of this county, a brief record of whom is given in the following paragraphs.

The great-grandfather of Levi was the first of the Haverstick family to come to America, and on arriving in Lancaster county, Pa., his only worldly property, as tradition has it, was an ax. His home was established on the banks of the Conestoga river, about two miles southwest of the now city of Lancaster, and there he passed the remainder of his life.

Jacob Haverstick, the son of the aforesaid emigrant and grandfather of Levi, was reared on his father's Conestoga farm, to which he became the heir. He added to it several other tracts of land, which he placed under cultivation, and became one of the wealthiest farmers of his township. Jacob reared a family of six children, of whom the eldest, Abraham, succeeded to the Conestoga homestead; John became the father of Levi, whose name opens this sketch;

Jos. Haefner

Jacob passed his life on the old homestead; David was a hotel-keeper and died in Lancaster city; and of his two daughters one married a man named Herr and went to live in Ohio, and the other became Mrs. Shenk, and passed her life in Lancaster county, Pa. In religion the family were Lutherans.

John Haverstick, father of Levi, was born on the old homestead in 1798, where he rendered faithful service to his father until his marriage with Magdelina Neff, who was born in Manor township, Lancaster county, in 1799. Shortly after this happy ceremony John's father presented him with a farm west of the Conestoga, where he lived the greater part of his active life, but later moved to the north of Lancaster city. To his marriage were born eight children, two of whom died in infancy; the six who reached mature years were Henry, born Jan. 18, 1818, was a farmer in Manheim township, and died in May, 1900; Jacob, born in January, 1822, is also deceased; Levi is the gentleman whose name opens this sketch; John N. died on the old homestead; Abraham resides at Neffsville, and Elizabeth, the widow of a Mr. Hawenstein, resides near Mount Joy. John Haverstick, the father of this family, died in 1883, and the mother, Magdelina, died at the advanced age of ninety-four years, in 1893. John Haverstick was a most public-spirited man and held many township offices, being very popular in his day as a Whig, and in 1840 was inspector of election in the courthouse, Center Square, Lancaster city. In early life he was a member of the Lutheran Church, but he died a Mennonite.

Levi Haverstick was reared to manhood on the home farm at Wabank, and his early education was acquired in an old fashioned school house, where he learned his letters by tracing them in sand on a shelf attached to the wall, instead of a slate, or paper and pencil; on a desk his next instruction in writing was with a goose-quill pen and ink. Later, being an apt lad, he learned the German and English languages to perfection, and thus thoroughly prepared himself for the business of life. Levi remained at home until 1846, when he was married, and the following year settled on his farm in Manor township, which farm comprised 100 acres, and which he properly cultivated until 1881, when he retired from active agricultural work, and in 1896 erected his present elegant residence.

In 1881, Levi Haverstick associated himself with L. J. Schofield, with whom for one year he was engaged in the lumber business, but in 1882 he assumed full personal control. In 1890 coal was added to this business, besides which he holds considerable stock in the First National Bank of Columbia.

The marriage of Levi Haverstick took place in 1846, to Catherine Hostetter, a native of Donegal township, who was born in 1826, and who died in 1881. To this happy union were born eight children that grew to maturity, viz.: Christian H., a farmer; Levi, who has passed away, leaving a wife and family; Kate, who died in February, 1896; John, a farmer of Manor township; Elizabeth, wife of Lemuel Swarr, a farmer of Mount Joy; Emma, wife of Cephas Hostetter, a farmer of near Manheim borough; Henry H., a farmer of Manor township; and Mattie, at home.

Levi Haverstick has been a member of the Mennonite Church for many years, and has so lived as to win the esteem of all who know him; is a public-spirited and broad-minded citizen, and has a large circle of truly warm-hearted friends. In political sentiment he is a Republican. He is a natural mechanic, and is possessed of much inventive genius. As a boy he made many useful and peculiar contrivances, among them being a sled to run on the ice by turning a wheel; the first hay slats, now in general use; an improvement in grain drills; the first roller mill that chopped corn; made a portable engine to propel itself; and he also invented an improvement in a reaper attachment, and a device for unloading hay by horse power. He made a grist and saw mill on the farm which he engineered and planned himself. His mother often said Levi was born in the sign "beginning much and accomplishing little."

ABRAM SUMMY, who died at his home April 12, 1902, was a well known coal merchant of Marietta. He was born Nov. 7, 1827, on the farm now owned by Charles A. Fondersmith, in East Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Pa., a son of John and Susannah (Hostetter) Summy, natives of the same township.

John Summy was born Jan. 15, 1796, of French extraction, and in that language the name was spelled Somme. John Summy was a farmer by calling, and at the age of thirty years was ordained a minister in the Mennonite Church. He married Susannah Hostetter May 4, 1815, and died on his homestead in May, 1835. Mrs. Susannah Summy was born Feb. 21, 1797, and died in Mount Joy, Pa., in 1874. To their marriage were born seven children, namely: Jacob H., who died in Illinois; John H., who died in East Donegal township; Peter H., who died in Lancaster; Maria, who married Abram B. Landis, and she and her husband died in Mount Joy; Abram; Aaron H., a farmer in Manheim township; and David C., killed on a railroad in 1852.

Peter and Barbara (Long) Summy, paternal grandparents of Abram, were natives of Earl and Rapho townships, respectively, but died on their farm in East Hempfield township, in which Peter Summy had held most of the offices. The great-grandparents, John and Elizabeth (Shirk) Summy, moved from Earl township to East Hempfield township, purchased 250 acres of land, and there passed the remainder of their lives. The first of the Summy family to come to America was Hans Peter Summy, a Palatinate Mennonite minister, but a native of Switzerland. He was the great-great-grandfather of Abram Summy, and being exiled, sailed in company with his wife and sons, Hans Jacob and Hans Peter, Jr., and with Otto Fritz and Johannes and Hans Michael, from Rotterdam, Holland, in the brigantine "Richmond and Elizabeth," via Plymouth, England, and landed in Philadelphia, in 1733, but settled in Earl township, Lancaster county, in 1734.

The maternal ancestors of Abram Summy were of noble extraction, and the original family name was Von Hostetter. The great-great-grandfather of Abram Summy was Jacob Hostetter, also a Mennonite minister, who came to Lancaster county, Pa., in 1712, purchased 450 acres of land in Penn's Manor, and was among the first of the Mennonites to settle here. The maternal great-grandparents, Abraham and Catherine (Long) Hostetter, and the maternal grandparents, Jacob and Barbara (Funk) Hostetter, were all born in Lancaster county.

Abram Summy lived on the home farm until seventeen years of age, and then served an apprenticeship at coachmaking, a trade he followed for eight years. He next formed a partnership with his brother Aaron H., in the coal and lumber trade, but two years later sold his interest to his brother and went to Freeport, Ill., where he was employed by his cousin, William Haldeman, as bookkeeper and grain purchaser for his mill. Three years later he returned to Marietta and purchased from his brother, in 1859, the original coal and lumber business, afterward disposing of the lumber, but continuing in the coal trade to the time of his death.

On July 15, 1862, Mr. Summy married in East Donegal township Miss Elizabeth Stauffer, and to this union were born two children: Mary, still under the parental roof; and John Logan, teller in the Northern Bank at Lancaster. Mrs. Elizabeth (Stauffer) Summy was born in East Donegal township Feb. 19, 1841, a daughter of John and Martha (Hostetter) Stauffer, natives of Strasburg and Penn township, Lancaster county. John Stauffer was a miller in East Donegal township many years, but in 1865 retired and came to Marietta to reside with Mr. and Mrs. Summy, and here passed away in 1876, at the age of sixty-nine years. His wife died in East Donegal township, in 1860, when forty-six years old. They were members of the Presbyterian and Mennonite Churches, respectively. Two children were born of their marriage: Elizabeth, now Mrs. Summy; and David H., deceased. The paternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Summy was John Stauffer, and the grandfather, also named John, was a farmer, and both were natives of Lancaster county. Her maternal grandparents were Jacob and Elizabeth (Miller) Hostetter, of whom the former was a Mennonite bishop, and died at the age of ninety-one years. His father, also named Jacob, settled in Penn township, Lancaster county, in 1712.

Abram Summy was a Republican in politics, and served as a member of the school board for twenty-two years, and as county commissioner one term, 1881-1884. He was county recorder in 1896-97-98, and was councilman one year. He was a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, and a member of both lodge and chapter F. & A. M. As a citizen he was highly respected, and as a business man and county official his name stood without a blemish.

SAMUEL S. SNYDER, one of the prominent residents of Hinkletown, Lancaster county, was born in Earl township, May 2, 1850, a son of John K. and Maria (Sensenig) Snyder, the former of whom is still living, but the latter passed to her rest April 6, 1876.

John K. Snyder was born Oct. 17, 1829, in Ephrata township, and now makes his home in Hinkletown. The Snyders have long been residents of Lancaster county, and throughout many generations have sustained a good name, to which no discredit has been done by father or son, mentioned herewith. The great-grandfather of John K. bore a valiant part in the War of the Revolution, and proved his devotion to liberty on many a bloody battle field. His home was in Maryland. John Snyder, the grandfather of John K., had his home in Ephrata township for many years, where he attained the age of seventy-five. He was a farmer, and married Catherine Killian, and to them were born sixteen children, fourteen of whom lived to maturity, but only one of whom is still living. They were members of the Reformed Church.

Samuel Snyder, the father of John K., was born in Ephrata township, where he was reared and married, following at first the career of a laborer, but presently becoming a tenant farmer, and settled first in Ephrata township, and afterward in West Earl, his last days passing in Earl township. He married Miss Barbara Keesey, a daughter of Noah Keesey, a manager in the Elizabeth Furnace. Mrs. Snyder was born in Elizabeth township, where she died Feb. 24, 1861, at the age of fifty-three. The father died Jan. 14, 1856, at the age of fifty-four years. They had four children: John K.; Samuel K., a resident of Ephrata, and now retired; Henry K., a prominent man, and at one time deputy sheriff of Lancaster county, and a tax collector in Lancaster, where he lived; and Catherine, who married Levi Sensenig, of Lancaster, and is deceased.

John K. Snyder was reared on the family homestead, and received his education in the Ephrata local schools. When he was of age he applied himself to the carpenter trade, at which he worked some seven years. At the end of that time he began farming on a rented place in the township of Ephrata. After one year at this he went to a small farm in Earl township, which he had bought near Hinkletown, where he made his home for twelve years, at the end of that time purchasing a farm of sixty-two acres from D. E. Heister, on which he has since lived. In all he owns ninety-nine acres, all his land being contiguous, and on which he has three sets of buildings. Mr. Snyder has in his active days proved himself one of the industrious, honest and thoroughly reliable men of the county, a reputation he has never lost. John K. Snyder was married in 1857 to Miss Maria Sensenig, by whom he became the father of four children who outlived their mother, and of two who died in early life: Samuel S., of Hinkletown, whose name introduces this article; Aaron S., a farmer near Vogansville; David S., who died March 12, 1895, left a widow, Barbara H. Erb, of Penn township, and three children, Barbara, Lillian and Jacob; Henry S., a farmer, engaged on the old homestead, who married Emma Nolt, and is the father of two children, Josie and Harry. Mr. Snyder married for his second wife, Elizabeth Burkholder, who died May 23, 1895, at the age of sixty-five years. John K. Snyder is a member of the Old Mennonite Church.

Samuel S. Snyder was reared in his native community, and received his education in the public schools. When he had attained his majority he began farming on his own account. He was married Dec. 26, 1885, to Miss Rachel Lucetta Seldomridge, who was born June 11, 1864, a daughter of Jacob G. Seldomridge, of New Holland. After they were married, the young couple moved to Lancaster, where Mr. Snyder was employed one year at the stock yards. At the end of this period, Mr. Snyder came back to Earl township, and locating his family on one of the farms belonging to his father, began its cultivation. This farm was situated one mile south of Hinkletown. This farm contained seventy-six acres, and he spent two years on it, then moving to his present place in Hinkletown, where he has thirty-five acres, and carries on general farming. During the winter he buys hides and other farm products. Mr. Snyder is one of the spirited and intelligent young men of this county, and takes a deep interest in everything that looks to the public good. In his politics he is a Republican, and has filled the offices of judge and inspector of elections for two years, and 1897 he collected the outstanding school tax in Earl township. He and his wife have one child, Earl J., born Aug. 1, 1900.

JOSEPH GIBBONS, M. D., deceased. In the death of Dr. Joseph Gibbons, which sad event took place Dec. 9, 1883, Lancaster county lost not only a physician who adorned the profession, but also a citizen of unquestioned integrity and scholarly pre-eminence, and a reformer of unselfish heart, with courage of the truest temper.

Dr. Gibbons was born Aug. 14, 1818, and after a long and useful life was recently laid to rest in the Old Friends' meeting-house yard, in Bird-in-Hand. His parents were Daniel (a son of James and Deborah (Hoopes) Gibbons) and Hannah (Wierman) Gibbons. His father was born on the banks of the stream near which James Gibbons erected the mill still standing, which was for many years known by the name of Gibbons' Mill. Daniel Gibbons was a tanner by trade. All Friends' children at that time, in the eighteenth century, were given trades, but Daniel Gibbons preferred farming, having inherited a large farm from his father, a part of the original tract deeded to his grandfather by John, Richard and Thomas Penn, about 1737. In 1815 he built the present family residence. Although a man of standing in the community, identified with all of the philanthropic movements of his time, he lived a quiet, unostentatious life, following out the lines laid down by his peaceful Quaker ancestors. His death occurred in 1853, at the age of seventy-eight years, his most estimable widow, who survived until 1860, dying at the age of seventy-three. During the greater part of his life Daniel Gibbons was deeply interested in the workings of the "Underground Railroad" and assisted in sheltering about a thousand slaves. After studying with Dr. Francis Burrowes, of Lancaster, Dr. Gibbons took a long course at Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, from which he graduated in 1845. Before he became of age he was a member of the Young Men's Anti-Slavery Society of Pennsylvania. His first vote for President and Vice-President was cast in 1844, for the candidates of the Liberty party, James G. Birney, of Alabama, and Thomas Morris, of Ohio. He practiced medicine for a few years, and then became a farmer. Besides his "Underground Railroad" work, he was a devoted adherent of the "Free Soil" (the successor of the Liberty) party, and one of the founders of the Republican party in Lancaster county. He was also deeply interested in the temperance cause. From 1861 to 1865 he was an officer in the Philadelphia Custom House. Early in 1873 he founded The Journal, a weekly paper devoted to the interests of the Society of Friends, of which he was owner and editor until his death. Soon after it was combined with The Friends' Intelligencer, of Philadelphia. Few braver, more unselfish men than Dr. Gibbons have lived.

Dr. Gibbons married Sept. 29, 1845, Phebe Earle, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Hussey) Earle, of Philadelphia. Children as follows were born to this union: Marianna, born Dec. 6, 1846, was married Jan. 15, 1902, to Oram D. Brubaker, of East Lampeter township, chairman of the Prohibition county committee; Caroline, born Nov. 6, 1848, married William G. Gibbons, April 2, 1884, and died March 5, 1900, leaving one child, Wilhelmina C., who was born Jan. 27, 1887; Hannah Cornelia, born March 17, 1851, died Sept. 26, 1860; Frances, born Nov. 21, 1852, married Caleb Alfred Pusey, Feb. 14, 1874, and they have one child, Mary Hannah, who was born Aug. 19, 1876; Daniel was born Nov. 7, 1860. This brilliant young man graduated at Franklin and Marshall College June 20, 1878, and then learned the machinist's trade, with the Pusey & Jones Co., of Wilmington, the president of that company, William G. Gibbons, having married his sister Caroline. Very early in his career Mr. Gibbons became interested in journalism, and in 1884 and the two succeeding years he was assistant news editor on the Philadelphia Times.

He graduated in the law, at the University of Pennsylvania, in June, 1887. He was editor of the Philadelphia Evening Herald and the Sunday Mercury, and during that time was interested in municipal work and exposed certain frauds in public contracts. In February, 1889, he was a candidate for the city council on the Democratic ticket, from the Eighth ward, which was the strongest Republican ward in the city. His work on the newspapers mentioned lasted from November, 1887, to April, 1891. Later he removed to the State of Washington, becoming interested as a reporter on the Seattle Intelligencer, and in 1892 on the Seattle Telegram, with which he continued until 1894. Returning East, Mr. Gibbons accepted the position of assistant editor on the Philadelphia Press, during 1895-96, was associate editor of the Syracuse, N. Y., Post-Standard in 1898, and was connected with the New York World, the New York Commercial and the Philadelphia Record, until 1901. After residing for some time in the family home at Bird-in-Hand, Mr. Gibbons returned to Philadelphia, and became connected with The Times, since merged with The Public Ledger.

JOHN FRANKLIN BECKER, one of the leading business men and highly respected citizens of Manheim, Lancaster county, was born in Rapho township, this county, March 12, 1865, son of John B. and Catherine (Nauman) Becker, who were both killed in an accident on the Pennsylvania railroad at Lancaster, April 19, 1887. The father was born in Lebanon county, Pa., March 24, 1831, and in 1848 came to Lancaster county with his father, John Becker, who was successfully engaged in the practice of veterinary surgery here until his death, and was then succeeded by his son Henry. His other children were Michael; Moses, deceased; Sarah, deceased wife of Jeremiah H. Obetz, of Manheim; Annie, deceased wife of Jacob K. Fisher; and Catherine, wife of Christian Shelley, both deceased.

John B. Becker was reared on a farm and worked as a farm hand by the month until seventeen years of age, when he commenced learning the blacksmith's trade, and he followed that in connection with farming during the remainder of his life. He was very successful financially, though he started out with no capital, but by his energy, economy and diligence he amassed a handsome competence. He owned and operated a farm of seventy-six acres in Rapho township, and was numbered among the progressive men of his locality, upholding and assisting all enterprises tending to advance the general welfare. As a Democrat he took an active part in local politics, and officiated as a member of the school board for some years. He was quiet and unassuming in manner, and a consistent member of the German Baptist Church. His estimable wife was born on the old Nauman homestead near Manheim, in Rapho township, June 18, 1836, daughter of Samuel and Nancy (Shelley) Nauman. In their family were six children, of whom John F. is fourth in the order of birth; Henry N. is a farmer and veterinary surgeon, living near Mastersonville; Samuel N. is a farmer and blacksmith, living on the old homestead; Phares is a physician of Mastersonville; Alfred N., who died Sept. 21, 1902, was a physician of Schaefferstown, Lebanon Co., Pa.; Anna Mary (twin of Alfred N.) died in infancy.

On the home farm John Franklin Becker grew to manhood, and is indebted to the public schools of the home locality for his educational privileges. On leaving the parental roof, at the age of seventeen, he commenced clerking for George H. Danner & Co., at Manheim, and remained with them seven years, at the end of which time he formed a partnership with John N. Becker and embarked in general merchandising at that place. After nine and a half years of successful business in that line he sold out to his partner and engaged in the coal business, in January, 1898, succeeding Daniel W. Erb, of Manheim; he retired from that business Sept. 3, 1902. He also dealt in fertilizers and agricultural implements, and had built up quite an extensive trade, which was constantly increasing. Mr. Becker is also a director and stockholder of the Old Guard Fire & Storm Insurance Co. of Lancaster County, and is interested in real estate to a considerable extent, having erected several good residences in Manheim.

On Sept. 3, 1889, Mr. Becker was united in marriage with Miss Ella Kline, a native of Manheim, daughter of Jacob and Harriet (Mengle) Kline, and to this union three children have been born, namely: Helen, Carl and John F., Jr.

Mr. Becker has taken a very active part in political affairs, and for some years was one of the leaders in the Democratic party in his district, serving as a member of the county committee. In 1896 he cast his lot with the Republican party. He has a large following, and is quite influential in political matters. Fraternally he is a prominent member of Selah Lodge, No. 657, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand; Ridgely Encampment, No. 217; is now serving as district deputy grand master of the subordinate branch of the order; and belongs to the Patriarchs Militant. He also belongs to Manheim Council, No. 154, Sr. O. U. A. M., of which he is past councilor; and is a member and past chief of Steigel Castle, No. 166, K. G. E. Mr. Becker is one of the leading members and deacon of St. Paul's Reformed Church of Manheim, and has always taken a very prominent and active part in church and Sunday-school work; he served in the position of superintendent of the Sporting Hill Union Sunday-school, a mission which was established in May, 1895, from that date until 1901. It was conducted in a public school building for a time, but after a few months the school board turned them out, owing to State legislation, and a movement was then started to erect a chapel, and by the zealous and untiring efforts of Mr. Becker a fine church edifice was at length erected. He is a broad-gauged, progressive and public-spirited man, and, being a ready speaker, is often called upon to address large audiences. He has striven earnestly to advance the moral welfare of his community, and is justly numbered among its most valuable and useful citizens.

At present Mr. Becker is living retired in his comfortable mansion on South Charlotte street, one of the finest homes of the borough. He is considering several offers of incorporated companies, for though young in years his business experience is beyond the average, and he has proven by his diligence that the public had recognized real worth in him. Whatever business he shall adopt will have no cause, with his direction, to meet with any reverses owing to mismanagement.

SQUIRE WILLIAM H. HOGG, an old and prominent farmer of Colerain township, was born Jan. 3, 1845, on the farm where he resides to-day, a son of Robert Hogg and his wife, Rachel Swisher, a daughter of Jeremiah and Mary Swisher.

William and Margaret (Hunter) Hogg, grandparents of William H., were born in Ireland. For a time they lived in Strasburg township, Lancaster county. In 1818, in company with Robert Spencer, William Hogg bought the land on which William H. now lives, and the following year bought out Mr. Spencer. Here Mr. Hogg made many substantial improvements, and lived until his death in 1844. His widow survived him some years, and passed to her rest in 1858. William and Margaret Hogg had three sons and one daughter: George, Robert, William and Mary. Of these Mary married William Ferguson, and settled near Bartville, Colerain township, on a farm where both died, leaving the following family: William H., who went West; John, of Providence township, Lancaster county; Benjamin, who is deceased; Alexander M., a resident of Colerain; Abram, of Atglen, Chester county; Nathaniel B., of Philadelphia; Anna, wife of John Woodward, of Marshalltown, Chester county. George Hogg, after residing for a time on a part of the old homestead, sold out to his brothers Robert and William, and moved to Decatur county, Ind., where he followed farming; his death occurred on his Indiana farm, and he left three children, William, Anna, and Malissa, who still reside in their Indiana home. William Hogg resided on one of the properties purchased by his father, near Kirkwood, and engaged in farming, making extensive improvements; both he and his wife died after leading a useful career, and they left the following family: William, of West Grove; Howard, of Chadds Ford; Forest, of Cochranville, Chester county; George, of Colerain township; Dr. Edwin, of Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Jeremiah, of Reading, Pa.; John, of Kirkwood; Margaret and Martha R., of Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Eliza, deceased wife of George Evans, of Chester county; Malissa, who married James W. Andrews, of Colerain, and died, leaving three children, Albert (of Wakefield, Lancaster county), William (of Reading) and Louisa (of Wilkesbarre).

Robert Hogg, the father of William H., was born in Lancaster county, Dec. 25, 1813, and was reared at the present home of his son, receiving a limited education in the public schools. He died Nov. 29, 1886. Rachel Swisher, his wife, was born in September, 1823, a daughter of Jeremiah and Mary Swisher. After his marriage Robert Hogg settled on the home farm, and made additional purchases until he had 245 acres of fine farm land. The old original home put up by his father consisted of logs and stone, and was replaced by him, with a brick construction, and the stone house was connected with it, and this is still occupied by Squire Hogg. He lived on this farm until his death in 1886. His widow passed to her rest in 1899. They were members of the Presbyterian Church at Union. Mr. Hogg was a leader in the Democratic party, and different times was called upon to occupy a number of local offices. There were born to him and his excellent wife four children: Francis and Marion, twins, who died in childhood; Lawrence P., born in 1857, married Miss Hannah M., a daughter of Jeremiah and Hannah Hastings, of Colerain township, and settled at the home of his father, where he worked as a farmer until his failing health compelled him to give up the work, and he died in June, 1878, leaving a widow, and one daughter, Edna E., who resides in Philadelphia with her mother; and William H.

William H. Hogg had his early education in the district school, and was later a student in the Union High School. When he became a young man he was put in charge of the farm, and after the death of his father gave devout attention to the care of his aged mother as long as she lived.

Mr. Hogg was married in February, 1866, to Esther, daughter of Jeremiah and Rebecca Hastings, of Colerain township. Mrs. Hogg was born in 1844, in Colerain, where she received the advantages of a high school education. She died in 1898, leaving two children, a son and a daughter: Maggie M., born in 1869; and Robert Treat, in July, 1875.

Maggie M. Hogg was given a very fair education, and married Eber J. Kosch, of Colerain township. They settled on a farm, where she died in March, 1900, leaving two children, Esther L.; and William S., since deceased.

Robert Treat Hogg was educated in the public and high school at Union, and was graduated from Wilmington Commercial College in 1892, and the Philadelphia University of Short Hand in 1893. He was married on Sept. 11, 1902, to Miss Maude Martin, daughter of William Stewart and Joanna (Davis) Martin, of Octoraro, Pa. He resides in Frankford, Philadelphia, where he is employed with Robert H. Foerderer, leather manufacturer, as salesman.

Squire Hogg has always been a Democrat, and has at different times occupied a number of local offices, having been auditor and school director twelve years, and in 1901 was elected justice of the peace in Colerain township, a position he is now filling.

HERVEY BAUGHMAN, a well known and highly respected farmer of Bart township, Lancaster county, was born in that township Dec. 28, 1836, son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Pickel) Baughman.

As early as 1750 the Baughman family was planted in Lancaster county by Felix Baughman, who came from Switzerland and purchased 400 acres of land near Georgetown, in Bart township, on which he made his home. He left two sons, Jacob and George, of whom the latter lived and died in Bart township, and three of his grandchildren still live in the county.

Jacob Baughman, son of the emigrant, was born in Bart township, and settled on his share of the family estate. He married Anna Heidlebaugh, also a native of Bart, and they had the following children: George I.; Samuel; Jacob; and Elizabeth, who married Solomon Hamer, and of their children two daughters are still living, Mrs. Jessie McCalister, and Mrs. John Pickel, both of Bart township.

Jacob Baughman (2), son of Jacob, was born Jan. 10, 1800, and he settled on the old homestead of the family, where he spent his life, and where he died in 1872. He married Elizabeth Pickel, who was born in 1806, a daughter of George and Margaret Pickel, of Bart township. She died in 1866. They were members of the Presbyterian Church, and were among the first to move in the organization of the church at Octoraro. They had the following children born to them: (1) Henry P., born in Bart township, in 1828, settled in Georgetown, where he is a contractor and builder, and is still living. His six children are as follows: Ella, Lizzie, Sallie, Jacob, William and Clifford. (2) William, born in 1830, moved to Virginia, when he was a young man, and there he married about the time of the Civil war. He died in 1873. (3) John J., born in 1832, married Miss Catherine Trout, of Bart township, and is now living a retired life in Bart township. (4) Anna E., born in Bart township in 1834, married the late Joseph W. Fawkes, and lives in Burbank, Cal. She has a family of seven children: Howard, Wilbur, Harry, Joseph, Effie, Charles and Leslie. (5) Hervey is our subject. (6) Sarah Jane, born in 1840, married George W. Johnson, and both are now deceased, leaving a family of four children: William, living in Philadelphia; Ferree, a farmer in York county; Elizabeth, wife of Laven Burkey, of Salisbury township; and Harry, of Philadelphia. (7) George F., born in 1843, enlisted in 1861, from Lancaster county, and reenlisted as a veteran. He was wounded at Atlanta, and died at Chattanooga, where he was buried. Participating in many fierce and bloody engagements he bore himself as a gallant soldier, and left a record of honorable and loyal service. (8) Mary, born in 1845, is the wife of Rev. John Nelson, a Methodist clergyman, who is now living in Philadelphia.

Hervey Baughman was reared to manhood at the old home, where he was educated in the district school, and when he became a young man learned the carpenter trade, which he followed for four years. For fifteen years he lived on the old Baughman homestead, and then purchased his present farm in Bart township, where he and his family still reside.

On Jan. 3, 1861, Mr. Baughman was married to Catherine Phenegar, who was born in Paradise township Aug. 30, 1841, daughter of Jacob and Mary M. (Bower) Phenegar, the former of whom died in 1852. Mrs. Phenegar moved to Bart township and still has her home in that community; all four of her children are living: Sarah, at home; Benjamin, in Columbia; Newton L., in Philadelphia; and Catherine, Mrs. Baughman. To Mr. and Baughman have come eleven children: William A., born in Georgetown in 1861, lived on a farm adjoining his father's place; he married Miss Malissa Artus, of this county, and has two children, Robert and Ferree. Anna and Ada, twins, born in 1866, of whom Anna is the wife of J. E. Withrow, of Colerain township, and the mother of three children, Anna, Ada and Esther; while Ada is the wife of Harry K. Wilson, and the mother of five children: Howard, Walter, Ethel, Marion and Charles. Jacob, born in 1869, lives in the West; he married Miss Bertha Rice, of Sadsbury township, and they have three children, Anna, Clarence and Blanche. Lora, born in 1870, married Joseph Mendenhall, a farmer in Sadsbury township, and they have three children, William, Viella and Elsie Helen. Benjamin N., born in 1873, is a supervisor of Bart township, and resides at home. Jessie M., born in 1875, married Frank Mendenhall, a farmer in Sadsbury township, and they have three children, Park, Rolland and Catherine. Joseph, born in 1878, is a street car conductor in Philadelphia. Lillie L., born in 1880, is at home. George, born in 1882, and Elsie B., born in 1884, are at school. The family are all members of the Octoraro Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Baughman has been an elder. Politically he is a Democrat, and has been school director and assessor of the township for many years. In 1877 he was elected justice of the peace, a position he held for some ten years. The Baughman family has long been favorably known in Lancaster county, and the present representative has well sustained the honor of the family name.

FREDERICK A. BEATES, living a retired life in Lancaster, after many years devoted to extensive farming interests, was born near the Elizabeth Furnace, Lancaster county, in 1830, a son of Rev. William and Mary (Hearbst) Beates, natives of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Rev. William Beates was reared in Philadelphia, and in early life made cigars for a living while studying for the Lutheran ministry. He was ordained in 1810, and was for a time local preacher, but eventually settled in Elizabeth, where he preached for twenty years. In 1835 he became identified with the Zion Lutheran Church in Lancaster, and for twenty-five years was one of the forceful preachers and large-hearted humanitarians of the city. He died in 1888, at the age of ninety-two, and his wife passed away at the age of seventy-five. To this couple were born the following children: Anna, who married Christ Geiger, and is now deceased; William, a former farmer of this county, but now deceased; Henry, a retired druggist of Philadelphia; Samuel, deceased; Charles, deceased; Caroline, deceased wife of George Sprecker; Elizabeth, the wife of Rev. John Alda, of Philadelphia; Harmon, a farmer, but now deceased; Fred A.; Susan, deceased wife of John Prumball; and Catherine, unmarried and living in Philadelphia. The paternal grandfather, William Beates, was a tobacconist of Philadelphia; and on the maternal side, the grandparents had two sons, Henry and Christ Hearbst.

The entire life of Frederick A. Beates has been spent in Lancaster county, where he attended the public schools, and at the age of eighteen entered Gettysburg College for a year. For thirty-two years he was one of the foremost farmers of his locality, and he took an active interest in agricultural and other affairs. At the same time he kept up an interest in taxidermy and birds, to which as a child he had been drawn, and in later years he has accomplished really creditable work along his chosen line. He is still a bird fancier, and the feathered tribe have no more enthusiastic friend and well wisher. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, and a Republican in national politics.

In 1882 Mr. Beates married Lizzie Wetzol, a daughter of John Wetzol, a farmer of Lancaster county. Mrs. Beates died in 1892, leaving no issue. The second marriage of Mr. Beates occurred in 1896, with Anna Spiker, daughter of Lawrence and Margaret Spiker, the former retired and living on East King street, and at present seventy-eight years old. Mr. Beates bears an enviable reputation among the farmers of the county and the citizens of the town of Lancaster, and his career is regarded as a well directed and useful one.

ROBERT BLAIR RISK, who for over twenty years has been connected with the editorial department of The Examiner, was born in Bart township, Lancaster county, Feb. 20, 1848, the eldest son of Samuel McFarland Risk and Francina (Blair) Risk. His ancestors are of sturdy Irish and Scotch stock, Presbyterian in faith, and with all the rigid morality and uprightness of the Calvinistic creed. His paternal grandfather came, at the age of eighteen, from North Ireland in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and settled in Bart township, a few miles from Quarryville, and hammered out a small fortune in his blacksmith forge and sickle mill. He left the following children, Robert, David, James, William, Samuel and Elizabeth, all of whom became prominent in the industrial, political and social affairs of the lower end of the county. On the maternal side, Mr. Risk comes from the Blair stock, his great-great-great-grandfather being the Rev. Samuel Blair, of Log College fame, one of the most noted divines of his day, but whose great promise was cut short by his death at the early age of thirty-nine. He is buried at Fagg's Manor, Chester Co., Pa. He was born in Ulster, Ireland, June 14, 1712, and at the age of twenty-two, in the year 1734, he came to this country. It may be of general local interest to state that the two daughters of Rev. Samuel Blair married Presbyterian ministers, viz.: Rev. John Carmichael, and Dr. Robert Smith, of Pequea, this county. Dr. Smith's two sons, Samuel Stanhope Smith and John Blair Smith, became Presbyterian divines, and later, college professors and presidents. Their names are illustrious in the early history of Princeton, Hampden, Sidney, and Union Colleges. A memorial window in the First Presbyterian Church, Germantown, bears witness to the distinguished character and services of Samuel Blair's son, Rev. Samuel Blair.

Many descendants of this branch of the Blair family are to be found in Pequea township, and other parts of Lancaster county. It may not be irrelevant to state that from John Blair, who was Samuel's junior by eight years, sprang Francis P. Blair, of Congressional Globe fame; Montgomery Blair, Lincoln's post-master general; and Frank Blair, United States Senator from Missouri.

The great-grandfather of Mr. Risk was James Moore, who married Francina Blair, daughter of the Rev. Samuel Blair. He left the old homestead to his son Samuel Moore, who, in turn, married Mary Caldwell. From this union were born several children, viz.: James, Robert W., Samuel B., Lydia, Rebecca J., Mary R. and Francina Blair, who was the mother of the subject of this sketch.

Mr. Risk's father failed in business during one of the early panics, leaving his son a penniless lad, four years old, with no greater inheritance than an old family Bible, and a tendency to rheumatism. Mrs. Risk and her two sons, Robert and James, went back to the old ancestral homestead, a farm near the Buck, now in the former's name. The beginning of his education was in the old log school house, but at the early age of eleven years, he attended Williamsburg Academy, in Blair county, this State, and in 1861 came to the academy at Chestnut Level, where he spent three years under the instruction of his cousin, Prof. James Morgan Rawlins, A. M. He completed his academic course and prepared for college (which he never entered), under the same instructor at Parkesburg, Chester Co., Pa. and assisted him as teacher for two years. He next went west to Kansas, settling in Topeka, and there began his legal studies under Judge Daniel Briar. On account of ill health he returned to Lancaster, completed his legal course under the preceptorship of Samuel H. Reynolds, and was admitted to the Lancaster Bar in 1873. The practice of law was never to his taste nor fitted to his natural aptitudes, so, Jan. 1, 1876, he formed a partnership with W. Hayes Grier, in the publication of the Columbia Herald, which association lasted two years. Returning to Lancaster he put in nearly three years in a little law practice and much desultory and general newspaper writing. Upon the resignation of D. Brainard Williamson from the editorship of the Lancaster Examiner in October, 1881, Mr. Risk accepted the vacant chair from Hon. John A. Heistand, and has been connected with the editorial department ever since—the Messrs. Cochran taking possession of the paper, March 27, 1889.

In 1893 Mr. Risk published a volume under the title of "Observed and Noted," being a series of sketches, humorous, sentimental, pathetic and philosophic, which he had contributed for a number of years to the Saturday issue of The Examiner. Mr. Risk has never married and has but one near relative, a brother, Samuel James Risk, of Quarryville, this county. The race of both the Risks and Moores is fast approaching extinction. Although Mr. Risk's father was an early Abolitionist and the great friend of Thaddeus Stevens, his son was brought up under Democratic influences and till 1880 was the adherent of that party. When it left the faith of the fathers, he gave his allegiance to the Republican party, and has labored for its interests ever since.

JOHN M. GROFF, whose law offices are at Nos. 40-42 North Duke street, Lancaster, comes from old and substantial Lancaster county Mennonite stock, his grandfather having been a farmer of New Providence, Lancaster county, whither the great-grandfather removed from Groffdale, a locality peopled by his ancestors, who were among the early Mennonite settlers of this county.

Adam Groff, the father of John M., was a farmer of New Providence, and his wife, Fanny, was a daughter of David Mowery, a farmer and merchant of more than local reputation. To this union were born four children: Jefferson F., a resident of Downingtown, where he is in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.; Cora E., wife of Samuel Hoffman, of Harrisburg; John M., of Lancaster City, the subject of this sketch; and Miss Mary G., at home.

John M. Groff was born in New Providence July 30, 1869, and after attending the public schools of the district attended the State Normal School at Millersville. He afterward entered the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he remained two years, and then registered as a student at law with Hon. Marriott Brosius. Mr. Groff was admitted to the practice of his profession Nov.

6, 1892, and in a few years built up a large practice. When the war with Spain broke out Mr. Groff, with his military training at West Point fresh in his mind, raised a company of volunteers, who elected him their captain. Their services were tendered to the Government, but happily were not needed. Undaunted by this, the company held together, and are known as Company K, 4th Regiment, N. G. P. During the troubled times of 1900 they served forty days, and in 1902 served thirty-two days in the coal region, guarding against riots during the coal strikes.

On June 28, 1898, Capt. Groff was married to Miss Nora Bassler Graybill, daughter of H. W. Graybill, a popular coal and lumber dealer of East Petersburg. To this union has been born one daughter, Leah Deldee. Mr. Groff's home is on the Philadelphia turnpike, just outside the city limits.

Capt. Groff won much professional fame by his able defense of Ralph Wireback, the murderer of David B. Landes, president of the Conestoga National Bank. Every inch of the way was stoutly contested; every step known to the practice of our courts was taken, but the murder was undisputed, and the jury refused to accept the plea of insanity. Never, however, was a client more ably and intelligently defended, and the management of the case brought Capt. Groff into prominence as a criminal lawyer. In politics he is a Republican, and was three times a delegate to State conventions before he was twenty-eight years of age. For five years he was solicitor for the directors of the poor of Lancaster county, and was first assistant district attorney of his county under the law creating that office. He organized and is also the solicitor of the Pennsylvania State Building & Loan Association and the Union Trust Company, both successful financial institutions of his county.

JOHN STAMM (deceased). One of the prominent and successful citizens of Lancaster, who has passed out of life, but who is still remembered as a man of integrity and high principle, was John Stamm, a German by birth and parentage, who became thoroughly identified with American life and customs.

The birth of John Stamm occurred Dec. 22, 1827, in Willings-Hausen, Kur-Hessen, Germany, a son of John Stamm, who was an extensive farmer in Germany. In 1848, at the age of twenty-one years, Mr. Stamm came to the United States and located at Lancaster, where he engaged in clerking in a store owned by a Mr. Sprecher. His real life-work, however, was gardening, for which he had unusual taste, and as he followed this pleasant occupation for many years, even until he retired from active labor, he became well-known in the business and his services and advice were always in great demand. Although he was a believer in Democratic principles and supported that party, he could never be prevailed upon to accept office. He enjoyed his fraternal membership with the Odd Fellows organization, and was faithful in his attendance upon the services at St. Stephen's Lutheran Church, contributing liberally to its support. He, it was, who bought the ground for that now flourishing congregation in said city of Lancaster. Mr. Stamm died Jan. 29, 1883, and was laid to rest in the Zions Lutheran cemetery.

In 1856 Mr. Stamm was married, in Lancaster, to Anna Catharine Dietz, who was born in Wallerstaedten, Germany, Dec. 1, 1834, and died June 27, 1897. She was the daughter of John P. Dietz and Anna Barbara (Landau), his wife, the former of whom came to America in 1844, and for many years followed gardening, in Lancaster, during the last ten years of his life, living retired. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stamm were as follows: George P., who died young; Martha E., a well-known resident of Lancaster; John P., who died young; and Carl P., who is a successful dentist, in Lancaster.

MISS MARTHA E. STAMM is highly regarded in Lancaster, in real estate and building circles, her business ability being quite unusual. She possesses most excellent judgment, and Lancaster is indebted to her for the enterprise she has shown in purchasing vacant and unimproved property and erecting handsome residences which are attractive and comfortable, and large business houses which contribute to the appearance of the city, as well as add to its commercial facilities. The family is well known, and Mr. Stamm was one of the city's representative men.

JOHN EDWIN RATHFON, who entered into rest on the night of Oct. 4, 1902, at his residence on North Duke street, was one of the best-known figures in the business circles of Lancaster. Indeed, he was widely known in all circles—church, social and business—and everywhere he was spoken of in terms of the highest esteem, for he had a smile and a kind word for everybody, rich or poor; all being alike to him, so far as their worldly condition was concerned.

Mr. Rathfon was born and reared in Lancaster, receiving a good education, and at the completion of his studies, he entered the store of Myers & Rathfon (his father, the venerable Jacob Rathfon, now eighty-four years old, being a member of that firm), where he became manager, and a very popular and efficient one he proved. He died in the midst of his busy and useful career, in his fifty-first year. His ancestral history will be found in the sketch of his father, elsewhere in these annals, while the ancestry of his wife, who survives, will be found in the sketches of H. E. Slaymaker and George D. Sprecher—Mr. Rathfon's wife having been Miss Lillian Reigart, daughter of the late John Reigart, who was in the post office department, the Reigart history appearing very fully in connection with H. E. Slaymaker, whose grandfather, on his mother's side, was Adam Reigart; while the ancestry of her mother's people is fully given in the sketch of George D. Sprecher, who is a brother of Mrs. Rathfon's mother. The history of these three families, the Reigarts, the Sprechers and the Rathfons, is extensive as well as interesting.

Mr. Rathfon's mother preceded him to the grave, but he had one sister, Mrs. Mary Ellen Rine, widow of the late Christian Rine, a prominent leaf tobacco dealer, and two brothers, J. Harry Rathfon, city treasurer of Lancaster, and Gilbert B. Rathfon, freight agent of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad, at Buffalo. An only son, William E., clerk in the Fulton National Bank, also survives.

Mr. Rathfon was a member of the Lutheran Church of the Holy Trinity. He was a director of the Union Trust Co., of Lancaster, a concern in which he took great interest, and which he lived barely long enough to see launched in its handsome home on East King street. Liberal in all his views, progressive at all times, courteous and honorable in all his dealings, his taking off in the midst of his usefulness has been universally regretted.

EZRA WISSLER, for many years one of the progressive farmers of Clay township, was a son of Jacob and Anna (Eby) Wissler, and was born in Elizabeth, now Clay township, on the old Groff homestead, May 6, 1809. On Nov. 24, 1831, he married Mary Fahnstock Bauman, and began farming on the old homestead. He purchased the first threshing machine in his community, and did the threshing for quite a distance around. In 1839-40 he built a house and barn on part of the old Groff homestead, then mostly timber land, which he cleared gradually. In 1876 Mr. Wissler sold the farm to Henry S. Brubaker and removed to Brunerville, Pa., where he built himself a house, and where both his sons resided, Aaron having the foundry and machine shop, and John B. the store. Here his wife died in 1886, after which he had a housekeeper until his death, which occurred Nov. 3, 1891, when he was aged eighty-two years, five months and twenty-seven days, after an illness of over six months occasioned by pneumonia.

Jacob Wissler, father of Ezra, was born in Clay township in 1778, son of Andrew Wissler, and was one of the successful farmers of his day, following agricultural pursuits until his death which occurred in 1853. He had prospered by thrift and industry, and at the time of his death owned four farms. He was a man of considerable energy, and made three journeys to Canada on horseback. He was one of the Old Mennonites of Lancaster county, but did not ignore altogether the law of self-defense, and one of his descendants still cherishes the cane with which he defended himself against the attack of an Indian, when on one of the trips mentioned. In 1800 Jacob Wissler married Anna, daughter of Christian Eby, and ten children were born to them, namely: Andrew, a farmer and merchant, who moved to Michigan, where he died; Jacob, a farmer; Christian, a miller and farmer; Ezra, our subject proper; Magdalena, wife of Jacob Landes, of Ephrata township; Levi, a farmer and tanner; Sem, a miller of Canada; Mary, wife of Levi Erb; Miss Catherine, deceased; and John, a tanner, who died in Virginia.

The first member of the branch of the Wissler family in America sailed with his wife from Germany to Philadelphia in 1720. On the voyage, together with other able-bodied men on the vessel, he was impressed into the naval service by a man-of-war. His wife continued the journey to Philadelphia, where he joined her on the expiration of his term of service. She was employed by a farmer of Germantown, and he also took service with a farmer in that locality, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Andrew Wissler, their son, removed to Lancaster county, Pa., where he entered the employ of Jacob Groff, an extensive farmer in what is now Clay township. In 1767 he married the only daughter of his employer, through whom he became the owner of the old Groff homestead, which was taken up in 1724 by John Jacob Groff, father of Jacob. It was divided into four farms by Jacob Wissler, son of Andrew, as mentioned elsewhere, but has ever since remained in the Wissler family. Andrew had two sons, John and Jacob, the former of whom died unmarried.

John Bauman Wissler, youngest son of Ezra Wissler, was born in the old homestead May 30, 1836, and in his early years worked on his father's farm, meantime attending common school and a term at the Lititz Academy, under Professor John Beck. There he mastered English, German text and German script writing. He entered the store of Samuel B. Myers, of Rothsville, as book-keeper, continuing thus for one year, when Mr. Myers sold out and removed to Virginia, after which our subject taught school for three terms, working on the home farm during the summer vacation. In 1857 Mr. Wissler married Caroline C. Eberly, daughter of Henry and Sabina (Markel) Eberly, of Clay township, and by her had four children: the eldest, Mary Cecilia, died of diphtheria in her eighteenth year; the second, a son, died of erysipelas when twenty-nine days old; the third, Alice Olivia, is married to A. E. Lane, of Clay, Lancaster county, by whom she has three children, a daughter, Alice W., and two sons, Abram and John Wissler Lane; the fourth, Sabina Louise, is unmarried and living at home.

After his marriage Mr. Wissler intended to farm, but land was so high in price at the time that it was considered unprofitable to buy, and the Brunnerville (the Whitehall) store stand being sold on account of the death of Levi H. Yundt, the proprietor, the latter was purchased by Ezra Wissler, the father, for his son John B. Mr. Wissler rented it from his father until 1877, when circumstances beyond John B. Wissler's control induced his father to give him the deed to the store property. He kept the store from 1858 to 1892, had the Brunnerville post office established in 1861, and held it as postmaster until 1892, when he resigned the office and retired from business, selling his stock of goods to his son-in-law A. E. Lane. Mrs. Wissler died May 10, 1898, of gastritis and heart failure after an illness of over four months.

REV. JONAS H. HESS. The Hess family is one of the old and honorable ones of Lancaster county. Jacob Hess, the founder of the family there, took up land in Warwick township in 1734, the property since remaining a valued possession in the family.

Rev. John Hess, son of Jacob and grandfather of Rev. Jonas H., was born in the old homestead in 1768, and there lived and died. He gave his attention to farming through a long life. In 1800 he was ordained a minister of the Gospel of the Old Mennonite denomination, and he died Nov. 27, 1830. His first wife was Esther Hershey, and their children were: Christian, who was a farmer near Rothsville, Pa.; Henry; Susannah, who was the wife of Joseph Eberly; Esther, who died at the age of sixteen; Annie, who was the wife of Christian Oberholtzer; Barbara, who died at the age of eight years; Martha, who was the wife of Samuel Oberholtzer; and Samuel, who died at the age of one year.

Henry Hess, son of Rev. John and father of Rev. Jonas H., was born on the old homestead Jan. 17, 1794, and early in life adopted the vocation of farming, following the same with industry, until within about five years prior to his death, which occurred June 13, 1867. His religion was the faith of the Old Mennonites. Henry Hess married Catherine Huber, and they had a family of thirteen children, all except one of whom lived to maturity: Jacob, who was a miller of Lancaster county, Susannah, the wife of Isaac Huber; Catherine, who died unmarried; Henry, a farmer of Penn township; Esther, wife of Joel Eby; Fanny, wife of John H. Brubaker; John, a farmer of Warwick township; Samuel, deceased, was a miller of Elizabeth township; Martin, a farmer of Manheim township; Levi, a farmer of Penn township; Annie, wife of John Franck; and Jonas H.

Rev. Jonas H. Hess was born on the old Hess homestead March 13, 1841, and he lived with his father until he was about twenty-three years of age. His education was acquired in the public schools, and he then settled down to an agricultural life on the old homestead. Always a man of serious thought and reflection, on Sept. 5, 1889, he was ordained to the ministry of the Old Mennonite Church by Bishop Jacob N. Brubaker, of Mt. Joy, a most wise and pious man. In Mr. Hess the church has found a faithful and zealous worker, one who is noted for his exemplary life and exalted character.

On Sept. 30, 1862, Rev. Jonas H. Hess was united in marriage with Annie S. Franck, a daughter of Christian and Catherine Franck, and to this union have been born eight children: Lizzie, wife of Henry R. Bucher; Catherine, wife of Amos N. Musser; Christian, farmer on one of his father's farms; Annie, who died when six months old; Fannie F., at home; Henry F., at Lititz; Jonas, who died at the age of four; and Ellen F., at home.

Rev. Jonas H. Hess is one of Lancaster county's most respected citizens, and is justly regarded as a representative both in his church and in his neighborhood. While his interests are claimed by his ministerial office, he is fully alive to those enterprises which promise to benefit his locality in an agricultural or in a business way.

ARCHIBALD LIGHTNER HENDERSON (deceased), at one time one of the leading citizens and most substantial agriculturists of Salisbury township, Lancaster county, was born there, on his father's farm, May 19, 1803, passed his entire life on the homestead, and there died Dec. 5, 1869; his remains were interred in the Compassville St. John's Episcopal Church cemetery, in Chester county.

William Henderson, father of Archibald L., was born June 8, 1775, and farming was also his occupation through life. When a lad he was appointed a midshipman by President John Adams, but for some reason did not accept the commission. On Aug. 5, 1800, he married Rachel Lightner, who was born Nov. 14, 1777, and died Jan. 22, 1808. The death of William Henderson occurred April 11, 1853, and the remains of both were laid to rest in the cemetery of the Compassville St. John's Episcopal Church, in Chester county. Following are the names and dates of birth and death of the children born to William and Rachel (Lightner) Henderson, besides Archibald L.: William A., born June 6, 1801, died Sept. 8, 1819; Lorenzo N., M. D., born Sept. 14, 1805, died Dec. 4, 1844; Rachel L., born Dec. 26, 1807, died in infancy.

On Oct. 2, 1860, Archibald L. Henderson married, at the home of the bride—a farm adjoining the Henderson homestead—Miss Margaret Ann Linvill, to which union were born the following named children: (1) Rachel died in infancy. (2) William H., born Aug. 14, 1863, died in Connellsville, Fayette county, March 31, 1901, and his remains, which were brought home for burial, were interred in Compassville St. John's Episcopal Church cemetery. He was a civil engineer by profession, and was superintendent of the Light, Heat & Power Company and the Trolley Company at Connellsville, and surveyor of the company's lines originally. He married Sarah Ann Livingston, who went with her husband to Connellsville Jan. 1, 1896, returning to the homestead at his death. To William and Sarah Ann (Livingston) Henderson were born three children: John L. (deceased), Ruth and Margaret. (3) John, a member of the Denny Tag & Envelope Company of Chicago, Ill., married Emma Kempton, who has borne him three children, George L., Walter S. and Robert J. (4) Lightner, of the firm of Purdy & Henderson, of New York and Chicago, civil engineers of construction of steel buildings, is a graduate of the Lehigh University. He married Hannah Manson, of Chicago, Ill. (5) Helen is still at home.

Mrs. Margaret Ann (Linvill) Henderson was born April 8, 1827, daughter of John and Margaret (Hoar) Linvill, of Salisbury township. They lived on a farm adjoining that on which their daughter (Mrs. Henderson) was born. John Linvill (now deceased) was a very prominent farmer and a leading citizen in Salisbury township, and for some years was a member of the board of school directors. His was a life of true usefulness, and was rounded out to a ripe old age, his death occurring in 1874, when he was eighty-one years old; his wife survived him until October, 1885, being called away at the greatly advanced age of ninety years. Both were members of the Society of Friends, and their remains rest in the old Sadsbury Friends' cemetery, but the memory of them and their many virtues is still fondly cherished by those who knew them best in life.

The late Archibald L. Henderson was a young man when he was elected a justice of the peace, but his decisions were never appealed; he was also a surveyor and conveyancer for several years, and was noted for his accuracy. His declining years were passed in retirement, and he died a member of the Episcopal Church. In politics Mr. Henderson was a Democrat, but he was never an office seeker. He was a natural-born mechanic, was practical in all things; was industrious and thrifty, upright, charitable and broadminded, and but few men in the township were more honored for personal merit and public spirit.

DAVID M. EYER, of East Donegal township, Lancaster county, president of the First National Bank of Marietta, and general farmer, was born in Lebanon county, Sept. 7, 1830, a son of John and Leah (Moyer) Eyer, natives, respectively, of Franklin and Lebanon counties. In 1845 the family came to East Donegal township, where John Eyer followed farming on a river farm until his death in 1890, when eighty-four years old, although for some years prior to this event he had withdrawn from active work. His widow lived until 1895, when she passed away at the age of eighty years; and her remains were interred beside her husband's in East Donegal cemetery. The children born to this couple were seven in number, and were in order of birth, as follows: David M., whose name opens this biography; Benjamin and Elizabeth, deceased; Henry, a farmer in Abilene, Kan.; Samuel, farming in East Donegal township; Fannie, wife of Dr. Christopher Gish, of Brookville, Ohio; and Anna, who died unmarried. John Eyer, paternal grandfather of David M., was a farmer in Franklin county, and his maternal grandfather, Benjamin Moyer, was proprietor of an extensive flour and clover-seed mill in Lebanon county.

David M. Eyer was but fourteen years of age when brought to Lancaster county, and here, for the first three years he worked out as a farm hand. He then joined his father and worked on the home farm in East Donegal township until twenty-four years old, then rented a farm from Henry Musser. A year later he purchased a farm of 105 acres; he has since purchased two additional farms, and now owns two in East Donegal and one in Conoy township, but he still resides on his original purchase which he devotes to general farming.

Mr. Eyer has been twice married. His first bride, whom he wedded in East Donegal township in 1855, was Miss Mary Musser, who was born in the township, a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Geish) Musser, and to this marriage were born eight children, viz.: Ellen, who died unmarried at the age of thirty years; John, who died when thirty-nine and was also unmarried; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Simon C. Heisey, and died when twenty-eight, the mother of one son, Horace; Fanny, who also became the wife of Simon C. Heisey, and died without issue; Henry M., who died, aged twenty-nine years; Alice, who married Amos Shank, now residing on her father's farm, and has three children; Mary, who died when sixteen years old; and Anna, who died when eighteen; Mrs. Eyer died June 4, 1876. The second marriage of Mr. Eyer took place May 30, 1878, in East Donegal township, to Miss Catherine S. Lenhart, but to this marriage no children have been born.

Mrs. Catherine S. (Lenhart) Eyer was born in East Hempfield township Oct. 22, 1834, a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Sheets) Lenhart, of White Oak, Lancaster county. George Lenhart was a carpenter and builder in his early manhood, but later in life followed agricultural pursuits. He was called away March 9, 1888, at ninety-one years of age, and his wife died on the 18th of the same month, in the same year, when aged eighty-two, both dying in the faith of the River Brethren Church. They were the parents of nine children, viz.: Cyrus, who died in Kansas; Anna, wife of Samuel Hoffman, retired farmer of East Donegal township; Jacob, deceased; Catherine S., now Mrs. Eyer; Elizabeth, married to Jacob Herr, a farmer; Martha, who died young; Sophia, an invalid; Maria, wife of Henry Eyer, retired and living in Kansas; and Barbara, married to Michael Smith, of East Donegal township. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Catherine S. Eyer were George and Barbara (Hollinger) Lenhart, of Lancaster county, and the maternal grandparents were Frederick and Catherine Sheets, also of this county.

David M. Eyer was elected a director in the First National Bank of Marietta in 1880, and in 1899 was elected its president. He has been treasurer of the East Donegal Cemetery Co. from its organization in 1873, and for twelve years was director of the Marietta & Maytown Turnpike Co. and its president for five years. He is emphatically a self-made man in the business sense of that term, has always led a moral and upright course, has been industrious and thrifty, and is now one of the most substantial citizens of East Donegal township. Religiously, he is a member of the River Brethren Church.

HON. JACOB L. STEINMETZ, member of the Lancaster Bar, ex-member of the Legislature, financier and builder, and owner of many valuable properties, has for many years been one of the most conspicuous figures in Lancaster county.

Mr. Steinmetz is descended from that sturdy and intelligent German stock that had so much to do with the early settlement of Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Charles Steinmetz, was born in Germany, and, coming to this country, settled near Ephrata, of which he was one of the founders, and there he entered into rest at the age of seventy-seven years. His wife, whose maiden name was Beaver, lived to be ninety-three years of age. Of their eight children, two died at the age of ninety-two years, two at eighty-eight years, and another died at eighty-seven years.

Jacob Steinmetz, father of Hon. Jacob L., was born near Ephrata, this county. On reaching manhood, he purchased valuable property at South Annville, Lebanon county, where he engaged extensively in farming, passing to his reward when in the prime of manhood, in 1851. His wife was Catherine Gross, daughter of John Gross, of Ephrata, who was an extensive landowner, as well as largely engaged at merchandising. He served as postmaster, was one of the organizers of the Lancaster County National Bank, was one of the promoters and leading stockholders in the Horseshoe Turnpike Co., and, in brief, was one of the most prominent men of his section. The wife of John Gross was a daughter of Col. John Wright, a colonel in the Revolutionary war, this making Hon. Jacob L. Steinmetz (the grandson) a true son of the American Revolution.

Hon. Jacob L. Steinmetz was born at South Annville, Lebanon Co., Pa., Aug. 22, 1845. His early education was received in the public schools, but later he attended the Annville Academy and Dickinson Seminary, at Williamsport, graduating from the latter institution with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Next we find him in the University of Michigan, from the literary department of which he was graduated with the degree of Master of Arts, and from the law department with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. At the University he was a member, and at one time president, of the Webster Literary Society, and it was there that his forensic powers, which later in life made him the powerful advocate, first attracted attention. In 1870 Mr. Steinmetz began the practice of law in Lancaster, and from that time on his career as a member of the Lancaster Bar was a continuous triumph. Those who were constantly in attendance at the sessions of all the courts of Lancaster, during all the years in which Mr. Steinmetz won his early battles, certainly found no man at the Bar more earnest, more searching or more successful during all those years. As counsel in leaf tobacco cases, involving immense sums of money, Mr. Steinmetz was so successful that his name became a "tower of strength" not only through Pennsylvania, but in other States. Like his father, Mr. Steinmetz was a staunch Democrat, and in 1876 he was a delegate to the National Convention at St. Louis that nominated Tilden for the Presidency; the same year he (Mr. Steinmetz) was elected to the Pennsylvania Legislature from the city district of Lancaster, overcoming a large Republican majority, and he performed the duties of his office with rare fidelity and intelligence. After his term in the Legislature he withdrew from active participation in politics, devoting himself to the practice of his profession and to the upbuilding of the city which he had chosen for his permanent home. In January, 1890, he was elected president of the People's National Bank of Lancaster, and in January, 1892, he was instrumental in the organization of the People's Trust, Savings & Deposit Company, of which he was made the head, as well as the head of the Citizens Electric Light, Heat & Power Co., and of the Clay & Hinkletown Turnpike Co. In a word, there was scarcely a movement looking to the material and financial upbuilding of Lancaster, for many, many years, with which Mr. Steinmetz was not identified. The Steinmetz building, at the corner of North Queen and Grant streets (running back half a block to Christian street, and many stories in height) is a monument to the enterprise which Mr. Steinmetz has shown in the line of building operations, while "Hotel Cocalico," which he built in the beautiful borough of Ephrata, will be an enduring monument to the liberality, enterprise and good taste of its builder, for it is justly rated as one of the finest resorts in the State.

J. L. Stemmetz

On Feb. 5, 1890, Mr. Steinmetz married Miss Mary Virginia Hawthorn, daughter of the late James Clemens Hawthorn, and from this union one child was born—Hawthorn Steinmetz, now a bright lad of twelve years, attending "Rumsey Hall," at Seneca Falls, N. Y., where he is a member of the Junior Sons of the Revolution, an organization in which he is entitled to membership on both sides, for father and mother are descended from Revolutionary ancestry.

Mrs. Steinmetz, who is not only a "Daughter of the Revolution," but a "Colonial Dame" (of whom there are comparatively few in this section), has an ancestry of which she may well feel proud—an ancestry, indeed, which few people possess. Her father, James-Clemens Hawthorn, was born June 14, 1812, and her mother, Mary Louisa Eberman, on Sept. 14, of the same year—1812. James C. Hawthorn, who died Jan. 20, 1875, was a brilliant and most lovable man, well remembered by some of the older people of the community. In early manhood, he was principal of the Model School at Millersville, and was destined for the ministry, having already been licensed to preach. His first sermon was preached in the United Presbyterian Church at Old Octoraro, but the effort—a most notable one—resulted in the bursting of a blood-vessel, and this changed his whole career. He became a planter, removing to Winchester, Frederick Co., Va., where Mary Virginia Hawthorn, now Mrs. Steinmetz, was born. While she was an infant in arms her parents fled because of the war of the Rebellion, coming North, where they ever after resided. They crossed the Potomac in a flat boat, bathing the face of the future Mrs. Steinmetz in the waters of that historic stream. They came to Lancaster, where their daughter, Virginia (named after her native State), spent her girlhood days and received her education. The grandfather of Mrs. Steinmetz on her mother's side was John Eberman, who was born Oct. 28, 1776, and died Nov. 25, 1846, after having served for twenty-five years as cashier of the Farmers' Bank of Lancaster. Sarah Elizabeth Eberman, wife of John Eberman, was born Jan. 30, 1789, and died May 10, 1865. She was a daughter of Dr. Samuel Fahnestock, one of Lancaster's most noted medical doctors, and sister of the late Dr. William Baker Fahnestock, also a noted physician of Lancaster, whose son, Henry R. Fahnestock, now lives retired on East King street, after having held clerkships in the Lancaster postoffice under Presidents Pierce and Buchanan, and been connected with the Steinman hardware store for thirty-seven years. Dr. Samuel Fahnestock married Barbara Becker (afterward Anglicized to Baker), Rev. Henry Muhlenberg performing the ceremony. Samuel Hawthorn, grandfather of Mrs. Steinmetz, was a gentleman of the "old school," courtly and dignified, and wore a queue to the day of his death. He was an extensive landowner, and among his possessions was "Hawthorn Mill," which was for many years a landmark near the Old Octoraro Church, in which Samuel Hawthorn was an elder, for he was of Scotch-Irish origin and one of the strictest of Presbyterians.

The ancestry of Mrs. Steinmetz goes back much farther than this. She is descended from the Clemsens, who were of the nobility, and who were among the earliest Swedish settlers on the Delaware. Their settlement on the banks of the Delaware dates back to 1638. Her line is through James Clemens, James (2) and James (3). The latter was a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature, where he served on important committees, assisted in settling the Independence of the Colonies, was a justice of the peace before the Revolution, and was elected a delegate to the general county convention in 1774, to take action against British tyranny, voting to resist it. He was a justice of the peace, and judge of the common pleas in and for the county of Lancaster, representing Sadsbury and Salisbury as early as 1790. James Clemson (1) lived and died in Philadelphia. He took up tracts of land from the Penn grant in 1716, locating these tracts in the Pequea Valley. He gave to his son, James Clemson (2), 400 acres of land near White Horse, Salisbury township; to his son John he gave another tract of 400 acres, which was afterward known as Buckley's Forge; and to a third son, Thomas, he gave the tract of land now known as Gap Station. James Clemson (1) was a son of Jacob Clemson, who was one of the Swedes who settled on the Delaware in 1656. His son, James, married Jeane Coates, who came from England with her father, Thomas Coates, in 1682. Tradition tells us that they were related to William Penn, and this was their motto: "We are among those who believe that any who care not about their early origin, care little as to anything higher." [See Rupp's and Harris's histories, as well as the archives of Pennsylvania.] James Wilson, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, as well as a signer of the Constitution of 1779, was the brother of the great-grandmother of Mrs. Steinmetz; while another of her ancestors, Gen. Heard, whose broad acres were located two miles north of Christiana, was a general in the war of 1812. In fact it is impossible in a sketch intended to have a place with other genealogical sketches in one book, however large that book might be, to give in complete detail all the branches belonging to such a family tree as that of Mrs. Steinmetz. It would involve not only those already mentioned, but the Andrews, McCaulley, Doran and Beyers families—all substantial people; the McCaulleys referred to being John and James; the contested will of the latter—in which he bequeathed $50,000 to the Extension fund of the Presbyterian Church—was the most noted will case ever tried in Lancaster county.

Mr. and Mrs. Steinmetz are now living in their beautiful "Hotel Cocalico," at Ephrata, having closed, for the present, their elegant home on North Duke street, Lancaster, one of the finest in the city. Mr. Steinmetz visited Europe in 1889, and again in 1894, and Mrs. Steinmetz has paid four visits to the continent. She is not only a member of the Daughters of the Revolution and of the Colonial Dames, but is active and prominent in the Iris Club, Lancaster's leading social and literary club for women. Both parents are justly proud of their only child, Hawthorn, whose grandest, most enduring inheritance will be his historic and honored ancestry.

DAVID B. HUBER, of Manheim township, who is living retired at Fruitville, is one of the old and enterprising citizens of Lancaster county. Mr.

Huber was born Dec. 17, 1837, on the family homestead in Leacock township, and when twelve years of age came to Manheim township with his parents, where he has made his home. His education was received in the common schools, and by observation and reflection he has become a man of much intelligence, reading widely and thinking profoundly and deeply.

Mr. Huber remained with his parents until 1859, when he was married and began farming on a part of the family homestead. A few years later he bought an adjoining place of sixty-eight acres, on which he lived for thirty-six years before his retirement from active labors. During this long and industrious career Mr. Huber has become prosperous and owns six farms, with substantial improvements. In 1900 he put up a beautiful modern residence in which he expects to pass his remaining years. Mr. Huber is a director in the Fruitville, and the Manheim & Penn Turnpike companies. In the Western Market House also he is a director, and he is always ready to take an active interest in anything that looks to the public good.

Mr. Huber was married in September, 1859, to Miss Fannie, a daughter of the Rev. Christian Bomberger, of Warwick township. She died July 17, 1862, leaving one child, Levi B., now a farmer in Landis Valley, who married Elizabeth Stauffer, by whom he has had nine children: Cora, Anna, Lizzie, Harry, David, Benjamin, Christian, Enos and John. David B. Huber married for his second wife, Miss Caroline, a daughter of Jacob and Hetty (Reist) Dohner, the wedding occurring Jan. 31, 1865. She was born in Penn township Nov. 27, 1840. This union has been blessed with the following children: Annie, who married Henry McNally, a farmer and dairyman of Hamilton, Ont., and has four children, Harry D., Carrie M., Herbert N. and Edward S.; Jacob, who died at twenty years of age; Fannie, who died in infancy; David D., a farmer in Manheim township, on the family homestead, who married Fannie Rohrer, of East Hempfield township; John D., who died when about five years old; Lizzie, deceased at the age of three years; and Mary, wife of Milton G. Brubaker, residing at Fruitville.

Mr. and Mrs. Huber, Levi B. and Mrs. Mary Brubaker are members of the Mennonite Church, and are among the most worthy and respected citizens of the community. For fifteen years he has been a member of the school board in Manheim township. Mr. Huber has been an extensive traveler, and as he is a close observer he has profited much by his journeying abroad. He is a model farmer, and received a medal and diploma for an exhibition of oats made at the World's Columbian Exposition. When the Sabbath School was started at Petersburg by the Mennonite Church, Mr. Huber was made the first superintendent, and he has had the pleasure of seeing many of the younger people pass from the Sunday School into the Church.

MICHAEL G. SHINDLE (originally spelled Schindle), dealer in tobacco and coal, and also engaged in the fire insurance business in Mountville, Lancaster county, was born Jan. 11, 1837, in West Hempfield, this county, a mile and a half northeast of his present place of business. His parents, Joseph and Sarah (Gross) Shindle, were natives of Manor and East Hempfield townships, respectively. Joseph Shindle was a farmer, and he died in Manor township Sept. 25, 1860, at the age of forty-nine years and six months. His wife preceded him to the grave April 16, 1847, at the age of forty-two years, both dying in the faith of the Lutheran Church. Their remains were interred at Mountville. They had born to them three children, namely: Michael G., whose name opens this paragraph; Mary A., who died in 1849; and Harriet, who died in 1888, the wife of Ephraim Hershey, of Manor township, and the mother of two children.

We have no definite information concerning the early members of the Shindle family in this country. In 1751 came John Peter Schindle, who located in Lebanon county, Pa. In 1755 John Michael Schindle came hither from Germany, settling in Lancaster county, Pa. In 1771 came two brothers, John Conrad and Joseph George, who also settled in Lancaster county. Michael G. Shindle is supposed to have been a descendant of John Michael, who was born July 31, 1729, in Euerlebach, Erbach, in what is now Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, son of John Conrad and Susannah (Trixler) Schindle. John Michael, it is supposed, was the great-grandfather of Michael G., the subject of this sketch; his grandfather was named Michael. Our subject's maternal grandparents were George and Elizabeth Gross, farming people of East Hempfield township.

Michael G. Shindle remained on the home farm until 1860, when he came to Mountville, and settled there, and built his present home in 1864. He at once opened a coal yard, and had his farming done by hired help. He was soon appointed freight and ticket agent for the Pennsylvania Railway Co., and acted in that capacity twenty-two years (1866 to 1888). Mr. Shindle has never abandoned the coal trade since coming to Mountville, and in 1869 began buying, packing and selling tobacco.

Michael G. Shindle has been twice married. In 1857, in Hempfield township, he wedded Barbara Stauffer, who was born in West Hempfield township, daughter of Henry Stauffer, and to this union were born three children, namely: Florence, wife of Adam B. Fisher, freight and ticket agent for the Pennsylvania Railway Co., at Mountville; Sadie, wife of Dr. David R. Summy, of Columbus, Ohio; and Miss Silvene, residing with her sister Sadie. Mrs. Barbara (Stauffer) Shindle was called away in 1891, at the age of fifty-one years, and her remains were interred in the Mountville cemetery. In 1893, in Lancaster City, Michael G. Shindle took for his second helpmate, Mrs. Barbara (Klugh) Musser, a widow, and a native of Mountville, daughter of Charles and Eliza Klugh, of West Hempfield township. Mrs. Shindle was first married to Amos S. Musser, who was a farmer all his life and died in 1887, leaving her with four children: Harvey K., who is a baker in Lancaster; Miami, wife of George E. Griffin, in the real estate and insurance business in Philadelphia; Stanton, a machinist, who is unmarried; and Mabel, residing with Mr. Shindle.

Michael G. Shindle was one of the incorporators of the Mountville Manufacturing Co., and was the general manager and secretary of that concern from the start, in 1888, until he resigned the office in 1895. He was also one of the incorporators of the Mountville National Bank, of which he was a director for six years, and then resigned. In October, 1900, he was made secretary of the Penn Township Mutual Fire Insurance Association, of which he has been for many years a member, and in 1896 was elected a director. In politics he is a Republican, but has steadily refused to accept public office, although he is in every respect one of the most public-spirited citizens of Lancaster county.

JACOB S. HERSHEY, one of the business citizens of Junction, Penn township, is an estimable member of one of the prominent old families of Lancaster county.

Martin Hershey, his grandfather, lived and died in Dauphin county, Pa., where he carried on the business of distilling in connection with his farming. He was the father of these children: Isaac, a farmer in Dauphin county, who became a politician and served as register of deeds; Henry, a farmer of Dauphin county; Joseph, who moved to Ohio and farmed there; Jacob, a farmer of Dauphin county; John, also a farmer of the same county; and Martin, the father of Jacob S., of this sketch, who was born in 1801.

In his early business life, Martin Hershey, the father of Jacob S., was a distiller, later became a farmer and about 1829 or 1830, he removed to Lancaster county and settled near the place where Jacob S., subject of this sketch, now resides. Here he erected a distillery and managed it in connection with his farming operations. His death occurred in 1881. In politics, Martin Hershey was a Republican, and he held the office of school director for some years. The marriage of Martin Hershey was to Elizabeth Snavelly, and they were the parents of four children, two of whom died in infancy. Of the others, Reuben went to Minnesota and died there, leaving Jacob S., the only surviving member of the family. Both parents were worthy members of the Old Mennonite Church.

Jacob S. Hershey was born in Penn township, March 23, 1836, and remained in the family home, after finishing his education, until he was twenty-four years of age. Upon a tract of land in Penn township, he began his own agricultural career, succeeding in a marked degree for five years, giving that line up in order to embark in the mercantile business in the town of Junction. This business grew in volume through nineteen years, when Mr. Hershey went into the coal and leaf tobacco business, and has also been successful in that line. The same principles which conduced to make him a successful merchant through so many years, are still followed in his present business, and he has the confidence and good will of his whole community. In 1867 he was appointed postmaster, and he filled the duties of the position as long as he continued in the mercantile line.

Mr. Hershey was married to Miss Anna Cassel, and to this union were born two children, Louisa C., who died at the age of twenty-one years; and Lizzie C., the wife of Martin E. Gross, a farmer of Penn township. Mr. Hershey is one of the progressive, energetic and capable business men of Lancaster county, widely known and most highly respected.

MANSELL REED, a retired farmer residing in South Hermitage, Salisbury township, Lancaster county, although born on Southern soil and of Quaker parentage, was one of the defenders of his country's flag.

Mansell Reed was born in Cecil county, Md., Sept. 8, 1838, a son of William and Margaret (Little) Reed, of the State of Delaware, where the mother died in 1845, when thirty-five years old, the father dying in Chester county, Pa., in 1861, at sixty years of age, both in the faith of the Society of Friends. They were the parents of three children, viz: Mansell; Mary, deceased wife of Rev. William P. White, a Presbyterian clergyman, to whom she has borne four children; and Elizabeth, who died at the age of fifteen years. The parents of William Reed were Ezekiel and Mary (Mansfield) Reed, of Delaware, the former of whom was a farmer and died in West Chester, Pa. The parents of Margaret (Little) Reed were Thomas and Elizabeth Little, of Okeassen, Del., also farming people.

Mansell Reed was but seven years of age when brought to Salisbury township by an uncle, John McGill, a merchant with whom Mansell lived in South Hermitage until twenty-two years old, assisting in the store. He then found other employment for a year or two, and in May, 1863, enlisted at Lancaster in Co. F, 122d P. V. I., under Capt. John Bair as commander of the company. The most important battles in which he took part were those of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, but he also participated in numerous skirmishes, and after nine months of active service was honorably discharged at Harrisburg. For the two following years he served as an extra on a wagon train in Washington, D. C., at the termination of which time he returned to South Hermitage, Pa., and for a year was employed in a general store; thence he went to Mount Pleasant, clerked in a store two years; then for two years was a clerk in a store at Compassville, and finally came to his present property in South Hermitage. There he erected his comfortable dwelling in 1876, and employed himself in farming until 1898, when impaired health caused his retirement.

The marriage of Mansell Reed took place in New Holland, Lancaster county, March 19, 1866, to Miss Catherine Diem, who has borne him four children, namely: Elizabeth, wife of Carson Sterling, a liveryman of New Holland, and mother of three children, David Reed, Robert Franklin and William Chester; Bertha, who died young; Daisy, who died an infant; and Chester, who still resides with his parents. Mrs. Catherine (Diem) Reed is a native of Salisbury township, was born June 5, 1837, and is a daughter of Kennedy and Hester (Brower) Diem.

Mansell Reed has ever been one of the most industrious and enterprising of men, and had it not been that ill health caused his early retirement from business, the citizens of Salisbury township would have found great cause for congratulation from his residence in their midst. He is very public-spirited and has always been ready when his means permitted, to assist financially in the promotion of all projects designed for the welfare of the public, being an ardent friend of public instruction and of the maintenance of good roads and such other conveniences as are usually required by a progressive community. His perceptive faculties are quick and comprehensive, and he is never slow to see what is required for the public good nor lax in rendering efficient aid in securing the means for filling such requirements. He is to a great extent what is known as a "self-made" man, and until overcome by illness was possessed of an immense amount of energy and business enterprise. Naturally of an affable disposition and pleasing manners, he has made hosts of friends who hold him in the highest esteem, and in this esteem his estimable wife has a full share. Mr. and Mrs. Reed are devout members of the Pequea Presbyterian Church, and fraternally Mr. Reed is a member of the G. A. R. In politics he is a Republican, but has never desired office of any kind.

GEORGE B. OWEN. One of the oldest, most prominent and wealthy families of Lancaster county is that of Owen, Richard Owen having taken possession of the plantation now held by George B. Owen as early as 1723.

The ship "Vine," William Preeson, master, arrived in the Delaware Sept. 17, 1684, from Dolserrey, near Dolgelly, in Merionethshire, Wales. Robert Owen and wife Jane and son Lewis, Dr. Griffith Owen (also a son of Robert Owen), his wife Sarah and son Robert, and daughters Sarah and Elenor, were on this ship. Robert Owen settled on Duck creek, in Newcastle county, Del., where his son Edward had previously settled. Robert Owen had nine sons, all of age at the time. He was a son of Humphrey Owen, descended from Lewis Owen, Baron of the Exchequer of North Wales, who was murdered in 1555. A few months after his arrival Robert Owen was appointed one of the justices of the peace for Newcastle county. He died before the end of his term, and his son Richard was appointed in his stead, and it was Richard, the son of Richard, who located in Lancaster county after his marriage, in 1720, with Elizabeth Knauer, and who was at that time living in Uwchland township, Chester Co., Pa. The family were Quakers on arrival in the country, but neither Richard Owen, on arrival in Lancaster county, nor his wife were members of that Society. He may have been a Seventh-day Baptist, as at least two of his brothers left in Uwchland township certainly were. What gives color to this is that Bissell, the founder of the Ephrata Community, first located near to the plantation of Richard Owen. Be this as it may, it is certainly true that the grandchildren (the children of his son Benjamin), Jonathan, Benjamin and Ann, are the first of the family mentioned in the Lampeter Meeting Records. The children of Richard and Elizabeth Owen were Richard, Theophilus, Benjamin, Mary (wife of John Maxwell), Anne (wife of Richard Chiney), Sarah (wife of Peter Potts), and Jonathan. Richard Owen died in 1760, and, his sons Richard and Theophilus also being dead, the plantation was taken at the appraisement by his son Benjamin. Benjamin Owen was very successful, and at his death, in 1784, left the plantation of his father to his son Jonathan, and the one adjoining to his son Benjamin, making provision also for his daughter Ann, then the wife of John Williams. Jonathan Owen, son of Benjamin, and grandson of Richard, was born in Lancaster county, and was married May 17, 1787, to Mary Bonsall, of Darby (then in Chester, now in Delaware county), Pa., and thereafter made his home in Delaware county, where all his children were born. He died there in 1821, and his wife, who survived until 1863, reached the advanced age of ninety-seven years.

Benjamin Owen was born in Delaware county, six miles southwest of Philadelphia. In his early days he learned the trade of wheelwright, but in 1823 he removed to Upper Leacock township, Lancaster county, and there engaged in farming during the rest of his life. He was a man of fine mental equipment, and held many of the local offices. His death occurred in 1880, when he was aged eighty-seven, and his wife, Eliza Bender, died in 1877, at the age of sixty-two; they were buried in Heller's cemetery. Mr. Owen was of the Quaker belief, and Mrs. Owen was a member of the Reformed church. Two children only were born to them, George B. and Mary B., the latter dying in December, 1894. Mrs. Eliza (Bender) Owen was a daughter of George and Mary (Kinzer) Bender, of Earl township, where the father resided a short time, removing to Upper Leacock township, where he died in 1818; the mother survived until 1871, dying at the age of ninety-two years. Her second marriage was to William Wadely, by whom she had the following children: Amos; Maria, who married Jeremiah Smith; George, who married Catherine Maltz, of Cumberland county; and Harriet, who married David Miller. Her children by George Bender were: Kinzer, who married (first) Mary Weidler, and (second) her sister, Susan Weidler; Margaret, who married Jacob Hull; William, who died unmarried, in Mississippi; and Eliza, the mother of George B. Owen. Daniel Bender, the father of George Bender, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

George B. Owen was born near Monterey, in Upper Leacock township, Oct. 31, 1835. He was educated in the public schools, and at New London Academy, in Chester county, under William F. Wyers, spending three terms at the latter institution. During the life of his parents and sister he remained on the old homestead, and he valued greatly this fine old farm, which has been in the possession of the family some one hundred and fifty years, but does not now reside upon it. Having no family ties, and possessing ample means, Mr. Owen spends much time in travel, and has taken a very prominent part in public affairs in his county, serving for three years on the Republican County Committee. For a period of eighteen months he served as assistant assessor of United States Internal Revenue, his term ending on account of the abolishment of the office. Mr. Owen is prominently identified with the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar, and connected with Lodge No. 43, in Lancaster. He is considered one of the representative citizens of this part of the county.

HON. EMANUEL DYER ROATH, justice of the peace at Marietta, Lancaster county, and a gallant ex-officer of the war of the Rebellion, was born in Lancaster City, Oct. 4, 1820, a son of Jacob and Susan (Shireman) Roath, natives, respectively, of Maytown and Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

Jacob Roath was a tailor by trade and was a member of the company which escorted Gen. Lafayette from Paoli to Lancaster, on the occasion of the second visit of that noble and philanthropic Frenchman to America. Jacob Roath died in Lancaster at the age of thirty-three years, and his wife, Susan (Shireman) Roath, removed to Harrisburg, where her death took place. Both she and her husband were members of the Reformed Church, and their remains lie interred in the cemetery of that denomination at Maytown. Their four children were born in the following order: John C., a cabinet-maker, died in Maytown; Emanuel D.; Jacob S., a shoemaker, died in Maytown; and Philip B., a farmer, died in the same village. The paternal grandparents of Hon. E. D. Roath were natives of Baden, Germany, and were early settlers in Lancaster county, Pa.; and of the maternal grandparents, Jacob and Susan (Brenner) Shireman, the father of Jacob was also born in Baden.

The boyhood days of Emanuel D. Roath were passed at his mother's home. At the age of five years he was sent to the district school, where he learned the alphabet the first day. He continued on the farm until he had secured a sum of money to pay his expenses in a higher institution of instruction, and from eighteen until twenty-one years old attended the Shippensburg Academy. On reaching his majority, he began working out on his own account, and when twenty-three commenced teaching—a profession he followed for twelve consecutive winters in the district schools; for five summers, also, he taught a private school of his own.

In 1852 Mr. Roath settled in Marietta, and for two years worked in a lumber yard. On March 18, 1854, he was elected a justice of the peace and was re-elected Oct. 10, 1861. At Camp Curtin, Harrisburg, Mr. Roath was authorized by Gov. Curtin to raise a company of volunteers for service in the Civil war, the result being that he enrolled Co. E, 107th P. V. I., of which he was commissioned Captain, and he served until March 1, 1865, when he was mustered out at Washington, D. C., being later breveted major by President Andrew Johnson, and breveted lieutenant colonel and later colonel by Gov. John W. Geary. Following is a list of the engagements in which Capt. Roath took part while assisting in maintaining the integrity of his nation's flag: Cedar Mountain, Rappahannock Station, Thoroughfare Gap and second Bull Run, all in August, 1862; Chantilly (where he took command of his regiment), South Mountain (where he was second in command) and Antietam (where he was also second in command and was wounded), all in September, 1862; Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862, when his brigade charged the Rebels out of their entrenchments, and was under fire at the same place December 14th; under fire below Fredericksburg, April 30, 1863, and again May 2nd; at Chancellorsville May 3 and 4, 1863; was next in the Wilderness; was wounded at Gettysburg July 1, 1863, but kept on fighting on the 2nd and 3rd, having command of the regiment. He crossed the Rappahannock Aug. 1, 1863, and was at Mine Run November 28th, 29th and 30th; was at Spottsylvania May 16, 17, 18, 1864, at North Anna, May 23, and at Bethesda May 30; Tolopotamy, June 2nd; Shady Grove Church, June 3d; White Oak Swamp, June 13th; near Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad, June 17th, and captured it June 18th; took the Weldon Railroad August 18. On Aug. 19, 1864, after sharp fighting, he was captured by the Rebels and confined in Libby prison until September, 1864, when he was shipped to Salisbury, N. C., and held until Oct. 15th; thence he was transferred to Danville, Va., and in February, 1865, was returned to Libby Prison, was exchanged, and arrived at Annapolis, Md., February 22nd; March 1, 1865, he was mustered out as stated above. He returned to Marietta and officiated as a magistrate until October, 1867, when he was sent to the Legislature by the Republican party, of which he was an ardent member.

Hon. Emanuel D. Roath has been twice married. At Elizabethtown, Pa., in the Reformed Church parsonage, he wedded Susan R. Hipple, who bore him two children: George H., of whom a full biography is given on another page; and Anna R., wife of Jacob Funk, of Marietta. Mrs. Susan R. (Hipple) Roath, was born in East Donegal township, Lancaster county, Pa., daughter of Samuel and Anna Hipple, who came from Chester county in 1830 and were agricultural people; Mrs. Susan Roath died in 1854 at the age of twenty-eight years. In 1857, in Columbia, Mr. Roath married Harriet C. Young, a native of Marietta and a daughter of John and Catherine Young. She died in December, 1896, when forty-eight years old, leaving one child, Barcina H., wife of George Kame, a farmer of East Donegal.

In 1858 Mr. Roath was first elected as the representative of his district in the State Legislature and served one term; in 1868 he was again elected to this body, and again served one term. He has been an Odd Fellow for the past fifty-seven years, and is the oldest member of the order in Lancaster county. He is a past State Councillor of the Order of American Mechanics, and is a member of the National Council; he is also a past Worshipful Master of the F. & A. M., and is a Knight Templar. Since 1865 he has been a vestryman of the Episcopal Church, of which he is a member. He was appointed brigade quartermaster of a brigade of the Lancaster county militia by Gen. Jacob Gross. For seven years he commanded a volunteer company of Maytown, called "The Jackson Fencibles," infantry. Mr. Roath has led a busy and useful life, and although now well advanced in years is still looked to for further service by a host of admiring friends.

JOSEPH C. YODER, D. D. S., whose well-appointed office is at No. 305 North Queen street, Lancaster, is a descendant of several of the oldest families in Pennsylvania. He is a son of Daniel C. and Elizabeth (Byler) Yoder, the former a farmer of Mifflin county.

The Yoder family is descended from Mrs. Barbara Yoder, a native of Switzerland, who landed in Philadelphia prior to 1727; her husband died on the voyage and was buried at sea. (See P. 10, J. D. Rupp's collection of 30,000 names of immigrants in Pennsylvania). Christian Yoder, a grandson of Barbara, became a farmer and married Esther Hertzler, who was born and raised in Caernarvon township, Lancaster county. By this marriage the Yoders and Hertzlers became most influential in Pennsylvania.

The Hertzler ancestors were originally from Switzerland. They made a stay of some years in France, but owing to religious persecution were obliged to find a new home. They were Amish Mennonites, or followers of Menno Simon. Jacob Hertzler, the ancestor of Mrs. Esther (Hertzler) Yoder, sailed from Rotterdam on the ship "St. Andrew," and arrived at Philadelphia Sept. 9, 1749. He located in Berne township, Lancaster county (now Berks county), and on Jan. 9, 1750, purchased 182 acres and 30 perches of land from Richard and Thomas Penn, in Philadelphia, paying one dollar and a quarter an acre. This tract he named "Contentment." Between 1750 and 1773 he added other tracts to his original purchase, making in all 404 acres and 4 perches. Nearly all of the Hertzlers have been agricultural people. The old homestead near Morgantown, Caernarvon township, is still in possession of the family, being occupied by Isaac Kurtz, whose wife was Elizabeth Hertzler, daughter of Daniel Hertzler. (See Hertzler Genealogy, pp. 238-240). This grand old place was visited by Dr. Yoder in the summer of 1900, and he found it in fine condition, with beautiful surroundings. The stone barn, supposed to have been built by the emigrant, Jacob, is in good state of preservation. There is also an old Pennock (Big Romanite) apple tree still hardy, which measures 10 feet 6 inches near the ground, and in September, 1902, it was estimated to have twenty-five bushels of apples.

The Byler family, with which Dr. Yoder is connected on his mother's side, was planted in America by a Swiss emigrant, who landed in Philadelphia Oct. 8, 1737, having crossed the sea in the vessel "Charming Polly" (See Hertzler Genealogy, p. 133.)

Dr. Joseph C. Yoder was born in Mifflin county Dec. 21, 1844, and was reared on a farm. He served part of an apprenticeship at the harness maker's trade in Ohio, but his natural love of learning induced him to abandon that work and seek an education. Part of his school days were passed in Kishacoquillas Seminary, Mifflin Co., Pa. For two winters he taught in the public schools in the Kishacoquillas Valley, and attended the Seminary in the summers. In September, 1866, at the close of the Civil war, he went South, and near Jonesboro, in Washington Co., Tenn., he organized the George Washington Seminary, and here one of his first pupils was the lady who afterward became his wife. Later, in 1867, he united with Prof. S. Z. Sharp, a graduate of the Millersville (Pa.) State Normal school, at Maryville, Tenn., sixteen miles south of Knoxville, where for two years he was the principal assistant.

While at Maryville, Mr. Yoder was united in marriage, July 21, 1869, with Seraphina Crosswhite, daughter of Elder Crosswhite, of Washington county, Tenn., the powerful pioneer preacher of the German Dunkards. The bride was a bright and cultured young woman, and for a year had been a most successful and popular teacher.

In 1870 Dr. Yoder went to Kansas City, Mo., where he engaged in teaching, and was later employed in the Armour Beef Packing Co. He was also engaged as weighmaster in a wholesale fur and hide establishment, and at various times as a book, fire insurance and fruit tree agent. In 1872, with his wife and son, Jesse D., he returned to his father-in-law's in Tennessee, and there taught school under the provision of the philanthropist George Peabody. While engaged in teaching he read medicine for three years under Drs. W. R. Sevier and E. L. Deadrick, of Jonesboro, but abandoned medicine for dentistry, becoming associated with Dr. John Lock, of Lewistown, Pa., a graduate of the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery, class of 1846. After practicing dentistry in Mifflin county for a time, he spent thirteen years of successful work in Huntingdon, Pa. In 1883 he passed an examination before a board of dental examiners, Dr. S. H. Guilford of Philadelphia, Dr. E. A. Magill of Erie (who was regarded as the father of dental associations in Pennsylvania), Dr. Jesse C. Green of Westchester, and Dr. Gerhart of Lewisburg, and was licensed a proficient dentist. In 1894 he opened an office in Lancaster determined to make that attractive city his permanent home, and he soon built up a large and lucrative practice.

Dr. and Mrs. Yoder became the parents of three sons: (1) Jesse D., born in Kansas City, Mo., June 8, 1871, died when a lad. (2) Arthur Lee, born near Jonesboro, Tenn., Jan. 16, 1874, graduated in 1893 from the Juniata Normal College at Huntingdon, Pa., and in 1895 received the degree of M. E. and later B. S. from the Millersville State Normal. He taught school as first assistant at the Alexandria high school, at Huntingdon, and in the public schools near Mt. Joy. For two years he was principal of the Unionville high school, but resigned to attend Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pa., from which he was graduated in June, 1902, with the degree of A. B. During his college course he taught night school, read meters for the Electric Light Co., and also served as a conductor on the trolley cars. He also filled the position of teacher of the Scientific Class at the Millersville State Normal. In September, 1902, he began his duties as the head of the Scientific Department in the Steelton (Pa.) High school. (3) Ralph Earnest, born March 22, 1876, in Lewistown, Pa., was graduated in 1893 at the age of seventeen from the Juniata Normal College at Huntingdon, in the same class with his brother. He taught two schools in Huntingdon county, Pa., and became first assistant, as well as one of the organizers, with Dr. Hershey, of the Gap Academy in Lancaster county. For two years he taught in the public schools near Elizabethtown, and declined a third year in order to join his brother Arthur, and with him to enter Franklin and Marshall College. He graduated in June, 1902, with the degree of A. B. During his college course he was employed on the trolley cars as conductor and motorman. He is now principal of the Fulton township high school in Lancaster county. Both Arthur Lee and Ralph Earnest hold permanent State certificates as teachers.

Dr. Yoder is a man of deep religious convictions, and is an earnest worker in all religious movements. He is a member of the First Mennonite Church, corner of Diamond and Fifth streets, Philadelphia, and he is a member of the North American Mennonite Conference. Politically the Doctor was a Republican, having been a firm supporter of the martyred Lincoln, but is now a chartered member of the State Socialist party, having assisted in organizing and placing a Socialist ticket in the field. He is one of the county Socialist campaign speakers.

Mrs. Yoder and Arthur L. are members of the progressive Dunkards, belonging to a church in Philadelphia. Ralph E. Yoder is a member of St. Stephen's Reformed Church, the congregation meeting in the chapel in Franklin and Marshall College. Mrs. Yoder is a lady of culture, and has been a potent factor in the intellectual life of this city, being editor-in-chief of the Woman's edition of The Lancaster Examiner, for the benefit of the General Hospital in Lancaster, an enterprise that netted over $600 for this worthy object. At another time she was the business manager for the Woman's edition of The New Era, for the benefit of the W. C. T. U., of Lancaster, from which the sum of $500 was realized. These ventures were the first of the kind in this part of the country, and elicited close criticism which was followed by warm admiration for the signal ability displayed by Mrs. Yoder and her two collaborators, Misses Anna M. and Mary Martin. The late Dr. William H. Egle, then State Librarian of Pennsylvania, wrote Mrs. Yoder a very complimentary letter, asked for a copy of this special edition of The Examiner and placed it among the archives of the State Library.

REES CLEMENS HIMES, in his life time a successful merchant and farmer, was born Jan. 8, 1800, in Honeybrook, Chester Co., Pa., and he died on Spring Run farm in Lancaster county, May 18, 1849, and his remains were interred in the Bellevue Presbyterian Church cemetery, of which church he was a member and trustee.

Thomas and Catherine (Clemens) Himes, his parents, were of Welsh extraction, and were old and respected residents of Chester county. Thomas Himes died in April, 1808, aged fifty years, three months and seventeen days. His wife died March 5, 1851, aged eighty years, ten months and thirteen days. Their children, all now deceased, were as follows: George W., who married Joanna Sturges; Thomas, who married Susan Himes (of no known relationship), and was a prominent man in his day, being the manager of the Margaretta Iron Furnace; Eliza, who became the wife of Thomas Whistler; Hannah, who wedded John Livergood; Maria, who married Amos Kinzer; and Rees Clemens.

The early life of Rees C. Himes was one of adventure and stirring incident. In association with his brother George W. he became the possessor of a lead mine at Galena, Ill., and if conditions and transportation had been as they now are, there is no doubt but the mine would have proved of immense value. At that time, however, work was necessarily slow, as while one brother worked at getting out the lead, the other had to guard it from thieves, and so, before any material benefit accrued, the brothers became disheartened and abandoned the enterprise. Their next adventure was in the purchase of land on the site of the present great city of St. Louis, Mo., but their operations were much disturbed by the hostility of the Indians. For some time Mr. Himes operated a grist and flour mill and did some farming, but later the brothers returned to Chester county. The first white child born in the city of Galena, Ill., was Louisa daughter of George Himes and wife. In 1827 Mr. Himes embarked in the mercantile business in Hatville, Lancaster county, but in 1831 he bought the fine farm now occupied by his daughters, and remained there during the balance of his life. This property is known as Spring Run farm, and comprises 110 acres of valuable land within one and one-half miles of Gap. It is now owned and managed by the three daughters of Mr. Himes, and is one of the most valuable farms in the locality.

On Dec. 17, 1829, at the home of the bride, in Paradise township, Rees C. Himes was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Eckert, and to this union these children were born: Clinton, who married Sophia McIlvaine Negley, and is a resident of Salisbury township; George Clemens, who died young; Cecelia A., who married Rees C. Himes, a prominent and wealthy farmer residing in Shippensburg; Misses Anna C., Susan A. and Martha L., who all reside on the old farm; Newton T., who died young; and Rees L., a justice of the peace, who resides in Kinzers and married Margaret Eckert.
